In his address Professor Stephenson will discuss such basic questions as, "What does the Constitution say about religious freedom"; and "Why is religious freedom an important element in the American constitutional system"?

He will point out that the principle of separation of church and state exists today alongside many examples of linkages between church and state, and he will discuss the problems facing Americans who are divided on issues such as prayer in public schools, state support and/or control of sectarian schools, and one's duty to obey the law even when it commands conflict with the dictates of conscience.

Future lecture topics will include:

Tuesday, September 22, 1987
"The Supreme Court Interprets the Constituion"

Thursday, October 8, 1987
Professor Henry Abraham, University
"Presidents and the Supreme Court: Reflections on the Selection and Appointment Process."

Wednesday, October 14, 1987
Professor Charles Kegley, University of South Carolina
"The Constitution and Foreign Policy"

Tuesday, November 3, 1987
Professor James A. Kehl, University of Pittsburgh
"Political Parties: Handmaidens of the Constitution."

Tuesday, December 1, 1987
Professor Thomas J. Baldino, Juniata College
"The Nature of Representation in the American Constitutional System."

Ink Stains

Ballpoint ink stainbs can be removed from fabric or vinyl by spraying with hair spray. The hair spray will dissolve the ink that should be blotted up and wiped away with a clean cloth or paper towel. Sponge stains caused by printer's ink or carbon paper with rubbing alcohol, then rinse.

Display on Constitution

A unique display honoring the bicentennial celebration of the framing of the Constitution of the United States, made possible by the National Endowment for the Humanities, is being featured until mid-September in the L.A. Beeghly Library on the campus of Juniata College.

Consisting of three four-panel kiosks with 2 posters depicting events in the development of the Constitution, the display provides an intimate view of the process involved in writing the Constitution.

Called the "Blessing of Liberty," the presentation features the Bill of Rights, sketches of the men who wrestled with the concepts and the words of this great document, descriptions of events and circumstances that were a part of the Constitution's development, and the voting records of the original states that ratified what would become The Supreme Law of the Land. In that vote, Pennsylvania's delegates cast 46 yes votes, with 23 against ratification. The display is open to the public during regular library hours. Beginning Monday, August 24, the L.A. Beeghly Library is open 8:00 a.m. to 11:45 p.m. Monday through Friday, 10:00 a.m. to 11:45 on Saturdays, and 12:00 noon to 11:45 on Sundays.

Storming of the Arch Tradition Lives On!

The annual Juniata College tradition of the storming of the arch took place on Wednesday, September 2. The history behind the storming of the arch dates back to 1947, after World War II when the G.I.s were home and attending college. During this time there were a lot of freshmen regulations. The freshmen could not walk on certain paths or pass through the arch under Cloister.

The upperclassmen and G.I.s who imposed these rules lived in Cloister and the freshmen lived in a building called The Lodge. The Lodge was located behind Cloister.

During the next few years, an intense rivalry developed between the freshmen and the upperclassmen. One year a snowball fight started between them. Over the next few years this fight intensified, and then one year the freshmen stormed the upperclassmen's position and attempted to go through the arch under Cloister. Later in 1955, North Hall was built, and the freshmen assault started there as it still does today.

During the early sixties, the regulations were dropped and the annual storming ceased. In the seventies the stormings began again and have taken place ever since then.

At 6:45 on Wednesday, between 10 and 15 freshmen started from North Hall and stormed across the field toward Cloister. Meanwhile the upperclassmen hurled eggs and rotten fruit as they attacked. They sprinted the rest of the way only to be stopped by a wall of upperclassmen. After a few minutes of struggle, they retreated. The second time a few made it close to the wall, but none even reached the steps. The air was constantly filled with debris.

After four attempts, the freshmen gave up and both sides shook hands. The casualties, which can sometimes be high, were few this year.

This year's Cloister motto-"If u can't get up, u can't get in!", proved once again to be correct.

Charge It!

Students lets make that mad rush to the bookstore. We only have three more weeks to charge it before we will have to pay cash. Well, of course, there is always the VISA card.

The college has arranged a package of services with Mellon Bank which includes the VISA/Mastercard. This new system was enacted to accomodate alumni, guests, etc. who could not charge and had to pay cash. Because of this, sales were not as large as possible during special events like homecoming and parents weekend. To the college the VISA card seemed to be the natural alternative.

Many parents and students see this as a way to discourage student purchasing in the bookstore. But, "This isn't to penalize people, it is to encourage purchase in the bookstore by everyone," says Bill Alexander, Vice President of Financial Affairs. Many students are wondering how they are going to purchase books for the next semester, but they fail to realize that the VISA card works just like the student I.D. Someone still has to pay a monthly bill whether it is with the VISA or student I.D. A charge card brings with it a great deal of benefits: it will make it easier for both parents and students to plan for a bill, it will provide more security for students, it can be used in all types of emergencies, and most of all it will give parents more control with funds. "The college is trying to do whatever possible to provide better service to the students and to its patrons," says Bill Alexander.

Scott Himes, manager of the bookstore, is convinced that bookstore sales will drastically decrease because "not many students have credit cards and most still will not be getting them." He feels that it will be a great asset for alumni and guests, but the students will suffer the most. Mr. Himes believes that the student I.D. system was eliminated because it was too much paperwork for the Accounting Office. He proposed having a dual system, both I.D.s and charge cards, but the school did not think that was practical. Scott Himes comments, "I am not enthused about the VISA card, but I will just have to wait and see."

John Jones, Controller for Juniata College, says, "The students were privileged to have used the student I.D.s because most colleges and universities use either cash or credit cards." He hopes the VISA will discourage very small individual transactions which are a waste of time. The new system will also discourage those who do not pay their bills in a timely fashion. The charge card is not making anyone's job easier because it is adding to overhead and increasing responsibilities, but he feels it is the most practical alternative. Mr. Jones says that he contemplated a dual system," but it just was not possible with the resources we have."

I was very upset when I learned that the college was eliminating charges on the I.D., but I soon realized that The VISA works the same, plus it has many benefits. We have truly been privileged to have used the I.D. for this length of time.

Once the system is implemented, it will probably have a rough start, but eventually I think everyone will recognize the benefits in having it. Though I was extremely leary of this, I feel that it will definitely be successful!

The campus radio station, V103, held an organizational meeting August 31 in Alumni Hall. Joe Newhart, station manager, said that it was the biggest turnout yet, with about 70 people attending. The major topics that were covered were the different departments, the training process, the special shows, and the frequency change.

Newhart opened the meeting with a few comments about the station. He said that WKVR promotes professionalism, even though it is run by college students. The purpose of the station is to give the communication majors background, but it is not just for cummunication majors. Anyone can, and is encouraged, to get involved.

The Business Department, headed by Shawn Peck, is a good chance for business majors to get hands on experience. This department is in charge of the station accounts, which are separate from the schools. All of the sponsorships of the specialty shows are also done through this department.

Mike Barnett is in charge of the programming department. They decide which albums should go into the recurrent section and oversee all the shows and special shows. The new shows added this year are "Rockin' in the Keystone State" which features only rock stars from Pennsylvania and airs Wednesdays from 9:00-9:30 P.M. "Weekend Party Power", which is on the air Saturdays from 6:00-9:00, plays only party music. All of the old shows are promoted by the programming department.

Chief Announcer, Dave Fouse, is in charge of D.J. evaluations, scheduling shows, ans training new disc jockeys. Each Sunday, two new D.J.s sit in with Fouse during his 1:00-3:00 show to get hands-on experience. All new and old disc jockeys are also required to be involved with one other department in the radio station.

Ken Bear, Chief Engineer, is in charge of the production room and the broadcasts. His main goal is to have the radio station "go stereo."

The last department discussed at the meeting was the News Department, headed by John Ehmann. V103 news covers world, national, and local issues and sports. Student speakouts are also under the direction of this department.

WKVR is on the air from 7-2 A.M. Each D.J. is in the booth approximately three hours. The station would like to air 24 hours, but there are not enough disc jockeys. If you would like to be a D.J., you should sign the paper outside the radio station. All of the departments need more people and are willing to train anyone.

The rumors about the frequency change should not be used as a reason not to join the V103 team. Two years ago, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) demanded WKVR to vacate its position on the dial to WRLR, who was building a new transmitter. V103 has a temporary application in at 92.3. It also has a permanent application in at 106. If they are bumped from 103.5, they could end up at 92.3 (if the temporary application is approved). Legal litigations for 106 could take years. The frequency change should occur sometime after October 1st. Listen to V103 for further updates.

V103 Executive Board meetings are held each week at 9:00 P.M. in the Blue Room of Ellis. If you have any questions or issues you feel should be discussed, you are welcome to voice your opinion. V103 is owned and operated by the students of Juniata College who are anxious to make WKVR Huntingdon's hottest radio station.

enhance the educational opportunities available to our students and to be selected for this prestigious award means a great deal for those who worked so hard to implement the co-curricular program."

The CNG Foundation Award of Excellence in Education will be presented in September to officials from the three winning programs. One stipulation attached to the award is that the winning programs advise CNG of their plans for using the grant money. "We encourage creative use of the grant money," Ivey said. "After all, the award is designed to recognize innovation and creativity."

The CNG Foundation was established to support Charitable, civic, and educational organizations in the areas served by The Peoples Natural Gas Company, The East Ohio Gas Company, West Ohio Gas Company, The River Gas Company, Consolidated Gas Transmission Corporation and Hope Gas, Inc. The CNG Foundation is funded by profits from the parent company.

The CNG Foundation gave more than $3.5 million to organizations throughout its service area in 1986. In addition to education the Foundation supports the region's economic development, humanitarian agencies, and the arts.

Hot Wax

What group's latest album exhibits a pair of red, luscious lips? You guessed it. Who else but The Love. Their latest sensation is entitled "Kiss Me, Kiss Me, Kiss Me" and rightly so. This double play album was produced by Dave Allen and Robert Smith.

The combination of the music and Smith's writing flair produced nothing less than another incredible album. Although there was a collaboration on the music for the album, the lyrics were masterfully created by Robert Smith. There is no way to do this album justice without listening to it firsthand. But here is an idea!

The overwhelming attraction for me was the delivery and the input of the lyrics. The first single, "Why Can't I Be You?," released from the album has so much energy that you cannot resist dancing. On a different note, "The Kiss" is played with desperate passion and distorted images. It goes like this,"Love me love me love me-you nail me to the floor and push my guts all inside out." "Just Like Heaven" pleasantly reminded me of "The Head On The Door." "How Beautiful You Are" tells the intimate tale of shattered emotion-"And this is why I hate you and how I understand that noone ever knows or loves another."

This album has proven to be much more of a personal masterpiece of insight than an album to please the public. The Cure is presently promoting their album on a U.S. tour. I hope The Cure will continue the "dancing screaming squealing, fevered feeling Hot Hot Hot!!!"

Juniata's Convocation Begins New Year

Juniata College began its 112th academic year and welcomed nearly 1100 students to campus and the opening of classes during Opening Convocation exercises Monday morning.

Continuing a long and proud tradition, faculty, staff, and student body came together to hear words of welcome and challenge as the new academic year began. The Rev. Dr. M. Andrew Murray, College Chaplain, opened the Convocation with an invocation, and then Amy L. Coursen, President of Student Government extended a welcome to new and returning students.

Dr. Debra A. Kirchhof-Glazier, Associate Professor of Biology and the 1987 recipient of the 10th Annual Lindback Foundation Award for Distinguished Teaching, then presented an outstanding address titled, "Understanding an Academic Commitment-Why I Study Biology."

Dr. Kirchhof-Glazier, who received her Bachelor of Science degree summa cum laude from Lebanon Valley College, and her Ph.D. from Cornell University, told students and faculty that everyone needs to be biologically literate.

Effectively using humor and personal reflections, she said biology impacts on every person's life, and she detailed that impact on intellectual life, personal and daily life, political life, and spiritual life.

Dr. Joseph V. Stewart, Vice President and Dean of Academic Affairs, then introduced Dr. Robert W. Neff, President of Juniata College, who challenged students to recognize the beginning of the new term and the college experience as "The Opening of Your Life".

Dr. Neff told his audience that everyone experiences a variety of "grand openings" during their lifetime, and said the beginning of the academic year was a day of expectation.

He stressed that education at Juniata College was a "hands-on" experience, and that students do best "by doing". He encouraged his listeners to be involved and said Juniata provides the means for students to prepare themselves not only for vocations and careers, but also for life. He encouraged students and faculty to see the day as a point of new beginnings.

In closing the convocation, students, faculty and friends joined together in singing Juniata's Alma Mater, lead by Dr. Joseph Figg and accompanied by organist Mrs. Norah Figg.

Juniata River Club Or The Rugby Club

This Saturday the Juniata River Men's Rugby Club will introduce its 1987 fall season with a home match at 2:00 p.m. vs. Allegheny Men's Rugby Club.

For the first time in its modern history, the club will be offering to our community a look at this fast and growing sport under the crisp fall central Pennsylvania skies. The various colors in the leaves provide a most refreshing background to an open field where thirty gentlemen will converge to participate in a most elegant demonstration of sports competition.

The action is quick-paced and non-stop for 80 minutes where the teams involved attempt "tries" and "goals", while preventing the opposition from doing the same. To the unaccustomed viewer, rugby appears to be a combination of soccer and football (without the pads). However, with the sport's high level of aggression yet dignified social code (players address the referee as "sir"), the game seems more like a confrontation at tea-time than a bunch of guys out to hurt each other for nothing more than sheer pleasure.

Furthermore, the match is not just a physical meeting of two groups limited by a time clock. The event tends to last for hours afterward with the exchange of songs, dance and stories from various geographical regions. Sort of a cultural thing, like the ancient Olympics were to the Greek world. And the Royal Blue blood is not forgotten at these affairs either: no proper gathering is without its King or Queen, elected by the commoners, or ruggers as they are called.

At the end of the day, when all is said and done, the two clubs and respective followers go their separate ways to carry home their old and new found experiences. And so it goes that the following weekend will only mean another journey to a distant land of violence bliss.

We hope that our taste here at rugby has stirred your interest and will lead the community out to our first match on saturday, September 12 (match time 2:00 p.m.). The event will be held at the Captain Jack Lion's Park just east of Huntingdon. To get there, just take route 22 east 4 1/2 miles to the "Snacks Sub" shop located a mile past the Swigart Museum on the left hand side. The match site is just to the right of the snack shop. We're looking forward to seeing you there.

Cross Country Outlook

Hard work, dedication and positive attitudes will be the key ingredients to the success of the men's cross country team at Juniata College.

Coming off a shaky 0-11 season, Head Coach Jim Payne will build his team with five returning lettermen and seven new recruits. Among the harriers will be seniors Ernie Aschenbach, Jon Monteleone, Todd Mullen and Phil Schlegal. Juniors include Rush Blady and Jeff Boshart. Sophomores will be Martin Bunn, Jeff Mosemanand Bill Selak. Freshmen Vince Morder and Kevin Small will round out the 1987 squad.

According to Payne, despite their overall team record, last year was very successful for his runners. Each were able to cut their five mile times by 3-7 minutes. Payne is confident that with similar accomplishments, "we can improve (our record) greatly."

Payne is doing double duty for the Indian harriers this fall. He is also the head mentor for the women's cross country program.

The lady Indians are coming off an impressive 8-2-1 season with several top runners returning to the squad. Among the veterans are seniors Shelley Stepke, Sue Galla and Krista Jones, juniors Stephanie Payne, Julie Drummond Kimberly Esh and Cherie Byars and sophomores Julie Dannaway Hippeli and Janice DellaGuardia. Newcomers to the program include sophomore Daniella HIppeli and freshman Mary Strapple.

Despite the loss of several seniors, Payne's returning letterwinners should provide opponents with tough competition.

"With hard work and dedication we should have an overall good year for both squads," he concluded.

The Indians open their season on September 12 at the Lebanon Valley Invitational.

New Faces On College Hill

The return of inter-collegiate athletics to College Hill this fall has also brought additional experience and talent to the individual coaching staffs. Joining the athletic department are five well qualified additions to Juniata's varsity sports program.

Juniata Head Football Coach, Rob Ash, in his eighth year at the helm, is supported this season by fifth year defensive coordinator Brad Small. Also returning to the coaching staff are seventh year assistants offensive coordinator John McDonald, offensive line coach John Schonewolf and defensive secondary coach Steve Lach.

New to the staff is defensive back specialist, Jeff Miles. A 1982 graduate of Juniata, Miles returns to the campus bringing excellent performance credentials as a former member of the offensive backfield. He also holds the record for the longest kick-off return (99 yards) in the history of the Middle Atlantic Conference. Along with his coaching duties, Miles will be earning credits toward his teaching certificate. Married to '82 graduate Lisa Donohue, Miles makes his home in Bellwood.

Another addition to the football staff is Juniata Alumnus Donald Brumbaugh. A veteran of football strategy, Brumbaugh returns to the coaching staff having worked under Walt Nadczak. He also brings to this year's squad numerous years of high school coaching experience and is responsible for the success of the defensive line. A teacher at Tussey Mountain School District, Brumbaugh and his wife Patricia reside in Saxton.

Klaus Jeager, Juniata's Head Soccer Coach for the past nine years will have help this season, using the talents of new assistant coach Christopher Noyes. A 1986 graduate of Allegheny College, Noyes comes to the Indian staff with an impressive athletic background, including two time NCAC All-Conference selection for the 3000 meter Steeple chase and the Barndollar Memorial Soccer Award from his Alma Mater. Noyes will also serve the college community as the J. Omar Good Protestant Campus Minister. Noyes and his wife, Terry Gazzo-Noyes, reside in Huntingdon.

The cross country team will also benefit from additional coaching staff. Second year coach Jim Payne will have the services of Tom Hoffman. A 1983 graduate of Juniata College, Hoffman went to the Pennsylvania College of Podiatric Medicine to earn his D.P.M. A former member of the Juniata cross country team,Hoffman received the MVP award and accumulated school records in cross country and 1500 meter events. An employee of Raystown Podiatry Associates in Huntingdon, Hoffman is also a professional member of American Fitness and Running Association. He and his wife, Ruth Ann, will reside in Huntingdon.

For second year field hockey coach, Kathi Quinn, things are optimistic. Not only has Quinn been able to field an enormously talented squad for the 1987 season, but she will also have the talent of her new assistant coach, Diane Buza.She was a 1974 graduate of William Tennent High School and is a registered nurse who completed her course work a Jefferson University in 1977. Buza,her husband, Richard, and their two children, Allison and Leslie, make their home in Huntingdon.

Juniata Athletic Director, William Berrier, feels very confident with the additions in the coaching staff. "I have confidence in these newest coaches, and with their ability in dealing with and coaching our athletes. Their entusiasm and dedication is a definite asset to the program."

V-Ball Tradition Continues

Coach Larry Bock has set some high goals for the 1987 varsity volleyball team. According to Bock this team, consisting of ten letter winners and several key recruits, should be very, very good.

"Everyone worked very hard through the winter and spring and we should be a legitimate contender for a Conference title and a National Championship. Anything less than that would indicate poor coaching. These are great kids and great athletes. We should be looking at a year that is a lot of fun," said Bock.

The Indians, who finished fourth in the NCAA Division III tournament, will have experience in every position.

Senior All-American Beth Hoppel returns to the lineup to begin her third season as the starting setter for the Tribe. She led the Indians in 1986 in several areas including serve consistency, kill ratio, and attack consistency categories. Bock will rely heavily on Kris Witchey, a sophomore from Colorado, to assist Hoppel. Freshman Sue Grande, deemed the "best graduating high school setter in Western Pennsylvania this year" should also help out.

The middle should be a consistent threat to opposing defenses with the presence of four year starter Cathy Miller, a smart hitter and humbling blocker. Miller led the team in stuff blocks last year with 180, a new record. She was also the leader in ace serves (77) and passing accuracy. Sophomore Rhonda Bygall will begin her second season blocking and hitting out of the middle for the Indians. Bygall followed Miller in the blocking department with 146 stuff blocks.

Helping the Indians in the middle will be veteran Tonya McClucas and freshman Amy Allsthouse, a talented athlete from Bishop Guilfoyle High School.

Perhaps the most exciting player in Division III volleyball, Jackie Rebert, returns to the Indian lineup ready to destroy opponent's defensive schemes.

In 1986 Rebert attacked the ball 983 times, recording an impressive 399 kills. Defensively she led the team in the dig department with 298.

Starter Laurie Snow returns to the outside hitter spot after an excellent spring at the NCAA Track and Field Championship. Other top players vying for an outside hitter position will be Angie Shue, a transfer from Seton Hill and Renee Malkin, a sophomore with tremendous leaping ability.

Defensively, Bock couldn't ask for more depth. Junior Dana Worthington, a fearless defensive specialist will return along with teammate Sue Gelston. Another outstanding freshman in the program, Michele Wissinger, should be a long term asset to the Tribe. Bock praises Wissinger's (Richland) outstanding capabilities.

Bock said of the incoming player, "We feel we're getting some of the top players in the East. We know these people very well and have a good knowledge of exactly what they can do. They should continue the tradition of good volleyball at Juniata," Bock said.

Bock sights passing as the key to a successful season. "We have great hitters and a setter who can get the ball to them. Passing will be the biggest single factor," he said.

The winningest coach in College history, Bock believes that it will be important for the golden spikers to learn from their mistakes and losses early in the season. The ability to overcome losses should enable the Indians to excel during M.A.C. and NCAA tournament time.

"Again this year the schedule is very competitive. Hopefully it's one that will test the team strenuously and regularly."

Each tournament is expected to be very strong this year, particularly the home tournaments, the Navy tournament, the Boston-North Shore tournament and the Michigan-Midwest Invitational.

"Our biggest goal is to do well in our conference tournament. Elizabethtown, Messiah, Gettysburg and Western Maryland should be strong contenders for the championship," Bock said.

"We should be very competitive on the national level as well," he added. Nationally, the teams to beat should be Albany, Illinois Benedictine, Elmhurst, Colorado College, University of California at San Diego and a number of others.

"My assistant coach (Susan Benusa) and I have never felt content to maintain the status quo with our program. We have some innovations and new strategies to throw at our opponents and certainly the personnel to carry them off," Bock said.

According to Bock the team worked extremely hard during the winter and spring, under the direction of Benusa, for the 1987 season. "I expect them to be more than ready when we open our season with Waynesburg College at Bishop McCort High School," said Bock.

We had a good U.S.V.B.A. season, finished third at regionals, our best finish ever. Weight training in the off season accomplished a lot and we get a very strong feeling that this team is really hungry," concluded Bock.

The Louvre

The Louvre Museum in Paris first opened to the public on Nov. 8, 1793. The construction of the Louvre, originally intended as a royal residence, was started in 1203 by King Philippe Auguste. Its fine art collection was begun by Francis I in the 16th century.

Indians Riding High Gridiron Hopes Randolph-Macon Will Be First Test

By Mike Antenucci

Those who know about college football would predict that any team that looses 11 starters from a 9-2 team, including several all MAC picks, a pair of outstanding linebackers, and a school record breaking quarterback, would undoubtly be in a redeveloping, rebuilding year. However, as the colder weather moves in and the puffs of smoke steam from the physical plant tower which looks over the field on College Hill, the aroma in the air is only that of football madness and the sweet smell of victory.

Where does one start on such a long journey to replace all the key players from season past? The most logical place to begin would be at quarterback where Chris "Cubby" Davis steps into the spot left vacant by the graduated Mike Culver. Davis doesn't show the experience on paper, but on the feild the Holidaysburg resident will undoubtedly be ready. Last year against Moravian, Davis stepped in to help the Indians to a 14-13 come from behind victory.

Davis should get great support from his receiving corps, led by Junior wide outs Don Betar and Mike Cottle, and all MAC tight end Jim Metz. Frankie Phelps will be a deep throat and has outstanding speed. Phelps should also continue to return kickoffs for the Indians this year. Paul Albitz should also contribute along with freshman Ray Shelley. David Madgwick, a freshman from Reston, Virginia looked impressive in the inter-squad sqrimmage two weeks ago and John Jones is back after a years absense from the gridiron.

If Davis fails to hit one of his many receivers he can always look to swing the ball out to sophomore and leading ground gainer from last year, Dan Crossey. The tailback compiled 644 yards on the ground and 206 in the air. Pat Danneker has a tough chore ahead of him, for he must replace a 2 1/2 year starter. However, Danneker does have experience at the position and was running hard in the inter-squad game.

Of all the units which were hurt because of graduation, head coach Rob Ash knows that he has lost an experienced offensive line. "If we don't have a line to protect our passers and open holes for our running backs, then we have problems. These positions were high priority in camp." However, the Indians feel they have found the right combination and build their strong foundation around juniors Ty Snavely (6'2, 265) and Mike Martin (6'1, 250). Sophomore John Sigler (6'1, 235) is solid at center along with classmate Todd Ferrara (6'0, 234) and Jan Petery (6'0, 215) filling in the other spots.

On the other side of the ball, the Indians will have to replace a pair of linebackers, as well as pair of defensive ends. Several times over Ash has noted that the players who were lost at these spots (Bob Crossey, Bryan Warren, Lou Komer, and Tom Kalinyak) were the best in the league.

Jr. Frank Gay (6'1, 214) and sophomore Steve Campbell (6'3, 210) look to step into the linebacker spots for defensive coach Brad Small. Gay answered the call last year while Warren was injured in the early parts of the season. Down in the trenches the Indians are strong. Ray Witmer (6'0, 235) and Jeff Haines (6'7, 270) are experienced and get the job done. Along with Haines and Witmer is senior Tom Yeager (6'0, 240). Yeager has an incredible knack of always being around the ball and is undoubtly the catalyst to the d-line. Dave Ritter (6'3, 250) will also be up front and add to the Indians experience here, vying he avoids injury.

Chuck Rihn (6'0, 212) and Greg St.Clair (6'0, 205) should fill in the outside linebacker spots. St.Clair was moved to this position after starting two years on the corners. Randy Martin (6'5, 226) was also moved from tight end to this position to add some depth.

In the secondary senior Mark Dorner has some of the qualities to be a legitimate NFL draft pick. However, with the loss of St.Clair to a new position, Dorner will only have junior, Tim Kirsh to add to the experience of the secondary. Sophomore's Bob Herzog and John Spahr will have to step in with not much varsity experience. Spahr will also serve as the punter.

Special teams should be a "special" concern for the Indians this season. The punting team was hurt by several miscues last season. However, that problem was attacked in camp and should not be a problem.

If all goes as planned the Indians should have a good season. Matching a 9-2 season and an 8-0 start will be difficult-there are no weak holes on the Indians schedule. JC travels to Virginia to play Randolph-Macon this Saturday.

Juniata's Danion Preziosi Battles with an unidentified Susquehanna player during last Saturday's scrimmage. The Indians battled to a 1-1 tie.

Soccer Preview

Blending the new with the old will be the strategy of Juniata College Head Soccer Coach Klaus Jaeger.

Beginning their ninth season of competition, Jaeger believes his team can improve on last year's 4-10-2 record, "If the team finds its groove right away and is spared the land of injuries which hampered us (the team) all of last season."

With only nine experienced players returning to this year's squad, Jaeger will once again rely on the bench and talented freshmen recruits for player strength and team support. Having just two weeks of pre-season practice, coach Jaeger will need to find a unit quickly and establish a team unity among his veterans and newcomers.

Jaeger comments that, "It would be nice to have an experienced line up come opening day, but my team does not enjoy that luxury."

Perhaps the only position the Juniata mentor will not have to worry about will be the keeper. Though 4 players are vying for the position, senior John Bobko and sophomore Tim Phelps will be the two to look for in the nets come opening day.

Leading the defense this season will be senior co-captain Mike Gifford and returning starter Doug Kovacs. With support from senior Dave Wright, Junior Bruce Nardy and sophomore John Telenko, the defensive backfield will be deep with talent and experience.

Seasoned veterans will also control the offensive attack. Junior standout Steve Grater, Drew Spector and sophomore Bob Kelley will combine steady footwork and speed to lead the Indian's offensively.

The midfield, however, remains a challenge for the zindian coach. Senior co-captain Paul granger will need to play a leadership role as the sole returning upperclassmen to the position. Jaeger will have to look to freshmen Lawrence Ajello, Rudy Lampi, Damian Preziosi and transfer Eric Bowman to fill the gaps in the midfield positions.

Jaeger contends that this will be a challenging season for the Indian booters. Their 16 game schedule began September 5, with a home match against MAC foe Susquehanna. The public is reminded that all are welcome and admission is free.

Field Hockey Preview

By Deb Dougherty

The 1987 Juniata field hockey team is young, but talented. With only four returning letter-winners, Coach Kathi Quinn is relying on the skills of her freshmen to help obtain the goal of a .500 season.

Pre-season went well for the Tribe. Quinn was pleased with the attitudes and enthusiasm of all the girls. Everyone was into practice and was excited about the beginning of the season. The girls worked hard on working as a team and getting the skills and strategy down.

The Tribe played three pre-season scrimmages and went into their first league game 1-1-1. Their first season game was against Carnegie-Mellon on September 5. The young team surprised the veteran squad of CMU and took the game into a double overtime. The game ended in a tie 0-0.

The young team is going to surprise more teams in the Mid-Atlantic Conference (MAC) with their talents. Some key people to watch for will be Amy Blough, Jennifer Dippery, Mickey Hoffman, Jody Holman, Kathleen McGowan, Jill Schadler, and Joanne Thomas, because they have previously played at high levels of competition. The MAC is the most competitive field hockey league in the country with the highest level of Division III play.

The leadership and experience displayed by the four returning players, Mickey Hoffman, Joanne Thomas, Kathleen McGowan, and Gen Warner, has made the adaption to MAC play easier for the 14 freshmen. Quinn relies on these girls and her assistant coach, Diane Buza, to help the new members. Quinn also depends on Iggy Gillette, a three-year starter at goalie out with a knee injury, to help train the two goalies, Gen Warner and Deb Dougherty.

With a whole new team and a whole new program, 1987 should be the starting season of the incline of the Juniata Hockey Program. What is Quinn's outlook for the season? "We are not going to be the doormat of the league this year."

Dynamite

Alfred B. Nobel (1833-1906) accidentally made an explosive discovery during his experiments in 1866. Nitroglycerin from a broken flask was absorbed by kieselguhr, an insulating substance. Nobel noticed the absorbed nitroglycerin retained its explosive qualities, but was more stable and easier to handle. The new explosive was dynamite.

President Neff appointed Dr. Nancy Van Kuren as new Dean of Students.

Dr. Van Kuren Appointed to Dean of Students

Dr. Robert W. Neff, President of Juniata College, has announced the appointment of Dr. Nancy Van Kuren as Dean of Students at the college.

Dr. Van Kuren completed work on her doctorate at Virginia Poytechnic Institute and State University in Blacksburg, Virginia and earned her M.S. degree from Alfred University, Alfred, New York and her B.A. degree from Wilkes College, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania.

Dr. Van Kuren served as a graduate assistant and a higher education intern in the College of Education at Virginia Polytechnic Institute while completing work on her Doctorate. She brings nearly a decade of experience in working with students in a variety of responsibilities. For nearly three years she served as Assistant Director of Resident Life/ Coordinator of Student Development at Mansfield University. She has also served as Residential coordinator at New Hampshire College and as Acting Director of Student Activities at Longwood College, in Farmville, Virginia.

In commenting on Dr. Van Kuren's appointment Dr. Neff said, "We are fortunate to have a young woman of Dr. Van Kuren's caliber join us. She is well qualified for the position, has tremendous enthusiasm and energy, and I have every confidence that she will be a valuable asset to the Juniata staff." Dr. Van Kuren assumed the responsibilities of her position July 1, 1987.

College is Given Grant of $20,000

Juniata College has been awarded $20 thousand by the Ben Franklin Challenge Grant Program in support of the work of the Juniata College Business Outreach Center in 1987-88 according to Dr. Clayton N. Pheasant, Vice President for College Advancement.

The grant, awarded in response to a proposal drafted by Dr. James Lakso, Chairperson and Professor of the Economics and Business Administration Department at the college, will help the Juniata College Business Outreach Center to provide management and technical assistance to manufacturing

Mountain Day: An Annual Tradition at Juniata College

Mountain Day, an annual tradition at Juniata College, will be occuring sometime during the first two full weeks in October. It is a day in which classes are cancelled in order to give students a chance to enjoy a day "out in nature" and participate in organized events.

The origin of Mountain Day began during the school year of 1878-1879. According to the book by Earl C. Kaylor,"TRUTH SETS FREE", the small pox epidemic which hit the Huntingdon area especially hard caused the college to close that winter. Three male students who lived too far away to travel home decided to go to the old forge near Marklesburg until the school reopened. At this sight, which is now called Trough Creek State Park, stood several abandoned houses in which the students stayed. When the students returned in the spring, the event became quite famous.

Even though the college community had picnics at Trough Creek, the mountain picnics really became a celebrated event during the year of 1896 when the first all college outing was held in the spring of that year. The college community arose early in the morning and rode the Huntingdon and Broad Top Railroad to Marklesburg. From there, they traveled in farm wagons to the picnic sight.

The picnics were not actually held in the fall until 1900 and in 1903 Henry Brumbaugh named the event Mountain Day in his diary.

During the early 1940's, the tradition stopped because of the war but because of a large enrollment in the college in 1946, the tradition was returned.

This year Mountain Day promises to be quite interesting. A preview of the events for this year are; the traditional football games between Sherwood and Cloister, faculty and Seniors, and a powderpuff game between the girls of Lesher and South. Also, there will be obstacle relay races, hikes through Trough Creek State Park, tug-of-war between classes and much more.

1986-87 Fiscal Year, The Single Largest Giving Year in Juniata College History

More than $2.9 million was given to Juniata College during the 1986-87 fiscal year making it the single largest giving year in the college's history.

According to Dr. Clayton N. Pheasant, Vice President for College Advancement, those funds will allow the college to increase the endowment for scholarship assistance, increase actual scholarship grants, purchase much needed teaching and scientific equipment, and offer an enhanced program of arts and lectureship on the campus.

"Juniata's alumni gave over $1.9 million to the college in 1986-87," Dr. Pheasant said, "some $1.1 million more than the previous year. That generosity, coupled with other giving sources, will allow Juniata to provide greater student assistance and upgrade programs in a number of areas, and in total make Juniata an even better educational institution."

Approximately 3300 alumni, over 37 percent of Juniata's alumni population, contributed during the year. "That fact is a reflection of the unique support afforded Juniata College by its alumni," Dr. Pheasant commented. "The percentage of alumni giving is approximately twice the national average," he said.

Dr. Pheasant also announced the succesful completion of the largest Annual Support Fund (ASF) campaign in the college's history. This year's total of $314,622 surpassed the stated goal of $275,000. George Fattman, a 1958 graduate of Juniata and Editor of The Johnstown Tribune, served as chairman of this year's ASF drive.

Mr. Fattman attributed the success of the Annual Support Fund to Juniata's loyal alumni. "Of the nearly $315,000 raised this giving year, more than $195,000 came from our alumni," he said. "Our success is the result of the efforts of our alumni and student volunteers who spent a great deal of time contacting graduates urging them to help make the campaign successful, " Mr. Fattman said.

Although alumni contribute the largest portion to the Annual Support Fund, the College benefitted greatly from the gifts from foundations, businesses and corporations, matching gifts the Church of the Brethren, the Juniata Parents Association and other friends of Juniata College.

Editorial

Over the past several years, Juniata College has become increasingly aware of potential lawsuits. In protection of this institution from financially devastating litigation, the format of the alcohol policy was altered. A considerable amount of administrative attention was given in the changing of the policy and now as much attention should be given to this issue.

At the present time at colleges and universities across the country, there is another issue that is taking precedence over alcohol-related lawsuits. Colleges are not sanctuaries where students are protected from the threat of crime, an issue that is greatly concerning parents. The occurence of violent crimes on campuses has led to the tightening of security-- but not before the loss of a life and not before a multi-million dollar lawsuit.

Constance and Howard Clery have initiated a nationwide crusade to force universities to reveal reports on the extent of crime on their campus. This campaign is the result of the brutal rape and murder of their 19-year old daughter, Jeanne Ann. Ironically, the Clerys opted for Lehigh University over Tulane University for their daughter's undergraduate education because of a report of a violent crime at Tulane. As part of their crusade, they have filed a $25 million lawsuit against Lehigh for failing to prevent Jeanne's death to increase attention to campus crime. For colleges and universities to avoid losing millions in negligence suits, it is imperative to focus more attention on security issues-- increase safety education, increase security budgets and enforce expulsion for drug use which is often behind incidents of violent crime.

Murder on a college campus, such as Jeanne's, is not a one-time occurence. In this state over the past four years, there have been students killed at Drexel University, the University of Pennsylvania, Cheyney University and Penn State's main campus. Granted, these incidents were on larger campuses than Juniata, but the Clery's do have a valid point- we are not members of the ultimate refuge in Huntingdon. It's time for the students and administration to consider this rather grim topic. Does JC have enough trained security officials who are on duty 24 hours a day? Is this campus safe?

It's so easy to feel the security of our Juniata community nestled in the mountains of Pennsylvania, but I would rather address the issue now and make changes then to deal with it after the rape or murder of a peer.

Human Concerns Committee Sponsors South Africa Talk

By Tina May

Last Thursday, September 10, at 7 p.m., The Human Concerns Committee sponsored "South Africa: Voices From Juniata." Dr. Neff, President of Juniata College, and Amy Coursen, student body president, discussed the issues in South Africa. John Deppen, chairperson of the Human Concerns Committee, made the introductions, as well as provided some backround on the South African situation. The meeting was held on September 10, as a symbolic gesture to mark the death of Steven Bieco who was beaten ten years ago on that date.

During her speech, Amy Coursen linked the issue to Juniata by describing a student's viewpoint. She explained the concern promoted by the Juniata students last year. In response to this concern, a South African week was organized in order to educate everyone about the backround of the situation, the present situation and possible alternatives. There were films, speakers, meetings and newspaper articles.

Students petitioned to see the college's list of investments. They followed a legitimate form of protest by going through proper channels with student government. The board agreed to open the portfolio, and it was discovered that Juniata did, in fact, have investments in South Africa. What was the next step? Other colleges were asking for complete divesment, but this seemed impractical to Juniata since the actual dividends from these investments were of minor significance, amouting to less than one percent. Thus, the question became a question of principles for Juniata.

At the national level there were protests and demonstrations. People appealed to multinational corporations. These corporations has several options: to demand radical governmental reforms, to abide by the Sullivan Principles which provided equality at work, to do nothing or completely divest.

Many of these possibilities were impractical. Though most chose to follow the Sullivan Principles, only 1/4 of the companies strictly and honestly applied the principles. In desperation, people appealed to the federal government, so President Reagan established the constructive engagement policy. This meant that by remaining in South Africa we, as a nation would be able to monitor the situation, prevent the spread of communism, as well as protect U.S. investments relating to mineral deposits.

Today most companies have divested. It is no longer merely the issue of South Africa, it has provoked a range of questions concerning investor responsibility. Do investors need to probe into the backround of the companies or just be concerned with the profits? According to Amy, "things can be accomplished, and the first step is through education and understanding."

Dr. Neff related his personal experiences to the situation in South Africa. Through meetings with the author, Bishop Tutu, Payton and Allen Bosac learned of different approaches to the conflict within South Africa. Payton felt divestment would be a tragedy, while Tutu and Bosac called for immediate divestment.

In 1986 after a speech by Bosac, the Church of the Brethren decided to divest. But, the issue in South Africa is much deeper than economics. It is a total disfranchizement of a group of people. A policy of separate and unequal has been established in order to insure a working force. Even Leon Sullivan, the developer of the Sullivan Principles, feels more needs to be done. Companies need to speak out and become involved with the black community before it is too late. The next step is trade embargos and not recognizing South africa as a legitimate government. The student sector has become more involved and aware of the situation, especially by acknowledging that there is a moral side to investing.

The board has made several modifications. They are caught between their concerns and their tasks of principles by representing values of the community. During the summer, the board shifted the opinion of involvement and decided to follow the Sullivan Principles. With increased responsibilities, the board deemed it necessary to hire Leeman Brothers as investmant managers. At the present time there is a need to establish a guideline for other principles and issues.

With the increase of global interaction, a method of enforcing decisions is necessary. Because there has been no answer to the South Africans problems, they are quickly progressing toward violence. Dr. Neff foresees a civil war due to the alienation of the blacks.

In society people need to find their own cause and develop reasoning for their beliefs. Here at Juniata the students abroad play an influential role since they have experienced a different type of understanding and are able to convey a unique viewpoint.

One question still remains-as students what should we do? Dr. Neff suggested writing letters in order to obtain more information so we, as students, can better understand investor responsibility. Students should become involved by petitions, questionnaires, and proposals. By following proper channels there are a variety of choices possible in order to promote change. The board and Dr. Neff both encourage the involvement of faculty and students. It is important to be involved within the society, and as students the welfare of Juniata is our responsibility.

Johnny Appleseed

John Chapman, alias Johnny Appleseed, planted nurseries of apple seedlings in clearings before pioneers arrived. He planted to his dying day, March 18, 1845, near Fort Wayne, Ind. where his grave is now the center of a small park. Some of his trees still stand, though many believe the last one toppled in a storm near Mansfield, Ohio in 1959, after bearing apples for more than 100 years.

By John E. Deppen

Alex Jones claims that a younger generation can teach the lesson that the color of our skin no longer divides our country or our people. That's interesting, in light of the fact that Kenneth B. Clark, Professor Emeritus of Psychology at City University of New York, who has spent decades studying the problems of racism, recently concluded: "There haven't been any significant changes in American racism."

In today's America, the black unemployment rate is worse than that of whites; studies show that many black children have a low self-image due to a lack of emphasis on racial pride; a black presidential candidate who is clearly leading in the Democratic polls is looked upon as making only a "symbolic" run; and the Ku Klux Klan demonstrates against blacks when they try to exercise the basic right of free passage, as they did in January in Forsyth County, Georgia (this list does not take into account the discrimination and abuse that other minority groups face, i.e. Hispanic Americans, Asian Americans, etc.).

Alex Jones is right-we cannot allow anyone to teach us to hate. However, we cannot allow Alex to teach us that racism is dead. It is very mich alive-even in our generation. There is a long road yet to be traveled before we can join hands and sing in the words of the Negro spiritual, "Free at last! Free at last! Thank God Almighty, we are free at last!" We must continue the fight-if we quit now, we will never reach that promised land which Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. saw from the mountaintop in 1968 and which he believed we would one day enter.

ARTIST SERIES COMES TO J.C.

By Margaret Gorglewski and Jani Lewis

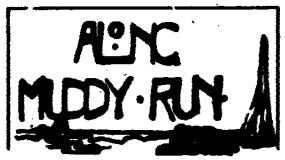
We do not need to drive to New York to see great cultural performances anymore. Juniata College's Artist Series offers five opportunities this year to taste some high quality professional productions without paying New York prices.

This year's series promises to have a wider range of appeal than ever before. The series commences on October 10th with a presentation of "The Tempest" from The National Shakespeare Company. To ring in the Christmas spirit, The Barksdale Theatre Company will perform "A Child's Christmas in Wales," by Dylan Thomas on November 24th.

The beginning of the winter semester welcomes the world renowned Boys Choir of Harlem for an evening of musical stimulation (January 23, 1988). Gracing the stage on March 3, 1988, will be "Liz Lerman and the Dance Exchange." The series closes with a classic, "The Man of LaMancha," presented march 28, 1988, by Daedalus Productions.

Buff Vocke, a prominent figure in the organization of the Artist Series, is especially enthusiastic about this year's program. "our main goal this year is to host nationallly recognized groups, which could appeal to every audience." Vocke explained that two of the theatre groups will be staying on the Juniata campus for several days to prepare and rehearse their material. Students are encouraged to become involved with these "in-residence" companies, in drama classes, stage help, and even to chat with them in the cafeteria.

There has been an upgrade of the quality since last year, which has raised the price of the tickets. This price is still excellent for the quality of performance that we will be seeing. Season tickets ($10 for all 5) must be bought at the Ellis Information Desk before October 9th. After October 9th, tickets can be bought only for individual performances: students $3.00, other $8.00.



By Patricia Kazmerski

Tradition. Webster defines tradition as the passing of beliefs and customs from generation to generation. I define tradition as a curse. I believe that all our present day traditions began when someone had too much to drink and decided to put a hex on all future generations. The hex condemned all his predecessors to years of ridiculous actions and embarrassment. Sometimes also to hard work. For those of you who are totally confused by now, wake up and read carefully.

Take for instance family traditions. Everybody has them. In my home, I live in the past. I was fortunate enough (ha) to be born into the two most traditional nationalities known: Polish and Irish. I really enjoy being Irish because the only embarrassing thing I have to do all year is dress in green on March 17th. The one thing I thoroughly dislike about having a 100% Irish mother is her taste for potatoes. Seriously folks, we have potatoes as a side dish every evening with our family meal. My mom has become a sort of magician at disguising the starch bags. To date, she has served boiled potatoes, baked potatoes, French fried potatoes, perogies, potato pancakes (to the uncultured), potatoes with cheese, potatoes with broccoli, and how can I forget her beloved mashed potatoes? She would make a great cafeteria worker here at J.C., we could match her up with thechicken people. Well enough about the Irish. My mom will kill me if I write anymore.

Well the Polish have many traditions as well. We screw in light bulbs with the help of 30 of us--one to hold the bulb and 29 to turn the wall. (Oh, man is that bad.) Some people are probably saying well, she must not be too proud of her heritage if she can joke about it like that. Well guys, I'm just warning you how a Pollock reacts when he hears a Polish joke. He laughs, silently curses the out of you, and later tells the same joke, but carefully annihilates the word Pollack and puts it in Italian. (Gee, I kill myself!) The one thing I simply love about being Polish is our weddings. Life doesn't get any better than those. For 24 hours everyone forgets their problems and celebrates life (with the help of 24 kegs of Genesee ale, the official drink of Polish weddings). Some of my greatest and happiest memories surround the weddings I've attended.

Well enough about my family traditions. I am going to tell you about the traditions I have found Along Muddy Run. Traditions which belong to my new family--the Juniata community.

First, the people here must really love picnics. The first two weeks here, I was invited to five (you know, your RA says go or else). Talk about being cordially invited. Well they were fun. I just enjoy eating food which has been openly sitting for two hours in an infested area of gnats and flies. I also like sitting in mud and the remnants of some guys food which did not agree to well with the gallon of liquor he consumed over at Cloister. Times like this I have to have my friends hold me down before I have too much fun. (Believe that, and I'm selling healthy Jersey water tomorrow.)

The funniest picnic I attended here was the one during orientation. Remember those stupid and sickening games you upperclassmen had to do? Well, we Freshmen had to do the same. Everyone enjoyed running down 10 feet of unlevel ground, spinning around a baseball bat with their head between their knees 10 times, and then running back and falling flat on their faces in front of 65 complete strangers. Nothing like making a good first impression. The most hilarious thing I remember is when this guy volunteered for the ice cream game. Well, I'll never forget seeing his face covered with chocolate chip ice cream. I promised him that for the next four years on campus, I would call him "Ice Cream Jones".

Another tradition big on campus is the "Storming of the Arch". The thing that surprised me most is the incredible violence the upperclassmen surge towards the freshmen. Don't you guys feel any pity on the frosh? Remember, you were in their position once. Another thing I can't understand is that the freshman knew what they were in for, why didn't you guys prepare yourselves better. You know, arm yourselves with food and the such. I sound like I'm putting this tradition down, but I'm not. I enjoyed it until the heads started banging. Guess what, they were freshmen heads. Well at least after all that, the freshmen and upperclassmen shook hands and made up. What amazed me was that soon after, the freshmen were planning their strategy against next year's freshmen. Have pity on us all!

Well there are many more traditions which will be coming up shortly. There is Homecoming, Madrigal Dinner, and All Class Night. As an upperclassman, you should celebrate them to the hilt because they will be memories you will always treasure.

Tradition links us all to our heritages and our pasts. Tradition builds a family as well as an institution. It is what makes each of our families unique and our college so endearing. Let's drink a toast to tradition--here, here!

Well, until next week,"Keep you eyes open and your nose clean or you might find yourself knee deep Along Muddy Run! "Bye!

Centerboard would like to take this opportunity to belatedly welcome all students back to JC and invite anyone and everyone to get involved with Centerboard and its activities.

Everyone is somewhat familiar with Homecoming, Parent's Weekend, and Madrigal, but these are only a few of Centerboard's committees. The main goal of Centerboard is to guide campus events and to provide students with enjoyable, educational, social and recreational programming. The following is a list of Centerboard's members and committee chairpersons.

Travel

Look for Centerboard's brochure in the near future for a complete description of these committees and a list of important dates!

Two new committees need immediate attention, however! The Travel Committee was reinstated this year with Matt Varner and Todd Leipold as co-chairpersons. They aim to work on some bus trips to concerts, football games and other events of interest to JC students-including a trip for Spring Break! If you have any trip suggestions, feel free to express them.

The "Great Escape" is being co-chaired by Janilyn Elias and Sue White. Centerboard is excited about this committee and the opportunity to provide JC students with a departure from alcohol in interesting and exciting activities. Plans include excursions to the hot tubs in Penn State, hayrides and some midnight trips to the local caverns.

Centerboard is looking for those artistically inclined people on campus to design a T-shirt logo! If you have a great idea and want to enter the contest, drop the design off at the Information Desk or the Centerboard office during office hours.

Speaking of office hours, Centerboard is planning to develop a schedule so students can drop by with any comments, suggestions, or constructive criticisms. Or, with a T-shirt logo design! Tentative hours for this week are:

Monday (1-5) (7-8)
Tuesday (12-1) (4-5)
Wednesday (1-2)
Thursday (12-1) (7-8)

The Centerboard office is located in the basement of Ellis near the new cash machine.

right now. If cancer's in the stars, it's in the stars. I went to the doctor's on the wrong day. I went to the wrong doctor's. Maybe next week I'll make it. It's against my religion. Preliminary Plans Made by RHAs

By Michelle Trick

RHA (Residential Housing Association) is once again becoming active in the residence halls on the Juniata College campus. This is a very brief overview of some of the plans members of the RHA have in mind for the 1987-88 academic year. This list is by no means complete; most halls have only had at the most two meetings and therefore have not made many plans yet.

Tussey/Terrace will continue to be a hot spot on campus. President Tim Phelps and vice-president Lauren Smith have promised that there will be TNT group gatherings once a month and plenty of lounge parties. In addition, residents of Tussey/Terrace can enjoy movie night every week and a possible Powder Puff football game. A logo contest as well as golf and ping pong tournaments are expected.

North's big project will be to do some major renovations on the Dungeon. This study lounge is in dire need of some changes so that it will be a pleasant place for North residents to study.

In addition, says Sue Smith, hall representative for third Northwest, North will sell boxer shorts and mugs and have lounge parties. North RHA President Jim Metz says North will also be recycling cans and bottles as a means of raising money.

East's RHA is planning a year of parties and fun, assures vice-president Shelley Stepke. East officers hope to make t-shirts, have an energy conservation contest, and have a Powder Puff football game.

Sherwood does not want to disclose its big plans; however, Mike Mayer, vice-president, lists some of the planned activities as various parties and socials, a racquetball tournament with Northeast as well as within Sherwood, and a flag football team.

South has high hopes for a fun year. Their major project is to buy a VCR to be used by South residents. Julie Azar, secretary of South's RHA, says residents would be able to sign out the VCR on a nightly basis. A soon-to-be coming project for South is "tuck-ins". Here male residents will be able to request young ladies to tuck them in at night; females can do the same with the men. Other future projects include Oktoberfest, semi-formals at Christmas and in the spring, and selling boxer shorts.

Cloister will no doubt be having fun non-stop all year long. Residents of Cloister are urged to save all aluminum cans and tabs for recycling. What Cloister is saving money for remains a secret.

Lesher has many ideas for bringing its residents closer together. President Kathy Fanzo lists movie night, monthly birthday parties, a room decorating contest, and socials and parties as ways of uniting residents of Lesher. Other things Lesher plans to take part in are jello wrestling, energy conservation, and Powder Puff football. Lesher will also sell candy and make t-shirts.

It is obvious that no matter which residence hall you live in, you are sure to have a fun year. Even if you are not in RHA, be sure to attend your hall's meetings. That way you'll be informed and you might even have a good time.

Chandler's wobble

As it rotates, the Earth wobbles on its axis. This deviation is known as Chandler's wobble, and it reaches its peak every seventh year. Some scientists believe earthquakes are more numerous in those years. The next peak year will be 1992.

Get Involved With Phi Chi Theta

By Suzanne Lydic

What do you do when you are a business major and you want the opportunity to put your knowledge to practice and the chance to learn firsthand about the business world? Your first step is to contact Jill Ranck (RA on 2nd South), and she will introduce you to Juniata's year old fraternity--Phi Chi Theta (Epsilon Lambda). Phi Chi Theta is an academic professional business organization founded to provide students with an opportunity to supplement their classroom lectures with practical knowledge.

Your second step in joining the fraternity is to begin the week long rushing process which will occur this term in mid-September. A $25 initiation fee (first year only) is charged along with a $20 membership fee and a $5 dues. These fees are then put towards your subscription to the "IRIS" magazine--a national publication of Phi Chi Theta.

Your third step in becoming a member is participation in the month long pledging event. Since hazing is not tolerated at Juniata, pledging just entails learning more about our own Epsilon Lambda chapter. This term's pledging will take place between the end of September and the end of October for any second term freshmen thru first term seniors who are interested in joining.

Phi Chi Theta is governed in a regulatory manner. The general organization meetings are held every other Tuesday at 7pm in Good Hall--the next of which is September 15th. Board meetings are held during the off Tuesdays. The officers for this year are as follows: Jill Ranck, president; Jack Winebrenner, vice president; Hilda Hearn, secretary; and Kathy Nicholson, treasurer. Epsilon Lambda's advisor for this year is Edward Kaminski. The group is also divided into various committees which routinely take care of business.

The Accounting and Finance committee, which is chaired by Joey Bard, provides tutorial help for students in accounting and finance classes; the first of these help sessions will be on September 14th. This committee is also trained by an IRS representative to administer the Voluntary Income Tax Assistance program to the elderly citizens of Huntingdon at no charge.

The General Management Committee, headed by Karen D'Angelo and Ann Telfeian, also offers a tutorial class. This class, which began sessions on September 7th, helps students understand the traditional OFA classes in the management process.

Sharon Murray runs the Marketing committee which controls the fundraising activities of the group. The major projects for this year entail the distribution of the monopoly shirts, a lounge party on November 7th, and the sale of Juniata beverage coolers or "huggies" around Homecoming. The monopoly project raised $925 last year for the Huntingdon House.

Two other subdivisions of Juniata's Phi Chi Theta are the Internal Affairs division and the Speakers and Seminars coordinators. Internal Affairs is run by Chris Glover who acts as a liason between all business department personnel. Amy Lane takes care of arranging three speakers or seminars per semester. The first speaker this semester will be Mike Keating of Huntingdon on September 22nd.

Although this fraternity is academic it does sponsor some social events. Their most popular spring even is mud volleyball; organizational Christmas get-togethers are held at a business professor's home in the chill of the winter; and a boat cruise on Lake Raystown wraps up the year for the group.

Anyone interested in actively learning about the wonders of the business world, check into joining Phi Chi Theta.

Student Government News

By Amy Coursen

Juniata College Student Government exists to serve and represent the student body. This is accomplished through communication. Each residence hall and class has a senator who acts as a liason between student government and the student body. All of your concerns should be expressed to the appropriate senator. It is important that student government hears the complaints, problems, and concerns of the students so we can act on them.

Some of the services that student government provides are the chartering and funding of student organizations, refrigerator rentals, co-sponsorship of the Leadership Conference, used bookstore, joint-sponsorship of campus wide elections, student appointments to trustee and faculty committees, and the developing and drafting of policies. Residential Life, a committee of student government, sponsors the room decorating contest. The Student Concerns Committee researches all concerns brought before the senate. Student government also, through the Joint Lecture Committee, co-sponsors campus lectures. These are only a few of the services student government provides.

Student government can and does work for the students. Inform us of your concerns!! Box 995

RD and RA Training Prepared Leaders

By Michele Johnson

While most Juniata College students were relaxing and soaking up the last rays of the summer sun, 37 Resident Directors and Assistants were preparing for our arrival.

These young men and women underwent intensive training and prepared for the challenging task of managing activities in each of Juniata's residence halls.

According to Betty Ann Cherry, Interim Associate Dean of Students at the college, the intent of the training was two-fold. The first purpose was to give the residence hall staff adequate information and skills to feel comfortable in doing their jobs. Building a group support system was the second purpose of the four day session.

"This year was an attempt to have more of a workshop that is participatory," Cherry said. Lectures were held every day from 9:00 in the morning to usually 5:00 at night. Within the schedule, time was alloted for interaction and participation games among the staff.

Lectures, which were given by members of the administration, covered the policies of the college. In addition to this, the staff learned many new things about both themselves and their fellow RA's.

"I would hope that some (of the training) is staff development and some personal development," Cherry said. Jen Nicholsen, Juniata senior and Tussey RA feels that they did a good job on staff development. "It's very important that a staff feels together and supports each other." She says, "They do a great job of that."

Rich Birnich, also a Juniata senior and South RA, feels that they did a very good job, but it could have been better. "They should include more things (personal) for everyone in a group setting." In comparison to last year, there were not as many breaks or little games to get to know everyone, according to Jill Ranck, also a senior South RA.

The participation that did take place initiated that support system among the RA's that is so vital. "Sometimes you need someone to talk to, and a lot of times it's just another RA," says Rob Glenny, senior Tussey RA. Nicholsen also agrees with him, "The more we do to interact, the better we will be." The games that were included between lectures were a good way to interact, according to Birnich, because everyone was always with a different team.

The duties of an RA are numerous. They must assist with student check-in, maintain residence hall inventories and serve as a liason between the student body and the student services organization. Their other duties include counseling in areas like freshman adjustments, roomate conflicts and stress problems, and providing leadership and support. As far as being prepared for all of these duties, most RA's felt that they were.

"For the most part, when you're accepted for the job, that says that you're ready," Lee Abromowitz, senior Northwest RA. "No amount of training is going to help you be an RA." Glenny agrees with him. "In being selected RA, you have the qualities necessary already in you."

Junior Tussey RA, Mike Gress says he didn't really know what to expect. "It does so much for you because you interacted with different people."

Figureheads

Figureheads are about as old as sailing itself. The art grew from the ancient custom of decorating ships' bows to invite guiding spirits to dwell in the vessels.

Canadians

Three quarters of the Canadian people live within 100 miles of the United States border. Some 45 percent are of British origin; almost 30 percent are French.

Maple syrup

American Indians taught early colonists how to make maple syrup, and today it still is produced only in the United States and Canada.

Katz Begins Lectures on Constitution

Probably at no time since the civil rights issue was at the forefront of legal consideration has there been such debate and interest in the Supreme Court of the United States and its reading of the intent of the constitution.

On Tuesday evening, September 22, at 8:15 p.m., Professor Ellis Katz of the Temple University Department of Political Science, will present an address titled, "The Supreme Court Interprets the Constitution." The presentation will be part of the Pennsylvania Humanities Council supported Lecture Series in Celebration of the Bicentennial of the Constitution, and will be held in Alumni Hall on the campus of Juniata College. The public is invited and encouraged to attend, and there is no admission charge.

Dr. Katz received a Ph.D degree from Columbia University in 1966, and has done advanced study at the Institute in Behavioral Science and Law at the University of Wisconsin. He is a professor of political science and a resident fellow of the Center for the Study of Federalism at Temple University, where his specialties include constitutional law, federalism and intergovernmental relations, and the politics of education.

Professor Katz has served as consultant to the attorneys general of Pennsylvania and Minnesota, the Louisiana Supreme Court, the National Center for State Courts, and the National Conference of State Legislatures, in addition to having held many other state and national advisory positions.

Publications by Dr. Katz include Ethnic Group Politics, several monographs on federalism and the courts, and many articles on state and federal roles in education and judicial systems. He is currently completing a manuscript on The Government and Politics Of Pennsylvania. He has lectured widely in the United States and abroad, including Yugoslavia, Hungary, Italy, Austria, England, Ireland and Brazil.

Terry Noyes, a Pittsburgh native, is the new Resident Director in Lesher.

Noyes is Lesher's New Resident Director

By D. Dougherty

Terry Noyes, the Resident Director for Lesher, comes from Penn Hills, a suburb of Pittsburgh. She attended Grove City College and majored in Sociology/Religion. During her college years, Terry was involved with the Out Reach to Juvenile Delinquents Center. She was also a Resident Assistant, a counselor in the Leadership Development Program, and a Bible Study leader.

Grove City did not have co-ed dorms, so Terry considers Juniata a good transition to a co-ed school. She finds living in an all female residence hall challenging and exciting but not overwhelming. She enjoys all of the girls.

Terry's favorite part of being a RD is the time she gets to hang out on the different floors or in her apartment with the girls. She also enjoys recognizing the many differences in the girls and seeing their personalities develop.

Being a residence director is not all that Terry does at Juniata. She is also involved in the Campus Ministry Program with her husband, Chris. She oversees the Deputation Club and the different developmental clubs on campus. Terry also takes care of other small tasks that occur weekly.

Terry takes her job as RD very seriously. She feels that her main responsibility is to encourage the development of the residence hall community. This comes through counseling, different programs, and developing relationships.

As a whole she feels that the Juniata students are mature and serious minded. She is appreciative of the Student Life staff, which has the concerns of the students and staff in mind.

Terry's future goals include getting a Masters Degree in counseling and continuing to work in some kind of human services field. She would eventually like to have kids and maybe even be a foster parent.

Dolnikowski and Glazier are Distinguished Profs.

Two Juniata College faculty members, Professor George T. Dolnikowski and Dr. Debra Ann Kirchof-Glazier, were honored with distinguished teaching awards during the college's 108th commencement ceremonies in May.

Professor Dolnikowski, associate professor of Russian and German, was honored with the 29th Annual Beachley Distinguished Professor Award. Dr. Kirchof-Glazier, associate professor of Biology, was named the recipient of the 10th annual Lindback Foundation Award for Distinguished Teaching.

The Beachley Award was established by Donovan R. Beachley, Sr., a graduate of the Juniata Class of 1921 and a member, emeritus, of the Board of Trustees; Donovan R. Beachley, Jr., Juniata Class of 1947 and a member of the Board of Trustees; and Mrs. Donovan R. Beachley, Jr., all of Hagerstown, Maryland. It provides a stipend of $2,000.

Criteria used in selection are years of service to Juniata, contributions to the development of the nominee's department and the College as a whole, effectiveness as a teacher, scholarly activities and service beyond the campus.

Recipients of the last three Beachley Awards have been Dr. Donald J. Mitchell, professor of Chemistry (1986), Dr. Robert P. Zimmerer, professor of Biology (1985) and Dr. Duane F. Stroman, professor of Sociology (1984).

Professor Dolnikowski joined the Juniata College faculty in 1954 after what can only be described as incredible journey. Born in Anna, USSR, Dolnikowski was a Russian inmate in a German prisoner of war camp in 1941. In 1950, as a displaced person, he arrived in the United States unable to read or write English and barely able to speak the language.

Two years later, in 1952, he earned a Bachelor of Arts degree in History from Juniata College, a feat made all the more noteworthy because he had begun his studies as a part-time student while working fulltime as a college janitor.

In 1954 Professor Dolnikowski was awarded a Master of Arts degree in Germanic Literature from the University of Pennsylvania and that same year began his long and distinguished career at Juniata. Prior to coming to the United States, Professor Dolnikowski had studied at the Institute of Foreign Languages at Voronezh and received a diploma from the State Pedagogical Institute of Foreign Languages in Moscow.

Professor Dolnikowski continued his graduate study at Harvard University and at Marburg University in Germany, and he has since been named a fellow for summer seminar studies from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Dedicated to Juniata College and to his students, Professor Dolnikowski has been very active in working to develop a greater understanding of diverse cultures and histories. It was largely due to his efforts that Juniata College was able to recently host the internationally acclaimed Russian poet. Yevgeny Yevtushenko.

In announcing Professor Dolnikowski's selection as the Beachley Distinguished Professor Award recipient Juniata College President Robert W. Neff said, "George Dolnikowski has given of himself with long years of service to this institution and to countless students. He is rightly held in high esteem and with great affection by his peers, his students and by all who know him. He is the consumate teacher, and it is fitting and good that he be so honored."

The Lindback Award, funded by the Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation of Philadelphia, provides a $500 stipend. Selection criteria includes contributions to the total educational effort of the College and outstanding work by a junior faculty member who has served the College for seven or fewer years.

The award recipient is selected by Dr. Neff, who is assisted by a committee of faculty members. Last year's recipient was Loren K. Rhodes, assistant professor of mathematics and computer science.

A native of Pottstown, Dr. Kirchof-Glazier joined the Juniata faculty as an assistant professor ,in 1981. She received her B.S. degree, summa cum laude, from Lebanon Valley College and her Ph.D from Cornell University where she was named the outstanding graduate student in her discipline.

She is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Beta Beta Beta, Phi Alpha Epsilon, and other professional organizations and her major academic interests are in the areas of reproductive physiology and histology.

In presenting the award to Dr. Kirchof-Glazier, Dr. Neff commented, "Juniata College is fortunate to have someone of the quality of Dr. Kirchof-Glazier on staff. She has proved herself to be a very valuable asset to the Juniata teaching family. She is dedicated and eminently capable teacher, and her contributions have and will continue to enrich the lives of her students. We are pleased to recognize and honor her."

Kaylor aids in Compiling Religious History Book

Dr. Earl C. Kaylor, Professor of History at Juniata College, is a contributing author in a recently published, first ever history of religion in Pennsylvania.

Dr. Kaylor, who has authored and published a number of works concerning the Church of the Brethren, has written a history of that denomination for inclusion in a book compiled by 28 religious groups that cooperated in the project. The history was intended as a contribution to the bicentennial observance of the United States Constitution with its course-setting First Amendment respecting religious freedom.

Different chapters of the book are written by historians of the principal religious groups, as selected by their leaders. Catholic, Jew, Orthodox and Protestant all give their own accounts of both origins and more recent histories of their faith.

The 276-page book is the first cross-denominational history of religion and religions in Pennsylvania. Chronological introductions include reference to interdenominational work. Many religious groups, from the Labardists and Millerites to the "Society of the Women in the Wilderness" and Father Divine, are included along with the major religious denominations and agencies.

Editor of the book is Dr. Robert Grant Crist of Camp Hill, who teaches at The Pennsylvania State University. The book explains why religious toleration first flourished in Pennsylvania and why the Commonwealth leads the nation as the birthplace of denominations.

The book is available through the Pennsylvania Council of Churches for $6 for softbound copies and $15 for hardbound copies. The Council's address is 900 South Arlington Avenue, Harrisburg, PA. 17109.

Jack Troy is a Success as Artist and writer

Jack Troy, Assistant Professor of Art at Juniata College, had a busy and successful summer doing two of the things he likes to do best: pottery and writing.

Troy who is well known for his outstanding work as a potter, was additionally recognized when he was awarded First Prize in Crafts in the Scenic River Days Festival in Reading. He also won an Award of Merit, Crafts 21, in the Central Pennsylvania Festival of Arts in State College.

Troy also had success with his writing and has an article, "The Art of The Japanese Potter" in the current "American Ceramics" magazine, as well as a piece, "Thoughts on Tradition", in the summer edition of "Ceramics Monthly".

To add additional pleasure to his successful summer, Dickinson College recently purchased one of Troy's large wood-fired pots for its permanent collection.

Heberling Contributes 9th Chapter

Paul M. Heberling, Associate Professor of Anthropology at Juniata College, is a contributing editor for a new reference book titled, "Consumer Choice in Historical Archaeology," published by Plenum Publishing Corporation of New York.

Professor Heberling contributed the ninth chapter of the book. That chapter, titled "Status Indicators: Another Strategy for Interpretation of Settlement Pattern in a Nineteenth Century Industrial Village," might be of particular interest to Central Pennsylvania students of archaeology because it deals with the community that once existed at Greenwood Furnace.

Professor Heberling's study, spawned during a routine archaeological investigation, was concerned with the interpretation of settlement pattern and possible socioeconomic stratification in the village of Greenwood Furnace, one of forty-eight charcoal blast furnaces operating in Pennsylvania"s Juniata Valley during the nineteenth century. Two counties in particular, Huntingdon and Centre, were rich in hematite, limestone, water, power, and charcoal-producing forests, and constituted what was described by one writer as "the principle iron-producing district in America."

The new book, according to Professor Heberling, is intended as a professional reference and is an update of current creative research in archaeology.

W. Ward Gasque, 1987-88 J. Omar Good visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity.

Gasque is J. Omar Good Visiting Professor

Dr. W. Ward Gasque, Sheppard Professor of Biblical Studies at Regent College in Vancouver, British Columbia, has joined the Juniata College faculty for the 1987-88 academic year as the twelfth J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity.

Dr. Gasque succeeds Dr. John C. Trevor, Director of the Dead Sea Scrolls Project at the School of Theology at Claremont in California.

The J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professorship of Evangelical Christianity was established at Juniata College with a bequest from the late Mr. Good, an 1896 Juniata graduate and a Philadelphia printing executive.

Mr. Good and his wife, residents of the Germantown section of Philadelphia, were active members of the First Church of the Brethren there. Mrs. Good, who died in 1937, was the church organist; Mr. Good variously served as missionary treasurer, clerk, and trustee. He died in 1969 at the age of 92.

Mr. Good directly left Juniata College one million dollars. After providing for other bequests, he ordered that the remainder of his estate be used for "the perpetuation of the Historical Triune Faith of Protestant Christianity."

Dr. Gasque, the twelfth J.Omar Good professor, received his Bachelor of Arts Degree from Wheaton College in 1960, and holds both Bachelor of Divinity and Master of Theology degrees from Fuller Theological Seminary. He earned his Ph.D. from Manchester University in 1969 with his doctoral dissertation titled "A Study of the History of the Criticism of the Acts of the Apostles."

More than a decade of research and independent study have provided the basis for the respect Dr. Gasque has earned as an educator and writer. His efforts include editing a twenty-five volume work entitled "The Good News Bible Commentary," and the "New International Greek Testament," a twenty volume commentary series, which will be published over the next two decades.

In addition to his many published works, Dr. Gasgue continues as a prolific writer-editor. He is presently at work on a commentary of the Greek text of Acts, and a book on the theology of the laity, a topic of special interest to him.

Wagoner Exhibits Photography

Nathan Wagoner, a Huntingdon native who has established a reputation for excellence for his photography, will present a one-man exhibit of his works in Shoemaker Galleries on the campus of Juniata College beginning September 18 and continuing through October 12.

Wagoner, who has worked professionally in New York, challenges preconceived ideas about photography with his unique photographic techniques, and his exhibits have earned high praise from viewers and critics alike.

A reception will be held in honor of the photographer Friday evening, September 18, from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. in Shoemaker Galleries. The public is invited to attend and there is no admission charge. The exhibit is a part of the Juniata College Cultural Events program.

Kensinger Appointed Director of Admissions

Juniata College President, Robert W. Neff, has announced the appointment of Charles E. Kensinger as the College's new Director of Admissions.

A 1972 graduate of Juniata, Kensinger will have the responsibility of overseeing the entire admissions operation of the college including the development and implementation of new student recruitment programs.

Kensinger, who has served the college as Director of Development since September, 1984, assumed the responsibilities of acting Director of Admisions a number of months ago when a nationwide search was initiated for a new director for that office.

"We are extremely pleased that Chuck has agreed to accept this vitally important role at Juniata College," said Neff in making the announcement of the appointment. "Chuck has demonstrated time and again that he is a man of excellent character who has the skills and determination to see a job through to successful completion," said Dr. Neff. "We have great confidence that he will continue to do the same exemplary work he has done for us in the past."

Kensinger earned his B.S. degree in Elementary Education and then continued his studies at the Pennsylvania State University where he received his M.Ed. in Educational Administration.

From 1972 to 1974 Kensinger taught in the Everett Area School District, and he then taught in the Spring Cove School District and served as vice-president and president of the Spring Cove Educational Association. In 1980 he was appointed elementary principal of the Martinsburg schools.

While serving as principal, Kensinger developed the district's Long Range Plan for School Improvement, evaluated other elementary schools by serving on the Intermediate Unit 08 Evaluation Team and evaluated the total school program through examining standardized test results and student's daily progress. He also developed programs for exceptional children, and in 1983 he was named Outstanding Young Educator by the Martinsburg Jaycees.

Since joining the Juniata College stafff as Director of Development in 1984, Kensinger has acheived a consistent record of accomplishment. He successfully coordinated various phases of the Century II Campaign at the college, worked with the President's Development Council, and has done an exceptional job of fund raising for student scholarships in Blair, Bedford and Huntingdon counties.

In commenting on his appointment Kensinger said, "I feel very good about the challenge of this new position, and I feel really good about the direction our admissions is headed."

"Juniata has so much to offer students," he continued, "and I have seen so many young people find educational values that they really want and need. I look forward to the challenge that will be a part of this job."

U.S. Constitution

According to "The Little Red, White & Blue Book," this is what happened after the U.S. Constitution was signed on Sept. 17, 1787: It was sent to state legislature for ratification. Delaware, New Jersey and Georgia voted unanimous approval; eight states ratified it by an average majority of 63 percent. North Carolina and Rhode Island ratified the Constitution after it took effect in 1789.

Juniata Shuts Out Randolph-Macon: MAC Season Opens With Del Val

By Mike Antenucci

Why would the Juniata football team schedule a Division III perennial powerhouse like Randolph-Macon, on the road, for their season opener? Does it make sense to test a majority of unexperienced players in a game which took 5 hours to get to? Well, head coach Rob Ash and his Juniata Indians thought it was appropriate, running down the Yellow Jackets 23-0.

Two school records were also tied during the Indians thromping. One by Frankie Phelps, who caught all three of the JC touchdown passes and the other by Mark Dorner, who picked off 3 R-M pass attempts. Ironically, the last time the Indians scored 3 touchdowns, via the air, in one game, was during last seasons opener at Lebanon Valley, when Don Betar hauled in 3.

The Indians scored the first three points of the game on their first series. The drive went 8 plays and ended on Keith Watson's 38 yard boot. On third and 16 "Cubby" Davis hit Frankie Phelps on a screen for a 13 yard gain to set up the field goal.

On the following set of downs Mark Dorner intercepted his first pass of the day off R-M's Rick Kline. Dorner gave the Indians the excellent field position on the R-M 47, and it was only 4 plays later when Davis found Phelps for the 26 yard score and a 9-0 lead. Keith Watson added the pat and JC was in front 10-0 with 5:18 remaining in the first quarter.

After exchanging points and turnovers, Juniata had a great chance to score when Dorner picked off his second pass of the day. However, a Watson 33 yard attempt was no good, and JC still lead 10-0 in the middle of the second quarter.

At this point the game became a defensive battle with the teams exchanging possession 5 times before the Indians managed their last points of the half. With 54 seconds remaining, Davis connected with Phelps again and Watson added the extra point. Juniata lead 17-0. Pat Danneker's 15 yard burst up the middle on second and 10 helped set up the score.

JC had 1 more opportunity to put some points on the board before the half ended. Greg St. Clair picked off Kline for the Indians third interception, setting up the offense on the R-M 15 yard line. However, the Indians did not stick the ball in the end zone, but they still had a comfortable lead heading into the locker room.

The Indians wasted no time in the second half, getting down to business in their first series. A Davis to Phelps TD reception (the one that tied the record) capped off a 9 play 75 yard drive. Watson's pat failed, and the Indians lead stood at 23-0 with 11 minutes left to play in the third. This turned out to be the last points scored in the game.

Juniata opens their home season with Delaware Valley this Saturday and host Lebanon Valley the following week. This also starts the Mid-Atlantic Conference season. The Indians would like to take last years finish and move up one more step (last season JC finished second). It all starts Saturday at College Hill at 1:30.

Nuch's Notes: Dan Crossey rushed for 103 yards on 15 carries, while his counter part Pat Danneker managed 89 yards on 13 rushes. Crossey's long was for 25 yards, Danneker's went for 16. "Cubby" Davis put the ball in the air 36 times, completing 19 of his passes, while only being intercepted once. He threw for a total of 254 yards, 3 touchdowns, and was sacked twice.

Frankie Phelps (the Indians deep threat!) hauled in 7 passes for 11 yards, while Don Betar grabbed 6 for 85 yards, with Mike Cottle, Jim Metz, and Dan Crossey each catching 2. John Spahr punted 4 times for a 37.5 average and added the 5th interception the Indians had off R-M. Keith Watson was 1 for 3 on field goal attempts and 2 for 3 on pat's.

Defensively, Juniata held R-M's All American candidate Remon Smith to just 61 yards on 18 carries, and R-M to 72 yards on 32 attempts. Juniata was basically dominant throughout the game forcing R-M to punt 8 times. This was also evident in time of possession with the Indians controlling the ball for 36:05 to R-M's 23:55.

Frank Gay led the defense with 9 tackles, Dorner and Ray Witmer had 7 each, while Jerry Look, filling in for the injured Steve Campbell, had 6. R-M was held to only 6 first downs. JC had 27. Juniata had 481 total yards on 84 plays. Three times as much as R-M's 129 total yards. JC had 2 sacks for 11 yards.

Mike Cottle was the only injury to report. However, he should be ready for Delaware Valley if needed.

Additional support for Juniata's Business Outreach activities has been received from Huntingdon County Business & Industry (HCB&I) and Household International of Prospect Heights, Illinois.

The Ben Franklin Partnership, which funds the grants program, is an economic development program involving business, government and educational institutions. Its primary objectives are to create jobs in Pennsylvania, improve productivity in existing firms and diversify the state's economy through promoting advanced technology. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania appropriated $28,450,000 for those purposes for the present fiscal year.

Lady Spikers Hot: Record Now 5-1

By Mike Antenucci

Every Fall one tradition at Juniata continues to build. While this years "Storming" may have seemed a bit dull the other nostalgic performance, so far, has been nothing out of the usual. Already the Juniata women's volleyball team has compiled a record of 5-1.

Last weekend's tournament at the Naval Academy in Annapolis was an indication of that success. The 12 team tournament was split into four sections of four, with the teams in each section competing in round robin play. The winner of each section advanced to the semi-finals than to the championship. It all sounds simple, and getting to the semi-finals was that easy for the Indians, the only Division III team in attendance.

Juniata rolled in its sectional play, beating all three of their oponents three games to none. First, Juniata rolled over Dowling College 15-9, 15-3, 15-6, then spiked interstate rival IUP 15-7, 15-2, 15-7, and tipped University of Maryland-Baltimore County 15-9, 15-4, 15-11. The Indians success and brilliant team play was evident in the early rounds and also led to Beth Hoppel and Kathy Miller being named to the all tournament team.

In the semi's things got a little tougher. Juniata was matched against Mississippi University for women and lost their first game of the match, and the tournament, 11-15. However, the Indians would not be denied a championship shop as they stormed back to win the next two games 15-13, and 15-11. Mississippi played tough in game four and rallied to win 12-15. Game five was nip and tuck but JC managed to pull out a 15-11 victory and a shot at the Naval Academy.

The first game of the match was an early indicator of how tight the contest would be. The Indians managed a 16-14 victory, but fell prey to a 15-5 Navy roll in game two. JC bounced back to win 15-10 in game three, but their championship bid fell short as Navy won games four and five 15-8.

The Indians will tally their second place finish into their next match against Shippensburg (which was played on Tuesday). This weekend the Boston North Shore Invitational is on tap for the Indians. The first home match is September 23 against Albright, starting time is 7:00.

Hockey Action

By D. Dougherty

The ladies field hockey team defeated Lycoming 2-1 September 9, in their first MAC game of the season. This victory marked the first MAC win for the Lady Hackers since 1983.

The Tribe worked together and fought hard for the victory. Both the defense and offense moved the ball well and kept the ball on Lycoming's half of the field. The two scores in the game were made by Jennifer Dippery and Kathleen McGowan. Gen Warner had a good day at the goalie position, adding to the Hacker's cause.

The hockey team put their 2-1-1 season record to the test the following Saturday when they played Western Maryland. Both teams played evenly for the first part of the beginning half, but then the veteran squad of Western Maryland began to score and would not let up. The young tribe played a tough game. The JC speed and skill was commented on by the opposing team. The Tribe could not stop the bull-dozing effect of their opponents and were not able to catch up.

When asked to comment about the game, Coach Kathi Quinn said that the game was freshman against seniors but was a good experience for the freshmen.

The hockey team will take the week off and then go on the road Saturday to play York.

Golfers chosen

Curtis Strange, Mark O'Meara and D.A. Weibring will represent the United States in the 16-nation Dunhill Cup Nation's Golf Championship. The tournament will be played in London Oct. 1-4.

Editor's Note

The Juniatian is reminding all those who are interested in being a sports reporter to come to the staff meetings every Sunday night at 7:00pm. This year looks to be nothing short of successful for all teams fall through spring, but the lack of writers, information, etc. will hinder the chances of letting the college and its community know of your success.

Just because you participate does not mean that you can not write. The Juniatian needs your help. If interested contact Sports editors Mike Antenucci (Box 7) or Andrea Zavod (Public Relations Office-day) some time soon. Winter and spring teams, as well as clubs (i.e. Ski) should keep this in mind for future references.

Soccer Prevails

By Mike Antenucci

Juniata's men's soccer team capped off an impressive week of play by defeating conference for Lycoming 3-0. Paced by junior Dan Lazowicks two goals the Indians marked their first victory of the season, making them 1-1-1 on the year.

Last week JC lost a tough overtime game to Franklin and Marshall, however, against Lycoming the Indians were not to be denied. Jeff May netted the other JC score, while teammates Paul Granger and Steve Grater were credited with assists.

Juniata's next contest will be against Elizabethtown, away this Saturday at 2:00.

1:00 p.m. - Soccer Juniata vs. York

1:30 p.m. - Football Juniata vs. Lebanon Valley

2:00 p.m. - Field Hockey Juniata vs. Johns Hopkins<P

Bruce Davis, who is the Executive Administrator for the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will talk about Hollywood and what it is really like. Attend this seminar at 9:30 a.m., Saturday the 26th, in Shoemaker Galleries.

Immediately following Volleyball Friday night, the Pep Rally takes place on Detwiler Plaza. Entertainment will be provided by the Juniata Cheerleaders. The Class Skits will also be presented. The theme of the skits this year is "Freedom From School Policies." Each class will portray a different policy. The lypsync contest starts Sunday, September 20th, with the seniors performing at 5 p.m. The contest continues each night at 5:30 with the finals on Thursday.

Eight person teams will represent each class in the Town Run this year. Come support your classmates in this obstacle course which takes place between Mission House and the corner of 18th and Moore Streets at 10:30 Saturday morning.

The Homecoming Parade follows with many attractions including floats and the Homecoming Court. The Homecoming Queen will be crowned during the Halftime Show at the Juniata vs. Lebanon Valley football game.

The Homecoming Dance wraps up the activities with music by Bernie Milton and The Soul Patrol. The dance takes place in the Multi-Purpose Room in the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center and will follow traditional party format.

Alumni Returns to Juniata— What's Hollywood Really Like?

There's a world of difference between the bucolic tranquility of the Huntingdon setting of Juniata College and the bustle, bright lights and glamour Hollywood.

For 1965 Juniata graduate Bruce Davis, however, the transition between the two has been made not only with ease, but with considerable success as well. Today, after only seven years in California, Davis serves as Executive Administrator for the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

On Thursday evening, September 24, Davis will be back on Juniata's campus to take part in the festivities of the college's 1987 Homecoming celebration. He will present a talk, open to the public, titled "The Role of Film in Modern Society," at 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall. There is no admission charge.

Following his graduation from Juniata, Davis went to the University of Maryland where he earned a Masters Degree. In 1968 he returned to Juniata, teaching interdisciplinary courses in the Humanities. He eventually became Chairman of the college's Theatre Department.

For one year Davis took a leave of absence from his teaching duties at Juniata to study film making in a non-degree program at Columbia University. When that course of study was concluded he returned to Juniata and resumed teaching.

Davis, always interested in writing, had submitted a number of scripts to Hollywood sources for consideration. After considerable deliberation of an agent's advice- that his work was good, but that he (Davis) needed to be in Hollywood if he wanted to get anywhere with it - he resigned his position at Juniata and left for California.

According to Davis, his first year in Hollywood he concentrated primarily on writing, but in 1981 was hired by the Academy of Motion Picture arts and Sciences. Just two years later he was promoted to Executive Administrator, the position he holds today.

In that capacity his responsibilities include the cultural and preservational aspects of the Academy. He oversees the Academy's film archives, does programming in promotion of motion pictures and has some responsibility for Hollywood's biggest annual event, the Academy Awards presentation.

In his remarks at Juniata, Davis will discuss movies as an art form and talk about what they contribute to American culture. He will examine the role of motion picture in American Society in the present, and discuss how that role differs from the past, and what might be expected in the future.

In commenting on his anticipated return to Juniata and Huntingdon, Davis said,"I have great respect for Juniata, as a graduate and as a former teacher. I also have respect for small college education, and I feel Juniata offers one of the best."

he is also looking forward to his visit to Huntingdon. "I love the town," he said recently in a telephone interview. "My wife (Joann, a 1975 Juniata graduate), and I talk about Huntingdon freqently. We have lots of friends there, and it is going to be nice to get back." Davis and his wife recently became parents of a baby girl, Archer Paige.

In addition to his Thursday evening presentation, Davis will also be speaking to a number of classes at Juniata and will address Juniata Council members in a Saturday morning meeting telling "What Hollywood is Really Like."

Mountain Day is Just Around the Corner!

By Amber Terhune

Get psyched for Juniata's legal "blow-off" day because Mountain Day is just around the corner! We don'know when it will be but we do know where. Trough Creek is this year's location for the picnic, games, and relaxation.

The activities planned for Mountain Day include a Cloister-Sherwood and a senior-faculty football game. The faculty will also participate in a volleyball game against the freshmen. Other activities include the traditional tug-of-war between the classes, a water balloon toss, and a pie-eating contest. An obstacle relay with bat spins, wheelbarrel races and a relay race are also planned. A van will be transporting students to an area with hiking trails all day.

Polish and Italian sausages, knockwurst, and saurkraut have been suggested as menu items for Mountain Day. If the food is anything like last year, you can't miss out!

Special thanks to Amy Ludwig for designing the logo for Mountain Day t-shirts. Don't miss the 104th Mountain Day!

Editorial

Hello-is there anyone out there? I know that there is because I see you. Every day I see hundreds of students going to and from classes, eating in Baker Refectory and going to practices for varsity sports. Also, there has to be professors instructing these students and there must be administrators or someone running this institution of higher learning.

So with that established, I am still left to wonder what everyone is doing with their time considering that I have yet to receive any type of response to material in "The Juniatian". I thought that the members of this Juniata community would be more motivated to express their opinions. Granted, we are all busy studying, doing problems and reading a seemingly insurmountable number of chapters, but there must be more to our education. Part of the essence of a Juniata education is gaining the ability to think about issues and to logically express our ideas. However, this should not be limited to essay exams. There is an entire world out there to contemplate.

A considerable amount of thought was put into my previous two editorials with the intention to generate some discussion. The purpose of these editorials is to make a clear stand on an issue, and hopefully a slightly controversial topic. I would like to argue that my editorials do take a side and there is plenty of room for opposition. It is doubtful that everyone is in agreement, so where are these people with other opinions? A personal goal for this newspaper is to make it a topic of conversation (beyond the typographic errors). A campus newspaper should be something to be kept, to be taken back to your rooms for future reference and not merely to be thrown on the floor in Ellis.

It remains to be seen what will get a rise out of you. Not only have I doubted the entire security system here but I have to some extent, questioned the worth of a JC education. How is it possible for no one to have another opinion or a method to better such a plan? Where have all of the voices gone? I suspect that they may have gone home! This past weekend, someone suggested that I write my editorial on how boring life is here. At that time, I was having too much fun to consider that, although it was a nice change to receive feedback. But now I think that this is my topic because the Juniata experience will only be what you make it.

Exchange prof. addresses aspects of Afghanistan

By Jani Lewis

When presented with the thought of Afghanistan we think of a war-torn and politically controversial country. Recently Juniata students were presented with a more indepth view of Afghanistan, one of powerful mountains, rough and rugged deserts and beautiful people. Dr. Bruno Mistaen, a visiting geology professor from France, did his doctoral research in Afghanistan. During his stay at J.C. he gave a slide presentation on his research in Afghanistan, focusing on both its terrain and its many cultures.

Dr. Mistaen came to Juniata on a professor exchange program set up between Juniata and the Institute of Superior d'Agriculture (I.S.A.) in Lille, France. He came for a month to learn more about Juniata, specifically about the geology department. He also shared his knowledge on the subject with the geology students. In return, J.C. will be sending a professor to I.S.A. in May and June to reciprocate this exchange of information. There exists already a student exchange between J.C. and I.S.A.; the exchange professors will enhance the program giving both schools a better knowledge of one another.

In France, Dr. Mistaen lectures at I.S.A. and also at the Faculte' de Sciences. At Juniata Dr. Mistaen sat in on geology classes, aided in the geology laboratory and accompanied the classes out on geological excursions. He also gave a few in class lectures on his specialty-Paleontology and Stromopoids.

In comparing Juniata College students and the system of education here to the students and system at I.S.A., he remarked that the attitudes of students here are quite different from those at I.S.A. The most noticeable difference is that J.C. students don't talk to one another during a class unlike the French students who are "tres bar ardes". American students spend more time out of class studying while the French students will take many more notes during a lecture. This reflects the different methods of teaching found in these countries. In France there are no textbooks so the students rely heavily on the notes they receive in class whereas here books are relied upon along with lectures to explain the material covered.

Dr. Mistaen studied in Afghanistan on the suggestion of a Mrs. Brice. She had done her thesis on the geology of Afghanistan using information gathered by another scientist. She was never able to go to Afghanistan but knew there had been little geological exploitation done in Afghanistan leaving much to be explored. From 1973-1978 Dr. Mistaen spent a total of eight months in Afghanistan during which time he and 40 other scientists of the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique (CNRS) explored the terrain. In that time the group sent about 1.5 metric tons of rock back to France for further analysis and display.

Afghanistan is a very rough country with varying landscape, according to Dr. Mistaen. In the center of the country runs a mountain chain which is surrounded like an island by an ocean of desert. Most of the population is located in the most habitable area lieing between the mountains and the desert. There are, however, nomadic tribes which migrate between the mountains in summer and the desert in winter. The people are as varied as the landscape with many different tribes, each having its own culture and traditions.

Dr. Mistaen and his group were well received by the Afghanistan people, that is once they explained that they were not Russians. The Afghanistans, even at this time, several years before Russia invaded the country, did not like the Russians. Dr. Mistaen said that more recently this fact has become a uniting factor for the different Afghanistan tribes.

Upon arriving in an Afghanistan village the children would first come observe Dr. Mistaen and his group. Slowly the older members would appear until the whole village was observing the travelling caravan of scientists. "They were very friendly and invited us to stay in their homes," he explained, "but because of their living conditions (very rustic) when we did stay with them we would wake up with 100 flea bites and so after that we always pitched our own tents to sleep in."

"I would love to return there, but the Russian occupation of it is impossible."

Hot Wax

By Buffy Heisey

This unnamed album bears the soul of Echo and The Bunnymen. Some of the mystical Echo and The Bunnymen sound was left behind in exchange for a more serious, mature sound. Don't be distressed, this album holds many pleasant surprises.

The music presents a violet, opaque aura-nothing is in perfect focus. There is that question of reality. If the music gives this illusion, the lyris on this album anchor the music in the concrete world.

The most dramatic element in the music is the skillful use of the keyboards. They use the piano-like quality in several songs which is quite effective. However, a different technique is used in "Bedbugs and Ballyhoo" due to the influence of The Doors. In their 1986 tour they even included several Door's songs in their concert.

Jan McCulloch wrote the lyrics for this album and also sang the vocals for the band. In many of the upbeat songs, the smooth voice tone is replaced by a more powerful demanding one. This change in voice commands your attention while the music compliments it.

The lyrics flow like poetry. McCulloch has a very clever way of injecting a more socially aware attitude in his songs without being blatantly obvious. "The Game" introduces this album with "The earth is a world, the world is a ball, a ball in a game, with no rules at all."

If you like the old Echo and The Bunnymen, this album is a mix of the old and the new and will be a welcome change. For those who have never been introduced to their unique sound-this album is a must!

J.C. MUDDY RUN

By Steve Costalas

I have to say that this school year has started out quite well. Now that we are into the fifth week of school (1/3 of the semester), the upperclassmen seem to be back in the groove once again. It seems like the freshmen have adapted to "college life" and are ready to become real students for once, yeah right.

Now that the school year's on the roll, we have all of the 'fun' things to enjoy once again. For example, football games, lounge parties, Mountain Day, Lake Raystown, the cliffs, and of course, Cloister's attempt to beat last year's keg record. Good Luck! I think a number of things concern the college community. Some of which I have described below.

One major concern throughout the school seems to be how the football team will do this year. With their excellent record last year and their promising team this year, we'd like to see them kick some a-- again! To date they have a 2-0 record and they expect to keep that zero a zero.

And of course, we've heard of the fate of the Rugby team here at J.C. Now they aren't affiliated with the college but are an independent club. Supposedly, the administration was not happy with their behavior last year after their tournament. Great, but they shouldn't have been aced from the college. So now, the team, called "Juniata River Rugby Club", gets to laugh back at the administration because they're sponsored by Miller Brewing Company. They happened to get some $800 from them over the summer, thanks to Ed Hoffman. Way to go Ed! As for the shirts that they can't sell on campus, that's another joke! Now students cannot buy such shirts and support the Ruggers Varsity letter. How about setting up a booth at the uptown Sheetz to sell the shirts? That sounds good.

How about the rule that you need IDs at open lounge parties? I think it's ridiculous that we need to carry them when this school is so small and we usually know everyone else's faces. I see the reason behind the rule, but after 4-5 weeks of classes you think that you'd know all the other partiers' faces when you're working at the door? Right, the school's responsible for everyone else's actions. Haven't I heard that before?? By the way, don't forget to carry your IDs to the parties this coming weekend!

Ready for the next one? How about the 50 cent charge for check cashing? You have to be crazy to charge 50 cents to cash a check for only about five or ten dollars. That seemed to hit a lot of people hard, but I guess we'll have to hit Sheetz to cash a check, they don't charge anything.

I'm sure many other things affect the student body, but I have covered what seems to be most recent. The juniors and seniors have seen some great changes happen here at Juniata, and I'm sure you are all agreeing with me now. It seems like the days of plain ol' fun have slowly slipped away, but we shouldn't overlook the primary objective of our being here. For that's what we really want from this place when we graduate and look for jobs a few years from now. Good luck this year!

SIGI-System of Interactive Guidance and Information- can help you in the important areas of career planning and decision making.

As a freshman, you are going to be making some critical decisions over the next several months. SIGI can help you with those decisions. It can help you examine your own rewards and satisfactions associated with occupational choice.

At the sophomore level, SIGI can aid students who are considering POE changes. Interest patterns change and we find out more about our capacities intellectually. Many students will be looking at career paths quite different from those they had as freshmen.

SIGI can be of benefit to juniors and seniors as well as freshmen and sophomores. It is never too late to look at and change one's career plans. SIGI can serve to reinforce current plans and/or it can introduce options perhaps not previously considered.

Special features afforded SIGI users include occupational information. Each year the software program is updated to insure that only accurate and timely information is presented. Additionally, users can access information on hundreds of occupations (job prospects through the 1990's, salaries, special requirements for entry).

But most importantly, you can schedule SIGI very easily and at your own convenience. The program consists of five systems and take approximately two hours to complete. It comes with a printer so you can take hard copy with you for future reference. Stop and schedule an appointment with SIGI! Just see Shirley Powell in the Career Planning and Placement Center. Remember, it's alright to be undecided regarding a career path, but it is not alright to do nothing about it.

By Alex Jones

As we near what is only the end of the first month of the semester here at our beloved Juniata College, I am dismayed to find that I am already hearing, "There is nothing to do here!" The folowing is a true story of what four young men did to avoid "another three nights of redundant parties" and the "Huntingdon Blues" when they found that they had to stay through Senior Week, 1987.

Wednesday night, four soon-to-be sophomores (we'll pick All-American names to protect their identity: Joe, Bob, Rick, and Alex) left JC on foot and hiked to the cliffs overlooking the Juniata River. At the top the plan became evident: they would cross the river and set up camp at the top of the opposite side. And so, the journey began...

Rick, the incumbent Eagle Scout, led the way as the fearless foursome half-fell, half-slid down the cliffs. After this tumultuous descent, it was decided that this was the spot to cross the mighty Juniata. The going was easy for the first 10 feet or so, but then the raging river went to work on our heroes's weary legs and brought all of them, except Rick, face-to-face with the real meanings of the words "cold and wet". At first, Joe revelled in using his packs to keep him afloat, until he realized that he had thoroughly doused his camera. After almost an hour in the river, three shivering figures emerged on the far bank, only to find their leader charging up the mountain in search of a campsite.

The last rays of sunlight disappeared as the campfire was lit. The timing was perfect, but our travellers had been lucky. They swiftly set up two clotheslines and as they began to dry the contents of their packs. Bob made the statement that became the most oft-quoted of the trip, "You know you are with good friends when you can stand around and toast your underwear on the end of a stick without getting embarrassed."

Our heroes rose early the next morning and prepared a breakfast of pancakes fried on skillets made of flattened aluminum cans. After striking camp, they set off through the mountains, sometimes near and sometimes away from the river. Of course, Alex was constsntly asking to rest, but he was blatantly disregarded and consistently ignored, as he was only a Life Scout, and Rick was in charge. The four JCers ravenously devoured a gourmet lunch of roasted hot dogs on a small island and then enjoyed either a brief siesta or a swim in the now tranquil river. The campers spent the rest of the afternoon lying over mountains and through valleys, enjoying fantastic views of nature undisturbed.

Near the end of the day, these four pioneering students reached a dam and ascended a mountain which overlooked the lake it created. The next day, they planned to build rafts of driftwood and float down the river Huck Finn-style, and thus continue the now-defunct Juniata tradition of the Raft Regatta. Satisfied in this, the foursome set up camp and devoured another delectable meal of hot dogs. It was here that Alex displayed his ineptitude with a hammock, as he demonstrated a classic rendition of the old standard "How to tie a hammock to a dead tree and watch yourself fall when it does not hold you."

They were high in the mountains. The weather had been beautiful that day, and as the weary young men drifted to sleep, they gazed at starry skies, lulled by the noises of the nighttime forest and their one constant reminder of civilization; the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Three a.m. brought an unpleasant ending to this bliss. A wicked thunderstorm quickly and thoroughly drenched our heroes as they struggled to lash their tarps to the surrounding trees. Words like "cold and wet" once again became reality for the campers as the rest of the night was spent in a struggle to stay dry.

If the rain had lasted, it might have been disastrous for the last leg of this wild foray into the wilderness of Pennsylvania, but the fortunate students woke to find a sky stripped naked of her clouds. The morning and early afternoon were spent by the dam devoted to the construction of two sturdy rafts made from driftwood found on the banks of the river and held together by small portions of rope and yards of eight pound test fishing line. After one last meal of roasted hot dogs, the foursome put their rafts in the water, carefully crossed every finger, and cast off determined to tame the tempestuous Juniata.

The rafts worked! Unfortunately, eight pound test line was meant for small mouth bass and sunfish and not large pieces of wood. Needless to say, after a peaceful 3/4 of a mile, these homemade rafts discombobulated in the rapids. As the beastly river roared on, our defeated heroes struggled to its edge. The return hike was arduous, due to severely water-logged packs, but the foursome relished in their unheralded return to Juniata College. The trip had been a success.

This story is true. I was part of it.

Basom, Oldest of 13 is Tussey-Terrace RD

By Suzanne Lydic

What do you do when you are the oldest of thirteen children, you have a degree in Secondary Education in Biology and you love the Juniata community? You become a Residence Director of Tussey and Terrace just as Brett Basom has done!

Brett, otherwise known as "Base," is actively involved in his second year as an RD at Juniata. Last year he stayed in North, and now he resides in TNT.

When asked about his likes and dislikes of being an RD, Brett was only able to think of one dislike--the inevitable "policeman " syndrome. He knows that it is a part of his job to control student activities, but "Base" does not want to be seen as an overpowering authority.

Being a part of the college campus is one of Brett's favorite aspects of his job. He really enjoys helping out at JC and interacting with the student body.

Brett's past has given him a great appreciation for the Juniata heritage. He left his home in Mechanisburg, Pennsylvania, and his thirteen brothers and sisters to attend Juniata as a student. While he was here, he enjoyed the old tradition of raft regatta. Reluctantly, Brett understands that those days on the river will never be again.

Presently, "Base" also works as a substitute teacher for Juniata Valley and South Huntingdon County School Districts. Although he is certified in Biology, Brett often finds himself subbing forall sorts of classes.

In his free time Brett enjoys all sorts of outdoor activities and sports such as fishing, wind surfing, baseball, and football. His love for music also led him to a deejaying job in a local lounge last year.

Once Brett leaves the RD role, he plans to continue teaching. Graduate school may even be on the near horizon for him. He also hopes to maintain his involvement in coordinating Eurpean travel programs.

Brett hopes to see the students on campus take advantage of the Student Service staff and programs. He feels that their faculty are very well trained, and he looks forward to working with them.

When questioned about his aspirations for JC, Brett replied by saying, "I would like to see the students unified. They need to get involved with friends." he continued by adding that, "They should be able to experience the wonderful times I had here, too."

Contraceptives discussed at Campus Lectures

y D. Dougherty

The students of Juniata College had an opportunity to attend a talk about contraceptives. The female session was held Tuesday, September 15, in Lesher and the males' was held the following Wednesday in Sherwood. the meetings were sponsored by RHA and were given by Women's Health Services, Inc.

There really is no 100% effective way of birth control except to say, "No." More and more young women today are realizing that it is ok to say this. A male has the power to stop the action also; because, if the female gets pregnant, it is the responsibility of both parties.

For those people who choose not to abstain, several forms of birth control were mentioned. Condoms, foams, diaphragms, and the pill were discussed, as well as, their effectiveness.

The condom is now the number one consumer product in America. The effectiveness is from 90% to 97%. There are several advantages to using condoms. One is that they are relatively inexpensive and have no health hazards. Condoms also protect the users against sexually transmitted diseases (STD).

Foam, about 82% effective, is a chemical substance that stops the sperm from entering the uterus and halts the sperm movement. As with condoms, foam is inexpensive, has no health hazards, and protects against STD. Some users may develop an allergic reaction, but this is very rare. Changing brands usually helps. One disadvantage to foam is that it must be injected into the vagina no more than 30 minutes before intercourse.

The diaphragm is the oldest birth control method available. It is a dome-shaped rubber cup which keeps the sperm from entering the uterus. The cream, which is spread around the rim, halts sperm movement. This provides both a physical and chemical barrier and an effectiveness of 83% to 97%. The advantages to a diaphragm are that it is effective, safe, and if used properly, not felt by either partner.

Unlike the condom or foam, a diaphragm must be obtained from a doctor. The female is fited and then must return two weeks later for a check-up.

The pill must also be prescribed by a doctor. It is the most talked about form of birth control today. The pill is a prescription drug which contains the female hormones estrogen and progesterone. These hormones work together to kepp a women from releasing an egg from her ovary. The effectiveness of the pill is 96% to 99%.

Using pills as a form of birth control should be taken very seriously because the female is controlling her menstrual cycle by the use of chemicals. Other drugs could also react with the pill, which would make it less effective. Another disadvantage of the pill ,is that the use may have some minor reactions such as nausea, vomiting, and weight changing. If the user smokes, the risks are magnified. A person cannot become sterile by using the pill.

Sexually transmitted diseases (STD) were also discussed at the meetings. STD is a disease that may be passed from an infected person to a non-infected person during sexual intercourse or during physical intimate contact. STD's are an increasing problem in the world. Some common signs are sores, pain while urinating, body, rash, fever, or sore throat. The symptoms may not show up right away so routine check-ups are advised for both males and females.

If you have any questions about birth control or STD's, feel free to call the Women's Health Services, Inc. at the J.C. Blair Hospital. The number is (814) 643-5364.

Remember "Prevention before practice" is still the best form.

Be Special! Volunteer Yourself!

By Kelli Fahey

Are you interested in volunteering in a program that has great rewards? Do you want to share with someone who is very special? If so, then sign up to be a volunteer for the training of the special olympics.

This year the special olympic participants are looking for individuals who will help them train for their future athletic event, which is swimming. The swimming sessions begin October 24 and continue for the next four Saturdays from 10:00 till 11:30am in the gym.

Volunteers do not need any experience dealing with the mentally retarded nor any certification in swimming. Students, faculty, and staff at Juniata are urged to participate in this one on one opportunity. What better was to feel special by helping someone special. Look for more information and sign up forms in your mailbox or contact Nora Dickey at 106 East Houses.

Historical Lectures at J.C.

The Social History Colloquium will sponsor two meetings during the Fall 1987 semester. Distinguished scholars in the field of southern history have been invited to present lectures. The speakers will be drawing on their current research and writing to discuss what has emerged from the renaissance in southern historical studies in the last twenty years. All interested students, faculty, and members of the public are invited to attend.

Simpsons to co-chair the Annual Support Fund

Facing challenges and making successes of them seems almost second nature for Betty and Cary Simpson, 1949 graduates of Juniata College.

Together they have acheived distinction as leaders in their community, their church, and as owners and operators of the Allegheny Mountain Network, a group of nine Pennsylvania radio stations. Now they have accepted yet another challenge, this one on behalf of their alma mater.

The Simpsons have undertaken the task of co-chairing Juniata's 1987-88 Annual Support Fund (ASF) Campaign, a challenge to raise a record $500 thousand which will enhance the educational excellence of the College. Last year nearly $315 thousand was contributed to the Annual Support Fund campaign chaired by George Fattman of the Class of 1958, the most money ever raised for that purpose in the history of the institution.

Mrs. Simpson, a past member of the Juniata Alumni Council and an active participant in the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center phase of the Century II Campaign, also served as Juniata Valley Gifts Chair for the campaign's PHASE TWO. For ten years she served as an English and Social Studies teacher in Tyrone, and she currently serves on the Board of Trustees of Tyrone Hospital. An elder of the First Presbyterian Church of Tyrone, Mrs. Simpson has been active in the Tyrone Women's Club, the Johnstown Regional Blood bank and the American Red Cross. She has served Juniata as a member of the Board of Trustees from 1984 to 1987. She was a member of the Presidentiai Search Committee involved with the selection of Robert W. Neff as Juniata's ninth president.

Mr. Simpson is a Director, Executive Committee Member, and an Officer of the Radio Advertising Bureau and is past President of the Pennsylvania Association of the Broadcasters. In 1986 he was named the organization's first "Broadcaster of the Year." An ordained elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Tyrone, Mr. Simpson has been an active member of the Tyrone Revitalization Committee and the Pennsylvania State Cancer Society. He is presently serving as President of the Camp Anderson Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

"We feel a very strong commitment to Juniata and recognize that in these critical times for higher education alumni support is vital for the continuation of the programs that have earned Juniata the respect it so rightfully enjoys," Mr. Simpson said in commenting on the couple's selection as co-chairs for the campaign.

Annual Support Fund contributions support scholarship programs, student services such as cultural and entertainment events, academic programs, the purchase of educational materials and equipment, and provide financial support for the enhancement of current programs. Funds are raised primarily from Juniata alumni and friends of the College. Last year 37 percent of Juniata's alumni, nearly twice the national average for alumni giving, contributed to the College.

"We, like many of the Juniata College alumni, are excited about the positive reactions and the momentum that is so evident on campus these days," Mr. Simpson said. "With the record Juniata alumni have established for loyalty, concern and support for the College, we are confident we can meet this new challenge."

Host an International Exchange Student!

For more than 25 Juniata College students the 1987-88 academic year will not only be a time for classroom education, but also a time to experience American family life, according to Dr. William C. Vocke, Director of International Programs at Juniata College.

Dr. Vocke stressed that local families are needed to participate in Juniata's international exchange "Host Family Program," and he has extended an invitation to all Huntingdon area families interested in sharing friendship to become a part of the program.

"Our international students live and eat on campus, so the role of the host family is to provide friendship and introduce these young people to American family life," Dr. Vocke said. This could include inviting the student into the home occasionally, including the student in family activities, or taking the student to athletic or cultural events.

This year, Juniata is hosting international exchange students from Europe, Asia, Africa and Latin America. According to Dr. Vocke, they come from a variety of backgrounds and all are interested in learning more about American life.

Any Huntingdon are family interested in participating in the host family program may obtain more information by contacting Dr. Vocke at 643-4310 ext. 280.

Paper panic cured at writing center

By Lisa Rummel

Have you ever been awake until two o'clock in the morning, forcing yourself to produce a paper that's due the next day (as well as forcing yourself to stay awake)? Have you found yourself cursing at the typewriter, even physically pounding on it (as I do while I write this article), hoping that some words of remote wisdom will appear on the page in front of you? Has your wastecan ever been swelling wildly, filled with one crumpled failed attempt after another?

Everyone - - yes, EVERYONE - - is puzzled by the "paper production plague" at some point (or many points!) in his college career. This plague can paralyze even the most unsuspecting victim at any time, often without warning. Sometimes, it occurs as soon as the assignment is given. Other times, it hits late at night, within hours of the paper's deadline. The symptoms are easily recognized: 1) a feeling of panic - - that you will never get the stupid thing finished, much less handed in, on time 2) a sense of hopelessness - - why even bother trying? 3) a state of mind often referred to as "writer's block" - a total lack of any direction or motivation with which to even begin writing 4) last-minute jitters - - the paper is all done, but there is something not quite right about it.

If you suffer from any of these, or any other related symptoms, you can diagnose yourself as having the paper production plague. But alas, there is an available cure. It's FREE, it's HANDY, and it's EFFECTIVE.

It's called the WRITING CENTER, and it is located in the basement of the library. There, you will be "treated" by students - - just like yourself - - who can help you successfully combat this terrifying plague. The Writing Center is designed so that students can assist you: with any writing problems (structure, organization, clarity, etc.), by offeringg a "second opinion" on a completed paper or idea, by directing you to find ways of improving your writing, and by generally helping you to help yourself (it is NOT a proofreading service).

It is a place where you can get the kind of help you feel that you need. Best of all, that help comes from people your own age, who experience the same frustration that you do, and who have the same impossible professors that you have.

So, if you need advice to get started, have questions on a rough draft, want another opinion on a completed paper, or just prefer to practice a particular writing technique that you are weak in, come visit the Writing Center in the basement of the library. It is open every weekday 2:00 - 5:00 (Wednesdays until 4:00), and 6:30 - 9:30 p.m. It's a great way to cure that paper production plague.

Huntingdon Couple named Chairpersons

A Huntingdon couple, Lawrence and Rebecca Newton, has been named Chairpersons for the Juniata College Cultural Events Campaign, which has as its goal the raising of $5,000 for support of the entire cultural events program at Juniata.

Directed by the Arts and Lectureship Council, which is a committee of students, faculty, administration and townspeople, the Cultural Events program at Juniata provides an Artist Series, Art Exhibits, a Masterpiece Cinema Series, Music and Theatre presentations, a Juniata Heritage Series, and an impressive list of major speakers in the Endowed Lecture Series. The programs are, with few exceptions, available to the entire Huntingdon area community.

Mr. Newton, a Huntingdon attorney, is a graduate of Wittenberg University and earned his law degree at Case Western Reserve University School of Law. He is involved within the community a number of ways, including serving as a member of the Board of Directors of the United Way and as a member of the Huntingdon Lions Club.

Mrs. Newton is a graduate of Indiana University of Pennsylvania and holds a Masters degree from california State University of Pennsylvania. She serves on the Board of Directors of the J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital, and both she and Mr. Newton are active in Juniata College activities. They are members of St. James Luthren Church in Huntingdon and have two children ages 9 and 7.

The agenda for the cultural events program at Juniata differs this year from years past in its comprehensiveness. A full calendar of events running through the end of May will provide something of interest to everyone.

In commenting on their appointment as chairpersons for the Cultural Events Campaign, Mr. Newton said, "We believe it is in everyone's interest to support the cultural activities of our community. We applaud Dr. Neff (Robert W. Neff, President of Juniata College) for his leadership in making the resources and the programs of the college available to the entire community, and we are pleased to do our part in supporting the Cultural Events program."

Mr. and Mrs. Newton will be leading the campaign urging people to support cultural events at Juniata College as Friends ($50), Patrons ($125), and Benefactors ($250). Special supporters of the Cultural Events program will be invited to "Meet the Artists" receptions either prior to or following Artist Series programs. They will also have their names listed in each program. Artist Series programs for the academic year include "The Tempest," "A Child's Christmas in Wales," "An Evening with the Harlem Boys Choir," "Liz Lerman and the Dance Exchange," and "The Man of La Mancha."

All presentations on the cultural events calendar are presented without charge, with the exception of the Artist Series, which has an admission charge of $30 for a season ticket, or $8 at the door. In total more than 60 events are listed for public enjoyment between late August and late September.

Associateship Programs offered for the Sciences

The National Research Council announces the 1988 Resident, Cooperative, and Postdoctoral Research Associateship Programs for research in the sciences and engineering to be conducted in behalf of 28 federal agencies or research institutions, whose laboratories are located throughout the United States. The programs provide Ph.D scientists and engineers of unusual promise and ability with opportunities to perform research on problems largely of their own choosing yet compatible with the research interests of the supporting laboratory. Initiated in 1954, the Associateship Programs have contributed to the career development of over 5000 scientists ranging from recent Ph.D. recipients to distinguished senior scientists.

Approximately 450 new full-time Associateships will be awarded on a competitive basis in 1988 for research in: Chemistry, Earth and Atmosphereic Sciences; Engineering and Applied Sciences; Biological, Health, Behavioral Sciences and Biotechnology; Mathematics; Space and Planetary sciences; and Physics. Most of the programs are open to both U.S. and non-U.S. nationals, and to both recent Ph.D. degree recipients and senior investigators.

Awards are made for one or two years; senior applicants who have held the doctorate at least five years may request shorter tenure. Annual stipends for recent Ph.D.'s for the 1988 program year will vary from $27,150 to $35,000, depending upon the sponsoring laboratory and will be appropriately higher for Senior Associates.

Reimbursement is provided for allowable relocation costs and for limited professional travel during tenure. The host laboratory provides the Associate with programmatic assistance including facilities, support services, necessary equipment, and travel necessary for the conduct of the approved research program.

Applications to the National Research Council must be postmarked no later than January 15, 1988 (December 15 for NASA), April 15 and August 15, 1988. Initial awards will be announced in March and April (July and November for the two later competitions) followed by awards to alternates

Information on specific research opportunities and federal laboratories, as well as application materials, may be obtained from the Associateship Programs, Office of Scientific and Engineering Personnel, GF1 Room 424-D1, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20418, (202) 334-2760.

Juniata Struggles Past Del-Val

Homecoming Contest vs Lebanon Valley

By Mike Antenucci

Keith Watson, the sophomore place kicker on the Juniata Indian football team turned out to be the difference this past weekend. As JC held off conference foe Delaware Valley 7-6. The low scoring battle was a surprise to Indian fans, especially after Juniata's performance a week before; however, it is an indication of just how tough that Mid-Atlantic Conference really is.

Neither team went without several opportunities to score, but turnovers and penalties kept the points off the board. Juniata's first big chance came early in the first quarter when Tom Yeager recovered a Del Van fumble on his own 47 yard line. After moving the ball down field to Del Val's 23 a sack and two incomplete passes forced the Indians to punt.

Mark Dorner put a halt to Del Val's ensuing series when he picked off his first pass of the game on the Aggies 44 yard line, once again giving the Indians good field position. After compiling three first downs, rushing to the Del Val 25, Watson was sent in on 4 and 11 to attempt a 43 yard field goal. The kick sailed left and was no good with just 18 seconds remaining to play in the first quarter.

As the second quarter began Delaware Valley gained its edge by intercepting a Chris Davis pass on their own 20 yard line. After marching to the Indian 43, the Aggies were forced to punt, putting the Indians in a hole when the ball was downed the 8 yard line.

Four plays after John Spahr booted the ball to his own 45; however, with JC assessed for a personal foul on the play, and Del Val had a first and ten on the JC 29. Six plays and another Indian penalty were the result of the games first score, a pitch to the right side on second and seven from the seven.

Even though Del Val was on the board first, the Indians showed they were out to win on the following play, the extra point attempt. Mark Dorner got a piece of the ball and the Aggies lead 6-0. The misfortune would later come back and haunt them.

JC had another drive stall near the end of the half as they were looking to score before time ran out. On first down from the DV 33, Davis was intercepted again, and the Indians trailed at the half 6-0.

After exchanging punts to start the third quarter, Juniata found itself with decent field position, taking over on the Del Van 41. Two long comletions to tight end Jim Metz saved the drive after Davis was sacked for a 12 yard loss. Then a 12 yard scamper by Dan Crossey to the eight set up the Davis to Don Betar touchdown pass. The drive went for 41 yards on six plays and was capped off with the winning point on Watson's conversion.

The third quarter ended with Juniata driving, but they were later stopped when Davis was dragged for a seven yard loss. However, Mark Dorner returned the favor, picking off his second pass of the game on his own 32 yard line. After a JC punt, Del Van had one more possession. Marching to the Indian 29 a fourth down sack ended the Aggies hopes.

The Indian offense marched down the field, compiling three first downs and running out the clock on Delaware Valley. Juniata is now 2-0 (1-0 in the MAC) and losts Lebanon Valley this Saturday at 1:30 on Homecoming weekend.

Nuch's Notes: Juniata managed 16 first downs Del val's 10. JC rushed for 87 yards and passed for 162. On a total of 72 offensive plays, Juniata compiled 244 yards for an average of 3.45 yards a play. JC was also penalized eight times for 78 yards and gave up five sacks. The Indians also punted eight times (Spahr) for 269 yards.

Dan Crossey rushed 24 times for 81 yards with a long of 15, while Pat Danneker managed 61 yards on just 10 carries. Davis was 18 for 29 and threw for one touchdown (his 4th of the season). Mike Cottle was the favorite target on this Saturday catching seven passes for 55 yards. Betar grabbed three, Metz three, and Crossey five.

Defensively Mark Dorner recorded two more interceptions, giving him five on the year. Bob Herzog also had an interception. JC sacked the Aggies twice and caused four fumbles, only recovering one on them. Dave Ritter led the defensive charge with 3 total tackles, Ray Witmer had 10, while Jerry Look, Frank Gay, and Chuck Rehn each had nine. Rehn was credited with both of Juniata's sacks.

Field Hockey

By Deb Dougherty

The Juniata field hockey team played a tough game Saturday against York. The Lady Hackers had a hard time playing among the puddles and mud, though, and lost 3-1.

The tribe remained even with York for the first half, which ended with a score of 1-1. The lone goal for Juniata was tapped in by Jennifer Dippery.

York pulled ahead in the second half by knocking in two goals. The play in front of the two cages was both muddy and fierce, but the Juniata hackers could not seem to put the ball in the cage. Both the offense and defense put up a good fight to hold York at three points.

The Lady Hackers took to the road Wednesday and are home Saturday in an attempt to even out their 2-3-2 record. Come on out Saturday at 2:00 and cheer the team on to a victory against Johns Hopkins.

Soccer Drops Two

By Jennifer Wade

After an impressive win against Lycoming, Juniata's soccer team faced UPJ and Elizabethtown. E-town especially has been a consistently strong opponent, and the Indians knew they had to play smart, controlled soccer and play up to their potential if they wanted to win.

Things didn't work out as hoped on Wednesday, when the Indians dropped a 1-0 decision to UPJ. The game's only score came mid-way through the first half when UPJ capitalized on a penalty kick, putting the ball past JC net-minder, John Bobko. The shot was the only one to get by Bobko, who made 13 saves in the game.

Despite the fact that JC did not play up to their potential as a team, they hustled and showed good intensity. According to assistant coach Chris Noyes, "We had a lot of strong individual performances, but as a team we did not put things together." Mike Kauffman, a freshman fullback filling in for John Telenko, Doug Kovacs, Mike Gifford, and Paul Granger all had excellent defensive games for the Indians.

On Saturday, the Indians travelled to Elizabethtown, and once again suffered a 1-0 defeat. E-town scored a free kick from 20 yards out midway through the first half, as the ball eluded goalie Walt Cupit. Tim Phelps took over net-minding chores in the second half, and both he and Cupit had excellent games for the Indians. Also playing good defense from the wing was junior Drew Spector.

Going into the game, the Indians knew they would have to play good defense, and capitalize on any breaks they might have. Co-captain Mike Gifford called this possibly "the best defensive game we've ever played," but JC couldn't convert on their scoring opportunities. Perhaps their two best chances occurred in the second half on shots from Paul Granger and Dave Wright.

The week's two losses drop their overall record to 1-3-1, although their defensive play has greatly improved since last year. This week saw the Indians at home against Messiah, another tough team, on Wednesday, with games against York and the alumni slated for homecoming weekend.

Homecoming '87 is Now Just a Memory

For at least one weekend, the words "There is nothing to do around here" could not be heard around campus, and it did not rain. In fact, the weather was gorgeous! Warm temperatures and blue skies welcomed back the Juniata alumni and aided in the success of the Homecoming activities.

This year's Homecoming turned out to be one of the most festive and entertaining one in years. There was something for everyone. Whether it was attending the Art Exhibit or partying over in East, everyone had the opportunity to have fun, and by the lack of activity Sunday morning, it seemed that everyone had more than their share.

Speaking of football, the Juniata Indians gave a spectacular display of talent on Saturday. The game was one of great entertainment. It wasn't so much the action, but rather how well our players could pick up the ball everytime Lebanon Valley fumbled! Needless to say, the Indians were victorious with a score of 31-10.

In other sports action, the women's volleyball team spiked out their opponents to capture the Juniata Shootout Tournament. The women's field hockey team came to a draw against Johns Hopkins 1-1 in double overtime. Lastly, the men's soccer team had a surprising loss to York at 0-1. Oh well, you can't win them all.

In other events, the junior class won the overall Homecoming Spirit Competition. They began their journey to victory by edging out the freshmen in the lip sync competition. The freshmen came back to take first place in the float competition with their AT&T version of "Let Freedom Ring". The seniors "rapped" up a first place finish in the class skit contest with their view of the alcohol policy Friday night in

Nieto Joins List of Esteemed Contributors

Dr. Jose C. Nieto, Mary S. Geiger Professor of Religion and Professor of History at Juniata College, has joined a list of esteemed contributors for a proposed sixty-four volume series, "The collected Works of Erasmus."

The collection, launched by University of Toronto Press in 1969, presently has seventeen volumes published. Volumes are published at the rate of three per year.

Dr. Nieto has written two articles for the most recently published third volume of a three volume set, "Contemporaries of Erasmus. " One hundred and twenty-two international scholars participated in compiling and writing material for this set about which one reviewer wrote, "...because of the high standard of the entries and the learning invested in them, Erasmus himself would have thoroughly enjoyed it."

Erasmus was one of the leading architects of modern thought, with a personal sway over the intellectual of his day that has been matched since then only by Voltaire. The distinguished American historian, the late Myron Gilmor of Harvard University, said that Erasmus' correspondence in itself formed perhaps the greatest single source for intellectual history of his age.

He was the first European writer to understand the potential of the printing press and to mold European opinion through its power. Yet, only one of his writings, the brilliant satire "The Praise of Folly," is at all well known today. The reason is simple: Erasmus wrote in Latin, and until today, in Latin his writings have remained.

Dr. Nieto, in his articles for the "Contemporaries of Erasmus," deals with the brothers Alfonso and Juan de Valdes, and their association with the man who was the friend and correspondent of hundreds of men and women, from popes and princes to scholars, alderman, widows and schoolboys.

Alfonso de Valdes was secretary to the Emperor Charles V, and the author of a delightful work on the fall of Rome. His brother, Juan, was the author of the first Spanish sixteenth century heretical writing, as well as the first to write a scientific linguistic study on the Spanish Castillian language.

"The Collected Works of Erasmus" aims at English texts of the highest scholarly standard, which are as lively and engaging as the originals. Its success in this endeavor has been acclaimed throughout the world.

$450,000 grant spent

The Whitaker Foundation Grant, awarded to Juniata College in 1985 for the purchase of scientific equipment for the college's science department, has been concluded.

The grant totaled $450,000 in yearly installments over a period of three years. The funds were used to purchase equipment in the Chemistry, Biology, Physics, and Geology Departments.

The funds subsidized the Chemistry Department's acquisition of the Fourier Transform Multinuclear Resonance Spectrometer. According to Dr. Eilchiro Ochiai, Chair of the Juniata Chemistry Department, this spectrometer is the "most sophisticated and powerful tool for determining the structure of an organic compound." Juniata was one of the first colleges in Pennsylvania to obtain this advanced, computerized equipment, which is now used extensively by upperclass chemistry students.

The Geology Department utilized the Whitaker Grant to acquire a more modern x-ray diffractometer, which is used to

J.C. Alumnus Reviews History of Film in America

Former Juniata student and professor, Bruce Davis, spoke to a group of interested students and faculty about the current state of the movie industry last Thursday night. Davis, currently Executive Administrator of the American Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, reviewed the history of film in America and commented on what role film should play in society.

Although he sprinkled his lecture with numerous stories and exaggerated examples, Davis gave the impression of a man deeply concerned about the current state of affairs in Hollywood.. In his opinion, movie-making has become a business which is increasingly willing to sacrifice art and quality in order to make money.

Indicative of this situation is the recent departure of CEO David Putnam from Columbia Pictures. Davis cited Putnam as one of the very few CEO's who was interested in making quality films at modest costs. He had "radical" ideas and dared to say "No" to Bill Cosby. Davis and many other people in the industry feel that if Putnam had been given more time, we would

The events of Homecoming weekend were quite successful with Juniata pride flowing. The athletic events were well supported and many students participated in the competition between the classes.

It was nice to see the many alumni enjoying their return to our campus--I had to wonder what it feels like to be a Juniata graduate. I also had to wonder if these alumni noticed the condition of the dorms (excuse me, residence halls). Surely, they must have seen the absence of any improvements. As an East Houses resident, I often wonder how anyone can reside, or even exist, in these buildings. Of course, East Houses is in dire need of new carpeting, but we can cover that up.

The residence halls have severe problems that cannot be covered up. It is not uncommon for ceilings to be falling down or for screens to be missing from every window. Has anyone ever noticed the lack of electrical outlets or the quality of the few vacuum cleaners? The list goes on and on beyond these little "fix-it" jobs to the more serious issue of painting the walls. Actually, a campus-wide renovation would be something to consider in the not too distant future.

Then, this would lead to another problem because there are those on this campus who do not respect what we do have. Why are there the select few who feel a need to be destructive? Weekends are a time to have fun with your friends and catch-up on your reading. There is not an excuse for some behavior. It is totally unnecessary to break windows, throw furniture out windows, write on walls or destroy bathrooms or any other room for that matter. After all, this is our home away from home and I doubt that anyone's family would condone such actions.

It's time for the students to take some responsibility for their conduct and after proving ourselves, the administration will have to act. If Juniata has the capability to raise funds for an extremely expensive football stadium, it should be just as easy to arrange a fund for residence hall improvements. It seems like a logical goal to make students happier in their enviornment. The residential life committee should be well aware of this--but have they taken any action to work with the administration?

So while you're contemplating an act against the property of us as Juniata citizens, consider the long range effects. By eliminating such occurences, we may be working for a beautification project. If things continue as they are, we all may be forced to live in the new football stadium.

PennDot campaign is waged to eliminate use of fake IDs

The Pennsylvania Department of Transportation inaugurated a vigorous campaign, on August 19, to curb the use of phony licenses among underage drinkers according to Secretary Howard Yerusalim.

The Under 21 Fraud Campaign focuses on the theme that "Fake I.D. Users Get Caught." Penn Dott kicked off the campaign with the distribution of posters to driver license photo centers, liquor stores, taverns in college towns and college campuses across the state. A brochure will be sent to all persons under 21 who apply for a camera card. All colleges and universities in the state will be sent an information package by mail.

"Fake I.D. users become the victims of their own action, "Yerusalim said, "either through penalties, physical injury or death caused by drunk driving. Most young adults under 21 must be made aware of the consequences of using a phony license or I.D."

"Alcohol, drugs and young drivers can be a deadly combination," said Doug Tobin, Director of Bureau of Driver Licensing. "While it is our job to hand out penalties, we're not in the business to penalize people. We're here to make people aware of what is a very reasonable law."

According to the Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Code, a person holding an altered driver's license, lending a driver's license or using someone else's driver's license is guilty of a summary offense. A person convicted is subject to a $100 fine, assessment of three points on their driving record, and losing their driver's license.

"One of my best friends got busted for it," said a Shippensburg University student.

"She thought she was really cool. She walked into the beer distributor and asked for a case of beer. He asked for her I.D. ...she received over $200 worth of fines. You lay with fire, you get burned."

According to some college students, the use of altered or fake I.D.'s is rampant on their campuses. "Many of them are unaware of the penalties," said one student.

The underage drinker is part of an "entrepreneurial enterprise" when fake I.D.'s are involved, according to Millersville University Chief of Police, Wayne Silcox. Students are making and selling licenses without realizing the seriousness of the crime they are committing. Other students that carry or use an altered or fake license are likewise unaware of the penalties, according to Silcox.

According to the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation's License Security Quality and Control Unit, more and more active prosecution is occurring. "They are not only caught here by scanning license camera cards on our electronic optical scanning equipment, they also get caught while attempting to display or have their photo taken with an altered camera card," said Linda McKinne, Manager. "Some of them have gotten away with it in the past, but due to increased fraud awareness and training in detection that number is dwindling."

"The LSQC Unit receives confiscated licenses, borrowed licenses, and altered camera cards," said McKinne. "When they are received the driver's license is immediately cancelled, and the driver is prosecuted."

FRAUD LINE has been established by the LSQC, according to McKinne. "Students have the opportunity to help deter fraud on our campuses."

According to the Pennsylvania Vehicle Code, a person holding an altered driver's license, lending a driver's license or using someone else's driver's license is guilty of a summary offense. A person convicted is subject to a fine, assessment of three points on their driving record, and cancellation of their driver's license. "Many people who lend their license or I.D. to another person does not realize they will suffer the same penalties as the person who uses it," said McKinne.

"It is just amazing how innovative the students get," said Silcox. Stolen wallets are found with only a social security card or driver's license missing. A 20 year old was prosecuted for theft of several blank university student I.D.'s. The I.D.'s were made to match information on valid out-of-state licenses without photo.

At Indiana University of Pennsylvania, four students were arrested, and one arrest is pending, according to Dr. Paul Lang, University Safety Director. The students counterfeited driver's licenses by hanging a back drop on the dormitory wall. "We watch closely for fake I.D.'s because we are very sensitive to the problem," said Lang.

Director of Public Safety, William Mioskie, Kutztown University, said, "The officers are very aware of fake I.D. use. They go over licenses very carefully." Mioske said the university has a summer and fall orientation program that warns students of the penalties associated with the fake I.D.'s. Students caught are arrested in accordance with the Pennsylvania Vehicle Code. The I.D. is confiscated and the student is subject to an in-house judicial system at the University.

"I believe Millersville, Indiana, and Kutztown were the three schools in the state system to effectively shut down a fake I.D. operation," said Silicox. According to Silicox, "fake I.D.'s were cut up, burned up, and flushed" by students when a student was convicted on four counts of counterfeiting I.D.'s. The penalty was a $600 fine, two year probation, and 50 hours of community service. "He was put on a road crew picking up trash.

"It is a way to make people popular," said Silicox of students who make false I.D.'s. "The wrong way to become popular. People get to know you on a first name basis, but as more people know about you the worse it becomes, however clandestine." This kind of popularity gets you caught.

By John E. Deppen

President Reagan believes that the Contras in Nicaragua (the forces fighting the government) are "freedom fighters" and deserve the support of the United States. Members of the Reagan administration have gone to great (and possibly illegal) lengths to keep the Contras funded. I believe that the Contras are terrorists and do not deserve American support.

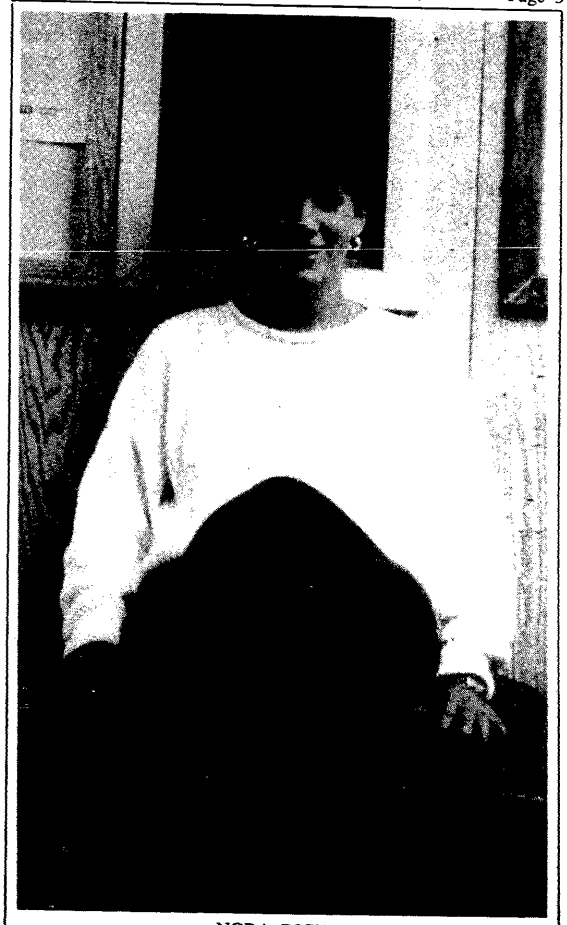
In the Washington Post (March 7, 1987), it was reported that the Contras attacked a military outpost in Tapasle. In the course of the attack they burned down a church-sponsored health clinic, which was said to be the pride of the community.

In the New York Times (March 10, 1987), eyewitnesses gave accounts of a Contra attack in the village of El Nispero. "They said that a 9-month old infant was bayoneted to death and that two elderly women were shot dead after being forced to lie on the dirt floor of their home." In the same article, a wounded victim of a Contra attack on the Quisilala cattle cooperative (according to the American Heritage Dictionary, a cooperative is an enterprise that is owned jointly by those who use its facilities or services) gave this account: "The Contras came in shooting, and we had no soldiers to defend us. They stole cattle and burned our houses." The mother of this victim was killed, along with three others at the cooperative. One of those killed was a 15 year old girl.

In a letter put out by Nicaragua Medical Aid, it was reported that since 1981, 61 health facilities have been wholely or partially destroyed by the Contras. Another 37 clinics have been closed due to Contra activity. At least 38 doctors, nurses, and medical aides have been deliberately killed by the Contras. Another 28 have been kidnapped and tortured.

It is morally disgraceful for the United States to support a group that engages in such heinous activities. The Sandinista government of Nicaragua is an oppressive regime and is guilty of equally reprehensible deeds, but that does not mean that we must resort to terror tactics in order to overcome this tyranny.

What is to be done? There is no single answer to that question. I do believe, however, that a good deal of progress could be made towards the goal of a less threatening and more stable Central America if the Reagan administration would pursue aggressive diplomacy and abandon the useless and counterproductive tools of "Commie-based" rhetoric and subversive violence.



NORA DICKEY

Special Olympic area manager directs East

Nora Dickey, the Residential Director (RD) for East Houses, is a graduate of Lock Haven University and the area manager of the Special Olympics. Her hobbies are having fun and socializing.

Nora, a former resident of Chester, New York, likes the Huntingdon area. She thinks that the community is warm. She sees Juniata as a big happy family.

Supporting the Resident Assistants (RAs) is what Nora feels is her most important duty as RD. She is there to guide the students but prefers to let the RAs take on a great deal of responsibility, but she will step in when necessary.

Nora likes living at East. It is not wild and the students have controlled good times. The only thing she would like to see changed is the looks of the grounds around East on Saturday and Sunday mornings.

Seeing a strong RHA (Residential Housing Association) program in East is one of Nora's main goals. She feels that the program is on its way this year, but it needs to reach out and do more for the community.

Although she works at the Huntingdon Area Middle School during the day, Nora enjoys doing all that she can for Juniata and the RAs. Working off campus is hard because Nora feels that she does not get to know the students or that some of the students wonder where she is. Nora gets a good feeling helping the students, and she is available for them whenever she is on campus.

Nora's future goal is to get her Masters Degree in Administration or Therapeutic Recreation. Her greatest aspiration is to get many of the students to help with the Special Olympic events such as the Saturday swim program or the volleyball games in February.

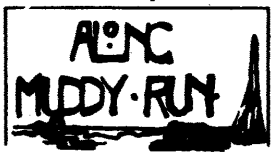
Hot Wax

In this week's spotlight, we have the Hooters with their new release, "One Way Home". This album continues in the Hooters' tradition of using religious connotations, and their search for salvation and love, (what happened to truth, justice, and the American way) as the basis of their songs. Their unusual sound is also heard on their new LP. For those at a loss for what that whining instrument is, it is a contadina, a smaller version of the accordion. The one quirk I have about this album is their obsession with the South. They are a Philadelphia-based band, and yet four out of the nine tracks deal with the South and the Civil War. Listening to it, I thought I was back in American history 101 in high school, rather than listening to rock-n-roll. This South stuff does not jive with their "One Way Home" theme. It's like they are taking the scenic route through the Appalachian Trail, instead of the PA Turnpike to get back to Philly.

Well amidst all this, the album is worth listening to. Already the Hooters have had a huge success with their first track, "Johnny B", and their second release, "Satellite", is quickly orbiting up the charts. Listening to the rest of the album we find some country rhythm with "Karla with ak", and two more driving beats with "Fightin' on the Same Side" and "Hard Rockin' Summer". For those who like the 50 era music, "Engine 999" is the tune for you. For those incurable romantics, the song "Washington's Day" will heat up your nights. Bob Dylan fans who still hold the hope of a Woodstock Revival, get out your peace signs and listen to the track entitled "One Way Home". It has a fun melody, but I give it a "10" in the dance category.

Finally, the Hooters score a perfect score in the weirdest song category. First place goes to their track "Graveyard Waltz". This song is just too weird for my taste. I skipped to the next song in a matter of moments. I can think of at least 50 things I'd rather do in a cemetery than dance with a ghost.

There you have it. The Hooters continue in their success of producing an A rate album that has a little bit of everything for everyone. My advice, go to the nearest campus bookstore and buy it. It is worth the sacrifice of a six pack.



Some people call it Binder's Folly. Others can't even pronounce the name. Half the campus seems to forget that it exists. I'm speaking of the "infamous" Binder Natatorium - or in simple English, the beautiful indoor olympic size swimming pool that is just sitting in the Kennedy Sports Center waiting to be used.

I was lifeguarding last week and five people came swimming. They all looked at me and seemed to say, "Aha! another fool guarding for another boring year!" Whatever happened to the lifeguard image!? (Let me tell you, it sure as hell ain't at J.C.)!

J.C.'s assets are too few and far between to let just one of them be ignored. It is my opinion that a swim team would help boost the image of the pool. Students have been pleading for a varsity team the entire four years I have been at J.C. I don't know if the administration is against swimmng, (or if they just can't swim), but to date varsity status has been repeatedly denied. Believe me, Mr. President I'm sure the cost to run one more varsity sport is relatively low compared to the building cost of that "most attractive" brick sign (or whatever you call it) on the corner of Moore and 18th Streets. Why not try something different such as improving the college, while at the same time benefitting the students.

If you still have reservations about using the pool, think about it this way - we're paying around $12,000 to be a member of the most expensive "club" we'll ever belong to in our lives - why not start taking advantage of all the perks. The pool is open Monday - Friday 7:30-8:30 a.m., 12:00-1:00, 3:00-5:00 and 8:00-9:30 p.m. and Saturday-Sunday 3:00-5:30. Just think, if for once in J.C.'s history we got organized, we could start such things as water polo, volleyball, water aerobics, swimming lessons and pool parties. Need I even mention that swimming burns 533 calories per hour and is a great way to clear your head between OFA and Physics. Now what is your excuse - you know the hours, you know the possibilities, you know the benefits - so what are you waiting for? Let's show the administration that pools are made for something other than a tax write off!

Few Qualify For GSLs

As the summer rolled on, Terri Lynn Sanford began to panic. When the University of Texas junior didn't receive a letter confirming her Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL), as she had the previous two years, she called the financial aid office. This year, they told her, she didn't qualify.

"I can't go to school without a student loan," she said.

After some frustrating maneuvering, Sanford finally was approved for a GSL, and will continue her education this year.

Sanford is not the only student finding that getting a loan this year is much harder than last fall, observers around the country reportedd last week.

As many as 20 percent of the students nationwide who got GSLs in 1986 won't be able to get them for this school year, Dr. A. Dallas Martin, Jr. of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators reported.

The reasons can be found in the new federal Higher Education Act of 1986, most of which is just going into effect this fall.

Those students, said Martin, must take out more expensive loans, such as parental loans, personal bank loans, or Supplemental Student Loans that come with higher interest rates and begin accruing interest soon after they're issued, compounding the rising cost of college education.

"This is going to be a tough year for a lot of students," said University of Nebraska at Omaha financial aid director Phil Shreves.

Thirty-five percent of the UNO students who received GSLs last year, he estimated, won't receive GSLs this year. Of the remaining students, Shreves said, "only a few will have total eligibility."

To determine if a student could get a GSL in the past, financial aid counselors figured in the student's Detwiler Plaza. Not to be intimidated, the sophomores ran to a first place finish in the town run Saturday morning. The final results were: juniors, first place, seniors and sophomores tied for second, and freshmen coming in an impressive and respectable third. Congratulations to all!

Saturday evening provided a candlelight dinner in Baker, and although the students could not see any candles, there were blue tablecloths on the tables, and they were made of real cloth, talk about class.

The homecoming events came to a close by the sounds of Bernie Miller and the Soul Patrol. The Homecoming Dance was held in the Multi-Purpose Room in the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center, and it DID follow the standard party format.

So that's it folks! Homecoming '87 is now just a memory. A special thanks goes out to all who aided in the planning and participation of the events. Congratulations to the advisers, Centerboard, Student Council, and everyone else who helped in any possible way. See you all next year!

have seen more movies like "Platoon," "Ghandi," and even "Star Wars." He worries that many of the projects Putnam started during his year in office may never reach the market they deserve -- if they reach the market at all.

In the late 60's and early 70's, a complete restructuring of the movie industry took film-making out of the hands of artists and put it in the hands of big business: Paramount became a subsidiary of Gulf and Western and Columbia was taken over by the Coca-Cola company. Market research indicated that teenagers made up the bulk of the audience, and film has been dominated by slashers and teen sex ever since. When asked if most films of this type have any societal value at all, Davis replied, "No." But, these movies continue to make money, and the gap between "good" movies and blockbusters grows increasingly wider.

Is the movie-going public doomed to a life of Jasons and Freddies forever? Can there ever be a return to seriousness and sensibility in the movie business? It should be the studios that stop this dreaded cycle.

Juniata's new Schola Cantorum sings vespers

The Schola Cantorum of Juniata College, newly chartered by Student Government, sang for the first time Sunday, September 13, 1987, at St. James Lutheran Church here in Huntingdon.

The Schola Cantorum is a grouup of sixteen men and women who rehearse once a week and sing Vespers (Evening Prayer) in a different location once a month. The group is dedicated to the performance of the finest of liturgical choral music in the setting for which this music was composed (i.e. that of a service of worship.)

The term schola Cantorum is Latin for 'school of singers' and was coined by Pope St. Gregory the Great, bishop of Rome at the end of the sixth century. St. Gregory organized the first schola in Rome and fostered the use of music in the worship of the church.

The group consists of Molly Bagwell, Marianne Blatchley, Jennifer Graham, Valerie Schmoyer, Margaret Gonglewski, Lisa Kotary, Mary Beth Ridenhour, Joseph Souders, Bryan Miller, Nathan Poling, Greg Weaver, David Zuschlag, Alexander Jones, Tommy Kochel, Roy SantaCroce, and Mark Sloan. Technical assistance for the group is provided by Janine Hyde and support staff Russell Miller, James Griffiths and Eric Miller. The group is directed by the Reverend Fr. Michael Thompson, instructor of latin at Juniata.

The Schola will also be singing on Sunday, October 4, at 4:00 p.m. at St. Francis College, Loretto, Pennsylvania, in honor of the feast of St. Francis of Assissi. The campus community is warmly invited to attend.

Prospective Juniata College students and their parents had a chance to visit and find out a little bit more about Juniata during an Admissions Open House held last Saturday in the midst of Homecoming activities. After registering, students learned about campus academics and organizations at an academic department fair with representatives from the academic departments and student clubs. The prospective students took tours from 11:30 until 12:30 and then proceeded to Alumni Hall for a welcome from President Neff, followed by speeches given by current students on "What Makes Juniata Special". Following this, the students and their parents were treated to lunch in Baker Refectory.

Bob DiAntonio (senior): "Yes, I think 9:15 would be a good time to stay open for breakfast. Students are now obligated to get up before 8:00 to eat. They would definitely get a lot more people eating breakfast."

Jeanette Peppell and Jane Duplack (seniors): "People who have 12:00 and 1:00 Classes only have 40 minutes to get in, eat, leave, and get to class. This is extremely inconvenient (except on weekends)."

Build Your Own Home Computer

Juniata College Assistant Dean for Learning Resources Dr. Mark Wilson, has come up with an unusual way to help those who want to own a personal computer, but don't want to pay the going price to have one. Dr. Wilson's answer: Build your own!

Dr. Wilson, in conjunction with Meckler Video, has put together a 30-minute video cassette, "Build Yourself a Generic Computer," which provides a clear demonstration and course for building a generic computer composed of standard and interchangeable parts based on the IBM/XT.

According to Dr. Wilson, a generic computer can be built by anyone who can handle a screwdriver for less than $700, about half the price of a comparable brand name model. Component parts are available off the shelf or can be purchased from mail order supply houses. The cassette describes step by step how to obtain the necessary parts and how to assemble them into a working computer.

"I know it may sound a little too easy," said Dr. Wilson, "but it really is quite simple. I would dare to say that anyone who can use a screwdriver can build a computer and be using it within a few hours time if they follow the instructions on the tape," he said. No electronic or soldering skills are needed.

"Build Yourself A Generic Computer" is available from Meckler Video for $125 on either VHS or Beta, and has a 30-minute running time.

Dr. Gasque to teach about Saint Paul

By Iralene Jackson

"The Life and Letters of St. Paul" and "Christianity and the Economic Order" are the two courses that will be taught during the Spring Semester by Dr. W. Ward Gasque, the J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor for the current year.

The purpose of the first is to introduce the student to the life and work of the man whose ideas had the greatest impact upon the early Christian church and who has been perhaps the most influential among early theologians in the impact made on Western culture.

The second course will look at the biblical teaching on wealth and poverty, property, social responsibility, justice, differing Christian attitudes toward economic issues down through the ages, Calvinism and the rise of capitalism, the Marxist critique of capitalism, the welfare state, third world poverty, and the like.

The course on St. Paul will be taught on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 10:00 a.m. "Christianity and the Economic Order" will be taught at the same hour on Tuesday and Thursday.

JC Wins Shootout; Spikers Red Hot

After coming up short by one match in two consecutive tournaments the Lady Spikers finally got over the hump by winning their own tournament, The Juniata Shootout, this past homecoming weekend. In going 5-0 during the tournament, JC coach Larry Bock closed within five matches of winning his 350 career (coaching) victory. The mark could easily be matched this weekend when Juniata host the Coca-Cola Classic, an 18 team tournament, featuring 368 athletes, with ten of the teams ranked in the top 20 in the nation.

In the openng round of he shootout, Juniata played Gordon College, a team easily defeated a week ago in two consecutive matches. Things looked like they would continue to roll the Indians way against Gordon as JC won the first two games 15-7 and 15-6. However, after losing seven straight games to Juniata, Gordon made its run, winning games three and four 16-14. The Indians managed to pull out game five 15-7 and moved into the next match against Slippery Rock with one victory. In the Gordon match Cathy Miller had 15 kills, while teammate Jackie Rebert had 24.

Juniata easily cruised past Slippery Rock in three games, 15-3, 15-3, and 15-13. This concluded Friday nights action; the Indians were now 2-0 and were matched to play West Chester on Saturday. JCR's road to the final turned out easier than they thought. The Indians pounded West Chester 15-5, 15-8, and 15-4 to move into the semi-finals against Carnegie-Mellon University.

The Lady Indians moved into the finals beating C-M 15-5, 15-1, 15-2. Up to this point, JC won ten straight games and finished with 13 straight wins by knocking off Gannon 15-13, 15-9, and 15-5 to win the Juniata Shootout.

Cathy Miller had 18 kills against Gannon, while Rebert added ten and Laurie Snow had seven. Miller and Snow also had three service aces against Gannon. Miller and Rebert combined for 131 kills during the tournament.

Earlier in the week the Lady Spikers cruised by Albright in three straight games raising their record to 16-2. Remember to support the women's volleyball team this weekend at the Coca-Cola Classic. Check times to see when the Indians play.

Editor's Note

The Juniatian is reminding all those who are interested in being a sports reporter to come to the staff meetings every Sunday night at 7:00pm. This year looks to be nothing short of successful for all teams fall through spring, but the lack of writers, information, etc. will hinder the chances of letting the college and its community know of your success.

Just because you participate does not mean that you can not write. The Juniatian needs your help. If interested contact Sports editors Mike Antenucci (Box 7) or Andrea Zavod (Public Relations Office-day) some time soon. Winter and spring teams, as well as clubs (i.e. Ski) should keep this in mind for future references.

Juniata's Steve Grater tries to control the ball and move past a York College defender. The Indians lost two games this past weekend.

Soccer Team Stalling; Lose Two Tough Games

Juniata's soccer team fared poorly during Homecoming week. The Indians lost two games, dropping their overall record to 1-5-1, and also lost to the alumni on Sunday moring.

Coming off a well-played game against Elizabethtown over the weekend, JC returned home on Wednesday to face Messiah. Things didn't work out well, as Messiah scored five goals in the first half, eventually winning 6-0.

Coach Klaus Jaeger prepared his team to play a defensive game, but the defense did not play well until the second half. Messiah R's superior skill and quickness forced the Indians to make mistakes, and four of the five goals scored in the first half resulted from defensive errors.

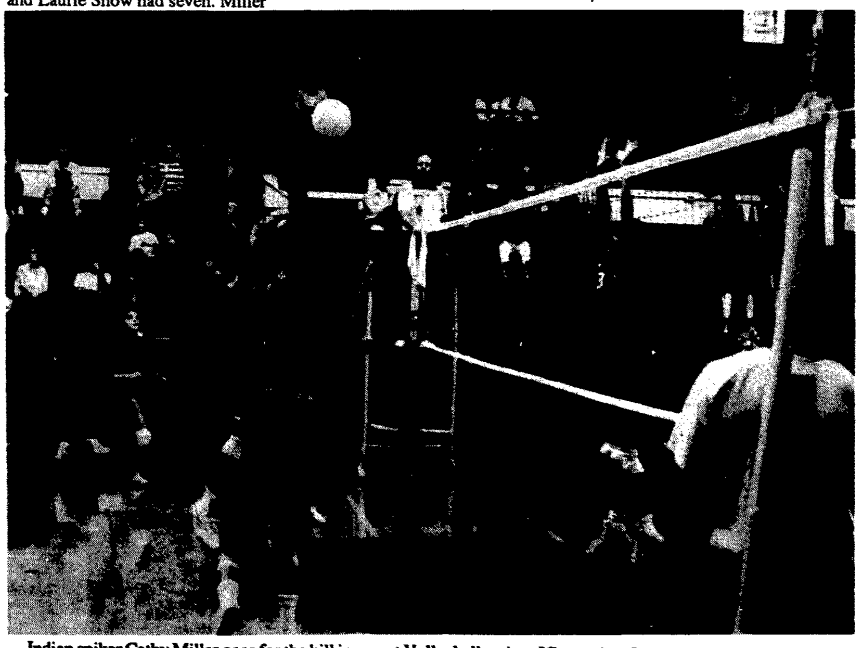
Despite the score, Jaeger cited keepers Tim Phelps and John Bobko for their fine play. Drew Spector and Mike Kauffman also played well for the Indians.

Saturday saw the Indians at home against York, and once again, they came up empty. Juniata controlled the game, but couldn't capitalize on any of their numerous scoring opportunities. York scored in the first half, and the game ended in a 1-0 defeat for the Indians.

John Bobko was in the net during the first half, while Walt Cupit and Tim Phelps split the duties in the second. Cupit made some excellent saves for JC.

On Sunday, the Indians played a team of alumni and suffered a 1-0 defeat. The game was marred by the poor officiating of alumni coach Bob Riley, as he obviously favored one side over the other.

The Indians faced Dickinson on Wednesday, and will travel to meet Kings on Friday.



Indian spiker Cathy Miller goes for the kill in recent Volleyball action. JC won the "Shootout" and are looking for a repeat performance in the Coca-Cola Classic.

Ladies' Hockey Holding Own; Split Last Two Games

By Deb Dougherty

The field hockey team travelled to Messiah College September 23. The Tribe played a tough game, but lost the decision 4-0.

Messiah quickly scored three goals before Juniata could get into the game. After the third goal was scored, the Lady Hackers held Messiah until about five minutes left in the game, when the fourth goal went through.

This past Saturday, Juniata went up against the tough team of Johns Hopkins. Hopkins was fast and aggressive, but Juniata held their ground.

The first half of the match was even, ending in a score of 0-0. At the beginning of the second half, Juniata dominated the ball. Jody Holman knocked in the only goal for the Lady Hackers.

Johns Hopkins did not give up and came back five minutes later to put one on the board for themselves. The score remained tied for the remainder of regulation play.

Neither team managed to score in two ten-minute periods of overtime, so the Lady Indians added another tie to their record.

Coach Kathi Quinn felt that the team played an excellent game. Everyone supported each other. Jill Schadler played tough at the sweeped position, which helped bring the team to a 1-1 decision.

Indians Keep On Cruising; Crush Lebanon Valley 31-0

Widener Next Contest

By Mike Antenucci

The Indians wrapped up a two game home stand with an impressive 31-10 Homecoming victory over Lebanon Valley this past weekend on College Hill. Juniata put the game out of reach early taking a 13-0 first quarter lead. Despite LVC's lone touchdown in the second quarter the Indians still marched into the locker room with a 24-7 lead at halftime.

Juniata's first score of the game came with 3:24 remaining in period one. The sixth play, 60 yard drive was capped off when Indian signal caller Chris Davis found tight end Jim Metz in the endzone for the score. Keith Watson connected on the pat, and JC lead 7-0. The big play of the drive was a 40 yard run by sophomore tailback, Dan Crossey. Junior wideout Don Betar encouraged the plays success by throwing a beautiful block which allowed Crossey to get outside.

Lebanon Valley's next drive was stopped 3 plays later when sophomore, defensive back, Bob Herzog intercepted a pass and returned it to the LVC's 33 yard line. After Davis hit Metz for a 23 yard gain, Dan Crossey gained 5 yards to spot the ball at the one. This set up Davis' second touchdown pass of the day, finding junior, Mike Cottle open on the timing pattern in the corner of the endzone. The extra point conversion failed, and the Indians led 13-0 with 38 seconds remaining to play in the first quarter.

The Dutchmen, however, bounced right back marching down the field on 8 plays for 69 yards and seven points. Andy Hower threw to Brian Wassell twice during the drive. The first pass he completed was a 23 yard gain which brought the Dutchmen into JC territory. The next time they connected was for a 29 yard touchdown in the right corner of the endzone. After the pat was converted the Indians lead was narrowed to 13-7 with 13:29 left to play in the half.

On the ensuing drive Juniata managed to eat up six and a half minutes of the clock on 13 plays. After marching 84 yards down field, the Indians drive was stalled; so JC had to settle for a 23 yard fieldgoal by Keith Watson. During the drive, Crossey carried the ball five times for 51 yards, while Metz hauled in a 17 yard reception.

LVC's next series was short lived and was stopped on the second play by John Sparh, who intercepted a Dutchmen pass on his own 37 yard-line. Once again the "O" line opened up holes for the workhorse Crossey. Crossey carried the ball five times out of the 10 play 63 yard scoring drive, gaining 55 yards on the series. The drive was capped off when Davis hit Metz in the endzone for the second time in the game. The Indians gained back the point they lost on the earlier missed pat by faking the extra point try. Holder, Don Betar, completed a pass to Metz, and the Indians led 24-7 at half.

LVC"'s only other score was a 23 yard field goal which came late in the third quarter. Tony Porrino started the series by intercepting a Davis pass, and he then capped off the 11 play 40 yard drive with his 23 yard boot.

The only other Juniata score came with only 55 seconds remaining in the game, when freshman Dennis Derenzo scampered 15 yards into the LVC endzone. Watson added the pat, and time soon ran out with the Indians improving their record to 3-0 (2-0).

Nuch's Notes: On 28 carried Danny Crossey rushed for 175 yards, while freshman Dennis Derenzo rushed for 68 yards on 13 tries. Cubby Davis completed 20 of his 32 passes for 201 yards and 3 TD's. He threw two interceptions and was sacked five times.

Davis' favorite receiver this day was tight end Jim Metz who hauled in 6 passes for 86 yarsd and two touchdowns. Mike Cottle had 5 receptions for 71 yards, while Don Betar grabbed 3 gaining 21 yards.

John Sparh punted 8 times for 290 yards, an average of 36.3 yards per punt. Keith Watson had 2 extra points and a field goal contributing 5 of the Indians 31 points.

The offense on the whole compiled 18 first downs, had 219 total yards rushing and a total of 420 yards on 82 plays for a 5.12 yard per play average. The Indians controlled the ball 35:44 to LVC's 24:16 JC was also penalized 9 times for 75 yards.

Defensively the Indians held LVC to 12 first downs and only 103 yards on the ground. LVC compiled 246 yards total offense on 64 plays for a 3.53 average. LVC was forced to punt 7 times and also had 6 turnovers.

Linebacker Frank Gay led the charge with 14 tackles and two pass breakups. Dave Ritter had 4 tackles with 1 sack. Greg St. Clair had 8 tackles with 1 sack. Chuck Rihn (now we're even) had 6 tackles along with safety Mark Dorner. Tom Kirsh had 7 tackles, 3 of them unassisted.

Tom Yerger had the other Indian interception while four Indians bounced on lose balls. Recovering fumbles for JC were Ray Witmer, St. Clair, Steve Campbell and Peter Grubb.

The Indians are now 2-0 in the MAC, but they are moving into the heart of the conference with games against legitimate title contenders. The three game stretch starts this week at Widener.

family, and the number of children in that family that were in college.

Now the new Higher Education Act requires the counselor to include other money--like home values and investments--in determining if the student needs a GSL.

As a result of adding in the "other sources of income" to a family's wealth, many families look like they earn too much to qualify for the low-cost loans.

"We've had more denials as GSL eligibility has gotten tighter," said Don Davis of Texas' financial aid office.

The Higher Education Act of 1986 also raised the maximum annual GSL from $2,500 to $4,000.

Particularly hurt by the new requirements, said Dan Davenport of the University of Idaho financial aid office, are graduate students and older students.

Income from teaching or research assistant jobs now is added to a student's assets when determining GSL eligibility, Davenport said, reducing or eliminating loans graduate students received in the past.

"Nontraditional" students also must declare their spouse's income, also cutting or eliminating loans, he added.

Despite the tighter GSL eligibility requirements, Martin said the financial aid picture "looks pretty favorable," since students still have access to other, though more expensive loans.

"We thought we'd see a decrease in total available funds," Davis said. "But there's just as much money, and there are just as many students applying for aid. We've processed as many, or more, applications as we did last year."

"We're funded at the same levels as last year," Davenport added.

"Frankly, this is a more stable year than last year," explained Colorado College financial aid Director Rodney Oto.

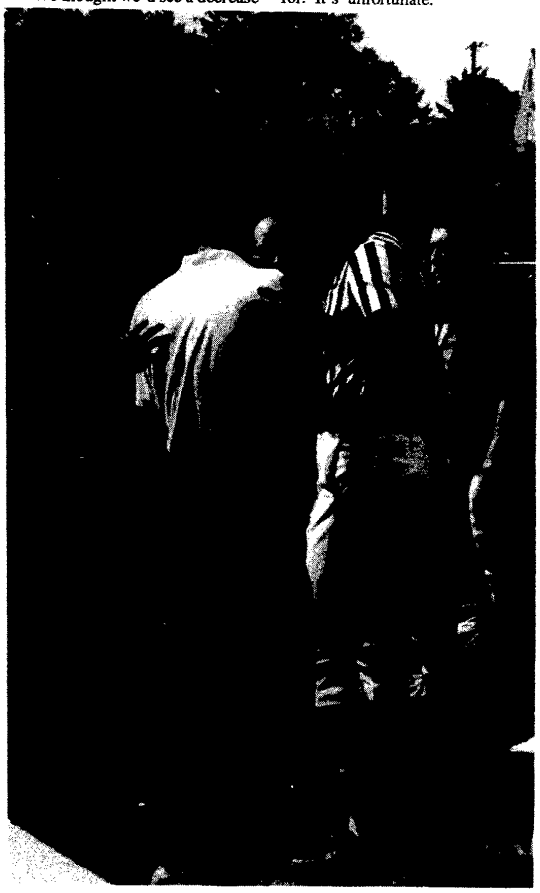
Martin, however, contended that although the U.S. Department of Education continues to appropriate more money for student financial aid, students are not receiving as much assistance as they have in the past.

Much of the actual dollar increase, he said, is used to pay off defaulters' loans.

Changes in aid distribution have created "an increasing student indebtedness," Martin said. The Pell Grant program, once the dominant form of federal student assistance, has been slashed. Loans are now the dominant form.

"There's been no increase in true student aid," said Martin. "This has not been a growth industry. There are actually fewer dollars to go around."

"High-ability students from low-income families are not being served," Martin continued. "That's a loss of talent we're not providing for. It's unfortunate."



Juniata head coach Rob Ash discusses matters with an official in last weeks action. Ash has his troops ready to travel into Widener this weekend in hopes of a repeat performance of last year.

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXVIII No. 5 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 8, 1987

Juniata hosts the National Shakespeare Company and it's powerful presentation of "The Tempest" on Saturday night at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall. The performance presents the extremes of human emotion and exposes the darker side of humanity.

Parents' Weekend agenda boasts Shakespeare production in Oller

One of Shakespeare's most beautiful and powerful dramas, "The Tempest," will be presented at Juniata College the evening of October 10, at 8:15 p.m., in Oller Hall.

The play, to be performed by The National Shakespeare Company, depicts the utmost extremes of human action and emotion: violence and peace, tyranny and freedom. Shakespeare reveals a world of goodness and light, a world of peace and love.

But the playwright also exposes the darker side of humanity, the unnatural world where brother rises up against brother, servant against master. It is the contrast between these opposing principles that gives "The Tempest" its most touching and universal qualities.

Performing this classic will be The National Shakespeare Company, celebrating its 25th anniversary on tour this season. The company, which yearly travels 35,000 miles on and off the beaten track, giving 120 performances for over 100,000 people, prides itself on reaching those whose access to theatre, let alone Shakespeare, is limited by geography or economic means. "We do affordable, 'essential' Shakespeare," says Elaine Sulka, the company's cofounder and artistic director. "Our purpose is to wet the appetite for more, to dispell the bugaboo that Shakespeare is for the elite, to bring alive the music in those beautiful words so often lost when read silently."

By "essential," Ms. Sulka means that emphasis is placed upon the text: the words, the action, the meaning. The physical production is limited to what can be carried on one tour bus and set up by the actors themselves within three hours. Sets are therefore simple.

Visually, emphasis is placed on costumes but, here again, fabrics must be chosen with an appreciation for the fact that dry cleaning may not be possible for a two-month period and that costumes will be carried packed tightly in bags in the back of the bus.

The most precious cargo the bus carries then is the actors who have traditionally numbered 12. This means there are rarely ladies-in-waiting, courtiers, or the soldiers-at-arms often used by resident companies for stage dressing. It also means actors double in roles. As an

The dining hall will close with breakfast on Saturday, October 17, beginning at 7:15 a.m. and concluding at 9:30 a.m. and will reopen with dinner on Tuesday, October 20, at 5:00 p.m.

JC may be forced to reassess alcohol policy

Last month, students at Lycoming College in Williamsport, Pa. staged sit-ins and demonstrations, protesting the institution of a more restrictive alcohol policy. According to an article in the September 11 issue of the Harrisburg Patriot, the old policy permitted parties at which alcohol was served, but "placed the responsibility for abiding with state drinking laws on the individuals in attendance." This is very similar to Juniata's current policy. Lycoming's interim policy, effective until a student-administration committee can develop a new one, requires host organizations and individuals to sign a release stating they will not serve alcohol to minors or to people who appear to be intoxicated. Depending on the outcome of a suit currently under appeal, Juniata may also be forced to change its alcohol policy.

In 1976, the college began to allow chartered clubs to furnish alcohol at lounge parties and the policy caught on two or three years later. According to Dr. Arno'd Tilden, Vice-President for Educational Planning and Student Services, 75% of the students who come to Juniata have already made the decision to use alcohol, a statistic consistent with the national average. The administration felt, and still feels, that drinking, if it is going to occur, is better done in a social environment that secretly and alone. This policy continued until the end of the 1984-85 academic year.

Juniata's policy changed in the fall of 1985, prompted by a court decision which instituted social host liability. Prior to this time, only commercial providers of alcohol were liable, and responsibility fell primarily on those who sold the alcohol. Since clubs did not actually sell alcohol, neither they nor the college were liable.

Then, in 1984, the case of Congini vs. Portersville Valve established social host liability. At this time, a social host was defined simply as anyone who handed a guest a beverage. Congini, an employee of Portersville Valve, left a company picnic at which he had been served alcohol and was injured

Dr. Henry J. Abraham, James Hart Professor of Government and Foreign Affairs in the Woodrow Wilson Department of Government at the University of Virginia, will present an address at Juniata College the evening October 8, entitled "Presidents and the Supreme Court: Reflections on the Selection and Appointment Process."

A distinguished scholar of constitutional law and the role of the judiciary, who won the coveted Thomas jefferson Award in 1983, Dr. Abraham will speak at 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall. The public is cordially invited to hear this presentation on a topic much in the news and of much concern at the present time. There is no admission charge to hear this United States Constitution Bicentennial address.

A Summa Cum Laude honors graduate of Kenyon College, Dr. Abraham received his Ph.D degree

Editorial

This week, I'd like to take a break from my usually serious editorial topics (at the request of a rather cheery student) and focus on something a little more pleasant. Juniata College observes many annual traditions and this weekend has to be one of my personal favorites (although Mountain Day ranks up there). Parents' Weekend is not noted for wild lounge parties, hotel parties or tower parties; it's a different type of "fun".

Those students who are not looking forward to Saturday and Sunday may not understand the concept of Parents' Weekend. This is a special time, only once a year, to honor our parents. Here we are, in this far away world nine months of the year, and we can share it with them for a weekend. While we are here, it's so easy to get caught up in our activities--going to classes, studying, spending time with friends and participating in extracurricular organizations--but it's important to remember where we came from and how we got here.

For the first eighteen years, our parents have supported us and guided our development only to watch us disappear into the Huntingdon horizon. For this reason, I'd like to dedicate this editorial to my parents to express my gratitude and appreciation for all that they have selflessly done. With the passing years have come an understanding of the special qualities of my parents.

Juniata College has in fact made a valuable impact upon my life, an experience that would have been impossible without the hard work of my parents. For more than three years at JC, I have been supported and encouraged to reach my potential and I could never ask for anything more. When things seemed to be closing in around me, there were always words of wisdom or a caring listener. Without the understanding of my family, Juniata would not be such a special place.

This weekend can be a time for reflection and appreciation, a time to celebrate your parents and their many achievements. Take this opportunity to express your thoughts because so many important feelings remain unsaid--it's not enough to assume that they know. Enjoy your time together because it becomes shorter as we grow older.

I love you mom and dad.

Parents' Weekend Is Upon Us

By Suzanne Lydic

Before we know it, cameras will be clicking and kisses will be smothering the Juniata campus. What is happening? Is it homecoming? No--more like "home coming here". Parents' Weekend will soon be upon us--along with those family photographers and lovey-dovey mothers!

From October 9-11, Juniata proudly host the creators of all our students. Parents will flood the campus from all across the country in honor of this event.

Liz Snavely, the Parents' Weekend Committee Chairperson, has lined up some very exciting activities for the weekend.

The fun will commence at 8:15 in the Ballroom in Ellis for a coffeehouse with our own local vocalist, Andy and Terry Murray. The cost for this exciting extravaganza is only $1 for students with ID. Refreshments will be served.

The celebration will resume on Saturday morning at 9:00 for games and prizes. The competitive fun will include all sorts of crazy stunts and relay games that you do not want to miss! So bring your parents out and join the great time...and maybe even compete with a professor!

Awards for games will be given too. Any winner will receive will receive a ruby red long-sleeved t-shirt outlined in gold with the weekend theme.

Afternoon activities will include a tail-gate picnic on South lawn followed by a football games at 1:30 against Moravian. Interested persons may purchase raffle tickets at the information desk before the game to claim the prize winnings drawn at half-time.

Anne Oller makes contribution to J.C.

Continuing a family tradition that has provided more than 75 years of dedicated service and support to Juniata College, Mrs. Anne Oller has committed to Juniata a gift of $100,000 which will be used for resurfacing the running surface of the Jefford F. Oller track, named in honor of her husband.

"We are overwhelmed by the generosity of this gracious and charming lady," said Klare Sunderland '56, who with Chuck Knox '54, is chairing the campaign for the improvement of athletic facilities at Juniata. "Mrs. Oller has made a clear statement of her devotion to Juniata and her dedication to continue the support which the Oller family has given the College for so many years," he said.

Mrs. Oller's gift will be used to provide an all-weather running surface for the College's six lane track, and it was offered as an incentive to other Juniata friends and alumni to increase or initiate gifts to the College to meet the challenge of the 1987-88 Annual Support Fund (ASF) Campaign. A goal of $500,000 has been set for the campaign, $200,000 more than the amount raised in 1986-87. Mrs. Oller challenges Juniata supporters to double her gift amount by contributing the additional $200,000 needed for the ASF to meet its increased objective.

A native of Latrobe Mrs. Oller has proved her commitment to Juniata College by her service and her gifts. Her husband, the late Jeffrey F. Oller, was a track standout at Juniata and held the college record for the 220 yard dash for many years. He served as a member of Juniata's Board of Trustees from 1966 to 1974, and together with his brother Jack E. (1975-86), his father Joseph J. (1898-1936), and his grandfather Jacob F. (1878-96), he gave 75 years of leadership to that Board.

"Mrs. Oller has helped to make possible the beginning of a much needed program of athletic facilities enhancement," said Dr. Robert W. Neff, Juniata's President. "This elegant lady has brought continued honor to the Oller family name through her appreciation and involvement with the arts and continues to bring honor to the memory of her husband with her wonderful gift today. All Juniata alumni and friends are indebted to her, and I know we will do everything possible to meet the challenge she has extended," he said.

Mrs. Oller was recognized in 1977 for her gift to Juniata of a Picasso print collection. In 1983 she was again recognized for her gift of the current running track.

The words of the dedication plaque in Oller Hall, named in honor of the Oller family, conclude by saying, "... in recognition of their (the Oller family) long and continued devotion to the development of Juniata College." That tradition of devotion continues today.

This week's spotlight focuses on the Cars new album entitled "Door to Door". This album's a lot different in style than their earlier stuff. It is a lot tamer. They still manage, however, to cut through their processed, commercialized sound and give their rock fans some great tunes.

Their first release, "You Are the Girl" is a sweet, catchy blast of the old Cars. The title song, "Door to Door" is a wall-banging, high volume tune that can rival some contemporary heavy metal band.

This week we also have the weirdest song of the week entitled "Fine Lemon". Again, it is too weird for my taste.

The main theme of the album is a lovesick guy in love with an unresponsive girl. Boring stuff, but the album is great. Again the Cars come back to show that they can still rock, and like good wine they are improving with age.

I would venture to say that Friday, October 2nd was just another weekend kickoff for most Juniata students. I would be surprised if more than a dozen people were aware that it was the anniversary of the birth of one of the world's greatest men of peace, Mohandas K. Gandhi.

I feel that Ghandi (called "Mahatma," great soul), who was influenced by Americans and who influenced many Americans himself, is deserving of our recognition. That is why I support the effort of Congressman Stephen Solarz (D-NY) and Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-NY) to get legislation passed that would set aside October 2nd, 1988 as a special commemorative day to honor him.

What was so special about Mahatma Gandhi? I will let Senator Moynihan and Congressman Solarz explain: "Where those of lesser courage cynically rationalized the use of violence to fight oppression, Gandhi believed that the true democrat defends liberty by purely nonviolent means. His weapons were truth, integrity and compassion--values which he used as a moral force of persuausion. It was this force that eventually won freedom for his people in India."

"Gandhi drew inspiration from great American thinkers like Ralph Waldo Emerson and Henry David Thoreau in formulating his philosophy of civil dosobedience. When he proclaimed that all human beings are equal and that life is sacred and treated those beliefs as an inviolable trust, he echoed Abraham Lincoln. And it was the power of Gandhi's nonviolent struggle in India that inspired the civil rights movement in the United States under the leadership of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr."

I believe that Mahatma Gandhi was the spiritual giant of this century. I sincerely hope that Senator Moynihan and Congressman Solarz are successful in their effort to set aside October 2nd 1988 as a special commemorative day. I urge all readers who share my feelings on this issue to contact: Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510, and.or Congressman Stephen Solarz, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515.

I would also like to express the hope that Juniata College, which is so proud of its Peace and Conflict Studies program, will consider some sort of commemoration of the birth of Mahatma Gandhi.

"I think I can, I think I can ", so goes the line in the childrens' story "The Little Engine That Could". STOP!!! Before you completely dismiss this as outrageous or totally inappropriate for college-age students, just think about the message that is being presented. Eventually, as we all know, the little engine makes it to the top of the mountain due primarily to his/her optimistic orientation.

Granted, the story may be a bit simplistic in what seems to be a very complicated world, but the power of positive thinking, as suggested by among others, Norman Vincent Peale and psychologist Albert Ellis, can prove very helpful to all of us when it comes to taking care of business. We can learn to take on a more positive, "can-do" attitude with reference to academic, social, and personal situations.

Psychologists have been telling us for years that what we say to ourselves, our cognitions, if you will, have a great deal to do with what actually happens to us. In other words, our covert behaviors, in many cases, lead to overt behaviors. Waking up on Monday morning and saying to yourself that it is going to be a lousy day may just be enough to have it turn out that way. Similarly, we can convince ourselves that we are going to perform poorly on an exam if we tell ourselves so and thus fulfilling our own prophecy.

Our research in stress inoculation at Penn State supports the idea that turning around the negative "internal dialogue" to more positive self-statements goes a long way in helping college students manage stressful situations.

Psychologists Charles Carver of the University of Miami and Michael Scheier of Carnegie-Mellon University report that one's ability to cope with stress.

In a related study, psychologists found that optimistic college students, during that critical four-week period at the end of the semester, reported a greater sense of control over stress, were less fatigued, and were generally more healthy than their more pessimistic classmates.

In our next article I will discuss some specific stategies that will help us to be more optimistic and less pessimistic. We will look at ways to change our attitude from describing the glass as half-empty to half-full. Until then be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

Student Government holds last September meeting

By Nicole Hudah

The members of Student Government gathered for a meeting in the faculty lounge September 29, 1987. President Amy Coursen got the ball rolling with a brief request: "If you're going to be absent from a meeting, please inform our secretary" Hear that members? And so, the meeting began.

Jen Warner spoke of the Leadership Conference which was a success. Most of the clubs and organizations on campus sent representatives to the conference, but those that did not had their budgets cut. Those in control of Budgets and Management informed members that the "Walk for Arms Reduction" will still be held Sunday, October 11th at 1:30 p.m. (for more info call 643-4774).

Those concerned with Residential Life reminded members of current and future events such as: the annual room decorating contest (all forms must be in by Oct. 16th), "powder puff" football, and the beloved jello-wrestling matches will be back.

As of now, the students concerns on JC's campus include: providing more light between the gym and East Towers and from the gym to North. A letter proposing this issue will be sent to Randy Deike. Also, if you are planning to travel abroad, do not feel that you won't graduate on time. Some feel that registrars should be more lenient in this area and that they should also be more helpful when it comes to providing internships for students.

People involved with the Student Leadership Development came up with a rather unique idea. They proposed that students from various colleges be invited to Juniata to discuss similar problems and/or ideas which are present at their institutions. Thus, they would try to formulate solutions to the problems and provide insight for new ideas. JC students feel that this opportunity would allow them to develop new and better ways of improving the camous as a whole. Last, there will be a Leadership mixer for faculty, the administration and students. They will discuss plans for the new Planning Committee. This will be a casual but structured affair. Any suggestions are welcomed.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Debra Ollinger

It's 10:30 p.m., I have a test in 14 hours. I'm not really studying because my roommates are having a horror film festival. I don't have a problem with the sight of blood--I see it, I pass out, no problem. What am I to do? I invoke the Senior Perogative.

Three rings, Hello? Marylou? Colonial? Now!

The Senior Perogative, for those unfamiliar with the term (since I just made it up), is that special ability, power, call it a gift, enjoyed by all those fulfilling their final (somewhere near the fourth) year of undergraduate study at an accredited academic institution.

Senior Perogative is an abstraction rooted in that little shred of character bred and strengthened by three years of work and effort, of knocks and jolts, of tears and frustrations which allow a senior, at least in his or her mind, to do things never considered as an underclassman.

Senior Perogative allows you to go to class in the same clothes you fell asleep in last night. It gives you special privileges, like walking into the cafeteria, Milly knows you by name and maybe even memorized your number. And when there, you can load your tray with entree after entree, a little cheese with those fries--some nachos--maybe a little ice cream afterwards. Then you can sit down and and eat everything at a table all by yourself. You don't even have to be in the alcove.

Or when there's a party somewhere, anywhere, a senior can invoke the Perogative. He or she can come alone, empty handed and broke and still cop a brew from someone he or she calls "Bud". Then you look around, and you know, at the very least, three-fourths of the people in the room--the other fourth you don't want to know.

The Senior Women's Perogative usually opts not to attend lounge parties-- the breeding ground of lust and corruption on the weekends, we can't understand the open party format, besides the men are too young.

On a slow weeknight, this special gift allows seniors to go to Dave's, or the Colonial or even, (God forbid) Ajay's. They do this in the manner shown above: on the spur of the moment, no plans, no organization, no mad search through the halls for ID. Because, remember, seniors are 21--not that that matters in the country of Huntingdon where there is no drinking age.

In years past, the opportunity to write Muddy Run was a Senior Perogative. For three years I longed for the time that I too could join the ranks of its distinguished authors, but I was always told, "You have to be a senior." So this year I return with the grand hope of writing the illustrious column only to find a freshman with the first byline.

A point should be made here to all underclassmen who continued to read this "senior pat on the back" thus far: just a reminder that you too will have this attitude bestowed

Letter To The Editor

Question: How many students attending Juniata College can claim to have seen a handicapped student using a wheelchair?

The answer to this question is probably none. Juniata College, which has so much to offer, severely lacks facilities for the handicapped. The main problem lies in that those confined to wheelchairs simply cannot get into the buildings on their own.

First, let us examine the residence halls. There are steps by every entrance to Tussey-Terrace, North Hall, and Sherwood. There are steps by every entrance to East Houses (and the access bridges) South Hall, Cloister (you cannot even get in the ranch without a step) and Lesher Hall (try getting out of the infirmary in a wheelchair).

Next, let us look at those buildings on campus with no access ramps for the handicapped. J. Omar Good Hall, where an overwhelming majority of the social science classes are held, has steps by all entrances. And, even if a student could get inside, he or she would be stuck on the second floor. Founders Hall also cannot be entered by a person relying on a wheelchair for transportation. I guess registration and financial are not important to the handicapped. Ellis Hall, which houses the post office, the bookstore, many clubs, and most importantly the cafeteria, also has no handicapped entrance. The only plausible entrance, located by the radio station, is at the bottom of a hill that I wouldn't dare try to negotiate in a wheelchair. Other important buildings with no access include Beeghley Library, Swigart Hall, Oller Auditorium and Shoemaker Gallery.

Fairness dictates that we next examine those buildings with handicapped access. The Humanities building has access to both the first and second floor, although to go from one to the other in a wheelchair one would have to go outside and around the building. The Brumbaugh Science Center permits handicapped access to the first floor, although most classes are taught upstairs. Ironically, the Admissions Office has complete handicapped facilities. A prospective student can be easily impressed by that first look at Juniata. But, if that same student were to examine the rest of the campus for easy access for the handicapped, he or she would be quickly discouraged.

This is a problem which fortunately does not affect a vast majority of students on the campus, yet the situation does need to be rectified. The solution, although it may be costly, is simple. The college has to install ramps for the handicapped in every building. This should be done before we build a new football stadium. the administration should provide funding for access ramps the next time they sit down to plan a budget. Until such ramps are installed, Juniata College cannot claim to provide equally for all students.

upon you. You'll feel cockiness, that we seniors make full use of now--as others have before us and that you'll deserve then.

It is in such situations, we should all remember, that the Senior Perogative grants you one more inalienable right--reminiscing. As I sit back in my off-campus house, reading a little SVS; I begin to think back about Raft Regatta and its last legacies--about lounge parties with five or six halves--about the joys of transporting, room parties, old friends , rugby games on campus and older men.

But all reminiscing aside, that speck of character, what I have dubbed the "Senior Perogative" should be inherent in us now. Because that initiative that allows senior women to go to the men's room at the Colonial or anyone to eat by themself, or take casualness to new heights--is the same individualism that will hopefully grow even stronger this year and help each of us catch our own cap May 8th.

Sunday will be celebrated with a special all-campus worship service. Persons of all faiths are invited to attend.

A special note to all students who are "orphaned" for the weekend: Come have a grand time...or even adopt-a-parent if you would like.

When Liz Snavely was asked about her greatest expectation for the weekend she replied, "I hope to meet lots of people having a grand time while enjoying non-rainy weather." She bubbled on, "I'm excited. It's going to be fun trying all these new things!"

By Joe Newhart

After nearly two years of waiting and hoping, Juniata College can finally rest assure that they will have a college radio station over the airwaves.

WKVR-FM, the campus' largest student organization, was notified that they would have to vacate their current frequency of 103.5 way back in April, 1986. This message came from the FCC and resulted because WRLR, 106 FM, wanted to move their transmitter. Over the past two years the staff of V-103, the administration, college lawyers, and an engineering team have tried to work out a solution. This week the first positive news was received.

WKVR was granted a Standard Temporary Application for 91.9 on the FM dial. This move is tentatively scheduled for Monday, October 12, because WRLR will be moving to 103.5 FM soon. The biggest concern was that we would not have a frequency from which to broadcast, but 91,9 looks like our new home.

The move to 91.9 is temporary until the application for 92.3 at 100 watts is approved. This move will make WKVR a Class A station, and we will not ever have to worry about being kicked around the dial again. Looking ahead our main goal is to move to 106.3 at a possible 3000 watts-this move could take years in legal squabbling.

The campus could look for information about the change around campus bulletin boards, the Juniatian, and, of course, V103-FM. So stay tuned for the latest info.

For promotional purposes WKVR will now be Power 92. A future change to stereo broadcasting is getting nearer as our Business Department raises the needed money through sponsorships. With all these changes in the radio station we are still going to focus on campus musical interests, campus and national news, sports, communication skills, and of course, a great way to blow off between studies. Anyone interested in becoming a DJ or a member of the statin can visit the station or contact a board member for more information. Make your mother proud-Be a POWER 92 DJ!!

Dr. Charles Kegley will present fourth lecture about Constitution

Dr. Charles W. Kegley, distinguished Professor of Political Science and Chairman of the Byrnes International Center at the University of South carolina, will present a United States Constitution Bicentennial Celebration lecture at Juniata College on Wednesday evening October 14, at 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall.

The topic of Dr. Kegley's address will be "The Constitution and Foreign Affairs" during which he will discuss the original document and the role it assigns the executive and legislative branches of the federal government. He will also discuss modern changes in the President's war making role and in congressional responsibility.

Dr. Kegley's remarks will include reflections on the hearings involved with the confirmation of Robert Bork as a Supreme Court Justice which touch on the question of independent executive action, the topic which is the heart of the controversy concerning the President's role in foreign affairs.

A graduate of American University, Professor Kegley received his Ph.D degree from the Maxwell School of Public Affairs at Syracuse University. He has earned a reputation as a nationally recognized expert on American foreign policy.

A prolific writer of substance, Dr. Kegley has published scores of books and numerous articles, including the best selling textbook, American Foreign Policy: Patterns and Progress and America in the Nuclear age.

The youngest faculty member ever to be promoted to the position of full professor, Dr. kegley is past chairman of the department and Associate Director of the Institute for International Studies. Professor Kegley has traveled and lectured extensively throughout the world.

Students invited to visit "Tempest" cast members

A special invitation has been extended to those Juniata students who attend Saturday evening's performancce of "The Tempest" to visit with members of the cast at a reception in Shoemaker Gallery immediately following the performance.

The reception, in honor of the artists, will provide the students and perfomers an opportunity to meet personally and talk about the play, the work of The National Shakespeare Company, and also to express appreciation to the benefactors, patrons and friends of Juniata's Cultural Events program, who will also be in attendance.

The contributions and gifts of those supporters of the cultural activities of Juniata College help make possible yhe exceptionally fine program of performances Juniata students and Huntingdon area residents will enjoy during the year.

Walkathon to support nuclear weapons freeze

Early registrations indicate a good turnout for the 4th Annual Walkathon sponsored by the Huntingdon County Campaign for a Nuclear Weapons Freeze to be held on Sunday, October 11.

Walker registration will begin at 1 p.m. at the Huntingdon Area High School. The five kilometer (3.1 miles) walk will commence at 1:30 p.m., wind through the streets of Huntingdon and end at Juniata College where the walkers will be treated to refreshments. In case of rain walkers should still arrive at the High School at 1 p.m. to register and obtain information pertaining to inclement weather activities.

"We are looking forward to a large group walking in support of the INF agreement," according to Larry Mutti of the Huntingdon County Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign. "The banning of medium and short-range missiles in Europe has been a major objective of the European and U.S. peace movement since 1979. This agreement is a necessary "First Step" to more disarmament agreements."

According to Larry Mutti of the Huntingdon Freeze Campaign, "The walk is planned as a major fundraising effort to strengthen the Freeze campaign in Huntingdon County and to show support for the US/Soviet agreement being negotiated presently to remove U.S. and Soviet medium and shorter-range missiles from Europe. Achievement of this historic agreement would mark the first time that the superpowers agreed to reduce, rather than limit, weapons in their stockpiles."

Mr. Mutti reported that there will be a specially designed t-shirt awarded to all walkers who turn in $50 or more in pledges by October 28. Special prizes will be given to the three walkers with the highest dollar amount in pledges.

People may still register by phoning Debbie Justham at 643-4774. Also, look for the information table in the Ellis lobby.

Campus Ministry Board members highlighted

By Michell Primel

The Campus Ministry Board (CMB) is a campus organization composed of fourteen student members and advised by Andrew Murray, Father David Arseneault, and Chris and Terry Noyes. The board's function is to coordinate faith sharing acivities at Juniata College. Parents weekend All Campus Worship, Baccalaureate, and Meal for Crop are just some of the activities organized and sponsored by CMB

Highlighted this month are board members Renee Bender and Ray Witmer, and adviser Father David Arseneault. Renee is a sophomore from Carrolltown, Pa. Her campus activities include CMB, Catholic Council, and the Big Brother, Big Sister Program. She enjoys spending time with family and friends, playing the piano, dancing aerobics, volleyball, basketball, and track. Renee'e POE is pre-medicine and she hopes to attend medical school and eventually practice in a large city.

Ray Witmer is a senior from Sunbury, Pa. His POE is pre-engineering. He hopes to attend Penn State University School of Engineering. Ray is a member of the football team, CMB, Deputation Club, and the Sociey of Physics Students. He like to spend his free time playing football, weight lifting, fishing, hunting, hiking, and barking like a dog.

The business department is off to a fine start this year at V-103. Through sponsorships we have been able to collect funds to use to broadcast this year's football games, but our task isn't finished. Our main goal is the purchase of equipment so that may become a reality here at Juniata. We need to continually contact local businesses for sponsorships for our specialty shows and regular time slots. Currently, one of my assistants, Matt Varner, has organized a small task force to make these contacts. But, the station can always use more people. Also not to be forgotten is the fine job Patty Sykos has done with the V-103 finances. The radio station currently has its own accounting system which allows each department to be updated weekly on its spending. This is allowing the station to have more control over the expenditures which occur. If you would like to join the business department or gain additional information about the station, please contact either my assistants or myself in person or through the mail-Box 1005.

All Campus Worship Service

Once again students and their parents will be joining together to celebrate their christian faith as part of the Parents Weekend Festivities.

The annual All Campus Parents Weekend Worship Service will be held Sunday, October 11 at 10:30 am in Oller Auditorium. The service will include the proclamation of God's word, reflective letters from parents and students, and the sharing of an agape meal. Music will be provided by Mrs. Teresa Murray at the organ and the Juniata Concert Choir, under the direction of Dr. Joseph Figg.

The Campus Ministry Board cordially invites all students and their parents as well as the faculty, administration and staff to attend this very special service.

Student's Speak

By Kelli Fahey

How do you feel about the school spirit here at Juniata?

Mike McIntyre and Tom Wenger (juniors):"If profs would chill out on the homework, we'd have more time to be spirited."

Dave James (senior):"It'd be more spirited if the rugby team were still affiliated with the school."

Jen Zollers (junior):"Most of our school spirit is directed towards the football team, unfortunately the other teams suffer."

Dana Wellington and Sue Gelston (juniors):"We're really happy with the support we've gotten at the volleyball games not only from students but faculty and alumni as well."

Stephanie Payne (junior):"The development of the spirit club is great for Juniata spirit. It's just too bad it hasn't become more popular with sports other than football."

Juniata's First International Week

By Margaret Gonglewski and Jani Lewis

International culture is highlighted at Juniata from October 12 to 16, marking the college's very first International Week. The events planned will allow everyone to experience culture through sight, sound and taste.

As a part of the continuing international film series, the French film "Jules and Jim" will be shown in Oller on Tuesday evening. A lecture will take place on Wednesday night in Alumni Hall. Various entertainment will be provided during dinner in the Baker Refectory, such as music from foreign lands. Also, Hallmark Food Service, in collaboration with a group of foreign exchange students, has planned special menus for the evening meals.

Meetings, lectures, and panel discussions will make up Thursday and Friday's International Symposium. Teachers and students of the area, including those on the high school level, will gather at Juniata concentrating on international study possibilities, among other topics.

Throughout the week watch for posters announcing further activities dealing with this international theme.

example, one actor plays the title role in "Julius Caesar," and after his assassination as the lead character, is cast as Cinna the Poet.

Over a thousand talented professionals are interviewed and auditioned and from these, 12 are selected to form the acting company. They are chosen for their ability to make sense out of the text, to be truthful and honest in their roles, and to speak not only to themselves, but to the audience. They also must be able to live with each other for almost 24 hours a day and handle the technical aspects of the tour since the company is totally self-contained. This means unloading, setting up lights, sets and caring for costumes. In the past, positions such as company manager, tech director and bus driver were also drawn from the cast. Currently, there are two nonactors: a bus driver and a company manger.

The plot of "The Tempest" concerns Prospero, a wise and wonderful magician who rules over a beautiful, enchanted island with his daughter, Miranda. Prospero reveals that he had once reigned as the Duke of Milan until his evil brother, Antonio, usurped his throne and set Prospero and the infant Miranda out to sea in a dilapidated boat, hoping they would drown. Instead, Prospero and Miranda landed on the lush, untamed island which was inhabited by gentle spirits and hideous monsters. Prospero, with the help of his studies in necromancy and the magic arts, tamed the wild spirits, and now presides over his island kingdom with a just and noble hand.

It is into this kingdom that Prospero's evil brother and his court are thrown. The "brave new world" of humanity is enticed onto the island for a fair and final reckoning. Through the magic and mercy of Prospero, all are reunited and all are forgiven. And, having set all things right, Prospero vows to put aside his rough magic, drown his book of spells "deeper than did ever plummet sound," and make his return to the world of men.

"The Tempest," the first of five exceptional Artist Series presentations that are a part of the Juniata Cultural Events program for 1987-88, is open to the public. Admission price is $8 at the door, but those wishing to buy season tickets for the entire series may do so for $30. Other featured events in the Artist Series include "A Child's Christmas in Wales," "An Evening with the Harlem Boys Choir," "Liz Lerman and the Dance Exchange," and "The Man of La Mancha."

Field Hockey Suffers Defeat; Dickinson Next on Schedule

By D. Dougherty

The field hockey team lost a tough game to Franklin and Marshall (F&M) Tuesday, September 29. The Tribe played a good game and everyone worked well together.

The Lady Hackers took the lead early in the first half on a penalty corner. The hard drive and goal was made by Kathleen McGowan. No shots were allowed for the F&M team by the Tribe defense the first half.

Coming out in the second half, Juniata was fired up and ready to hold onto their 1-0 lead. They dominated most of the half but could not put the ball between the posts. With only ten minutes left in the game, F&M picked up their play and put in their first goal. Minutes later the F&M squad hammered in another goal. Juniata took over for the remainder of the game, but the score remained 2-1.

The Tribe was ready for a victory when they took on Chatham the following Saturday. Juniata played a completely offensive game. Only three shots were allowed on goal.

Joanne Thomas started the Lady Hackers scoring drive about five minutes into the game. The rest of the team picked up on the intensity of the game. They cut well and had good passes across field. Eight more goals followed the initial one. Kathleen McGowan put in two, along with Joanne Thomas, Heidi McCarthy, and Jennifer Dippery. Jill Schadler scored one to bring the Tribe's total to nine. Chatham found the cage only once the entire game.

Coach Quinn used her bench well, and everyone played. The Tribe will look for another victory against Dickinson October 8.

Be A Friend For Life

When a friend talks of suicide...

Listen
Let your friend tell you of his situation and his feelings. Don't give advice or feel obliged to find simple solutions. LISTEN and try to imagine how you would feel in his place.

Policy

on his way home. The court ruled in favor of Congini.

Because of this decision, Juniata changed its alcohol policy. Clubs were no longer allowed to provide alcohol because the college could be considered a social host through its association with the clubs. However, the new policy did not restrict individuals from bringing their own beverages to lounge parties. In this way, no member of a club was furnishing alcohol, and the college could not be held liable.

In 1985, the Fasset case broadened the definition of a social host, consequently extending social host liability. Ms. Fasset became a quadriplegic as the result of an off-campus accident what a minor who had been served alcohol at an off-campus Villanova frat party. In this case, the court ruled that the organizers of a party or anyone who aids or intends to aid in furnishing alcohol to minors is a social host and is liable. This decision rendered Juniata's current policy risky as far as liability is concerned. However, the administration resisted change because the policy is realistic in terms of student responsibility and safe consumption.

Whether or not Juniata changes its policy again depends on the outcome of the Farrell case, currently under appeal in district court. In a letter sent to student leaders over the summer, Dr. Tilden outlined the facts of the case: Kevin Macleary was injured when a car driven by 17-year-old Dennis Hines struck a tree after leaving a party at the home of 19-year-old Barbara Farrell. Barbara's parents were away, and she and some friends had purchased a keg of beer. Neither Kevin nor Dennis were specifically invited to the party, and they twice brought six packs from a local bar. Macleary sued Barbara Farrell, her parents, the bar selling the six packs, and the owners of the apartment in which the Farrells lived. The district court ruled in favor of the Farrells.

However, the Court of Appeals later ruled that the district court had been too restrictive in its interpretation of social host liability. It said, "A social host may be liable for knowingly and intentionally making available premises under the host's control with the knowledge and intention that the premises will be used by minors for the purpose of consuming alcohol. It is immaterial that the alcohol is otherwise available to the minor if the jury finds the host's deliberate creation of a hospitable enviornment to be a substantial factor in the minor's consumption of alcohol."

This ruling has direct implications for Juniata College. If the ruling is not overturned, it is highly conceivable that by allowing parties in lounges and dorm rooms, the college could be considered a social host and, therefore, liable.

Dr. Tilden stated in the letter that no immediate changes are planned because the current policy is "effective and reasonable", and because prohibiting lounge parties would only make students go elsewhere to drink. But, if the ruling is upheld, Juniata may be forced to change its policy, in which case the administration will work through the Student Affairs Council to explore every alternative.

It should be noted that court decisions have centered on people under 21 years of age. However, in neighboring states, courts have also been dealing with cases where people are over 21 and of legal drinking age. Should Pennsylvania's courts follow this trend, even more problems could result when trying to develop a workable alcohol policy.

Dr. Tilden would like students to continue cooperating with the current policy, especially in making sure that those who attend parties are of college age. The rule's primary aim is to prevent local high school students and residents from attending the party and then driving home in an intoxicated condition. It is, therefore, very important that the organizers of a party check ID's and closely monitor the guest list.

Students can also become more politically active, working to bring drinking laws into sync with actual practice. The current definition of a social host exists only in case law; there is no statutory law defining social host or social host liability.

Indians Lose To Widener; Moravion Will Test Character

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata football team will have a test of character this weekend when it faces one of the hardest hitting teams in the league, the Moravian Greyhounds. After dropping a 27-16 decision to Widener last Saturday, the Indians find themselves in a three way tie for second place in the MAC race. Susquehanna (3-0) is in first, along with Lycoming (2-0-1) followed by the Indians (2-1), Widener (2-1) and Wilkes (2-1).

Last year Moravian came to College Hill and almost pulled out a victory. Trailing 13-6 late in the fourth quarter, Cubby Davis came off the bench to lead the Indians to victory. Moravian has already beaten Widener 24-19 but has lost to Susquehanna and Wilkes 21-0 and 7-0 respectively. Neither team can afford a loss if they want to stay within striking range of the conference title. It should be a hard hitting, hard fought football game.

The Indians jumped to the early lead against Widener when Davis connected with Mike Cottle in the left corner of the endzone to cap off a seven play drive. Dave Ritter set up the drive when he recovered a Pioneer fumble by quarterback Joe Bakey. Keith Watson's extra point conversion was successful and the Indians led 7-0 with 8:46 left in the first quarter.

Ritter, once again, set up the next score by recovering another Bakey fumble on the Widener 12 yard line. Three plays later the Indians kicked a field goal to take the lead 10-0 with 13:41 left to play in the half. The next three Pioneer possessions resulted in touchdowns.

On the ensuing drive, Widener used five plays to get in the endzone with fullback Mike Gatto going in from one yard out for the TD. The pat failed, and JC held a 10-6 lead with 11:25 left to play in the half.

Only one minute and nine seconds later, a Widener 28 yard touchdown pass from Dan Stroffere to tight end Ivan Vassall put the Pioneers ahead 13-10 with 10:16 left in the half. The next Widener score was set up by Albert Azzari's interception of a Davis pass. Eight plays later Stroffere ran from two yards out to give a Widener a 20-10 lead with 5:41 left in the half.

The start of the second half did not change the Indians fortunes. After a John Sparh punt, Widener took over at their own 14 yardline. On their first play from scrimmage the Pioneers scored on a 86 yard Mike Gatto run. After adding the pat Widener led 27-10 with 12:51 left in the third quarter.

Coming from behind was nearly impossible for the Indians due to terrible weather conditions. At one point the players were sent off the field because of a lightening storm. However, the Indians managed an early fourth quarter touchdown when Dennis Derenzo scored from one yard out. JC tried for two, but Don Betar was stopped short of the goal line. Widener led 27-16 with a whole quarter left to play.

JC never had descent field position in the rain and could not muster a drive without having to punt or losing the ball on a fumble or interception. The game ended with Widener ahead 27-16.

Nuch's Notes: Junita suffered its worst offensive showing of the season only compiling 210 yards of total offense for a 2.6 yards per play average. Juniata fumbled four times and lost three of them, but they evened that statistic out by recovering three Widener fumbles.

Widener only had 49 offensive plays to Juniata's 81. The Pioneers had 276 total yards on offense for a 5.6 yards per play average. JC was only 6 for 20 on third down conversions. Cubby Davis was 13 for 34 for 103 yards, two interceptions, and one touchdown. On the year Davis is 70 for 136 with 7 interceptions, 8 touchdowns and 720 yards.

Don Betar grabbed five passes for 49 yards, Mike Cottle had five catches for 37 yards, and Jim Metz had one reception for 10 yards. On the year Cottle has 14 receptions for 146 yards and a long of 33. Betar has 17 aereal snags for 176 yards with a long of 17 yards, while Metz hauled in 12 from his tightend spot for 183 yards with a long of 27.

Pat Danneker was the leading Indian rusher gaining 70 yards on 20 carries. Dan Crossey carried 12 times for 26 yards. Crossey has carried the ball for 72 times for 385 yards for a 5.3 yards per carry average. Danneker has 242 yards on 51 rushes for a 4.7 yards per carry average.

Chuck Rihn had an outstanding defensive game recording 14 tackles four for losses. Ray Witmer was just as equal gaining credit for 13 stops. Frank Gay had eight tackles and a fumble recovery, and Greg St. Clair had seven. Dave Ritter had two fumble recoveries.

Senior safety Mark Dorner feels the Moravian game will be a war. "They are the toughest, hardest hitting team we play," said Dorner. Bruer also noted that this is a must win for Juniata if they are to reach the goals they set in the beginning of the season. "This would make Moravian's season if they beat us," stated Dorner, "they want to knock us out of the championship race." Game time is 1:30.

JC Finishes 3rd in Classic; Slippery Rock Tourney Next

By Mike Antenucci

The "Juniata Shootout" was the Indians home tournament--they won the shootout. The Coca-Cola Classic, once again, belonged to Illinois Benedictine College. After fighting their way into the semi's JC was turned down by IBC, and had to settle for a third place finish.

In Fridays Pool Play, the Indians took on Muskingum College and Western Maryland. The Indians easily handled Muskingum 15-6, 15-2. Cathy Miller had seven kills and four service aces while teammate Jackie Rebert added nine kills, with Rhonda Bygall making two solo blocks.

Against Western Maryland Rebert led the way with seven spikes, giving the Indians a 15-0, 15-12 victory. Once again Cathy Miller had four service aces (five kills), with teammates Rhonda Bygall and Amy Allshouse adding six and four kills respectively. After Friday nights action the Indians were ranked first as the teams were reported for second round action.

Eastern Mennonite was the first team to win a game off of Juniata, but couldn't manage to win the match as the Indians held on 15-11, 15-17, 15-6. Superb play came from Rebert (11 kills and three solo blocks) and Miller (14 kills and two solo blocks). Bygall added six solo blocks, while teammate Laurie Snow managed eight kills.

JC continued to roll, winning their fourth match of the tournament rather easily (15-5, 15-1) against University of North Carolina. Rebert and Miller dominated again, combing for 17 kills and eight aces, while Bygall and Snow contributed equally as well. Pool play ended with the Indians ranked second behind Ithaca College, and IBC ranked third.

In the quarter-finals Juniata handled Muskingum just as easily the second time around, winning 15-4, 15-5. Rebert led the way with nine kills, with Miller (six kills), Snow (five kills) Tonya McClucas (five kills) and Rhonda Bygall (six solo blocks) also helping the JC cause.

The Indians then met their fate in the semis, losing to IBC (12-15, 15-9, 14-16) in a three game match. Game three went down to the wire with IBC winning in extra points. Cathy Miller was amazing (15 kills, three aces, three solo blocks) while Rebert played equally as well (19 kills, four solo blocks). Rhonda Bygall had seven kills and ten solo blocks, while McClucas and all-everything setter, Beth Hoppel had six kills each.

IBC went on to beat Ithaca in the finals 2-0, and win the Coca-Cola Classic. Assistant coach Sue Benusa said, "Everyone played great, especially defensively, throughout the entire tournament. Jackie Rebert, Kris Witchey, Dana Worthington and Michelle Wissinger led the way on defense".

The Indians are getting ready to travel to Slippery Rock this weekend for the Slippery Rock Tournament. They are away against Messiah on Tuesday, October 13 and their next home match is against Susquehanna on Thursday, October 15 at 7:00.

Strikers Tie and Lose

By Jen Wade

JUniata's soccer team finally managed to generate some offense this past week. They scored three goals, two during a tie with Dickinson on Wednesday and one during a 2-1 loss to Kings on Friday.

Wednesday, all four goals came in the second half, as defense dominated the first. Matt Reber and Steve Grater generated the offense for the Indians. Grater scored from a tough angle with only 16 seconds left in regulation play.

The Indians expected a physical game from Dickinson, and both sides were evenly matched offensively and defensively. The Indian defense came up with another good effort, and keeper Tim Phelps made some excellent saves to keep JC in the game.

Friday, the Indians travelled to Kings College to play another physical team. They came away with a 2-1 loss in a game marred by chippy play and taunts from the fans.

JC scored first, as Steve Grater tallied early in the first half. Kings rebounded in the second half, however, putting two balls past Tim Phelps. With the exception of the final 10 minutes of the game, the defense played well. Bruce Nardy made a valiant attempt to save the second goal from going in.

The Indians' record now stands at 1-6-2 with seven games remaining. The offense is showing signs of coming together, while the defense continues to play well. Hopefully, the trend will continue through the remainder of the season.

This Wednesday, the team travelled to Wilkes to face the Colonels. They return home on Saturday against St. Francis. The two teams are evenly matched, and the game should be an entertaining part of the Parent's Weekend festivities.

Sunny Parents' Weekend Comes to an End

By Suzanne Lydic

That fun-filled glorified open house of a weekend is over; Parents' Weekend '87 is npw just a memory. For many parents the time was quite an unforgettable experience.

Monica Rastu's parents commented between loft-raising sessions that they enjoyed just seeing their daughter and getting to know the Juniata campus.

Peter and Grace Reno of High Bridge, N.J., affirmed, "The dance was nice, since we got to meet a lot of other freshman parents. Being with our son (Michael) was special."

The splendor and beauty of the trees in a magnificent area is always a welcome pleasure. Beth Ann Neibert's father continued, "The college students add to the pleasure by being friendly and polite."

Carolyn Snow who was up to visit Laurie and Kathie Snow enjoyed being with her daughters at the athletic events and the all-campus worship service. Mr. and Mrs. Bremer of Penn Hills, PA, thought the Coffeehouse and football game were quite exciting. They also mentioned that the Football Parent's Dinner was special with R. Mark.

Kathy Lydic, an alumna to JC, relished, "the memories from the days when I was a student here." Mrs. Lydic asserted that she will also have memories of 1987 to recall. Her most memorable event this time was, "the grapes rolling down the aisles during the agape the meal in the Sunday morning service."

Many parents just enjoyed the social atmosphere of meeting new people. Merle Forney of Silver Spring, MD, summed up the weekend with his most meaningful event, "Learning to know Chris' friends and their family backgrounds (was special). The activities for the weekend were well-planned and carried through. It made for a memorable weekend!"

As the weekend came to an end, Liz Snavely, Parents' Weekend Coordinator, found that the event was successful. Those who came found an exciting time for a promising future with the Juniata Family.

New Members Selected For Board of Trustees

Continuing a tradition that has brought strong and dedicated leadership to Juniata since the days of its inception as an institution of higher education, Juniata College has selected four new members to serve as members of its Board of Trustees.

The four, who began terms of service in September are: Anne C. Baker; F. Samuel Brumbaugh; Ronald W. Wertz; and Barry J. Halbritter.

Ms. Baker, an attorney who resides in New York City, is the daughter of John C. and Elizabeth Baker, names nearly synonomous with Juniata College. Ms. Baker earned her Bachelor of Arts degree in English Literature from Oberlin College, a Bachelor of Music in Violin Performance from Tulane University, and her Juris Doctor degree from Loyola University.

She has played in the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra and the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra as violinist, and has had extensive experience as a performing artist and teacher, including four years as a Violin Instructor at Tulane University.

She began her practice of law in 1983 and is presently on staff with the firm of Douglas L. Breitbart and Associates. Miss Baker's father, Dr. John C. Baker, served Juniata College as a member of the Board of Trustees for over 50 years. Following his recent retirement from the Board he was singularly honored by being named Chairman Emeritus in recognition of the more than 10 years he served the Board as Chairman. Dr. Baker is the only past-chairman to have such a distinction in the history of the College.

F. Samuel Brumbaugh, a 1954 graduate of Juniata College with a degree in Pre-medicine, is the President of Bangor Cork Company in Pen Argyl, Pennsylvania. He has distinguished himself in his business career and has played an active role in his community and in civic organizations. He will represent alumni constituency matters on the Board.

Mr. Brumbaugh is past-president of the Pen Argyl Exchange Club, served as President of the Pen Argyl Area School Board for 12 years, is part-chairman of the Area Republican Committee on Finance, served Pen Argyl as Mayor for four years, and is a director of Northeastern Bank.

Ronald Wertz graduated from Juniata in 1959 with a Bachelor of Science Degree in Business Administration. He is married to Ann Larkin Wertz, also a 1959 Juniata graduate, and they make their home in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Wertz began his working career as Assistant Director of Admissions for Juniata, and for three additional years served as Director of Admissions. His career then took him to Franklin and Marshall College where he served first as Director of Student Aid and Placement and ultimately as Director of Development.

Mr. Wertz is currently Executive Director and Secretary of The Hillman Foundation and serving as advisor and consultant to The Hillman Company and other associated interests. In addition to his responsibilities with those organizations, he is also Executive Director of The Polk Foundation, Inc.

Active in his community, Mr. Wertz is a member of the Board of Directors of the Western Pennsylvania Conservancy, the St. Clair Hospital Foundation, the Pittsburgh Children's Museum and the Edgewater Charitable Development Council.

Barry Halbritter of Duncansville, Pennsylvania, is owner and President of Midstate Tool and Supply, Inc., and Fender Mender Sales, Inc. A 1965 graduate of Juniata, he is married to Marlene Robinette Halbritter, a member of the Class of 1962 at Juniata.

Mr. Halbritter has been active in community, civic and church organizations, and will serve the Board of Trustees as the representative of the Middle District of the Church of the Brethren. He has been recognized for his leadership abilities by being named Lt. Governor of Pennsylvania Kiwanis, and served actively in his local Chamber of Commerce. He has been active in his church as Superintendent of Church School, and has served as Chair of the Morrison Cove Home for the Aged. He has also been a member of the Allegheny Township Authority Department.

With the ever-present ominous threat of the installation of a more restrictive alcohol policy, we, as students, should be more aware of the dangers of alcohol. It seems as if the majority of JC students feel as if such a change would be a punishment, and that the college is not considering our social lives.

In my opinion, especially after the page one article by Jennifer Wade, Juniata College is placing a considerable amount of confidence in JC students. The administration must be aware of the use of alcohol on this campus and have given us the opportunity to respect this "privilege". The committee on Alcohol Study and Education (CASE) is a campus organization that definitely complements this idea, not in a tea-totaling campaign, but rather in the belief that if choosing to drink,drink responsibly. Half the battle is won when this is understood and through the acquisition of knowledge pertaining to the use of alcohol, the possibility of avoiding alcohol-related tragedies increases. With such a concern in mind, and in recognition of National Alcohol Awareness Week, I would like to stress the importance of the Juniata participation in this nation-wide program and further stress the benefit of attendance to these events.

"The Dangers of Driving Drunk"

Chief Dan Varner of the Huntingdon Police Department will address the legal issues of driving under the influence, and the effects of a small amount of alcohol in the bloodstream. It will be held in Sherwood's Carpeted Lounge on Oct. 21 at 7 pm.

"Drugs, Alcohol and Crime, How Do They Relate?"

Mike Knott, Corrections and Associate Addictions Counselor at the Huntingdon Correctional Institution, will share his experience in rehabilitation efforts and the impact which drugs and alcohol have on the crime rate. It will be held in Tussey/Terrace on Oct. 21 at 7:30 pm.

"Partying"

Chris Noyes, Assistant Campus Minister, will lead an informative and informal discussion on the role of alcohol on college campuses with questions to help discover where you stand on the alcohol issue. It will be held in South on Oct. 21 at 7:30 pm.

"Why Me? Why Not?"

John O"Connell is a successful State College Entrepreneur. Among his many ventures he has owned the "Rathskellar," the most popular college hangout at Penn State. John is also a recovering alcoholic, now studying rehabilitation counseling and willing to share the spellbinding story of his fight with alcohol. It will be held in Cloister Lounge on Oct. 21 at 9 pm.

"Drugs, Alcohol and Society"

William Clark, Director of the Tally Rand Retreat, and Instructor for the Chemical Dependency Counseling Certification Program at Penn State, will enlighten the audience to the long and short term effects of continued alcohol abuse on the members of our society. It will be held in the faculty lounge on Oct. 22 at 6:30 pm.

"Social Host Liability"

Dr. Arnold Tilden, Jr., Vice President for Educational Planning and Student Services, will address the liabilities faced by Social Hosts based on Case Law. It will take place in North Lounge on Oct. 22 at 9 pm.

"Campus Happy Hour"

All are welcome to share in the fun as many unwind over some fun and fruity non-alcoholic drinks (mixed or straight-up!) and to the beat of live entertainment. It will take place at Totem Inn on October 23 between 4:30-6:00 pm.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

V103, soon to be Power 92, has a format. At a recent meeting, the management staff decided that the station's format was to be AOR/Progressive. AOR(Album-Oriented Rock) includes artists like Pink Floyd, Bryan Adams, the Doors, and anything heavy metal. The progressive catagory includes music from the Cure, Spear of Destiny, and anything else which is generally a little off the wall.

The Music Director has total control over what goes out on the shelves. The new and recurrent sections will consist of the top 40 AOR albums listed in R&R magazine and the top 15 Progressive albums from the College Music Journal. As far as format goes, you'll be listening to the same music you've been listening to since the beginning of the year, only now you'll be able to call it something other than "a little bit of this and a little bit of that."

As a senior who has been involved with the station almost since Day One of my freshman year, I find this decision a little confusing. Why? Not because I have anything against AOR or Progressive music, but because hardly anyone on this campus listens to V103 anymore, and I don't see this "new" format as something that will dramatically increase listenership. The reason people don't listen to V103 is not because it doesn't broadcast in stereo; they don't listen because they don't like the music.

Around the fall of 1984, survey results indicated that V103 attracted approximately 80% of campus listenership. At that time, it was "legal" for DJ's to play Prince, Madonna, the Time, etc. on shows other than the Saturday Night Power Party (which at that time did not exist). WRLR's share of the campus audience was approximately 12%

In 1985, the newly elected management decided to return to a strict AOR format. Anything remotely resembling Top 40 dance music was (and still is) locked up in the Music Director's office and brought out only on the weekends. I don't know why this decision was made, but listenership has dropped steadily ever since.

According to a survey of the students and V103 staff taken in the spring of 1987, only 27.4% of the student body regularly listens to V103, while 56.5% tune in to WRLR. The percentage is higher among V103 staffers, but still only 61%. Friends who used to listen don't anymore, some DJ's don't listen, and I admit to waking up with WRLR, and listening to Q-94 quite often during my sophomore year. The only reason I don't do it now is because of poor reception.

Other than introducing students to the wonderful world of radio, the purpose of a college radio station is to cater to the listening needs of the entire campus. The survey indicates that popular rock music is the preference of most listeners, followed by Top 40/Dance music (23%), Hard Rock (18%), and Progressive (15%). The staff also chooses popular rock first, followed by Progressive (26%), Top 40/Dance (17%), and Hard Rock (14%). At the moment, there seems to be a large discrepancy between what the students want and what they're getting.

Survey results indicate a change, but other than a few specialty shows with cater to specific audiences, no serious attempts are being made to improve the situation. If the management is serious about increasing overall listenership, at least some Top 40 music must be integrated into the regular rotation. The "new" format still remains about 75-80% AOR and O% Top 40. It was obvious that students didn't want a 100% AOR format, and reducing it to one with an 80% mix isn't going to help.

Sincerely,
Jennifer Wade

Letter to the Editor

It was a great pleasure to hear Bob Reilly's lecture, "Waking Up To Poverty in America." It was highly informative and presented a dynamic way of confronting the problem of poverty in the United States.

When looking at poverty, many of us have a tendency to "blame the victim"-that is, we blame the poor for being poor. We see the differences between "us" and "them" as the cause of the problem, If we make "them" more like "us," the problem will begin to disappear.

By focusing most of our energies on changing people, we are missing something crucial-there are structures that are keeping the poor in poverty that must be changed. Assistance programs that don't give the poor enough money to even meet the poverty line are examples of this.

So often we are tempted to stick our heads in the sand and hope that poverty will just go away. It won't. We must, to use the words of Robert Kennedy, "blend vision, reason and courage in a personal commitment" to the poor. If we don't, things will only get worse for those of our brethren who are shackled by the chains of poverty.

John E. Deppen

Dear Editor,

I, too, am troubled by Juniata's inadequate facilities for the handicapped. In fact, I don't know if there is even enough here to be judged inadequate. It seems to me that the few conveniences we do provide were thrown in perhaps, just to satisfy a certain law that was passed prior to the construction or renovation of some of our newer buildings.

Every time I go into a restroom in Ellis Hall I have to laugh to myself. If a person who is confined to a wheelchair should suddenly find himself in Ellis and in need of a bathroom, he would have no trouble at all. The bathrooms of Ellis Hall are conveniently equipped with the proper aparati to facilitate such a visit. His problem therefore, is merely trying to figure out a way to get into the building without breaking his neck. There is already an elevator in the building and there seems to be plenty of room in the front to work with. Why couldn't we build a ramp? This is only one of the problems that needs to be considered.

Where would a handicapped student live on campus? Perhaps we could rent him/her a room in the Admissions Building. Where would he/she eat? How about classes in Good Hall? I know that an elevator in Good Hall does not seem feasible. However, specially arranged classes on the main floor are surely better than none at all.

Granted things can't be done overwhelming, but maybe it's time we started making some plans.

Engineering Department

By Ken Bear

The engineering department of V103 has been put to the test this year because we not only must continue our commitment to fine quality, but we have also been faced with the challenge of changing frequencies.

As many of you know, V-103 will soon be Power 92, and that, of course, means major engineering changes. Most important, and involving the most work for the engineers, is the changing of the antenna that can be seen on the roof of Ellis. The engineering department has called upon the services of Bill Blazina, the college Instrument Technician, to be the major contributor to the work that needs to be done on the antenna. Bill, also advisor for the Amateur Radio Society, has a great deal of experience with the type of work that must be done. Without his help, we would have to call upon outside engineering consultants which would add to the expenses of the station.

Also a financial relief is the fact that we were at one time at 92 on the FM dial. Because of this, we will be able to utilize the equipment once used. This makes the change from 103.5 to 91.9 much easier.

If all of this sounds interesting, and you would like to learn about what makes a radio station tick join us in the engineering department. We can always use an extra pair of hands. The only requirements are some free time and a willingness to learn. Just get in touch with me or one of my assistants or drop me a note at P.O. Box 1005. See you at 92.

Broadcasting Hours

By Al Schroff

Once again WKVR will become the first radio station in Huntingdon to bring you the best rock in a new and exciting manner. Last year we brought you the crystal clear sound of compact disc, and now we will be bringing you extended music broadcast. With the installation of newly purchased timers, WKVR now has the capability of broadcasting from the production room reel to reel tape machine. This will allow us to extend our broadcast time about three hours (two hours at night and one hour in the morning). A library of tapes are currently being recorded and will continue to be recorded in order to provide you with the biggest variety of music available.

Production Department

By Kelly Koup

The production room is the "playground" of the radio station. If you are interested in how promotional tapes (called carts) are made, how a basic recording room is set up, or how to record cassette tapes for your own personal use, please sign up to be trained!

Any person interested in the radio station may be trained to meet all the requirements of being a certified air personality. Several reasons for this are that it helps the new dj-get interested in other departments in the station, it increases their knowledge of what goes on at the station and how it gets done, and gives a basic grounding in techniques to help make better recordings.

The training session will run through the basic layout of the recording room and show you the proper techniques for operating the equipment. Equipment, which is available to everyone, includes models from such well-known manufacturers as: Technics, Teac, Pioneer, NAD and Yamaha. Most of the equipment is brand new, and all of it is maintained regularly.

Training sessions occur in late afternoons during the week and last anywhere from sixty to ninety minutes depending upon the size and knowledge of the group. The sign-up sheet is posted on the bulletin board in the lobby of the station and lists the dates and times of available sessions. We would like to encourage ANYONE who has the SLIGHTEST interest to please sign up !! We look forward to meeting you and answering your questions.

"The Tempest" a success on Parents' weekend

By Jen Wade

Last Saturday night the National Shakespeare Company performed The Tempest before a full house of students, parents and faculty in Oller Hall. The plot revolved around Prospero, displaced Duke of Milan, who uses his Art to bring the usurpers to his island. He then renews and reforms them before returning to claim his rightful place in society.

One of Shakespeare's last plays, The Tempest serves as the dramatist's final comment on the true nature of humanity. Through characters like Caliban, Antonio and Miranda he explores the "Nature vs. Nurture," or "Nature vs. Art" debate. Ultimately, both nature and society by themselves can become corrupted and evil; it is necessary to find the proper mix. Humanity cannot succumb to its natural desires, but neither can it totally forsake its animal passions in the name of civilized society.

This production, supervised by Artistic Director Elaine Sulka and directed by June Pyskacek, developed this theme through an extensive use of music. In one sense music is a product of society. It represents the harmony of individuals, as when Ceres, Juno and Iris sing to celebrate the love between Ferdinand and Miranda.

Yet, music is also inherent in nature. The opening storm was illustrated through music. Caliban, representing "Natural Man," hears the music of the island and sings. His lines are some of the most musical and poetic in the play. The music tames and soothes him, much like Prospero's Art keeps him under control.

In this production music and Art in general free people from their animal nature or from their corrupted socialization,and elevate them to a new level of humanity. But, Art cannot be carried to extremes. Before Prospero can return to Milan and society, he must discard his cloak, staff and book.

Robert G. Johnson gave an excellent performance as Prospero. He drew parallels with Moses, especially when carrying his staff. The analogy is quite appropriate. Jacki Goldhammer and Dan Snow, Ariel and Caliban respectively, also gave energetic and entertaining portrayals.

The Tempest was the first performance in this year's Juniata College Artist Series. The next event takes place on November 24, when the Barksdale Theatre Company presents "A Child's Christmas in Wales."

Traditional Mt. Day Wrap-Up

By Deb Dougherty

The suspense finally ended on Monday, October 5. All classes were cancelled, and the whole campus was transported to Trough Creek. Mountain Day was upon Juniata College.

The day was perfect for this outdoor event. The temperature was warm, and the sun shined all day. The events of the day were kicked off at 10:00 with the traditional Sherwood vs. Cloister football game. The game was a tough one, but Cloister pulled it out and came out victorious.

In the other football events of the day, South, East, TNT and North collided for some great football. The rough "Powder Puff" game between South and Lesher was won by South. The girls of TNT beat the girls of East. The Senior vs. Faculty game was a good game to watch. The Seniors beat the Faculty ending the Faculty's winning streak.

The traditional tug-o-war matches began around 12:30. A few of the results were the sophomores beating the freshman, the senior guys defeating the junior guys, and the juniors beating the sophomores.

The guys' pie eating contest was won by Lee Abromovitz. In the girls' contest a winner was not declared because it ended in a throwing contest.

Volleyball, soccer, horseshoes, and frisbee were offered throughout the day. Vans were available to transport people to hiking trails around Raystown Lake.

For the freshman Mountain Day was a new experience.

Indians Lose To Greyhounds 27-14; Lycoming Is Next On Schedule

By Mike Antenucci

This past weekend on College Hill the Juniata football team may have been taken out of the position they wanted to be in for a run at the MAC title. The Indians suffered their second defeat in two weeks, and things don't get any easier. After the 27-14 loss to Moravian, JC will need help from other teams, as well as an undefeated record from now until the end of the season, if a MAC title is to be obtained.

Moravian jumped out to an early 7-0 lead after Juniata fumbled on their first possession of the game. A 40 yard, seven play drive was capped off when sophomore quarterback Bob Light connected with Bob Howey from 12 yards out. After the Pat, the Greyhounds were out in front by a touchdown with 10:41 left to play in the first quarter.

After several punts and turnovers by both squads, the Greyhounds had a first and ten on their own 20 yard-line. Two plays later Dave Owens broke loose for a 68 yard scamper, giving Moravian a 14-0 lead with 12:41 left to play in the half.

The Indian offense stalled again when a Cubby Davis bomb was intercepted by Moravian's Ray Reimer on the Greyhound 35 yard line. Eleven plays later John Ebling took a pitch around the end on fourth and one and went 16 yards for the score. With the extra point, Moravian led 21-0. There was no further scoring, and the half ended with the score the same.

Juniata started the second half in great comeback fashion. With great field position, Juniata scored on three plays from 30 yards out. Davis hit Mike Cottle on a 16 yard reception for the Indian score. With 12:11 remaining in the third quarter, JC pulled within 14 with the score 21-7.

After the Indian defense stopped Moravian again, Don Betar set up the next JC scoring opportunity returning a Greyhound punt to the Moravian 23 yard line. However, a 35 yard field goal by Keith Watson was no good and Moravian took over possession.

Once again the "D" did the job, causing a fumble on the Moravian 20 yard line. Seven plays later, on fourth down and goal from the sixth yard line, Davis found Cottle open in the endzone after getting flushed out of the pocket. The Pat failed, and JC trailed 21-13 with 6:21 left to play in the third quarter.

Steve Campbell intercepted a Bob Light pass three plays later, and the Indians were totally dominating the game. The comeback seemed almost unbelievable, especially after the way the Indians were being controlled in the first half. Ready to start another scoring drive from the Moravian 36 yard line, the Indians were stopped and were forced to try a 33 yard field goal. Watson's attempt went wide right with 3:27 left to play in the third quarter.

After an exchange of punts, Moravian started the fourth quarter on their own 20 yard line. On 19 plays, an 80 yard drive which included five first downs, consumed nine minutes and 36 seconds and was capped off by an Owens one yard plunge. The pat failed, and Moravian led 27-13 with six minutes to play.

The Moravian defense held, and the Greyhounds managed to run out the clock handing the Indians their second loss of the season.

Nuch's Notes: JC only had 10 first downs compared to Moravian's 19...JC only rushed for 31 yards and managed a total of 212 yards of total offense on 59 plays for a 3.78 average...Moravian averaged 4.14 yards per play with 323 yards total offense.

The Indians fumbled four times, lost two of them and were intercepted once. The Greyhounds fumbled once and were also intercepted once...JC was 3 of 13 on third down conversions, Moravian 6 0f 18 and 2 for 2 on fourth down tries...The Greyhounds controlled the ball for 38:07 to JC's 21:53.

Dan Crossey rushed 11 times for 22 yards, Pat Danneker carried eight times for 25 yards. Cubby Davis was 15 for 30 for 181 yards two touchdowns and was sacked twice. His favorite receiver was Mike Cottle, who hauled in eight passes for 126 yards with a long of 43 yards. Cottle caught both touchdowns.

Lady Spikers Victorious; Win Slippery Rock Tourney

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata womens volleyball team captured their second tournament of the year, bringing home the trophy from the Slippery Rock Invitational. Of the eight team tournament the Indians were the only Division III squad, with their representing Division I, Division II and NAIA conferences.

On Friday JC easily defeated Indiana University of Pennsylvania 2-0. The University of Waterloo was just as unsuccessful as IUP. The team representing Canada went down easily two games to none.

The Indians first contest on Saturday was against NAIA Carlow College. Juniata cruised again in two games (15-10, 15-5) and gained a spot in the semi-finals with the victory. the semis represented Juniata's only three game match, with the Indians prevailing over Division I University of Buffalo 15-12, 13-15, 15-8.

In the finals JC faced Division II Gannon University. The Indians won a tough first game 16-14 and easily won game two and the championship, 15-5. In the semi-finals and finals combined, Kathy Miller had 23 kills while teammate Rhonda Bygall added 15.

The Indians played Messiah yesterday (with results not in by printing) and will host Susquehanna tonight at 7:00 in the gym. Over Fall Break the Ladies will travel to Bucknell and then to Elizabethtown for a tri-match featuring Juniata, E-town, and Johns Hopkins University. At the tournament's end the Indians' overall record stood at 27-3.

Soccer Ties St. Francis

By Jen Wade

Juniata's soccer team continued to generate offense last week, but the Indians still came up winless. They scored four times during the week, twice in a 3-2 loss to Wilkes and twice during a 2-2 tie with St. Francis.

On Wednesday JC travelled to meet the Colonels, a team with a similar skill level. Steve Grater gave the Indians an early lead in the first half, but a tough Wilkes team soon tied the game. The Colonels then jumped out to a 3-1 lead in the second half. Grater's second goal, an unassisted effort, came with five minutes remaining, but it wasn't enough to give JC at least a tie.

Due in part to poor field conditions, the game was defensively oriented on both sides. Indian keepers John Bobko and Walt Cupit played well, with Cupit making some key saves late in the game to keep the score close. Bob Kelly, usually an offensive performer, played well from the right fullback position.

JC returned home on Saturday to face an inferior St. Francis team. The Indians dominated both offensively and defensively, forcing St. Francis to base their game on counter-attack. Officiating was poor throughout the game and had direct bearing to one of St. Francis' goals. Despite the fact that the game ended in a 2-2 tie, St. Francis really scored no goals.

Scoring opened in the first half. St. Francis was credited with a goal when the referee ruled that Indian keeper Tim Phelps did not keep the ball from going over the goal line. Their second tally broke a 1-1 tie in the second half. On a usually routine play, Paul Granger accidentally put the ball past keeper John Bobko, giving St. Francis another unearned goal.

Steve Grater, the Indians' main scoring threat of late, accounted for both JC goals in the second half. Dan Lazowick played well offensively for the Indians. Drew Spector had numerous scoring opportunities as well but couldn't convert.

Lady Hackers Defeated; Face Susquehanna Next

By Deb Dougherty

The hockey team was defeated by Dickinson College October 8. The squad was a little slow getting into the game and allowed the first goal to go in with about five minutes on the clock.

After the initial goal by Dickinson, the Tribe put up a tough fight. For the remainder of the first half, most of the play was between the halves. Neither team found the goal and went into halftime with Dickinson on top 1-0.

The Indians came out fired up for the second half. The defensive end offensive efforts finally prevailed when Kathleen McGowan put in a penalty corner shot taken by Joann Thomas. Dickinson answered with their own well-executed corner about ten minutes later.

With only five minutes left in the game, the Indians dominated the ball and put several shots toward the goal. None of the balls penetrated the posts, though, and the game ended 2-1.

The Tribe was hungry for a victory when they travelled to Wilkes the following Saturday. It was a perfect day to play hockey, which is what the team did.

The offense was having a good day passing and cutting. Several good plays were made, but none resulted in a score.

The defense worked well together and supported each other. Wilkes made many attempts to score, but all were shifted by the Indian defenders.

No score was made in regulation play, so the game went into overtime. The play was mostly in Wilkes' territory, but the Lady Hackers could not find the goal. Overtime ended, and a second was played. Once again both teams were scoreless. The well fought game ended in a 0-0 tie.

This week the Lady Indians try to even out their 2-5-3 record. Tuesday they play Susquehanna, Thursday they play Gettysburg away, and Saturday they will play St. Bonaventure at home. Come out and support the team in their last home game and the final game of the season.

Project Will Improve the Quality of Science Education

More than 50 secondary and middle school chemistry and physical science teachers from four central Pennsylvania counties gathered at Juniata College Friday, October 9, to hear plans for a project which will greatly enhance their teaching efforts.

Joining with the teachers were superintendents and administrators from the 16 school districts represented and members of the faculty and administration from Juniata. They heard Dr. Donald Mitchell, Professor of Chemistry at Juniata and Project Director, and several of the high school teachers involved, outline the "Central Pennsylvania Chemistry Teachers Science Education Improvement Project."

Funded by a major grant from the National Science Foundation which is expected to total over $500 thousand over a five year period, the goal of the project is to improve the quality of science education in the 16 school districts in Blair, Centre, Huntingdon, and Mifflin counties by upgrading the skills of and the resources available to science teachers from those districts.

The project call for research experience, summer seminars and workshops, and efforts to provide students and teachers with increased access to modern scientific instrumentation. The project will seek to provide training for at least 80 science teachers from those districts over the five year period, upgrading their knowledge of chemistry and the way it may be taught using modern instrumentation. Ancillary to that will be an effort to enhance the self-image of these chemists who have chosen to serve as teachers by involving them in on-going research projects at the college.

Other goals of the project will be sharing of resources in order to make modern science instrumentation assessible to students where school districts are too small to be able to afford fully equipped laboratories, and an effort to improve student performance in the classroom and initiate greater student interest in science careers.

According to the plan outlined by Dr. Mitchell, each year eight to twelve high school or middle school science teachers will be selected to spend eight weeks at Juniata College during the summer months as research associates in on-going research projects. During that time the teachers will receive instruction in analytic chemistry and training in the use of modern science instrumentation.

An additional twelve to fifteen teachers will be selected to participate in a two-week summer workshop at Juniata in the use of modern science instrumentation and science kits in teaching chemistry at the high school level.

A third component of the project strategy is to conduct short follow-up seminars at Juniata twice during the school year. In addition, the college and the Central Pennsylvania Chemistry Teachers Association are working to secure the resources needed to acquire and equip a specially outfitted van with sophisticated but portable laboratory instrumentation, and hire a science instructor who will bring the van to schools within the four-county area.

The final goal of the project will be to involve the science students from schools in the participating districts in special science projects, culminating with annual science fairs at Juniata.

During their visit to Juniata on Friday, the teachers heard words of welcome from Dr. Robert W. Neff, president of the college, listened to a description of the project by Dr. Mitchell, and then had the opportunity to discuss the project in more detail in workshop settings.

This is the second National Science Foundation grant awarded to Juniata College in the last year, the other being a grant to upgrade the college's computer science program.

Juniata College Receives CNG Foundation Award

Juniata College became a recipient of one of three prestigious Consolidated Natural Gas Company Foundation Awards of Excellence in Education Friday evening, recognized for its creative and innovative leadership in programs of higher education. Dr. Charles C. Ellis, Chairman of the Juniata College Board of Trustees, accepted the award presented by Mr. Lester D. Johnson, Senior Vice President and Chief Financial Officer for CNG.

The CNG Foundation announced the Award of Excellence in Education program in the fall of 1984. Established to recognize and encourage the creativity and innovation that is inherent in the private four-year colleges in the area served by CNG, the Award of Excellence acknowledges the vitality of those private colleges, and is dedicated to stimulating aggressive, innovative solutions to today's educational challenges.

Forty-two colleges were invited to compete for recognition through this awards program. These schools serve the same geographic region encompassed by the Consolidated Natural Gas Company through some of its subsidiaries--West Virginia, Western Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Since the awards are intended to recognize achievement, participating colleges were asked to submit only well-established, proven programs. After receipt of the nominations, nine finalists were selected for further review, including site visits and evaluations. From the nine, three programs were selected for the awards.

Juniata College was recognized for its innovative Co-Curricular Transcript (CCT) Program, which documents a student's involvement, achievement and growth in learning experiences outside the classroom. A Co-Curricular Transcript lists the student's activities, describes the leadership and learning opportunities involved, includes the student's account of

Chief Varner Discusses Whether to Fight or Flee

By Kelli Fahey

Safety awareness will be the topic of a presentation to be given tonight in South's carpeted lounge by Chief Varner of Huntingdon County.

Chief Varner will be instructing safety tips that involve more mental thinking than physical ability. He feels that in order to keep away from a problem situation a lot of "mental escape maneuvers" are vital in order to be safe especially for women since an attacker will usually be a lot stronger. The concept of whether to fight or flee ties in with Chief Varner's discussion also.

Juniata is fortunate to have Chief Varner come and share his insights involving safety awareness. Varner has been the Chief of Huntingdon County for nine years. He stated that he always enjoys talking to people about a specific topic because if just one person benfits he feel good about it.

Self protection and prevention from a problem situation is always beneficial to know. Not only female students but males as well should take advantage of this lecture and attend before it's too late.

Editorial

Over the past several years the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching and other similar organizations have published major reports on education in the United States. Recurring themes in those reports assessed what is wrong with higher education today: a loss of community, a lack of high quality instruction, a loss of interconnectedness with the larger world, an overemphasis on careerism, and a devaluation of general education.

One of the findings that should be encouraging to those associated with Juniata College is that Juniata is among a minority of colleges who continue to emphasize a community as a context of learning, an accent on quality teaching in the classroom, an understanding of the interrelatedness of academic and residential life, and an ecumenical context for religious understanding. Juniata College also believes that a close association among faculty, staff, administration, and students provides a healthy atmosphere for learning. This connectedness is vital to providing a superior quality educational experience.

As we seek to enhance this relative strength, we will be looking at new ways to encourage these connections through providing more informal space and time for students and faculty to meet; and by building the connections between the residence hall and the classroom so that we strengthen the total environment as a learning opportunity.

Critical to us at this time in history is the need to deepen the international dimension of our campus. There are many avenues for achieving this goal: The Exchange Program is one, outstanding lectureships is another, and the international aspect of our new curriculum is yet a third avenue. To perform well, students need to recognize that they are in fact global citizens.

I believe that one of the most important things a student who can begin--early in life--to see patterns and to think of things as connected has begun the life of learning. Connections through the use of symbols--language and the arts. Connections through history and social intentions. Connections through science and the historical world. Connections between the liberal and the historical world. Connections between what we learn and how we live. When Dr. Boyer was here, he alluded to Van Doren's words and said, "This is at the heart of collegiate education."

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

After reading Jennifer Wade's Letter to the Editor in the October 15, edition of the Juniatian, I feel that some additional comments on my part are need to rectify some of the false assertions that Ms. Wade has made.

First of all, I would like to clarify that I am not writing this letter to assure myself, or anyone else, that I am doing a good job as the Program Director of the radio station. I think I am. I am writing it to assure myself that the readers of her letter will know the truth and not believe the misperceptions of a misinformed staff member. If Ms. Wade would have attended an executive board meeting (open to all members of the Juniata community), I do not believe she would have written the article she did.

I would like to focus my rebuttal on the following statement made by Ms. Wade: "Survey results indicate a change, but other than a few specialty shows which cater to specific audiences, no serious attempts are being made to improve the situation."

Assuming that this statement was not made in jest, let me respond.

Ms. Wade, do you know what the definition of a specialty show is? Let me offer my definition since you seem to be confused. A specialty show is designed to cater to a specific audience. As a formatted radio station, it is our opportunity to provide the audience with music that is not heard during our regular programming hour, a luxury commercial radio stations cannot afford to offer their listeners. Part of my job as the Program Director is to create and maintain such shows. If you are accusing me of this, I plead guilty to your charge. It's my job. It's what I do.

Now, for the claim that I ignored the recommendations that were made for my department by a recent survey that was done. The survey made three recommendations concerning my department:

1. Implement a second "Weekend Warmup," referring to a popular dance music specialty show which used to be heard for three hours on Friday night. As a result of the survey, I expanded weekend warmup from three hours a week to eleven. Party music can now be heard every Friday from 3:00 p.m. until 10:00 p.m. and Saturday nights from 6:00-10:00 p.m.

2. Implement new music shows. Listen every Sunday at noon for the new Juniata Top 10 Countdown and every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:00p.m. for the "Top 5 at 5."

3. Implement a heavy metal show. This was even a "tentative" recommendation, and I went with it knowing that only 3% of our audience enjoys this type of music. The show was recently cancelled, but I tried it.

4. I initiated a community calendar this year in an attempt to keep the community better informed. So far, this feature has been very successful. Listen for it twice hourly.

5. I got feedback from the community that listeners did not know when the specialty shows aired or when their friends were on the air, etc. Look for Power 92's first program guide later next week. It will contain descriptions and times of all specialty shows, letters from certain department heads and a complete schedule of all announcers time slots and the type of music that they typically play on their show.

6. And the big one...a totally revamped program clock. When we switch to Power 92, a typical hour will consist of:

Two newcasts
Three Top 40 AOR songs
Two community calendar segments
Two short and one long weather reports

Also listen for "What's coming up next hour, rock news, campus news, sports, horoscopes, LP of the day, and public service announcements. This new clock is a result of my summer experience, a need for greater hourly consistency, and specific survey results.

Somewhere, Ms. Wade got the notion that the purpose of our station was to cater to the listening needs of the entire campus, false. You will not find that philosophy anywhere in our mission statement, which all staff members are expected to read in the staff handbook. Think about it...does WMMR in Philadelphia cater to the listening needs of everyone in Philadelphia? WDVE in Pittsburgh? WTPA in Harrisburg? How about WNEW in New York city? Of course, they don't, and neither does WKVR in Huntingdon.

If my tone sounds like I am taking Ms. Wade's letter personally, perhaps I am. I put too much time into WKVR to have my work slandered in the press by a staff member without a clue.

I am proud of the station. Staff morale under the leadership of Station Manager Joe Newhart is the best I have seen in my 2 1/2 years there.

Power 92 is not anyone's personal jukebox. However, I was fortunate enough to be elected to my position to attempt to satisfy not only the musical needs of the staff and community but to facilitate in the entire educational process. In the words of a letter I received from Dean Tilden, "V103 is an outstanding campus organization, perhaps the best."

In closing after talking to Ms. Wade on the telephone, she informed me that she wrote the letter because she cares about the radio station. Not that I am doubting her sincerity, but I am reminded of the old cliche: "With friends like that, who needs enemies?"

Sincerely,
Michael Barnett
Program Director, WKVR-FM

Dear Editor,

As Station Manager at WKVR-FM I took great offense to last week's letter to the editor by Jen Wade. Miss Wade is incredibly misinformed on the facts and had no basis, reason, or background to make the remarks and assumptions she did.

The second week of school I was contacted by the editor of the Juniatian, and she told me about a similar letter written to the paper by an anonymous student. Jodie Monger was unable to print it because it was unassigned. The first letter was similar to last week's, and I was curious as to who the person was. I asked Jodie to put two ads in the following issue stating that any opinions, concerns, complaints or suggestions could be brought to the Station Manager. The second ad stated the time and place for the V-103 board meetings which are open to all to express their opinions. There was no reply to either of the ads, so I assumed this person did not care enough to do something about the situation.

Our format is AOR (Album Oriented Rock)/ Progressive. Our survey shows this is the type of music the campus and our DJ want to hear. The letter suggested that the format was decided upon by several leaders in the radio station. She "longed" for the days of an open format (ie. Prince followed by Led Zeppelin then Billy Joel). First of all, if someone on this campus wants to listen to a Top 40 song rotation, I would tell them to listen to WRLR. I am not attacking the Top 40 format, but for a college station it serves no purpose. We are not in competition with WRLR, and I believe we complement each other by offering different styles of music. Secondly, only having 40 songs to play (as some stations do) puts unneeded restrictions on our DJs and gives them absolutely NO musical education. One of the greatest pleasures of being a DJ at WKVR is going to the station once a week, being able to pick your own music, experimenting with different styles, and learning from the experience. I would never allow our station to tell the DJs what to play; that defeats our purpose.

If someone claims we do not meet their musical needs, I encourage them to listen to our many Specialty Shows such as the jazz show, the reggae show, the Christian show, the Weekend Warmup, etc. If we are not trying to satisfy everyone's needs, then why do we have specialty shows or take surveys.

I am not upset because Jen felt the need to voice her opinion, but she needlessly made negative remarks about my staff through the wrong channels. The more professional way to handle the situation would have been to first put up signs asking the DJs what music they prefer for their shows that we do not have (every effort is made to purchase them). Board meetings are an excellent place to voice grievances. The format change was known by all the DJs, and they had the opportunity to share their opinions. In attendance were Matt Long, Chuck Cummings, and Ed Yeneha. These DJs showed that they cared enough about V103 to take an active part. Needless to say, Jen Wade was nowhere to be seen. And if she expected us to know what her opinion was, she should have come and told us. Instead she 'lifted' a copy our survey from the station and wrote an article that is backed by nothing more than personal opinion.

It is extremely frustratinf for me to see my staff work so hard to take surveys, compile them, travel to Penn State to buy new music, listen to every album that goes out, and dedicate a lot of free time to WKVR. the only thing Jen's letter succeeded in doing was hurting the feelings of my staff and make them wonder why they even bother to try.

Finally, I am extremely proud of WKVR and the incredible progress we have made in the past two years. I'm even more proud of my staff and the endless dedication they display in making our operation a success. I would also like to repeat for the millionth time that if anyone would like to join our staff or voice their opinion, they are eagerly invited to come to a board meeting. Used properly, they can generate the proper results without the bitter taste of a biased letter to the editor. See you at 92.3, Juniata!

Keep Rockin'
Joseph Newhart Station Manager WKVR-FM

Dear Editor:

The letter printed from Miss Wade concerning WKVR was simply ignorant--ignorant in the sense of "not knowing the facts". Miss Wade based her assessment of WKVR on a marketing research project which surveyed the campus. She mentioned how Top 40/Dance music captured 23% of the audience while Hard Rock had only 18%, however she failed to mention that Popular Rock(Journey, Boston, Police) was by far the most popular, picked by 32% of the campus. This is what WKVR plays the majority of time. This combined with the fact that it would be senseless to compete with WRLR directly, led to the decision to stay with an AOR format.

No, WKVR does not please everyone. The specialty shows are open to anyone who wants a "certain" kind of music. Music is just an opinion. I have learned this because I am the Music Director of WKVR. Ignorant opinions, such as Miss Wade's, are what I have to deal with all the time. I hope I have explained this fact to you clearly, Miss Wade, if not please stop by and I'll explain in more detail.

confessions of a mail deprived college student:

It got to the point that every time I put my key in that little slot at the mail box my whole body would tremble.

I never looked in the little window first. No, I had to open that tiny door. Even when I saw there was nothing inside, I would still stick my hand back as far as I could to try to feel for something that might be stuck on the sides.

You have to understand how it started. Sophomore year my boxmate transferred. She got mail religiously everyday I'd walk down to the mailboxes and find letters, cards, little red slips for packages.

The fact that none of these were mine didn't matter to me. I at least got to take it out, go through it, check each piece's addressee. I could feel the textured envelopes, read where everything was postmarked and smell that cancellation ink.

I knew the new "Season's Greetings" stamps were out when her records were in from Columbia House and where all her friends went to college. Sometimes they would even write a little not on the outside of the envelope.

When she transferred, I still faithfully trudged to the mailboxes before lunch--sometimes after too. But now nothing was there except that long, narrow void that once was filled with hope.

After about two months it started getting bad. That's when the trembling started. I'd pick up the blue mail envelopes thrown on the floor. I found myself going through those garbage cans near the doors in Ellis. I got a campus job so I could get a check once a month.

I started standing behind short girls with mail in the lunch line and reading postmarks over their shoulders. When everybody at my table left to get cheese fries, I'd smell all the envelopes, check the dates and try to estimate how many pages are inside each.

Finally, I couldn't take it anymore. I paid my sister just to address envelopes to me. I began sending things to myself--and I wouldn't use intercollege mail either. I bought things COD so I'd get a bill.

I realized I needed help when I couldn't change those cute little colored envelopes at the bookstore anymore. Those checks every second Friday just weren't covering my habit.

One night around 11:00 pm, I went down to the post office all alone and tried my key in every box until I found another that my key opened. Exhausted, I opened the little door, looked in and was crushed with the realization that it Sunday. No mail.

There's nothing more pathetic than a strung out junk mail junkie on a Sunday or legal holiday.

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

The message is coming through loudly and clearly: College students who have a more optimistic attitude are much healthier (physically and emotionally) than their less-optimistic classmates. More importantly, that positive attitude translates into a more rewarding, productive and satisfying lifestyle.

Lest you misunderstand what is being advocated here, allow me to briefly elaborate. A positive, optimistic approach to situations is not to be confused with a "pie-in-the-sky" naivete that suggests all will turn out for the best if we merely wish it so. We need to take control, be realistic and make things happen for ourselves. As a student said to me recently, "pray for a good harvest, but keep on hoeing."

How do we take on a more positive, optimistic attitude? Consider the following suggestions:

*Worry less and work more. We can become overwhelmed by what we have to do and all to often we expend useless energy thinking about what we should be doing rather than actually doing it!

*Learn to set priorities. We have only so much time and energy and perhaps we need to re-examine how we use these two important commodities. Overextending ourselves can lead to less than satisfactory performance which can contribute to a lessened view of self.

*Engage in "distancing". Cognitive psycologist Aaron Beck suggests that we train ourselves to be more aware of and then refute our self-defeating, negative internal statements. Many of us have a tendency to magnify and exaggerate certain situations. This strategy can help us be more aware of what we do to ourselves.

*Be realistic. No matter how positive we are, there are some goals that are just beyond our attainment. Setting our sights unrealistically high may lead to certain failure.

*Write things down. We all know how therapeutic it is to have someone to talk to but researchers at Southern Methodist University suggest that committing our thoughts, that is, those thoughts that are causing us concern, to paper can be very cathartic.

That's all for now and until next time be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

responsibilities and related skill development, and records verification and evaluation by college resource and faculty advisors.

At the outset of each academic year, special presentations highlighting learning opportunities available through co-curricular activities and explaining the CCT concept are made to groups of students in residence hall meetings and volunteer leadership seminars. Thereafter, the CCT Program is highly individualized. In concert with advisors, students identify personal goals and plan their participation in appropriate student activities and organizations. Faculty and staff work with the student to maximize the advantages of those experiences in preparing for placement in either an employment or graduate school setting. The completed CCT becomes a permanent part of the student's placement credentials.

In accepting the award presented by Mr. Johnson, Chairman Ellis said,"Juniata College is very pleased to receive one of this year's awards of excellence. It is a welcome testimonial to current achievement and an important stimulus to continued improvements. We are proud to be an award winner, and the Consolidated Natural Gas Company should be proud of this wonderfully creative foundation program."

Dr. Robert W. Neff, President of Juniata College, applauded CNG for its dedication to higher education in general, and spoke specifically about the Award of Excellence in Education Program. "All of us in higher education commend you and the Consolidated Natural Gas Company for an exceptional program which not only recognized achievement, but encourages greater innovation in meeting the needs of our students. Juniata College is honored to be so recognized," he said.

From the Pen of. . .

I play a number of roles at Juniata College. I am the chairperson of the Human Concerns Committee, I am the chairperson of CASE (Committee on Alcohol Study and Education), and I am a tutor at the Writing Center. I write the following article, however, not as a part of any of these roles but as part of my two most important roles: student and friend.

I do not understand alcohol abuse. I have seen people I care deeply about drink themselves into oblivion and call it a good time. I have seen my friends rewarded with a star on their door for vomiting. I have friends who have gotten trashed and urinated in places other than the bathroom and then laughed it off. Is all this funny or tragic?

I do not understand how people who abuse alcohol can ignore the danger. How many thousands are killed each year in alcohol-related accidents? How many families are torn apart by alcoholism? How many of my friends have already killed irreplaceable brain cells in pursuit of the wild life?

I am not against drinking. I am not against drinkers either. I am against the abuse of alcohol. It is an economic, emotional, physical and psychological menace to our personal well-being and the well-being of this nation. It is time for those of us who have a choice to say, "No More."

I know this change isn't going to occur overnight. However, I am going to put my trust in the intelligence and sensibility of my friends and fellow students and continue to work for this change.

I know people don't want to make asses of themselves. I know people would like to remember things that happened the night before. I know people don't have to get drunk to have a good time (if you think you do, you've got a problem). I know that students at this college don't want to drink themselves to death.

It's time we said "No More" to alcohol abuse.

"Charley's Aunt" opens tonight in Oller Hall

"Charley's Aunt" will be presented by the Juniata Players three nights this weekend. The play, written by Brandon Thomas, will first air tonight at 7:30 pm in Oller Auditorium.

The show is directed by Juniata graduate Kari Duppel. Kari last directed at JC in the winter of 1985, when Juniata staged a series of winter one-acts which included "The Apollo of Belac". She is currently doing graduate work in the theatre at the Pennsylvania State University.

"Charley's Aunt" tells the story of two college students, portrayed by Tom Kochel and Ty Furman, that have similiar problems. They are in love. Each finds that he can not phrase his proposal in writing, so the brave young men send for the ladies to visit them, so that they may discuss marraige in person. The play, which was written at the turn of the century, here takes its first comic twist.

Charley has an aunt that he has never met coming to visit him on this same afternoon, and the students have decided that she will suffice as the chaperone which English chivalry required at the time. When Charley recieves a wire that his aunt will not be arriving, he panics, and he and his cohort, Jack, trap their schoolmate, Lord Fancourt Babberly, into dressing as a lady and assuming the role of Donna Lucia d'Alvadorez; Charley's Aunt. The play takes off from there, as the audience is treated to a complex comedy that features the stunning Babberly as he attempts to con three young ladies, two old men, and the real Donna Lucia d'Alvadorez into believing that he is really a woman.

The production features the talents of Walt Cupit, Tom Kochel, and Ty Furman as the trio of English undergraduates. The play is given a taste of talent from abroad, as Petra Klein, of Germany, takes the part of Amy, and Juliette Nicko, a first-year French professor, portrays the part of the real Donna Lucia d'Alvadorez. When asked about the alleged language barrier, Juliette replied that she stammers, but "I stammer in French, too." Erich Eichensehr, Brian Kerr, Mary White, and Mandy Wilderman make up the rest of the cast.

One point of distinct interest is that this play will be presented in the round. For those of you not familiar with the term, it means that the audience will be on the stage with the actors. Erich Eichensehr, who is Stephen Spettigue in the play, says that "Theatre in the round presents a lot of problems that wouldn't exist if we performed out to the theatre." Cupit agrees, because the "audience is right on top of you."

The theatre in the round has saved the Juniata Players from another problem, though; the lack of funding for dramatics makes the production of a full three-act play difficult. Sets, costumes, and makeup all cost money; money that the drama department does not have. Eichensehr, new to the Oller stage, offered this critical appraisal: "I find the Juniata theatre department does not have adequate budget or theatre supplies to stage this play."

But the show must go on, and so it will tonight. Mandy Wilderman, who plays the part of Ella Delahay, considers this a good production for performance here because it is in a college setting and shows us that young men still behave in relatively the same manner towards each other as they did almost a century ago, when this play was written.

Student Government News

The Juniata Senate meeting was held Tuesday, October 13. The President, Amy Coursen, announced that the Senate has chosen the President Pro Temp for 1987-88. This year, the representative will be Fran Arcay. Handouts concerning the proper way to make motions and a revised committee list were distributed to the Senate.

The Joint Lecture Committee gave $1000.00 to the Peace and Conflict lecture. Donald Wood from South Africa, a newspaper editor, will speak about his country.

Student Leadership modules have begun. The RA module reported the best turnout that it has had in years. Residence Hall points are being awarded for the halls with the best attendance.

The Student Concerns Committee has been examining the lighting on campus. The most important areas will be presented to Randy Dieke. Parking has become an issue for the committee and has been brought to the attention of Security. The Senate has also made suggestions for solutions.

The attendance to Mountain Day was reported to be 832 people. Inner Circle has been successful recently. The Travel Committee is planning a trip to Daytona Beach for Spring break. The Recreational Committee announced that they are in search of new members.

There were also several new issues raised at the meeting. Student Concerns has pointed out the crowded situation of the computer centers. Proposals would like the Humanities building to be opened longer and have more computers. Also, the RAs have been requesting new vacuum cleaners and more dryers.

Juniata to accept special award

By Nora Dickey

On Saturday, November 7, Dr. Robert Neff will accept the "Outstanding Sponsor" Award presented by Area J Special Olympics to all of the Juniata College Community.

Juniata College was unanimously chosen to receive this year's award because of the dedicated and generous support to the local Special Olympics program within the past year. Juniata provides the facilities for various Special Olympics events. Each May, over 200 special athletes participate in a track and field meet on the college track. Our own Circle K has undertaken the responsibility of implementing a new adult sports program for the mentally retarded. This began with a track and field competition last May. Presently, Juniata is hosting a 5 week Saturday swim program, providing college students and staff the opportunity to assist Special Olympians with their swimming skills. This coming February, Juniata will host the PA State Volleyball Competition. Special Olympians from all across our state will come to Huntingdon to participate in this weekend volleyball competition.

It is evident that Juniata rightfully deserves this award. The presentation will be made at the Second "Sponsor the Olympians" Benefit Dinner to be held on Nov. 7 at the Raystown Country Inn. The evening will include a sit-down dinner followed by guest speaker, Dr. Edgar Cobett from Youngstown University in Ohio, and also a musical performance by the local group, Standing Room Only and various presentations, including the "Outstanding Sponsor" Award. If anyone is interested in attending the evening and being present for the award presentation, tickets can be purchased for $15.00 each or a table of (8) for $100.00 by calling the Huntingdon Area Middle School at 643-2900 or Nora Dickey at 643-2876.

How did the mountains on the moon get their names? Johannes Hevelius, a German astronomer, mapped the moon's surface in the mid 1600s. His names for many of the geographic sites are still in use.

"Use Common Sense" is Juniata's Security motto

By Lisa Rummel

Picture this: you spend a day in classes (as usual!), you go to dinner, and then you return to your room to relax. You realize that your body needs a little more exercise than sitting in a squeaky chair and walking around campus all day. So, you decide to go for an evening jog--around the track (a logical and often chosen location for such an activity).

Continue picturing: you enter the track area; it is dark, uninviting, ominous, downright SCARY! But, dedicated and determined as you are, you proceed to jog around the track. ALL OF THE SUDDEN, someone GRABS you from behind--you scream, but no one hears (and even if he heard you, would he be able to see you?!).

This happened to one of my roommates...Fortunately, it was only us, her roomies, playing what we thought was a joke on her (at the expense of her nerves and general sanity!).

Looking back, I regret to admit that I played this part in making a joke of what is a truly serious matter--that of campus security.

However, it forced me to realize several important security matters:

1)that track is DARK (as are various other places on campus)!

2)my friends and I were easily able to sneak in and around the track, without being noticed by our roommate, or, more importantly, by a security guard.

3)my roommate let out a loud shriek, which gained no attention from passerby, or again, from a security guard.

As a result of these realizations, I began to doubt my own safety on Juniata's campus.

To compound my questions on the subject, I was asked to write and article on it. As I approached writing this very piece I went back and forth, as to which angle to take. After all, Huntingdon is supposedly a relatively safe, small town, right? But then again, campus crime in general, is at an all time high. So I initially planned to survey students for their opinions on campus safety. But then I figured, we all know our own opinions--how about hearing it from a security guard's point of view?

This last question prompted me to have a "talk" with one of our security guards, whom I would like to thank for his help in compiling this article. After hearing the "inside scoop" from him, I am on a see-saw as to how safe I feel on Juniata's campus.

I feel more confident about the actual guards, because this one, at least, seemed conscientious, concerned, and aware of many security matters--both strengths and weaknesses. He assured me that the guards are alert to scheduled campus activities, are informed of the opening and locking times of buildings, are available 24 hours a day, and are competent individuals, who are capable of their many responsibilities (yes, they have responsibilities! The job is harder than what we may realize).

However, he also admitted that our security force has an opening for a guard, meaning that we are lacking added double protection during the 8pm-4am shift (which is perhaps the most dangerous time). By the way, we have been without this added security for "at least two months," and it doesn't look like someone is going to be filling that post within the near future. This makes me a bit uneasy.

Then I asked him what it takes to be hired as a security guard (come on, what do we really know about these guys with their little silver security badges, anyway?!). I am pleased to report that each candidate's history and criminal record is thoroughly checked prior to employment, as well as references being required.

However, he informed me that no physical test of any sort is given, and that no law enforcement training is supplied. This also makes me a bit uneasy. In fact, this is one aspect that even he admitted, he would like to be strengthened.

So, what is my conclusion? Are we safe, or are we in danger? Honestly, I could go either way. Sitting here in my unlocked apartment, I feel quite safe. On the other hand, I've caught myself (more than a few times!) making a mad dash from Ellis to East, late at night, because I did not feel safe. The incident on the track also did wonders for my lack of confidence.

Instead, I conclude not one or the other--but both. As the security guard stated, there are some strengths and some weaknesses. I believe that our job, as students, is to--as he does--recognize and appreciate the good ones (i.e. new and more efficient lighting around South), and to address ourselves to and alert each other of the bad ones (i.e. the dark and isolated track, the unlit sidewalk from Lesher to Good).

We should not live in fear (i.e. don't give up jogging altogether!), but at the same time, we should be responsible and alert to the very possible threat of danger (i.e. jog during daylight hours!).

In other words, the security guards are doing their jobs: we, in turn, should do our part.

New RD at North Hall, Terri Simpson is a Penn State graduate.

Terri Simpson is North's new RD

By Jen Wade

Her sign is Cancer, her favorite drink is a Bloody Mary, she has a rabbit named Buckwheat (at home), and she likes to shop. Who is she? She's Terri Simpson, and she is the Residence Director in North this year.

The youngest of three girls, Terri hails from Cumberland, Maryland. She crossed the Mason-Dixon line to attend Penn State University and graduated from there this past August with a B.S. degree in Physical Education. Terri served as an R.A. at Penn State for two years. She enjoys campus life and talking to students. When she saw an ad in the newspaper for an RD job at Juniata, she applied for the position.

The first candidate for the position decided not to accept the job following the first week of training. The search for a replacement took some time, and Terri did not begin her duties until mid-September. Thus far, she has enjoyed the job very much and cites no major problems. When asked to describe the sstrangest thing that has happened to her since she's been at JC, Terri mentioned only the various practical jokes which have been played on her, especially the anonymous phone calls from other R.D.'s. She also likes the atmosphere of both the college and the Huntingdon area.

Her goals for the year include improvements to the building such as new curtains in the lounge. She would also like to coordinate a program for hunters through the Pennsylvania Game Commission and to organize a trip to the Patrick property for the girls in the hall.

As far as personal goals are concerned, Terri is considering going back to Penn State either next semester or next year to become certified as a P.E. teacher and would like to remain at Juniata while she does that. In the meantime she is interviewing for a position with the Child Development Council here in town.

In her spare time Terri enjoys dancing, aerobics, racquetball and skiing. She likes to paint and draw and also enjoys watching any kind of performing arts.

Coin-Eating Machines Plague Campus

By Brian Broking

Before I came to college I was told by my guidance counselors that it would be expensive. When they said that it was going to be expensive, I thought they were talking about the costs of books and tuition and so forth. Now I realize that what they were really talking about was the money I was going to lose in broken machines on the campus that do not have "Out of Order" signs on them.

What really set me off on this was something that happened this weekend. I was in my room feeling really run down. I figured that a candy bar would boost my energy enough so that I could start moving towards being a little conscious. My first problem was that I had no change and I was too run down to walk all the way to Ellis just to get change for a dollar. After I mooched 45 cents off my roommate, I took a walk to the candy machine which still had the tiny out of order sign on it that has been there now for two weeks. Now this sign is tiny. I mean it is smaller than a three by five note card, and if you're not carrying your microscope around you'll miss it. The only reason I know about it is because I lost 45 cents to it last week. So being a tad bit upset, and still quite a bit groggy, I took a walk over to North to use their candy machine.

After I got through deciding what form of tooth decay I was going to get I deposited my 45 cents and pressed the selection number. Waited a second and then pressed the number again. After hitting the machine a few times, cursing up and down, and pressing the selection a couple of more times, a resident walking through said, "Oh, the machine is broken." Great guys! We're in college and no one knows how to make an "Out of Order" sign for a machine!

What makes this situation even worse was that just this weekend I lost a quarter to the Trivia video game in Ellis. Normally, I wouldn't get too bent out of shape and I would just go find someone and tell them I lost a quarter in their machine and ask for my money back. But this situation has happened to me once before in Ellis and they told me it was going to take three weeks before I could get my quarter back. Three Weeks!!

But that isn't the end of my personal problems with machines. For there are all those times that I lost 60 cents in the washing machine and fifty cents in the dryers. Then there are all those quarters I lost in our hall phone the past five weeks. It seems there is something wrong with the pay phone where if you dial a number and there is no answer at the other end if you hang up the phone you don't get your quarter returned to you. One night I wanted to call Pizza Hut for a pizza when I realized I dialed the wrong number I immediately hung up and did not get my quarter back. Do the people who own these coin robbing machines realize what their machines are doing? Probably; and they probably blame the student population as the cause of these problems.

I really don't know who is to blame, but I will say this much: one day I sat down and figured out how much I have lost to these machines in my four years here. I figure if I still had every single one of those coins back, I wouldn't have to worry about saving for a new car when I graduate. Please, someone, fix the machines.

When you reach for the Juniatian in Ellis next week, also look for Power 92's first Program Guide. This guide, created by popular demand, is our way of letting you know a little bit more about us--our management staff, our music, our announcers, and our specialty shows.

A little preview of some of our specialty shows:

"Sunday Night Spotlight" is a three hour spotlight of one group's music plus lot's of trivia, maybe even an interview. This is every Sunday from 9pm-midnight. (Listen this Sunday for Lynyrd Skynyrd with Ed Yencha).

"Virgin Vinyl" is the lastest in alternative/progressive music and can be heard every Wednesday from 9pm-midnight with Amanda Efron and friends.

"Weekend Warm-up" is a chance to party with Power 92 every Friday from 3-10pm. Ken Bear play rock n" roll party music from 3-6 and then Chuck Cummings plays nothing but dance tunes from 6-10pm. Also, John Marturano continues the party Saturday with the Power Party from 6-10pm.

A new daily feature this year is the "Midnight Snack". Twenty minutes of a group are played from midnight-12:20am. Listen in for a low-calorie musical snack before you go to bed.

Power 92 has many more specialty shows to satisfy all of your musical tastes.

A Reminder From Power 92!!

E. Malenke will chair Church Relations Council

Elizabeth A. Malenke, a graduate of the Juniata College Class of 1949, has been selected as chairperson for the college's Church-College Relations Council.

For nearly two decades Mrs. Malenke served as an elementary education teacher, while at the same time filling a variety of volunteer positions for her church, The Coventry Church of the Brethren. She has served in Leadership Development, in Sunday School Church evaluations, and has served in District callings.

Following her undergraduate work at Juniata, Mrs. Malenke earned a Master of Education degree from Temple University, and is presently completing work on a Master of Divinity degree from Eastern Baptist Seminary. She will be ordained into the ministry during the latter part of October, 1987. In 1984, she was licensed by the Church of the Brethren to minister.

In accepting her new position as chairperson of the Church-College Relations Council, Mrs. Malenke will be coordinating the activities and the interaction between Juniata College and its Church of the Brethren constituencies. Although non-sectarian and independent today, Juniata College recognizes and honors its Church of the Brethren heritage.

FLORIDA and spring break go together like beer and pizza, the Cloister and kegs, Juniata and high tuition, and condoms and sex. The Travel Committee of Centerboard is offering you the opportunity to eat your pizza, drink your beer, forget Juniata's high tuition and use your condoms for six days and five nights in DAYTONA BEACH, FLORIDA!!!

We'll be leaving by bus from Ellis Hall on Friday, March 5th and be returning sometime on Friday, March 10. Exact times will be set in the future. Accomodations have been made with Mansun Bus Company for round-trip transportation and a beachfront hotel. All for the low, low price of $175!

Seniors-this is your last chance to get out of control with your friends before facing the real world. Underclassmen-why not join the seniors in a total Juniata blow-out in Daytona? What else do you have to do-go home to see Mommy and Daddy? Join the fun!

Sign-ups will begin the 1st of December at the Information Desk. Start hinting to your parents for a Christmas gift in March! By the way, returning on the 10th means there are two days until classes start. Randy Deike, Director of Housing, has offered on-campus housing for students who can't get home for these two days. However, just as a reminder: College policies will still be in effect even though classes won't begin until Monday. Also, the dining hall will not open until Sunday night. Be aware of this when planning your finances for the break.

I have a feeling you will be sorry if you miss this trip! Keep reading the Juniatian and listening to WKVR for more details later in the school year.

Clear your calendar on Tuesday, November 3rd from 8-10pm for Centerboard's Recreation Committee! A social will be held on this date in the Recreation Room which is located upstairs in Ellis Hall.

Those attending can sharpen their skills on numerous games such as ping pong, darts, video machines, and pool which will all be free on Tuesday night. Hamburgers, Hot dogs, etc. will be available all evening buffet style.

Plan on attending Tuesday night to discover what activities the Recreation committee offers as well as upcoming pool tournament dates. Chairperson Lee Abramovitz will be available to answer any questions or respond to new ideas.

The Student Health Advisory Committee (SHAC) is an organization of students dedicated to the promotion of health and wellness at Juniata College. Members come from a variety of majors, including business, pre-med, social work, psychology, and political science. SHAC is sponsored by the Juniata College Health Center.

Although the organization has only been in existence for two years, SHAC has had several very successful projects. The most well known event is the "Wellness Day" program. Over $200 worth of medical testing is made available to students, faculty, administration, and staff absolutely free. Also, information regarding a broad spectrum of health concerns is distributed.

SHAC has also created the Juniata Wellness Room. This health information resource center is located next to the health center in Lesher dormitory. Pamphlets and articles on dozens of topics are available for research or personal interest. There is a treadmill for exercise, a scale, and a blood pressure aparatus. The most interesting aspect of the Wellness Room is the self-diagnosis corner. Students can determine if they need to see a doctor by following the instructions on the wall. Self-treatment advice is posted as well.

SHAC also sponsors one speaker each month. Lectures already sponsored have included contraception, eating disorders, massage techniques, weight training, and diet and fitness control.

An "AIDS Awareness Day" will take place in November and also a rape prevention program is planned for the near future. Still another goal is the establishment of student support groups for weight control and eating disorders. The annual "Wellness Day" will also take place in the spring.

Any questions or suggestions for SHAC will be appreciated, just send them through the intercollege mail. SHAC also welcomes new members at any time. Meeting times are posted in Ellis.

James Kehl to present 5th lecture

"Political Parties: Handmaidens of the Constitution," a lecture by professor James A. Kehl, will be the fifth lecture in the Juniata College Lecture Series in Celebration of the Bicentennial of the Constitution. The lecture, to be presented on November 3, is sponsored by the Pennsylvania Humanities Council and Juniata Coollege.

Kehl, a professor of history at the University of Pittsburgh, will focus his lecture on the Constitution"s phenomenal success as it relates to our political party system. Kehl will discuss how the political party system and the Constitution have derived strength from each other.

The lecture will be held on Tuesday, November 3, at 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall and is open to the public free of charge.

From the Pen of...

In several campaign speeches, Pat Robertson has said that "We must bring back the old-fashioned concept of morals and abstinence before marriage." Robertson, a candidate for the Republican party nomination for the presidency has admitted to having conceived a child out of wedlock. This admission has led to severe questioning of Robertson's character.

Robertson, also a television evangelist, admits to living two lives; one being a "wild life" of " wine, women, and song on many continents", and a second as a "born again" Christian minister who claims to have 31 years of "extraordinary probity" under his belt. Ted Koppel, of NBC's "Nightline," discussed the issue with Mr. Robertson in early October, and voiced the thoughts of a nation when he claimed that Robertson's actions "raise a legitimate question about hypocrisy."

Pat Robertson is not the only presidential candidate who has suffered from an "overexposure" to the press. The alleged philanderings of Democratic candidate Gary Hart brought about his political demise. Joseph Biden, another Democratic hopeful, ended his campaign after it was revealed that he had been guilty of plagiarism while attending law school.

Each of the afore-mentioned cases has brought about cries of "invasion of privacy," and "freedom of the press." It is my opinion that the American public has a right to learn about the character of this nation's presidential candidates. Those who choose to run for public office must understand that with that decision, they invite an extremely close scrutiny of their "dirty laundry."

Although this situation is not altogether attractive, I believe that the press serves a vital function in American presidential elections. The media should feel free to publicize any factual information which may be useful to our citizenry in making such an important decision. Any infringement on the freedom of the press, guaranteed to us in the Bill of Rights, would deprive the citizens of this country of the system of safeguards designed by our founding fathers.

Pat Robertson may gain some standing by saying that "they (Hart and Biden) were doing things currently." Robertson accuses Biden of an "intellectual shallowness" and Hart of "unbelievably bad judgement." He states that "This is riduculous...I am not going down on this one." Yet, in comparing this evangelist to his competition, George Bush, whose resume includes service as the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, as an ambassador to China and the United Nations, and as Vice President, and Bob Dole, who has over twenty years experience in the Senate, I fail to see how an American public, educated by an alert media, could possibly select a "born again" preacher that allows hypocrisy to so run rampant in his personal and public life to serve in the office of the President of the United States of America.

Indian Kickers Split; Last Week of Action

By Jen Wade

After a week's rest, Juniata's soccer team returned to action last Wednesday. The team travelled to Lebanon Valley, where they gained their second win of the season by defeating the Flying Dutchmen 3-0.

Lebanon Valley, whose home field is narrower than Juniata's, dominated the first 35 minutes of the game. JC finally adjusted to the playing conditions and Drew Spector opened the scoring when he deflected a Damian Preziosi crossing shot into the net.

Steve Grater continued the scoring attack in the second half. He converted on a penalty kick, awarded when an LV player interfered with Preziosi inside the penalty area. Doug Kovacs closed out the scoring with about 15 minutes remaining in the game. He took a nice pass from Paul Granger and put the ball in the net from about six yards out.

JC's defense played well as a whole, with keeper John Bobko making some nice saves. Preziosi also had a good game from his wing position.

On Saturday, the Indians faced the Lions of Albright. Albright picked up their first win of the season, defeating JC 4-3 in an evenly played contest which took place in front of a supportive Parent's Weekend crowd.

JC fell behind early as Albright put three balls by Indian keeper Walt Cupit in the first half. Their third goal came on a diving header which was out of Cupit's reach.

Assisted by Jeff May, Dan Lazowick finally got JC on the board to make the score 3-1. Juniata was deprived of a second goal in the first half when an Albright defender barely kept the ball from crossing the goal line. Steve Grater and Drew Spector added goals in the second half, but the comeback effort fell short as the Lions also tallied once in the half. Grater's goal once again resulted from a penalty kick. Spector drilled the ball into the left side of the net from about 18 yards out.

Tim Phelps played in the net for the Indians in the second half, and John Telenko and Dan Lazowick played well for the Indians.

With three games remaining, Juniata's record now stands at 2-8-3. The Indians took on a Division II opponent yesterday when they travelled to Bloomsburg. Saturday sees them as home for the final game this season as they meet the University of Pittsburgh at Bradford.

Ladies Hockey Season Ends On Poor Note

By Deb Dougherty

The Juniata College Hockey team played Susquehanna University Tuesday, October 13 at home. The Lady Indians played a good game but lost the match 2-1.

The first half was scoreless. The ball was passed between the 25 yard lines, and neither goalie saw much action. Susquehanna picked up their first goal shortly into the second half when a Juniata player committed a foul. A penalty stroke was given to Susquehanna, who took advantage of the scoring opportunity. The opponents tapped in their second goal about ten minutes later. Kathleen McGowan gave Juniata their goal on a hard shot to the corner of the cage with about five minutes left to play. Neither team scored during the remainder of the game.

The Tribe travelled to Gettysburg the following Thursday to take on the third ranked team in the nation. The team played a hard game, but was defeated in the end. The Lady Hackers concentrated on their basic skills throughout the game. They passed well and supported each other throughout the match. Despite all of their teamwork and effort, the Tribe did not score.

Juniata was ready for a win when they played St. Bonaventure on Oct. 17. The team was a little slow the first half, which ended 0-0, but came out and dominated the second half.

Juniata's first goal was made by Kathleen McGowan on a ball crossed by Jennifer Dippery. The tribe kept the ball on St. Bonaventure's half of the field and another goal was scored by Deb Barley on a pass across by Joanne Thomas. Juniata dominated the remainder of the game and won the match 2-0.

The Lady Hackers ended their season with a 3-7-3 record. The team is now training for a post-season tournament at Susquehanna University on November 1.

Indian Spikers Red Hot Record Now 38-3

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata Women's Volleyball Team won their second tournament of the season by capturing the Indian Invitational this past weekend.

The tournament consisted of NAIA teams, MAC teams, and also a team from Colorado. Colorado College gave the Indians a tough test in the finals taking the JC spikers to four games.

After defeating Seton Hill College 15-6, 15-3, 15-2 in the semis, JC knocked off Colorado 15-10, 15-10, 9-15, 15-6 for the championship. Colorado was ranked 5th in the country; the Indians are now ranked 4th with a 38-3 mark.

Juniata walked into semi-final action by up ending Ohio Northern and LaSalle University on Friday night. In the finals, Jackie Rebert had 22 kills, 27 perfect passes, and 3 service aces. Also in the finals, teammate Cathy Miller had 7 solo blocks, 23 perfect passes, 3 service aces, and 16 kills.

Other schools included Upsala, Grennsboro, Bridgewater, and Susquehanna.Note: see ad for volleyball boxers.

Indians Beat Albright 28-16
MAC Hopes Still Alive

The Indians raised their overall record to 5-2 this past Saturday with a 28-16 victory over Albright College.

Cubby Davis threw for 247 yards and three touchdowns to lead the Indian offense to 313 net yards. The defense, led by Mark Dorner"s eight and ninth interceptions of the season and linebacker Steve Campbell"s 12 tackles and 2 sacks held Albright to just nine yards rushing. The special team unit also played a major role in the victory, as Keith Watson booted 37 and 40 yard field goals and two extra points. Todd Rosman blocked a punt in the endzone late in the second half for a saftey.

Watson proved to be the difference two weeks ago when Juniata edged Lycoming 10-7. Watson"s feild goal came with just eight seconds left to play in the game and kept the Indians title hopes alive.

Against Albright the Indians began their scoring attack on their second offensive series. Begging on their own 18 yard line, Davis passed to Dan Crossey for a gain of 13 yards. After Pat Danneker scrambled for an additional three yards, Davis hit wide receiver Mike Cottle with a pass to Albright"s 45 yard line. On first down, Davis found flanker Frank Phelps open along the sidelines to complete a 45 yard touchdown reception.

Indian saftey Bob Hitson intercepted Albright"s next pass attempt to put the Indians back on the Lion"s 36 yard line. Six plays later on the six yard line, Davis passed to Don Betar for another touchdown. Davis found Betar again late in the second quarter to raise the Indians" lead to 20-10 at halftime.

Watson kicked two feild goals in the second half and the blocked punt for a saftey accounted for the remaing Juniata eight points.

Davis" favorite targets were Phelps who hauled in three passes for 116 yards and Betar who caught six passes for 72 yards and two touchdowns.

With the Indians victory over Albright this past weekend, and Widener"s defeat of Susquehanna, Juniata has a more legitmate chance at obtaining a share of the MAC title. The Indians will travel to Susquehanna this Saturday in a must win situation. Lycoming put Moravion out of the picture with a 30-3 trashing of the Greyhounds.

If the Indians do beat Susquehanna they still need help from someone else to knock off Widener. The only team to beat Widener to this point was Moravion. Widener still must play Lyco and a tough Wilkes team. Wilkes has already beat Moravion so there is no doubt that Wilkes can outmatch the pioneers.

To simplify things from Juniata"s standpoint, the Indians must win the rest of their games and hope someone defeats Widener at least once; If by chance the order of events falls into this category, then the Indians will have a piece of the title.

"JR"-Rugby Action

By Robert DiAntonio

The Juniata River Rugby Squad travelled to Penn State last weekend and faced a formidable Nittany Lion Squad. However, the Lions' extensive training and formal coaching could only walk away with a tie against the tenacious rugby club from Huntingdon, who are now 1-3-1 for the season.

It was the "Rats" scoring first when Dave Farling and Dan Balentine paired up to out finesse a surprised Penn State wing early in the first half. Mark Kearns followed with the conversion to go ahead 6-0. The "Rats" continued relentless pressure on the Lion half of the pitch for the most part of the first half and carried the 6-0 lead into half time.

The Lions refused to stay behind and tied the match two minutes into play of the second half. Shortly thereafter, it was Farling's turn to go in for the try, off the passes of wing players Steve DuMars and Mike McIntyre, who set up the go ahead score. Kearns' conversion attempt proved too difficult to execute, facing a strong Happy Valley Siege. The Lions tied the match later in the half (conversion failed), and the final whistle blew with the two squads settling for a 10-10 tie.

The Juniata River Club will host Susquehanna on Nov. 7 at the Captain Jack Field to close its 1987 fall season. We hope that you can make it out to cheer the squad to a winning finale.

Intramurals Anyone?

By Suzanne Lydic

IM? What in the world is IM? Introductory Macrama? Informative Math? No! IM is the stress-releaving, fun-filled started before the year 1970, but it was at that time that Dick Reiley revamped the program. Reiley was then the assistant football coach who came to JC from Penn State. We have him to thank for his knowledgable forsight to model an IM program here after a successful one at PSU.

The intramural system here on the Indian reservation consists of the following sports: volleyball, racquetball, softball, floor hockey, basketball, soccer, and whiffleball. All of which are during their appropriate season as well as offering both co-ed and single sex competition.

To compete in IM, all one needs to do is complete a registration form or join a team entering the program. Registration for the winter sports season will begin following Christmas break. Schedules for IM games can be found in the bulletin board/showcase on the 2nd floor of the gym.

Referees are an important part of any sporting event, as well as intramurals. Becoming a ref requires a working card, responsibility, and some sporting knowledge. Dan Crossey, a member of the athletic department, evaluates all possible candidates for reffing once the applicant has chosen his/her sport.

Jeff Boshart, a junior, who has been an active member of the IM program since his freshman year is only discontented with, "The officials who are not informed about rules, which, however, I do not believe is the fault on the officials."

Other problems with scheduling and getting the teams together have arisen. Vicki Schaiver, who no longer plays, said, "I quit because no one on my team told me when the games were." Frustration with forfeits seems to be on the upswing too.

Over all, the intramural program at JC has been a success. Many people have participated in it through the years and enjoyed it for just as many reasons as there are people.

Pete Quigley, a junior, plays because, "IM gives the students an opportunity to play a sport which they want to play, but they are not good enough for a varsity team."

Paul Albitz, coordinator of some IM programs, believes the program is good because, "IM offers competition on all levels."

One of the new developments in the IM program will be the addition of water sports (volleyball and basketball) and team handball to the core selection.

So before the academic stress overwhelms you, grab your sneaks and id and check into an intramural program. Paul Albitz will be in the IM office (2nd floor in the gym) from 1-2:00 Monday-Friday to answer any questions you may have.

Juniata Hosts Arms Race Education Week

By Suzanne Lydic

In a world with an escalating arms race, we cannot ignore the very issues which so blatantly involve our future--nuclear war, government intervention, civic duty, and peace movements. The week of November 9-12 is Arms Race Education Week for the Juniata community. A cooperative educational package prepared by the Baker Institute for Peace and Conflict Studies and the Centerboard/Student Government Joint Lecture Committee will guide us towards some understanding of the chaos.

The program kicks off Monday at 8:00 am in 202 HUM with the film "A War Without Winners." Monday evening at 8:15 in the Faculty Lounge Marty Daniels Troy, Executive Director of "Options," will discuss arms race legislation and individual voter influence on the process.

Centerboard and PACS will sponsor a coffeehouse Tuesday night at 9:00 in the Catharsis Lounge on "Where Have All the Bar Chords Gone?" This witty and humorous evening of war and peace music will be led by Larry Mutti, Deb Glazier, Bill Huston, Andy Murray and John Cunningham.

The midpoint of the week will be highlighted with the classic movie "The Tin Drum," at 8:15 pm in Oller Hall.

At 10:00 am in 201 Good Hall there will be a symposium on different religious views in relation to their peace statements. Four representatives of various faiths will speak--Fr. David Arseneault (Catholic), George Mark (Baha'i), Rabbi Soloff (Jewish), and Rev. Hoffman (Methodist)

The close of the week will be highlighted with a lecture on "Star Wars: Reflections from the Soldier/Scientist" by retired Air Force Lt. Col. Robert M. Bowman at 8:15 pm in the Alumni Hall on Thursday. Dr. Bowman worked extensively with the design and management of the early Star Wars programs. His 22-year Air Force Career has molded him into what Robert Scheer of the Los Angeles Times calls, "The best public speaker in the country today."

There is no doubt that the Arms Race Education Week at JC is going to be something to remember. Your participation now is vital to our global community.

Questions concerning the week may be directed to the Campus Ministry/Baker Peace Institute Office on the 2nd floor of Ellis.

Five Employees Honored at J.C.

Five employees of Hallmark Management were recently recognized for their service at Juniata College.

In a reception held in the college's faculty lounge, Phil Bock the president and owner of Hallmark Management honored Minnie Foster, Raymond Krepps, Bertha Conrad, Elsie Forshey and Polly Painter with the company's Annual Service Award.

This award is given to Hallmark employees for their distinguished service record and years devoted to the company. Hallmark Management came into existence fifteen years ago and Juniata College was their first account.

Editorial

Each and every student on this campus will probably admit, without hesitation, that the Juniata academia are challenging. And then, most will agree that this level of excellence contributes to the overall quality of our education after four years.

However, there is something happening on this campus that is undermining the ultimate goal of the educational process. An extremely large number of students are participating in this activity, some may be unaware that they are involved and almost all are blind to the long-term effects.

You glanced at your roommate's organic tests from last year. You drive to State College to locate cliff notes for "The Iliad" just to help you a little with the essay. You look over a friend's paper to gain a better perspective on the subject matter (before you write your own). You tap someone else's knowledge on the history essays to ultimately make your answers easier to write.

There are numerous more examples of such activities, but the point has been made. These occurences do not surprise any JC student because we are merely being resourceful and "just borrowing". I want to catagorize this process to be nothing less than cheating--actually stealing another's ideas to pass as one's own. There are those students who have become adept at borrowing another's work or ideas and there is little punishment for such a crime.

Cheating, and only obvious cheating on an exam, for example, can result in failure on the test or for the course. But, the theft of another's ideas is not easily detected. The success rate of this endeavor is not because of its insignificance. One's education is ultimately based on a foundation that must be strong enough to endure the trials and tribulations of life. A foundation is weakened by ideas and accomplishments that belong to someone else. Somewhere, sometime in the future, your foundation may be tested and this history of borrowing may come back to haunt you.

One's academic integrity is of the utmost importance to students. We are truly working hard to insure a brighter future for ourselves, one with a potential for success. Juniata College is prepared to give each one of us a strong and enduring foundation and we must build upon that honestly so that it may never be taken away. Juniata's motto-veritas liberat-reflects one's personal integrity that will lead you away from the detrimental effects of "borrowing".

Power 92 resignations begin

Dear Editor:

After six years of being a DJ, a year and a half which has been spent at WKVR, I've given up the position of assistant music director, and have dropped from the evaluation committee. The reason for this withdrawl is due to the fact that personal opinions are suddenly a dreaded stand and to do so, one opens one's self up to persecution.

Jen Wade expressed her opinion two issues ago in this newspaper. As a result, three letters were written which attacked her and not the points her letter brought up. I wish to address these points and hopefully shed some, to quote one of the letters, "biased" light on the subject.

A survey was done last year, as readers who have followed the editorial section of this newspaper know, and changes were made. A number of specialty shows were incorporated into the weekly schedule. Problem number one. These shows tend to move the station to what is known in the radio business as "Block Formatting". Block formatting does not cater to the listeners. It caters to a schedule. Listeners who want to hear "their" type of music, therefore must schedule their time to hear it. The reply to this could possibly be, "if they want to hear it so badly, they "tape it". True, but this goes against the purpose of radio. Personally, when I want to hear a tape, I'll plug in a tape, but radio is something that should be spontaneous, something that can be flipped on when one's tape collection is getting slim because of the lack of money college students have.

Speaking of money, tuition costs cover a number of areas. The money students pay to get an education at Juniata College also covers college organizaions partially. It was stated that Power 92 isn't anyone's personal jukebox. In part, I beg to differ. If JC students are submitting their money to cover organizations, like Power 92, shouldn't they have some sort of say in what gets played on the air and when it gets played? Technically, one could say that WKVR is the personal jukebox of Juniata College because our "quarters", that is, our tuition money, gets plugged into this jukebox.

I know that by writing this letter, I'm opening myself up to the kind of treatment Ms. Wade has received, but after witnessing the current state of things, I'll take that chance.

It's a shame. I'm going to miss being a DJ. I've been doing it for so long now that it's become a major part of my life, just like WKVR had once been, the seniors tell me, a major part of campus life. And, to the DJ, whoever you may be, who's to take over my show from two to five on Tuesday, I hope you enjoy it. I couldn't, and don't, and wouldn't dream of being kept down by this type of stifflation.

Thanks,
Janine Hyde

Senior DJ faults WKVR management

Dear Editor:

I regret writing this letter, but I feel the necessity to do so burning inside me. I have enjoyed being the DJ and catering to the listening public by playing requests ever since the second half of my freshman year. Now I'm a senior and I resign my position as DJ at WKVR.

I will not be a part of (and thus support the workings of) a radio station whose Station Manager and Program and Music Directors slanderously attack a member of the WKVR "family" in the editorial section of "The Juniatian" merely because she wrote a factual letter to the Editor of the paper expressing her opinion (an opinion held by many other students on this campus). Then I hear how the News and Program Directors said over the air that this "family member" is very respected at the station. If she is so respected, why is her name equated with degrading terminology on the wall of the radio station office, I'd like to know. This name-calling is definitely professionalism at its best! (sarcasm intended)

I will not be a part of a radio station where records (some new music, some classic music) are pulled from the shelves without the knowledge of the DJs. Rather akin to the book-burnings in Germany in the years between 1932 and 1945, except worse...these activities at WKVR are done secretly--in the Third Reich they were done openly. The DJs should he made aware of their resources, even if they are limited ones.

Furthermore, I will not be a part of a radio station which is full of hypocrisy in regards to its mission statement. "It is the intent of WKVR to, first of all, provide a central means for communication among all individuals and recognized organizations of the community and the college, appealing to as many potential listeners as possible..." Within a group the size of the Juniata student body, there exists a range of music tastes wider than that which any single board of executives can comprehend. Why, then, are any records pulled at all? I have been unable to for quite some time to play many requested songs--not because the station never acquired these particular albums, but because these albums are locked away in the Programming Department Office. O.K., I can understand dance music and the like being reserved for specialty shows, but the clutches of the record pullers have gone much deeper than that. Many new albums which are on the charts for college stations across the country are pulled simply because no one has heard them yet. Oldies albums are pulled because it is believed no one listens to these songs anymore. But when the station manager made it clear in his letter to the editor in the Juniatian that the listening public could tune in to WRLR if not satisfied with the music at WKVR, I understood the apathy of the station towards the student body in full force. In my mind, that's not what a college radio station is about. My apologies to the Chief Announcer. I resign.

92 complaints grow in number

Power 92: The same old crap in a different wrapper or The Kremlin comes to Juniata.

To the Editor,

This evening I decided to turn on Power 92, not a normal occurence, and see how they sounded. Well instead of my ears being embraced or in some cases tormented by the sounds of music, I was greeted by the voices of John Ehman and Mike Barnett giving an even further explanation of the "new" Power 92 philosophy. For those of you who did not read last week's Juniatian their was a barrage of letters to the editor from board members of Power 92 in response to an opinionated letter written by Jen Wade. First I would like to compliment Jen for having the guts to write that letter, full knowing of the ramifications from it, but saying the things that have needed to be said for quite some time.

Like Jen, I too am a DJ at Power 92 and have been for quite some time, and I have seen the changes made and the unsuccess they have had. My freshman year on a Friday afternoon if you walked across North lawn you could hear WKVR being played in Sherwood, North and Tussey Terrace, as well as the rest of the campus. During my sophomore year, after a survey was taken at the end of my freshman year, they decided to change to a strict AOR format. The reason given was "the people are sick of Pop music". The entire campus stopped listening to WKVR after the change.

On this evenings broadcast with Mr. Ehman, Mr. Barnett said, "we are proud of our listenership." Well if you haven't noticed there isn't much of a listenership anymore. He went on to say that "Jen is a very respected DJ down here at the station." And yet one of your own board members called her opinions and accusations "ignorant."

Which brings me to another point. You all insist Miss Wade is "misinformed." I beg to differ because she is probably more informed than the board. From your own survey you saw that people want to here more Top 40, which down at WKVR is a bad word. People stated they liked to hear the Police and so forth which you sighted as being in the current AOR format, but they happen to have had a hell of a lot of Top 40 songs. People stated to the station that they wanted more Pop Rock (Pop standing for POPULAR). You claim to have granted the people's wishes by adding more specialty shows (namely more of the Weekend Warmup and the new Power Party hour). What you are doing in essence is curving the listening habits of a population to your format rather than changing your format to the listening habits of the population.

You have stated on several occassions that "if they don't like what we are playing they can listen to someone else." This is an awful arrogant stance for a small college station.

You also stated you "are not the campus' personal jukebox." Yet as Chris Queiry a member of Center Board has stated, "it is the quarters of the students that are going into keeping that jukebox going." And as I stated before you claim you have made the changes requested but only in a way which suits your own ends. You also made comments of comparing the school station to several big city radio stations. The only problem with your comparison was that you compared the wrong thing. The one thing in which all stations should have in common is to strive to meet the wants of every person in the area. You also keep telling people if they have a problem with the station to come see you (you being the board members), but not all people can attend your meetings every week and why should people make any sort of a collective effort when all your going to do is say "you really don't know what you are talking about, next order of business," or "okay we'll create a new specialty show so you can listen to it at this time." I have no real right to make this accusation because I have never been to one of your meetings. But I have seen how you work and the way you take survey results and interpret them to your own ends. It was stated by one member of the board that "we are one of the few college stations which has a strict AOR format and we are proud." But if no one else is really on a strict AOR format why should we? And there is limit to being proud when it starts to become shear stubborness and arrogance.

So gentlemen I put it to you, a college campus has many different people with many different tastes, while having very diverse listening habits. People who do not listen to the radio often like to turn on the radio and normally hear something they recognize, not all avantgarde music. The people want to be able to hear different things at different times depending on their mood, not being made to be in a dance mood every Friday night from 6-9pm. So why lock up records like Lionel Richie and Billy Ocean who many people like to hear depending on their mood. Release the records and leave music choices up to the DJ. Have enough faith in them to attract the listeners. It worked before, and with some of the ideas you have it can work again.

Sincerely,
Brian Broking (DJ)

Sense of purpose for JC

Dear Editor,

I applaud your editorial comments in the October 29th edition of the Juniatian (Editor's Note: the editorial in reference was a guest editorial written by Dr. Robert Neff).

Over the past few years the Carnegie Foundation has concluded through numerous studies that "all is not right with higher education."

However, those of us close to Juniata college--as students, alumni, faculty, staff, parents, or friends--needn't resort to blindless optimism to assess the impact of our College in a much more encouraging light. Why? Because there is a quality education here--in abundance.

The students, faculty, staff at Juniata do share a feeling of purpose. There is a sense of community and connectedness, which taken together, are vital components to providing a high quality learning environment. The value of a superior liberal arts education does take precendence over easy notions of career training or mere credentialing. The spirit of this institution and the specific accomplishments of its people are everlasting sources of collective pride and inspiration.

No, Juniata isn't a "perfect" institution, and it probably never will be a "perfect" institution, but because of the quality of education that takes place here, it is a College that has earned the recognition, respect, and support of many.

There is a lot to be proud of about Juniata, and the source of that pride comes from its people--people who share "vision and values" for the future of this fine institution of higher learning.

Respectfully yours,
Garrett W. Hoover

Handicapped access is an issue

Editor's Note: The following letter has been received from a Juniata student who is studying abroad-thanks for the input!

Dear Editor,

I would like to once again bring up the question that Alex Jones posed in the October 8, issue of the Juniatian, the question of a handicapped student attending classes at Juniata.

Alex pointed out that every building at Juniata terribly suits the needs of a person in a wheelchair. Perhaps the administration's answer is simple, "Don't accept anyone who requires a wheelchair for mobility." What would happen if one of the students already attending Juniata, very successful academically and athletically, had an accident which required them to use a wheelchair? Would they want to change colleges because of their handicap when all of their friends, credits and numerous hours of hard work were here at Juniata? Is that really fair?

As humans it is normal to take our health and abilities for granted. On the other hand, as humans it is our duty to change situations when they hinder other's abilities to be equal to us.

I must agree with Alex in saying that Juniata cannot be considered an equally providing college unless the proper facilities are installed to suit the special needs of the handicapped.

Donnell Orleski

PS I would like to add, I comment on this topic because someone very close to me recently had an accident requiring him to use a wheelchair. He also attends a small, liberal arts college in PA. Without this college's proper facilities, he would not be able to continue his studies at this institution.

Many feel a need for facilities

Dear Editor,

I recently saw the October 15, 1987, Juniatian and the editorial, cartoon and letter from Mike Funk regarding Juniata's inadequate facilities for the handicapped.

It disturbs me that a fine institution is excluding individuals who may be able to make a valuable contribution to the Juniata community but are unable to do so because of the inaccessibility of most of the campus to wheelchair-bound individuals.

I understand that the corrective measures involved (ramps, elevators, etc.) will be expensive. However, I believe I speak for many Juniata alumni when I say that the Juniata community would be very generous in contributing to such a project.

When I attended LaSalle College (now LaSalle University) in the mid 1970's, all of the campus (except dormitories) including buildings more than 150 years old were wheelchair accessible. While LaSalle may be a little larger than Juniata, I do not believe its financial position was any better than Juniata's.

As a part of Juniata's continued commitment to excellence, steps should be taken as soon as possible to insure that Juniata will be available to all students who wish to become a part of the Juniata Experience. In the long run, Juniata will be much stronger if such steps are taken.

Sincerely,
Michael Dennchy, Esquire

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

Mr. William L. Clark, Treatment Director of Tallyrand Retreat, Executive Director of William L. Clark Associates, and a recognized expert in the area of substance abuse, was the keynote speaker last week as part of the National Collegiate Drug and Alcohol Awareness Week at Juniata College.

Clark, who is also an instructor in the Chemical Dependency Counseling Certification Program at Penn State, began his presentation by dispelling some myths associated with alcoholism.

The first and perhaps the most commonly held myth is that alcoholics are down-and-out, skid row bums. To the contrary, Clark indicated that five Penn State professors have received treatment at Tallyrand over the past few years. (It should be noted that Tallyrand Retreat is a 22 bed, in-patient treatment center for chemical abusers).

Another example presented by Clark to dispel this myth is the fact that he works with several State College firms such as Corning Glass and HRB-Singer in their employee assistance programs. Many top executives, managers, and supervisors in these hightech companies have been treated for alcohol and drug abuse by Clark and his associates.

A component of Juniata's IBWI program (Irresponsible Behavior While under the Influence) is a visit to an AA meeting in State College. Among other things, one of the most lasting impressions students get from the meeting is how articulate, well-dressed and ordinary AA people really are.

A second myth attributed alcoholics is that they drink every day. The fact of the matter is that they drink primarily on weekends and, according to Clark, can be considered weekend drunks. Monday is the day of recovery; Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday are dry-out days; and the cycle begins again on Friday and runs through Sunday.

Clark, who works primarily in the Bellefonte and State College areas, offered some alarming statistics regarding alcohol abuse in the state of Pennsylvania. We'll look at them next time and discuss their implications for all of us.

Until then, be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

Olympic gifts

As late as 1912, at Stockholm, victors of the modern Olympic Games were crowned with wreaths fashioned from leaves——in addition to receiving trophies and medallions. Olympic champions in Berlin in 1936 were awarded oak-leaf saplings, suitably potted for replanting in the victor's homeland.

By Matt Varner

After a brief disappearnce from the airwaves , sponsorships have returned to WKVR-FM (Power 92)! The resurrection of these sponsorships is mainly twofold in reasoning - to generate funds in order to go stereo and to reinforce Power 92's community involvement.

Sponsorships are a division of the business department of Power 92. Headed by our fearless leader, Mr. Shawn Peck, the business department offers anyone the chance to improve his skills in the fields of business or radio. Sponsorship Promotions Director, Ann Telfeian, has recently joined the staff and is doing a great job with the recorded carts.

So far the response has been very good with business such as IGA Village Market, Sheetz at 14th and Moore, Fox's Pizza, Mama G's and Tapes and Things sponsoring specialty shows. Quality Beverage and the Original Italian Pizza have been sponsors for the football season. Contacts with other businesses are in progress to expand from this base of firms.

Our prices are very reasonanble and the very limit to our charge is $100/month for a 3 hour specialty show. Every other slot or program is below this. Also, the sponsoring of a Power 92 feature means a tax deduction to businesses.

The sponsorship committee could always use fresh blood and ideas. If you would like to become a part of Power 92's sponsorship task force, contact Shawn peck, Ann Telfeian or me - Matt Varner. We would appreciate the assistance.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

By Jen Wade

You've seen him in the movies. You've seen him in the movies. You've seen him in the movies. You've seen him in the movies so many times that you've lost track of how many times you actually have seen him in the movies. Now you can see him on TV, too.

Yes, while home relaxing from half-a-semester's-worth of hard, mind-draining schoolwork, I thought a little television might be just the thing to put those Beta brain waves to sleep for a while and let the Alphas take over. In other words, I spent Saturday night vegging in front of the tube. So, at 8pm I got myself a beer and some munchies and watched "Werewolf".

Well, you know how networks like to plug their own shows with a few promos before, during, and after the show you really want to watch, trying to convince you to stay on the couch for the entire week and not even bother to stretch that extra inch for the remote control? And you also know how sometimes you're not quite sure if these little plugs are for television shows or movies until the very end? Such was the case with one that came on before "Werewolf". For those who are not fans of the show, or who tuned in a little late, I'll end the suspense right now. The ad was for "Friday the 13th--THE SERIES".

(I'd tell you when to watch, but, unfortunately, I was so horrified, uh, I mean excited, at the prospect of seeing something of this nature on a weekly basis, that I forgot to listen to that part. You'll just have to watch Fox all the time and find out for yourselves.)

The trailer began by showing a fairly handsome guy (we'll call him Junior)--probably Jason's brother, cousin, or son who hasn't drowned a few times, and who has a knack for avoiding the axes that so often end up in Jason's head--and a girl (we'll call her Angela) kissing in a dark alley. Segue to the inside of a car. Junior says he has a present for Angela and hands her a beehive--bees included. Angela was decidedly unimpressed by this display of affection, and a series of loud screams ensued.

And, what kind of horror series would this be without long chases in which we discover that both innocent Angela and evil Junior are really Olympic athletes, naturally possessed of more speed, stamina, and gymnastic ability than you or I could ever hope to achieve? Sure enough, Angela jumped out of the car, ran through the woods (remembering to fall at least once, slightly spraining her ankle, but continuing bravely to run despite the pain), and ended up lost in the maze of pipes underneath the hallowed halls of the local high school. Junior, not content to wait in the car until Angela returned, chased her, drawing closer and closer while blue bolts of demonic power shot from his finger tips and increasingly threatened to turn poor Angela into a french fry.

All this action in a promo! Just imagine seeing scenes like this on a weekly basis instead of waiting six months for the next movie to come out!

I guess what I really want to know is why movies and TV shows like this are so popular. I can pretty much count on one hand the number of slasher films I've seen, but that only proves that I'm a minority of one. What attraction do these shows possess that makes teenagers flock to the theaters like JC students flock to the library? (Well, perhaps that's a poor analogy, but you know what I mean.)

Is it because they're funny? For instance, in a scene from "Nightmare On Elm Street", Freddy's first victim is thrown all over her bedroom by his psychic powers while he slashes her to death with his five-inch razor-blade fingers. I personally found it hilarious to see this girl mutilated while performing amazing gymnastic feats in mid-air. She splattered blood all over the walls and ceiling as she flew around the room! But maybe I missed the point.

Or, is it because they're filled with suspense and are so scary that you have to cling to your date just to prove to yourself that "it's only a movie?" Maybe it's not the suspense part, but the clinging part that provides the attraction. Now I know why they're the longest-running, most popular films at drive-ins. Since I never frequented our local drive-in, maybe I missed that point, too.

Well, since I seem to have missed quite a lot during my teenage years, there's only one thing for me to do: I will devote the next year to making up for lost time. I will watch slasher films on my VCR and at the theaters. I will find out when "Friday the 13th--the Series" is on TV, and will faithfully watch every week. This I promise.

Yank's Back For His 6th Year

By Deb Dougherty

Bob "Yank" Yanckello, the Resident Director of Cloister, has been around Huntingdon for many years. He attended Juniata College, where he received a management degree. While in college, Yank participated in football and track and was a student government senator for off-campus housing.

Now that Bob is back at Juniata for his sixth year, he is still very active on campus. Besides being involved with the RHA in Cloister, Yank helps out with conferences, is Research Assistant for the Planning Office, and does odd-n-ends for Student Services when he is asked. He tries to keep updated and support all of the groups on campus.

The RHA at Cloister is doing a good job, but Yank would like to see them function in a manner which is beneficial to the people living there. They should serve themselves so that they are happy and meet they own needs.

The relationships with the students is Bob's favorite part of his job. He loves being involved with the students. He doesn't know what to expect at times, so the job is occasionally "eye-opening."

Yank feels his main duty as RD is "creating and maintaining a cohesive atmoshere in which students enjoy living, growing, and developing as people." His main goal for Cloister is to fix up the appearance inside the building. Although the atmosphere is more important that the appearance, people need to perceive the building as something nice. Yank said that "it's nothing a coat of paint won't fix."

Bob is presently taking courses at Penn State University toward his Master Degree in Higher Education Administration. He would like to obtain a position in Educational Planning or Student Services after he has completed his studies.

Bob loves the college atmosphere and has gotten positive feelings at Juniata College. He feels the college is developmental and helps each student grow as an individual.

Wayfarer's Journal

By Rebecca Abraham

I can't believe I'm writing this-last year I told myself I would never write a Wayfarer's Journal, but reading four issues of the Juniatian in one sitting can do funny things to a person. You people at home probably can't appreciate this, but I actually look FORWARD to getting that eight page paper.

In fact, there are a lot of things I used to take for granted that I don't anymore - like napkins (except over here a napkin is a diaper...a serviette is a napkin) and beverages at meals (if I get there early enough, I might get lucky and get water - no ice, of course)...and if you think it rains in Huntingdon, come to Cheltenham. It even rains when the sun is shining...and the spoons - picture this: I'm sitting at dinner (which is called supper or tea and lunch is called dinner) with a bowl of soup in front of me. The only utensil I can use to eat this soup is the size of a large serving spoon or a small spatula. The only other spoon option is the size one would use to feed a very small child. And the food that I eat with this spoon...I will NEVER complain about Baker food again. EVER. Enough said. Speaking of eating, it must be a universal law that people have to line up (sorry, queue up) a half-hour before the meal actually starts.

Cheltenham has Huntingdon beat hands down though. It's beautiful and people walk everywhere. I never would've dreamt of walking (God forbid) to OIP, but that's nothing here. A mile walk down the ment (sidewalk) to get chips (french fries) is common, as long as you watch out for oncoming lorries (trucks) or you're liable to wind up on the bonnet (hood) of an oncoming car and would be taken to hospital (they leave out the "the" before "university" and "hospital"). Of course, they drive on the wrong side of the road here. But, just push the pelican (crossing signal) button, and it'll tell you when to cross. Make sure you throw your chips trash in the dust bin (trash can). If you see one of your tutors ("professors" here teach only at Oxford and Cambridge-"tutors" teach everywhere else) or he's likely to ring up (call) the Principal (College President) and report you. Yes, there really IS a language barrier.

Just in passing...I asked a woman where a bathroom was and was given a funny look, but directions to the bathroom nonetheless. I walked down the hall, turned right, and opened the door to a room with a tub in it. I should've asked for a toilet (sounds crude, doesn't it?) Do you know how embarrassing it is to ask a ten year old for a rubber (an eraser)? It's so nice to go into a guy's room and have him ask me if I'd like a cup of coffee or tea - and no, he doesn't make me make it myself, either.

All joking aside, I really will be glad to be back on campus. There have been times in the past two years when I've never thought I'd say that, but a semester away has really made me appreciate JC a lot more. I've read a lot of complaints in the Juniatian about the same old story of "nothing to do." My advice is: enjoy it and appreciate it. JC has so much going that most of us don't even realize it. I'm realizing it because the social scene here leaves a lot to be desired. Lounge parties are actually appealing to me. Yes, that's how scary the situation is. But of course, by the time I get home there might not be any more lounge parties. So, live it up while I'm not there - except you, Chris.

Well, Juniata, I'll see you in January. Have a nice winter holiday (vacation).

Cheers! (Bye!)

Spend your Junior year Abroad!

By Margaret Gonglewski

You can spend your junior year at Juniata. You will attend classes, spend your afternoons in lab, eat at Baker, and play intramural sports for another--that's certainly your option. Or you could spend your junior year in a different country: take a class trip to ski in the Alps, live down the road from a Medieval castle, and feast on croissants, good dark beer, and other delicassies as a part of everyday life!

Juniata offers you this choice through International Programs and Brethren Colleges Abroad, and sophomores, now is the time to think our decision out carefully. One semester or an entire year away from Huntingdon and away from home will change your life. One student who returned from a year in France commented, "My year abroad broadened my world sensibilities in a way that my junior year in Huntingdon never could."

Find out more about the opportunities available to you. Specific country meetings for sophomores begin tonight, November 4 at 8pm in South's Carpeted Lounge (meeting for England Study Abroad Opportunities). At 9pm is a meeting for France and Japan; and on Monday evening, November 9, people interested in Germany or China should meet at 8pm; those interested in Spain and Mexico will meet at 9pm. All meetings will be in South's Carpeted Lounge.

CENTER CHAIR

The question of Ellis College Center's social ability has been raised by students, alumni, and administration. In response to this, Centerboard has proposed the following college center programming:

- Thursday evening before dinner live entertainment and mocktails will be provided for students in Ellis lobby.
- Friday nights will be "Rec Night" following the Film Series presentation. The recreation room in Ellis will be open for competition in pool, ping pong, video games, and darts. Gift certificates from Tote will be awarded and refreshments will be provided.
- Saturday evenings will feature an "Open Mike" night in Totem Inn. Steve Lecrone and Brian McCallum, formerly of "Used Furniture", will host the program. Students, faculty, and administration are all invited to perform in a coffeehouse setting. The Open Mike will begin at 9pm or directly following any other campus sponsored event be it athletic, cultural, etc.

Totem Inn is now equipped with a juke box for student use. Tote will also feature Rock World video presentations on the large screen tv on the weekends.

Centerboard hopes that these programs, in conjunction with continued Baker Refectory events, will enhance the social atomosphere for students in Ellis College Center. Students are encouraged to participate in these and all of Centerboard's programs. Any suggestions or comments regarding and Centerboard event can be forwarded to Bill Huston or Karen D'Angelo at Box 888.

JC Band Ends Its 1987 Season

On Saturday, November 7, at 8:15 in Oller Hall, the Juniata Concert Band will present "Fall Finale". This concert will commemorate the ending of the marching season and the beginning of the stage band series.

The band will play a variety of selections. Several overtures will be played along with a waltz, suite, and an Irish tune. The band has worked hard to prepare for the concert and it is bound to be a success.

Come on out Sunday and join the band in their celebration of a new season.

"Charley's Aunt" Was A Smashing Success

By Jen Wade

On October 29,30, and 31, Juniata College presented its fall play in Oller Auditorium. This year's performance, "Charley's Aunt", was written by Brandon Thomas and starred Ty A. Furman as Charley. Tommy Kochel played his friend, Jack Chesney, and Walt Cupit played the role of Lord Fancourt Babberly, friend to Jack and Charley.

Directed by Kari Dubbel, the play opens with Charley and Jack, two Oxford University students, plotting to lure their girlfriends, Amy Spettigue (Petra Kleine) and Kitty Verdun (Mary E. White), into Jack's rooms. The men want to propose to Amy and Kitty, but Charley feels that he must first get the permission of his aunt, Donna Lucia d'Alvadorez (Juliette Nicko), whom he has never seen but who has put him through school. Donna d'Alvadorez is expected for lunch, but cancels at the last minute. Lord Babberly is then pressed into service to fill the role, a move which creates confusion and hilarity for the remainder of the play.

Much of the humor in the play arose from frequent cases of mistaken identity and misunderstandings between characters. While masquerading as Donna d'Alvadorez, Lord Babberly received marriage proposals from Jack's father, Colonel Francis Chesney (Brian Kerr) and Amy's father, Stephen Spettique (Erich Eichensehr), while simultaneously contending with the unexpected arrival of his true love, Ela Delahay (Mandy Wilderman), and her benefactor, the real Donna d'Alvadorez.

The audience, which increased steadily in size during the play's run, had a close-up view of the action as chairs and bleachers were placed on the stage itself. This arrangement increased audience involvement in the play by virtually making them part of it.

In addition to those already mentioned, the play also featured Jon Matthews as Brasset the butler. Behind-the-scenes credit goes to Patty Stepp, Janine Hyde, Brian Miller, Amy Weaver, Sharon Cadman, and Lisa Mitschang.

"Charley's Aunt" featured the work of two conniving young men, Ty Furman (left) who played Charley Wyckeham, and Tommy Kochel as Jack Chesney. Note the presence of the audience on stage, as the Juniata Players performed in-the-round.

Dr. Roberts lectured on Humor as a Virtue

By Megan Hartman

Last Sunday, October 27, at 8:15 pm, Dr. Robert Roberts spoke on the senses of humor as a Christian virtue. The lecture was held in the faculty lounge in Ellis Hall. Dr. Roberts divided the lecture into five different topics. The topics were: perception of incongruity, perpestivity, dissociation, freshness and enjoyment.

A Christian sense of humor is a dimension of Christian discernment or wisdom. A Christian perspective is when a whole range of incongruities become visible to a person. To inherit a sense of humor about Christianity is adopting Christians to see the incongruities.

Perspectivity is a "sense for the normal." Non-Christians can enjoy a Christian humor because they can adopt the Christian perspective. This makes Christian humor a powerful education device. Dr. Roberts talked about the different levels of perspectivity. Adopting a perspective is when the perspective is accesible to the person.

The last level is owning a perspective. Perspective is a deep sense of one's own spontaneity. The three types of individuals are these who lack the Christian perspective, those who have the Christian perspective but do not own it, and the ones who own the Christian perspective. The people who own the Christian perspective are saints, and the people in a Christian sense of humor are full of virtue.

A Christian sense of humor is a form of Christian humility. In the Christian personality a person is already "dissociated" from his foibles (sins) because Christianity fits one particular wall for having a sense of humor about oneself. When you "dissociated" yourself from something you actually "distance" yourself from it.

Laughing at yourself is like laughing at the incongruity within yourself. The incongruity of the Christian virtue is that the Christians laugh at Christian humor. They laugh t what is normal for us.

When a person adapts the Christian sense of humor, they get a glimpse of another world from the Christian view. Alienation is eliminated when humor is made friendly. When we laugh at somebody like us, we are really laughing at a part of ourselves. Some people laugh at themselves by seeing the incongruity of themselves. Christian incongruitues within God's world is where they laugh at our foibles. When foibles go deep in us they emerge as humiliation.

As "vision" Christian amusement is participation in the Christian perspective. Freshness is the vision or intuition that gives a vivid perception of the truth. A non-Christian can actually see the world as a Christian.

The pleasure of humor is one thing that make Christian humor "seductive" and thus a powerful device of Christian evengelism. A sense of humor is not Christian unless it is allied with Christian compassion and hope. Enjoyment helps us preserve spiritual incongruity. An individual cannot have one virtue without having some other virtues.

Soccer Team Splits Two Season Coming To End

By Jen Wade

In their last full week of competition, Juniata's soccer team scored three goals in winning one game and losing the other.

Last Wednesday the team travelled to Bloomsburg to take on a solid Divison II team. They expected Bloomsburg to dominate the game, but the Indians also thought they could keep the score close. The game went as expected with Bloomsburg winning 2-1.

Bloomsburg controlled the ball for much of the first half. They opened the scoring in the first 10 minutes of the game putting the ball past keeper Tim Phelps and into the lower left corner of the net. Later in the half Phelps suffered a concussion when kicked in the head while making a save. John Bobko played the rest of the game in goal for the Indians.

Bloomsburg scored their second goal off a corner kick about 20 minutes into the second half. With about 15 minutes left in the game, Steve Grater finallly got JC on the board. He converted on a penalty kick which was awarded when the Bloomsburg goalie held Mike Kaufman and prevented him from getting to the ball.

Matt Reber, who played well from his center halfback position, almost came up with the tying goal. With about 10 seconds remaining in the game, his shot from 25 yards out went over the crossbar by inches and preserved the win for Bloomsburg.

On Saturday the Indians played their last home game of the season and came up with a 2-0 win over a shorthanded University of Pittsburgh-Bradford team. UPB brought only 10 players to the game, and injuries forced them to play about half the game with only nine players on the field.

Dave Wright scored both JC goals, adding one in each half. His first goal came 30 minutes into the first half as he put the ball pass the UPB keeper from close range. At the same point in the second half, Wright deflected a Jeff May crossing pass into the lower left corner of the net from about 10 yards out for his second goal of the day. John Bobko played the entire game in the net for the Indians and was not severely tested.

The week's results bring the Indians' record to 3-9-2. They travelled to Shippensburg over the weekend to close out the season against another good Division II team. JC was looking to avenge the 5-0 defeat they suffered last year.

Hockey Action

By Deb Dougherty

The hockey team travelled to Wilkes-Barre Sunday, November 1, to play in the USFHA Susquehanna Club Tournaments. There were a total of seven club teams registered to participate.

Juniata's club team played six half-hour games. They tied three and lost three of their matches. In overall team competition the Lady Hackers placed sixth, scoring three points.

Despite the low team ranking, eight Juniata players were selected to participate in competition again this weekend at Chambersburg. The 35 girls selected were divided into three teams. Joanne Thomas was chosen to play on the first team. Kathy McGowen, Jill Schadler and Becky Swigart are on the second team; and Mickey Hoffman, Amy Blough, Jennifer Dippery and Deborah Dougherty were selected to play on the third team. Good luck to these girls this weekend.

Susquehanna Defeats JC 14-13
MAC Title Out Of Reach

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata Indians saw their hopes at a share of the MAC title slip away this past weekend when they lost a close game to Susquehanna 14-13. The Indians needed Wilkes to beat Widener, it happened, but they also had to defeat Susquehanna, they didn't.

Juniata was not without its chances, missing three field goals and an extra point, and also turning the ball over five times. Juniata's ground game was almost non-existent only getting credit for 25 net yards. However, after trailing 14-0 at halftime the Indians made an impressive comeback and actually had a chance to win the game with less than two minutes to go, but a 32 yard field goal by freshman O'Neill was no good.

The Indians started out with the momentum on their side. On the second play from scrimmage John Sparh intercepted a Bryan Griffie pass and gave the JC offense the ball on their own 46 yard line. The Indians ran three plays and punted, but their fortunes were answered when Sparh did the same exact thing on Susquehanna's next series.

This time Juniata started on the Susquehanna 27 yard line, managed a first down and set up a 29 yard fieldgoal for Kieth Watson. Watson's attempt was no good and Susquehanna took over. This time SU's second play from scrimmage didn't result in a Juniata interception but rather a Joe Witt 81 yard touchdown run. After the conversion failed Susquehanna led 6-0 with 9:15 remaining in the first quarter.

The rest of the quarter resulted in four points and a Cubby Davis interception pass, but at the start of the second period Susquehanna scored on three plays. The drive was capped off when Griffie hit Al Bucci on a seven yard touchdown pass. SU's decision to go for a two point conversion turned out to be the deciding factor in the game. Griffie found Witt in the endzone and SU led with 13:58 remaining in the half.

The only other scoring chance in the second quarter belonged to the Indians. After driving down to the Susquehanna ten yard line a fourth and seventh situation brought Keith Watson to try a 27 yard field goal. Watson's kick was wide and SU helped on to their 14-0 lead. The half ended with the score the same.

After a Dan Crossey fumble Susquehanna drove to Juniata's 42 yard line, where Mark Dorner intercepted one of his three passes of the day. Dorner now has 12 interceptions for the year and leads the nation (division I,II,III) in number of interceptions for the season. Dorner interception set up JC's first score, a Cubby Davis to Don Betar touchdown pass. Watson added the extra point and JC trailed 14-7 with 11:03 remaining in the third quarter.

Dorner, once again, stalled a SU drive by picking off his second pass of the day, this time in the endzone stopping a SU scoring chance. After an exchange of punt's, Juniata mounted their next scoring drive. On first and ten, Davis hit Betar for a 44 yard gain moving the ball down to the Susquehanna 36 yard line. Four plays later Davis hit Cottle for a 24 yard touchdown and Juniata was within one point. However, and unfortunately, that is as close as Juniata would get. Kieth Watson's punt was no good with 1:27 remaining in the third quarter.

After a series of punts Juniata moved the ball down to SU's 37 yard line. On second and seven a Davis pass was intercepted by Bob Smith and the Indian drive was stalled. On the next Juniata possession Susquehanna caused another turnover, only to have Mark Dorner intercept the ball right back on the following play.

Juniata moved the ball down to the Susquehanna 15 yard line with just under two minutes to play. After the missed field goal the JC defense stopped Susquehanna on four plays and had one more chance. JC managed to get three plays off and a hail mary pass ended the game with Susquehanna ahead 14-13.

Nuch's notes: Cubby Davis was 18 for 35 for 285 yards with a long of 59 yards and was sacked four times. Davis hit Mike Cottle eight times for 141 yards, Don Betar five times for 61 yards, and Frank Phelps twice for 49 yards. John Sparh had two interceptions, Tim Kirsh had one, and Dorner three.

JC had nine first downs and 310 net yards offense for a 4.7 average, as compared to SU's eight first downs, 245 total offense, for a 3.7 yard average. JC was penalized seven times for 45 yards. JC was only 1 of 17 on third down conversions, SU was only 2 of 16.

The Juniata defense played a well-rounded team game with seven players recording six tackles or more. Ray Witmer led the way with 13 tackles, Frank Gay had 12, Greg St.Clair had nine, Steve Campbell had eight and one sack, Dave Ritter had eight and two sacks, and Chuck Rihn had seven-and-a-half with one-half sacks.

This weekend the Indians return to College Hill to host Wilkes. Wilkes is involved in the three way tie for first place and Juniata is ready to try and knock them out of contention. Game time is 1:30.

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXVIII No. 9 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 November 12, 1987

Dr. Robert Bowman presents a lecture tonight on Star Wars and its effect on our future. This is a must see lecture. Lecture time is 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall.

Tonight: Dr. Robert Bowman Speaks On Star Wars In Our Future

By Suzanne Lydic

Tonight at 8:15 in Alumni Hall, the Baker Peace Institute, Centerboard, and Student Government are proud to bring you a lecture by the famed Dr. Robert Bowman.

Bowman who served a 22-year career in the Air Force is highly knowledgeable in the areas of weaponry development. He served as the Directory of Advanced Space Programs in which he oversaw a half billion dollars worth of space programs including High Energy Laser developments, advanced surveillance spacecraft, radar and infrared satellite systems, and space vehicle subsystems.

Bowman also served as the Director of Ballistic Systems and Head of the Aeronautical Engineering Department and Assistant Dean at the Air Force Institute of Technology. Dr. Bowman was also responsible for the European Office of Aerospace Research and Development in London from 1971-1974. He was educated at the Armed Forces Staff College, the Air War College, and Cal Tech. His combatant duty brought him two dozen decorations along with the chance to visit 34 different countries. And still another accomplishment of Bowman's is the publishment of his book "Star Wars: Defense or Death Star?" and several other articles in a wide variety of fields.

Dr. Bowman is currently the President of the Institute for Space and Security Studies in Maryland. This institute was founded to research and develop educational activities in the science and strategy of national security.

Timothy Lange of the Colorado Daily (Boulder) exubes, "Bowman is a threat to the Pentagon's space-weapons program because he not only knows what he's talking about, he talks persuasively to audiences to middle Americans."

"Bob Bowman has been an invaluable resource to me. There seems to be no limit to the depth of his knowledge of space weapons. Even more important is the quality of his thinking," reports Congressman Tom Downey.

Undoubtedly, tonight's lecture by Dr. Bowman will be highly credible and informative on the world's space military scene. This is certainly something you do not want to miss! After all, our generation is the one that is going to have to live with the technology and build-up of these weapons.

WAC Presents Lecture On Careers In Gov't Relations

The Women's Action Committee has teamed up with the Student Leadership Development Committee to present the first lecture in a series of five. Sunday, November 15 at 7:15 p.m. in the Ballroom of Ellis Hall, Tracy Smith will address the topic of networking and careers for women in government relations.

Currently, Tracy Smith is a government relations advisor for Heron, Burchette, Ruckert and Rothwell. This firm appears on a regular basis before federal and state agencies in both rulemaking and adjudicative proceedings. The goal of this agency is to effectively seek solutions in all three branches of government-judicial, legislative, and executive.

Ms. Smith has special expertise in the area of international trade and agricultural issues. Before joining this firm, Ms. Smith worked for two years on the legislative staff of U.S. Representative Larry Craig. Prior to that, she spent several years abroad studying the Japanese political, economic, and cultural institutions. Tracy Smith completed her undergraduate education at Bucknell University in 1982 with her emphasis in Japanese Studies.

Ms. Smith's lecture and discussion will focus on making the correct impression upon fellow employees and the development and necessity of networks. She will also include several suggestions for success- from someone who has climbed the ladder from the bottom and who can help you to design a plan for finding your own career path. This should prove to be an extremely informative workshop that will benefit men as well as women.

JC Hosts Tournament

Juniata College has been selected to host the NCAA Division III Eastern Regional Women's Volleyball Tournament November 12, 13, and 14.

Juniata, currently second in the nation, has compiled an impressive 51-3 match record this year. The Indians captured their seventh consecutive Middle Atlantic Conference title this weekend extending their winning streak to 29 consecutive match victories in 1987.

On Thursday evening Cortland State (NY) will meet Ithaca (NY) at 5:30 p.m. and Eastern Mennonite (VA) will meet Eastern Connecticut at 8 p.m.

Albany St. (NY) will play on Friday at 5:30 p.m. against the winner of Thursday's match between Cortland and Ithaca. The Juniata Indians meet the winner of the E. Mennonite-E.Connecticut match in the nightcap set for 8 p.m. on Friday.

Friday's winners will play Saturday at 7 p.m. with the champion advancing for the NCAA Final Four Tournament at a sight to be determined.

All matches are best-of-five and will be played in the Kennedy Sports +Recreation Center at Juniata College. The NCAA requires an admission fee of $3.00 for adults and $2.00 for students (College ID Required).

HCC Brings You Q/A on Nicaragua

The following is the beginning of a series of question/answer clips about the situation in Nicaragua. They are being brought to you by the Human Concerns Committee. The material has been extracted from a pamphlet called "Talking Sense about Nicaragua" which is put out by the American Friends Service Committee. We hope they prove interesting and informative.

Since 1981, the United States has been recruiting, training, equipping, funding and directing the contras ("counter-revolutionaries"), Nicaraguan exiles carrying out attacks from bases in Honduras and Costa Rica. In addition, the Reagan administration has put economic pressure on

The WKVR story has generated a lot of concern on this campus, and I find myself in the middle of everything. I turned to the advice of my father, who said, "plant yourself firmly on the fence." As a member of the staff of The Juniatian and an in-training DJ, I find that I can sympathize with both sides of this argument.

WKVR is a respected institution on this campus. Despite recent problems, Power 92 has survived a smooth frequency change and is now broadcasting almost a full 24 hours a day. The campus radio station is not only Juniata College's largest club, but it is also an important community service.

On that note, I would also like to establish that we at The Juniatain feel that we are also a club that provides an important community service. Our newspaper serves as an outlet for student opinions. The paper has the right to publish any opinionated submissions. This includes letters to the editor, From the Pen of..., and any political cartoons.

WKVR management has been accused of failing to cater to specific listeners. Management responded by saying that specialty shows have provided for those forms of music which don't fit in with the stations format.

I would like to commend the station's Board of Directors for trying to provide an alternative to their competition, WRLR of Huntingdon, which plays Top 40 music. At the same time, I believe, that the station should loosen its policy towards popular music; not only because they are losing some campus audience, but also because they are losing some of their staff.

One week ago, The Juniatian printed two letters to the editor which included resignations from Janine Hyde and Tommy Kochel. People who enjoy working with radio should not be forced into resignation because they strongly disagree with the station's management. They should not be hassled because they have expressed their opinions. I urge the station to ask Tommy and Janine back to the station.

In closing, I would like to tell you about what caused this story. On Sunday I attended a church service. At this service I saw members of each side of the conflict sitting attentively listening to Dr. Jay speak about relationships. I realized that everybody shares some common ground. I don't have all the answers, but I know that this issue must come to an end. After the service, Dr. Jay approached me, extended his hand, and said, "Peace." I wish to echo his sentiment for The Juniatian, WKVR, and the Juniata campus.

"Peace."

the Nicaraguan government by blocking loans from international agencies and declaring a trade embargo against Nicaragua. By mid-1985 the New York Times was reporting that the US military buildup in Central America was aimed at military action against Nicaragua, and that some US intelligence officials believed overthrowing the Sandinistas would be easy "like falling off a log".

Further US escalation seemed almost inevitable until late 1986 when it was revealed that profits from arms sales to Iran had been diverted to the contras. The resulting scandal and the growing recognition of the ineffectiveness of the contras provide and opportunity for a reassessment of US policy toward Nicaragua and Central America. Nevertheless, years of US accusations against the government of Nicaragua have mad a reasonable discussion difficult.

Isn't Nicaragua Marxist and aligned with the Soviet Union and Cuba?

For many Americans the fact of Marxist influence in Nicaragua ends the discussion: they believe that Nicaragua will inevitably become a Soviet satellite police state with one-party control. Nicaraguans who support their revolution, however, are intensely nationalist. Their intent is to forge something new, to keep their revolution creative and open, self-critical and responsive to the people. That is why the figure of Augusto Cesar Sndino, who in the 1920s and 1930s fought a guerilla war against the US Marines who were occupying Nicaragua, means so much to them--he is the symbol that their revolution should be Nicaraguan and not a copy of any other model.

The Sandanistas intend to remain non-aligned, out of pragmatism as well as out of principle: Nicaragua's most helpful allies and trading partners have been Western European countries, Japan and the major Latin American nations, expecially Mexico, Venezuela, and Brazil, all of which have resisted US efforts to isolate Nicaragua. Aid from the Soviet Union and some Eastern European countries has been very important. However, 75 other third world countries including Turkey, Egypt, and Indian have received billions of dollars worth of socialist bloc aid and yet retained their independence. There is little indication that the USSR is willing to undertake a Cuba-like economic and military engagement in Nicaragua, even if the Nicaraguans sought it.

From the beginnings of their struggle against the Somoza dictatorship in 1961, the Sandanistas had only sporadic contact with Cuba. Around 1978 when they had become a serious contender for power, the Cuban government showed more interest and provided some help (as did other governments). Immediately after the fall of Somoza, the new revolutionary government established close ties with Cuba. Several thousand Cubans have worked in Nicaragua. Some were military and security advisors, but most were health workers, teachers and technicians, like the thousands of people from Western democracies, including several hundred Americans who have worked within the Nicaraguan revolution. So far the Nicaraguan revolution differs from the Cuban model in several important respects, such as its mixed economy and its health care system, which is not doctor-centered as in Cuba, but emphasizes village-level health promoters.

With "Life's Rich Pageant" being such a great album, it was doubtful that R.E.M. would create another album of that caliber. Well, they proved us wrong with their 1987 album "Document."

This album seems to prevent a certain theme or feeling. It is exhibited in the song "Welcome to the Occupation." "What we want and what we need have been confused." You can almost picture the lines of repressed workers. You feel their frustration and their desperation. Several questions concerning society's role in the lines of men have been answered in this album.

This four member band harmonizes beautifully in several of their songs which create a soothing effect. The clarity and the level of understanding has improved progressively through their albums.

R.E.M. presents a kind of down to earth quality that is rare among most other musical acts. They present themselves as the guys down the street singing about the problems of ordinary people. Their lyrics are anti-dramatic although sometimes the music is quite rebellious.

R.E.M. is presently on tour and will be playing at universities across the country. If you get a chance, check them out. The album as well as the concert proves to be promising.

Lisa Baer is South's New RD

By Brian Broking

Lisa Baer, age 23, is originally from Shape Gap, PA. She has a B.S. from Shippensburg University in Secondary Education, specifically Social Studies.

She graduated from Shippensburg in Dec. of 1986, and is currently a substitute teacher for the Huntingdon County Area schools.

On top of all this she is the resident Director of South residence Hall.

This is Lisa's first year as a Juniata Residence Hall Director, and she is hoping it won't be her last because she is interested in being one for the coming year.

When Lisa was at Shippensburg, she was a Residence Assistant, and she thinks that experience is really helping her be a good a Residence Director.

Lisa's door is always open when she is home. The reason for this is, "if the doors open then the lines of communication between myself and the students is always open."

She tells me that she can tell me something about each person she has met in South and the rest of the campus.

the one thing she likes about Juniata is the feeling of there being more of a family sort of atmosphere. "It's kind of fun watching the three floors (of South) interacting because they all act like one big happy family, and that is the way it should be."

For those who don't know, the R.D.'s room is on the all male floor of South, and that so far has not been a problem. Lisa says, "in the beginning I think they were very self-conscious about it, but now I think they are starting to get used to the idea."

Lisa also trys to be very supportive of her residence hall's athletic activities as she supports their Powder Puff Football Team.

Lisa would like to get involved with advising activities and is thinking about going for an M.S. in College Counseling.

By John Ehmann

The news department of Power 92 has, does, and always will play a crucial role in the success of the radio station. The news department is the life line of information for Power 92. Some of the station's main information vessels include newsbeats, sportsbeats, and rock beats.

The news department has received some outside recognition this year, from some of Huntingdon's local businesses who have remarked on the consistency and the work put into Power 92's Speak Out, done by freshman Laura Naughton. Others who have been heard all semester are dedicated seniors, Terri Smith and Jen Wade, along with underclassmen, Stacy Standiford, Jim Berardinelli, and Michele Frish. Our sports staff has done a fine job covering Indian football this semester. Rotating the play by play coverage, Brent Bittner, Power 92 sports director, has utilized the talents of Brian Shaffer, Al Shroff, Ken Bear, and Daryle Dobis. Freshman Andy Klemak can be heard reporting scores and sports news on Power 92's sportsbeats.

New features this year include Power 92's Daily Destinies and Power 92's Campus voice and they can be heard this semester from 7:30-8:00 on Thursday nights. Campus voice is a live interview, usually conducted with a Juniata organizational leader or college administrator. Listen in the upcoming weeks for interviews with the Dean of Student Services, Nancy Van Kuren, and the President of Juniata College, Dr. Robert Neff. As always, the Power lines will be open for callers after each interview.

The news department, as you can see, is responsible for quite a bit at the station and is always looking for interested students to get involved with the station. Anyone interested in exploring the world of news communications can contact me at the station, Box 1005. Remember: Power 92, we're not just for music anymore!

Take a look at the New Information Center

By Jen Wade

If you've been to the post office in Ellis College Center any time in the past month, you have probably noticed the new Information Center located outside the Career Planning and Placement Office.

The center includes an electronic message board that is updated two or three times a week to keep students informed about deadlines, seminars, and internships. The center also includes printed information concerning things like GREs, where the deadline is not as imminent. The board may eventually be used by specific departments to advertise lectures and seminars which are of interest to the entire student body.

University Communications, the company which installed the board, originally intended the board for use at larger universities. Companies recruiting on these campuses would then pay the university to advertise on the board. University Communications had spare boards which they offered to four smaller schools in the East. Juniata College, one of the four schools, purchased the board at a discounted price of $400.

Initial response to the center has been good. Students like the convenient location and the way the message board highlights important deadline information.

Additional information can be found on the Hotline board, also located across from the post office. It lists current employment opportunities, summer jobs, and internship information.

Juniata Crushes Wilkes Easy 57-22 Win

By Mike Antenucci

Wilkes who? That was the basic question this weekend on College Hill when the Indians trounced Wilkes 57-22. Was it that Wilkes just didn't show up for the game, weren't they picked to play the Indians? Of course, they were. They were playing for a share of the MAC title. So what then is the solution to the blowout? It is rather simple when you think about it. The best team in the league will not have a share of the MAC title.

The Indians jumped out to a 28-0 lead before Wilkes even got on the scoreboard. JC's first score was a 29 yard TD reception by Don Betar at 10:44 in the first quarter. The seven play drive covered 60 yards and was capped off by one of Keith Watson's seven extra points.

On Wilkes first play of their next series Juniata recovered a fumble and had the ball on Wilkes 18 yard line. On the Indians next play Don Betar took a reverse, stopped and planted, and threw to his counterpart Mike Cottle in the endzone for a JC score. Jc's lead was now a 14-0, and five minutes had yet to elapse.

Juniata was two for two and on their next possession would make it 3 for 3. Four plays into the drive Cubby Davis completed a 41 yard pass to freshman Dennis Derenzo, and Juniata was in the driver's seat leading 21-0 with 6:20 left in period one.

Wilkes finally mounted a drive, marching down to the Juniata 13. After three incomplete passes, Wilkes decided to go for the first down instead of a field goal. The JC defense stiffened and stopped Wilkes, taking over on downs.

The next Juniata score came on a good defensive play by the Indians. On first and ten from the Juniata 49, Bob Herzog intercepted a Chris Deluca pass and trotted into the endzone for a touchdown. Watson's pat made the score 28-0 and that would turn out to be all the points Juniata needed.

Two plays later Wilkes bounced back on a 71 yard touchdown burst to pull within three touchdowns. Juniata was forced to punt on their next series, and Wilkes scored on their next play from scrimmage, a 76 yard touchdown bomb. Wilkes cut the lead to 28-14 with 7:13 remaining in the first half.

Juniata was not going to let the air out of the balloon. JC drove 66 yards on nine plays to score for the fifth time in the half. Dennis Derenzo hauled in a 20 yard Davis pass for the score to put the Indians out in front 34-14. Watson's extra point made at 35-14, the score at halftime.

In the middle of the third quarter, the Indians defense scored again. This timw with Greg St. Clair sacking Deluca in the endzone. JC led 37-14 with 8:18 left in the third quarter. After Juniata punted, Wilkes took over on their own 17 yard line. After picking up one forst down the "D" stopped Wilkes. Forcing them to punt. Mark Dorner fielded the ball on his own 47 yard-line and juked his way into the endzone. Watson's pat made it 44-14 with 4:03 remaining in the third quarter.

On the ensuing play after the kickoff, Mark Dorner intercepted his second pass of the day and his 14th of the season setting up the next Indians score, a Derenzo nine yard run. Juniata led 57-14 with 1:28 remaining in the third quarter.

Wilkes final score of the game with 56 seconds left and the two point conversion, made the final score 57-22.

Nuch's Notes:Juniata managed 17 first downs while compiling 407 yards on 68 plays for a 5.98 yard per play average. Meanwhile Wilkes managed 18 first downs and 357n yards for a 5.10 yard per play average. Wilkes lost four of five fumbles and were intercepted twice. The big stat of the game, however, was the 10 sacks JC recovered to Wilkes' one sack.

Dan crossey was the leading rusher for the Indians gaining 34 yards on 13 carries. Cubby Davis was 17 for 35 for 298 yards and three touchdowns. His favorite receiver was Mike Cottle who caught sox passes for 77 yards and a touchdown. Jim Metz caught four balls for 46 yards, Don Betar had four grabs for 68 yards and one TD. Dennis derenzo hauled in two passes both for touchdowns.

Mark Dorner had two interceptions giving him 14 on the season and placing him in the NCAA record book for tying the record for most interceptions by any player, Division I, II, III, in college history. Dorner also returned three punts for 73 yards, one for a touchdown.

MAC Players Named

Juniata College football players Mark Dorner and Cubby Davis were selected Middle Atlantic Conference "Players-of-the-Week" for their outstanding performances in the 57-22 rout over tenth ranked Wilkes College this weekend.

Dorner, a 6'2 205 lb. defensive back, recorded six tackles and two interceptions for 75 return yards. He also returned three punts for 73 yards which included a 53 yard touchdown run. With his two thefts on Saturday, he set a new school record and NCAA Division III record for interceptions in a season (14).

Davis was as equally impressive, completing 17 of 35 passes for 298 yards and three touchdowns. With that performance the 6'1 195 lb. junior set two new season records in the Juniata passing department (157 completions, 303 attempts), shattering Mike Culver's old marks of 136 completions in 1986 and 274 attempts in 1984.

A graduate of Bedford High School, Dorner is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Dorner. Davis is a graduate of Hollidaysburg High School. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Gary Davis. The Indians now 6-3, travel to Upsala College next Saturday for their 1987 finale.

Soccer Season Ends

By Jen Wade

Juniata's soccer team ended its season last Wednesday with an 8-0 loss to Division II powerhouse Shippensburg.

The visiting Tribe never really had a chance, as Shippensburg scored five goals in the first 15 minutes of the game. The score at halftime was 7-0, and Shippensburg added one more in the second half. Walt Cupit, playing in his final game, had 12 saves for the Indians.

Shippensburg, who is hoping for a Division II playoff berth, was fast, quick to the ball, and possessed good ball control skills. Juniata gave a consistent effort, however, and both teams played a clean game.

The loss makes Juniata's final record 3-10-3, far below the .500 goal which Coach Jaeger hoped to reach. The Indians will try for a .500 record next year, and will have to win the close games in order to acieve that mark.

Despite falling short of their goal, the team showed marked improvement over last year. Coach Jaeger hopes to continue the trend by recruiting keepers and experienced forwars to strengthen the Indian offense. In all, Jaeger looks to recruit 13 freshmen to add to a nucleus of 22 returning players. Five players will be lost to graduation: Walt Cupit and John Bobko, keepers; co-captains Mike Gifford and Paul Granger, who anchored JC's defense; and midfielder Dave Wright.

McDonald's Players of the Month

Beth Hoppel and Steve Grater have been named McDonald's/Juniata College players of the month for October.

Hoppel, a senior, is a two time All American selection for the women's volleyball team. A three year starter, the 5'7 setter leads the team in assists with 1382 in 48 matches. With a record of 45-3 the Indians will be making their seventh consecutive appearance in the NCAA tournament. A math/computer science major with a 3.34 grade point average, Hoppel is a candidate for the GTE/CoSIDA Academic-All America award.

Grater, a junior on the men's soccer team went on a scoring blitz during the month of October, recording seven goals in five games. According to head coach Klaus Jaeger, "Steve is an outstanding player who makes things happen on the field. He handles the ball well and has been producing very effectively from his center forward position. A pre-dentistry major, Grater has a 3.57 grade point average and is also a candidate for the GTE/CoSIDA Academic-All America award.

The two athletes will receive plaques from John Eastman of the McDonald's restaurant in Huntingdon.

Hoopers Ready To Roll Tip-off Nov. 21st

By Amo Cianci

On November 21, the Kennedy Sports and recreation Center will be the place to be. This will be the site of the Juniata Indian Mens' basketball team home opener. They will be tipping off at 8:00 against Washington and Jefferson, a non-league opponent. Coach Don Helm and the Indian players are coming off a rather disappointing season with a record of 7-17 (losing eight of those games by seven points or less). This year promises to produce a different scenario around College Hill. The Indians have lost only two members from last years squad and will be returning with plenty of experience, talent and potential.

Providing experience for the Indians in the backcourt will be seniors Wayne Paul and Glen Peters, sophomores Shawn Habakus and Mike Welker. Wayne Paul, a senior co-captain from Johnstown, was named to the Middle Atlantic Conference All-Star team last year. His shooting percentage was 52% from the field last season. He also led the team in total points with 418 and assists with 74. Wayne also led the team in average points per game with 16.7 and will be closing in on 1,000 career points this season. Glen Peters, who is a fan favorite, provides experience at the point guard position. He is very aggressive on defense and can provide scoring punch from the outside with a 53% shooting percentage.

Shawn Habakus, the starting point guard from a year ago, stepped in as a freshman and played virtually flawless basketball. Habakus, while shooting 46% from the three point line and 78% from the charity stripe, will be the sharp shooter for Coach Helm this season. Mike Welker, a good passer and shooter, will be expected to spot Habakus at point guard. Welker possesses the ability to control the offense and is an excellent ballhandler.

Experience in the frontcourt is brought back by last year's starters Les Squair and Duane Dise. More talent and experience in the frontcourt will be provided by Joe DeBlase, Mike Antenucci, and Andre Constantine. Les Squair, a junior co-captain from Pittsburgh, is the workhourse of the bunch. He was the second leading scorer for the Indians and led the team with 255 rebounds. Les was also named the McDonald's player of the month during the '86-87 season. Junior Duane Dise is a two year starter, who is a good shooter and can mix it up inside as well, will be relied on heavily for the Indians to have a string season. Joe DeBlase, who is known aas "instant offense" (46% from the field, 85% from the line) is deadly from the three point line. He is a well-rounded ball player who can do it all. DeBlase figures to be a major asset in Coach Helm's plans. Mike Antenucci, a junior from Jackson, New Jersey, played in 20 games last season with a 2.1 scoring average and a 2.1 rebounding average. He will be a top contender to fill the vacated spot at the center position. Antenucci has good court awareness and is also an excellent passer. Senior Andre Constantine will also be looking to fill the center position. Constantine provides the bulk and muscle, much needed by Coach Helm, against some of the bigger teams in the league. Andre is an excellent inside scorer and rebounder.

Newcomers who will join the indian program this winter include Dan Lizun, Bob Dombrowski, Neal Gerhardt (a Huntingdon product), Jay Nicholson, Bill Zombani, Frank Shue, Leyland Hughes, and Mike Poole. Lizun, Gerhardt and Nicholson were among the top recruits for Coach Helm and may be able to help the team immediately.

Coach Helm has had an excellent recruiting year. With these newcomers joining the talent and experience from a year ago, the future looks promising. The team has been working hard for the past two months. The attitude and intensity is there, but the question is will you be? on November 21!!

Spikers Capture MAC Crown

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata Indians volleyball team won their seventh straight MAC title this past weekend by upending the host team, Messiah, in the finals 15-6, 15-8, and 15-6. The Indians managed to defeat their six opponents without losing a game.

JC's first match against Moravian was an easy 15-6, 15-7 victory and set the stage for the Indians title hopes. In the next best out of three match Juniata faced Dickinson College. Juniata cruised in the first game 15-1, and hung on to win the second game 15-10.

Upsala was the next victim of the Indian attack, scoring the least points of any team in the tournament against Juniata. JC easily knocked Upsala out of contention with a 15-7, 15-2 victory. The Indians next opponent, Western Maryland, were no strangers to the JC spikers. Juniata faced Western Maryland before and knew this wouldn't be an easy task. However, as the Indians did in the JC Classic, they once again defeated WM 15-7, 15-6.

The victory, and undefeated 4-0 record in the first rounds of play, allowed the Indians to advance into the semi-finals against Elizabethtown. The Indians continued their winning ways with a 15-5, 15-6 victory. At this point people were wondering if anyone else would every win the MAC's--well, not this year!

Next up, Messiah, and for the Indians, who already have won 10 straight games, beating Messiah in three straight games was not unpredictable. The Indians captured the MAC title easily-great; but here is the better news: once again the regionals will be hosted by the Juniata Indians. JC will play their first match at 8pm tomorrow night versus the winner of Mennonite College/Eastern Connecticut College. If the Indians were to win their first match they would play the winner of Albany/Cortland Match.

All the Indians contributed to the title victory as JC won 195 games to their opponents 77.

Juniata Promotes Kevin G. McCullen

Juniata College President Robert W. Neff has announced the appointment of Kevin G. McCullen as the college's new Director of Development.

In his new position, McCullen will be responsible for the direction and oversight of the College's development activities. He will direct the planning and implementation of all phases of development and oversee the functions of the Annual Support Fund, Corporate and Foundation Giving, and capital campaign projects.

In addition, McCullen will work with and coordinate the efforts of the Planned Giving Officer and Vice President for College Advancement with respect to major and planned gift opportunities, and will act as liaison in development projects.

A member of the Juniata administrative staff since April of 1980, McCullen served the college as director of college advancement, director of institutional planning and research, and assistant to the president for planning and research before assuming his present responsibilities.

Prior to coming to Juniata, McCullen was associate dean for planning and evaluation at Union College in Kentucky, and from 1974 to 1980 also served as director of that college's Title III institutional development program.

McCullen holds a Bachelor of Science degree in International Relations from St. Joseph's College and a M.S. degree in International Studies from the University of Denver.

In commenting on the appointment, Dr. Neff said, "Kevin McCullen has proved his abilities with an impressive list of successes for Juniata College. He is hard-working and dedicated to the goals that have been established for Juniata. His continued expertise will enhance Juniata's strong academic and administrative program, and I am delighted he has accepted this new challenge."

McCullen and his wife, Joan, have four children, two of whom are students at Juniata and two who attend Huntingdon Area High School.

Gallery features Mayhew's 'Illusions of Time and Space'

Richard Mayhew, professor of Art at Penn State University, will be the featured artist at an exhibit at Juniata College beginning November 13 and continuing through December 10 in the Shoemaker Gallery.

In his exhibition, Mayhew's dedication to the subject of landscape is sustained in the dense and evocative oils he uses. The exhibit, titled "Illusion of Time and Space", is the result of intense study by the artist. Since 1975, Mayhew has travelled across the country five times to locate the rare and undeveloped areas of America. He gathers impressions from the land he observes which he then synthesizes in the studio into a physical and philosophical representation of place.<P<MSThe paintings are characterized by close tonal harmonies, with gradually diffused forms verging on abstraction. The objects are more emblematic than descriptive, conveying the experience of a location rather than the appearance of it. Mayhew synthesizes elements from the Hudson River School, Impressionism, modern abstraction and Color Field painting to form his contemporary approach to landscape painting.

Color is one of the most striking features of Mayhew's work. The nature of the particular places he has visited has suggested specific and muted shades of the northeast to the intense and brilliant hues of the southwest. In the 1950's, Mayhew sang with a jazz band, and he has often cited music's associative qualities as an influence in his visual concepts of composition, structure and form.

Mayhew is professor of Art at Penn State University. He has also taught at Smith College, Pratt University, Brooklyn Museum Art School and the Art Students League. He has received many awards for his work, and has had many exhibits across the country.

State Rep Introduces Crime Law

As a result of a brutal rape and murder of a freshman student at Lehigh University last year, State Representative Richard A. McClatchy, Jr. (R-Rosemount) introduced, on October 27, 1987, legislation requiring all colleges and universities in the Commonwealth to provide parents and prospective students with information about campus crime and security precautions.

"In the early morning hours of April 5, 1986, Jeanne Ann Clery, the daughter of Connie and Howard Clery of Rosemount, was brutally beaten, raped and strangled to death by another Lehigh student," McClatchy said.

"I was deeply shocked by this vicious murder," he said. "The Clerys are neighbors and good friends. The community was stunned and outraged."

According to Howard Clery, father of the victim, an investigation of the circumstances that led to his daughter's murder revealed a growing crime rate

JCHC Develops AIDS Education Program

According to the American College Health Association, the spread of AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) is of great concern for college campuses because it is felt that a college population is on grounds for behavioral risk.

With this fact in mind, the Juniata College Health Center has developed an AIDS education program. This program, which is available to the college community, includes an educational video, information about AIDS testing sites, AIDS protection, and AIDS exposure concerns, the availability of Health Center staff for AIDS presentations and weekly informal discussions pertaining to all aspects of the disease.

The video, entitled "All We Presently Know About Aids," is available for viewing from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., weekdays. The Health Center will also be happy to answer anonymous phone calls concerning AIDS at 643-4310 (ext. 410) during office hours (9

Lately, I have been wondering what has happened to our Juniata enthusiasm. A majority of JC students are suffering from a serious syndrome-apathy. This state of not really caring is not directed (usually) toward our class work, but rather toward student activities. The lack of involvement has reached a new high-it's virtually impossible to find more than ten students who can spare a half an hour for a committe meeting.

There are those students who get involved in many activities--some call them "dedicated", I call them enthusiastic and supportive of this institution. Imagine what it would be like without them or don't you really care? There are a great many clubs and organizations that are maintained by four or five students, and without them they would cease to exist. Are students basically not interested in non-academic activities or has apathy gotten the best of them?

Involvement and enthusiasm go hand in hand and the events of last weekend demonstrated a definite lack of school spirit. What were you doing at 7:00 pm on Saturday night? The Juniata Womens Volleyball team participated in the NCAA Regional Championships and student support was very low. If someone would have removed the parents, faculty members, administrators and members of the community, the remaining "crowd" of students would have been embarassing.

There was a small group of extremely spirited students who helped to lead the fans in cheers and chants--nice job guys! But once again, imagine the gymnasium without these spirited leaders.

This would have been an opportune time for us to show some Juniata school spirit. It would have been nice to show our support and recognize the accomplishments of our volleyball team. This would be a good time to take a look at Juniata from your perspective and compare that to what it looks like when you are involved in activities and supportive of your peers. Your entire outlook may change!

Dear Friends,

On November 6, 1987, I was approached by a group of students with an unusual request. Would I please help them come up with a non-confrontational but informative poster to publicize the existance of the Lesbian and Gay Switchboard in State College, and then get it printed for distribution at Juniata? I agreed to do so, and offered to post it myself, to avoid the potential hazards to students' privacy.

On Friday evening, November 13, I went from building to building on our campus, stapling a small (8½" x 11") flyer on most of the campus bulletin boards. It read as follows: "Lesbian and Gay students of Juniata College: you are not alone!" and provided the number of the switchboard (1-237-1950) and the information about the times of operation (6-9pm daily). I managed to get these flyers onto bulletin boards of all residence halls except Cloister and East, and into Ellis, Brumbaugh, Swigart, Beechly Library, and the outdoor kiosks.

On Sunday evening, November 15, it was painfully obvious that all of this work had been removed by persons unknown. I had rather expected some interesting written commentary on the flyers, but was saddened to see that we have our own version of censorship here at Juniata--a censorship that will permit any divergent view to be expressed in a simple, non-confrontational way, simply because it is not in accordance with their interpretation of how the universe should be proceeding.

The bulletin boards and kiosks on our campus are for the dissemination of information to everyone on campus: students, faculty, staff, visitors. Their use runs from the sublime to the ridiculous, and so it ought to be. The students who invested their money in that flyer had every right to do so, and are hindered in their constitutional right to freedom of expression when individual censors rip down notices they did not post. The mutual concern for one another is one of the best drawing cards our institution has: it alarms and saddens me to see this type (or any other type) of oppression going on. It is my hope that when the notices are posted again, these self-appointed guardians of the college's right-to-know will exercise their constitutional right--to ignore what they do not want to see, and even to post a counter-message, if they feel so inclined.

Thank you for your time and effort in publicizing this.

Yours Sincerely,
J. Michael Thompson,
instructor in Latin

Student Government

By Alex Jones

The Juniata College Student Government held its seventh meeting on Tuesday, November 10. The meeting opened with comments from President Amy Coursen. Ms.Coursen addressed alleged illegal fund raising by the campus radio station, WKVR, and reminded the senate that this past week was Arms Race Education Week.

Next, the Budget and Management Committee, led by treasurer Jay Moreau, asked the senate to charter two new clubs; the Catholic Organization, and the Human Concerns Committee. Each club was discussed by the senate. The senate was informed that the Catholic Organization currently has 340 members and a substantial account. A question was raised about the legitimacy of chartering a religion-oriented club, but the club was chartered by a unanimous vote. The Human Concerns Committee, was proposed by Amy Coursen. She stated that the club originally grew out of concern for the issue of South Africa. It is now also concerned with the arms race, Aids, poverty, and Central America. The club was chartered, again by a unanimous vote.

Adviser Arnie Tilden, who was somewhat late, discussed declining attendance at Juniata lounge parties. He asked for suggestions to improve attendance. Problems with this years lounge parties, according to the senate, include increasing entrance fees, boring repetition, and bringing your own alcohol.

The College Governance Committee discussed senator Paul Granger's departure from Tussey Residence Hall. Two students asked to replace Granger; sophomore transfer Scott Close and junior Rich Gaitens. Gaitens was chosen in a closed-ballot election. Afterwards, there was objection by some senators to a lack of discussion about the issue. Vice-president Sue Gulla will head a committee to research the idea of ammending the constitution so that students can vote for replacement senators.

The Student Concerns Committee addressed three issues. First, they are currently investigating expanding Baker Refectory breakfast hours until later in the morning. Second, the committee has discussed a problem in the computer center. It seems that last minute crunches for intro-level class assignments have been making open terminals hard to find. Professor Wampler will look into the issue of operators not helping freshmen on the last day before an assignment in hopes of cutting back on the fight for terminal space. The third issue the committee discussed, brought on by our first snowfall, was the borough's failure to plow Scott Street. Last year there was a problem in this regard, because the borough claims that only Juniata College uses this street.

The Residential Life Committee, led by Fran Arcay, has decided that the United Way will be the beneficiary of this year's Jello Wrestling, mainly because all profit will stay in Huntingdon County and help out here. A second issue discussed was the rough play in Powder Puff Football. Arcay says the games will stop if the violence does not. There will be an increase in referees for the finals.

The Student Leadership Development Committee had only good things to say of its past RHA module. Attendance almost doubled the first module's and there was good response for Dr. Jay Buchanan's speech. An upcoming leadership exchange planned with Albright College was postponed. Attempts will be made to reschedule for January.

I was recently tongue-lashed for expressing a desire to hear the truth from a person about a particular situation. "What kind of a world would it be if everyone told the truth?" I was asked. "An honest one," I replied.

Being honest seems to be a matter of convenience for most people. If the truth is painless, then it is okay to express it. If it means hurting someone, or even worse, getting ourselves in trouble, then truth takes a backseat.

Mahatma Gandhi saw the importance of truth and expressed it in the simple statement, "Truth is God and God is Truth." Lying isn't just fabrication or deception--it is violence against God. The degree of untruth may vary from instance to instance, but it is lying just the same.

I know being honest can be difficult sometimes. We've all been in situations where we felt the truth would have been better left unsaid. Being honest, however, is crucial for healthy relationships. A relationship without honesty is like a flower which is denied water--it will wilt and die. Without honesty, there is no trust. Without trust, any relationship, be it individual or global, is doomed to failure.

Jesus of Nazareth speaks to us across the ages and tells that the truth will make us free (Veritas Liberat--truth sets free-is the motto of Juniata). I encourage everyone to seek freedom through the pursuit of truth!

In the last article we looked at a number of myths associated with alcoholism. The column ended by suggesting that we all need to be more aware of the tremendous impact that alcohol abuse has on our society as a whole and the implications its abuse and misuse have for each and every one of us.

As William Clark stated during his presentation, "Drugs, Alcohol and Society", a few weeks ago at Juniata, for every one person who abuses alcohol, nearly five others are affected by that person's behavior.

Clark offered the following statistics regarding alcohol abuse in the state of Pennsylvania. They are intended to inform and not to scare, although that might not be such a bad idea.

•Alcohol abuse costs the state economy approximately 2.5 billion dollars annually (nationwide that figure is 165 billion dollars);

•Half of the patients admitted to hospitals are admitted due to alcohol-related problems;

•Nearly 40% of persons on the welfare rolls have problems with alcohol;

•Approximately 4 in 10 divorces are related to the abuse/misuse of alcohol;

•One out of every two crimes committed are related to the use of alcohol (family violence and child abuse are related to the abuse of alcohol).

Clark, treatment director at Tallyrand Retreat in Bellefonte, stated that the average age of patients being treated at Tallyrand is a ripe "old" 26. The cost for the 28-day stay is about $3400 and is paid for in many cases by insurance companies.

Clark also remarked that all to often women are misdiagnosed as depressed when in reality they are alcoholics. He contends that more and more women are abusing alcohol and are in need of treatment.

A long time ago someone who is very close to me said his abuse of alcohol would hurt only himself. He could not have been more wrong! Our behaviors, good and bad, affect the lives of those around us more than we realize.

Until next time, be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

ALPHA MUDDY RUN

"It's Wrong!"

That's what my roommate said to me last Tuesday afternoon when she returned to the room after SVS. She was, of course, referring to the snowfall that surprised the campus. Well, maybe it didn't surprise you, but I certainly didn't expect it.

I mean, why should I expect it? It's early November; technically, it's the middle of autumn. The Blue Army is still preoccupied with gathering up truckload after truckload of fallen leaves and sending them to that leaf heaven in the sky. The snow shovels aren't due out of storage for at least another few weeks. And my winter coat lives at home until after Thanksgiving. What"s the deal?

Part of the blame, I think, must be placed on television. Or, if not on television itself, at least on television advertisers.

You see, for years now, advertisers have gotten us to buy things that we don't really need. They successfully created wants and needs that never existed before. Then, they made the need so urgent that we had to buy these things before their proper time. Now, they have also conned the weather into believing that it's a certain season when it's really not! Understand? Maybe an example will help.

Before you saw the commercial on TV, did you need an album of Christmas favorites as sung by your favorite stars from the world of country music? Probably not. But now that you've seen the commercial, you've just got to add this double-record set (or two cassettes) to your collection, right?

What? You haven't seen the ad? It's been on since mid-October!

We've also been bombarded by ads for Christmas songs as sung by their original artists, and you ought to be shopping Hills for toys and games this Christmas because (everybody sing along now) "Hills is where the toys are!".

Since before Halloween, the advertisers have been trying to get us into the Christmas buying spirit. The weather, not as intelligent as we are, has been suckered in by all the hype. The weather, thinking it almost Christmas, decided to send some snow down for the holiday season.

Maybe you haven't noticed, but this ugly march toward Christmas in July has been going on for quite some time now. And, it's not a problem exclusive to the United States, either. Last year while in England, I made the mistake of having a Halloween party on November 1st (there was a fancy dress disco on Halloween). I spent a good part of the day looking for Halloween decorations, but found only tinsel and tree decorations. Even the Muzak played Christmas carols!

This problem is also not exclusive to the Christmas season. The fashion industry has been even more severly affected by this alarming trend. Fashion shows in major cities around the world currently feature spring fashions in lots of glorious colors! In case you're wondering, hemlines are up.

Well, I don't know about you, but I'm a traditionalist. I buy spring clothes when I'm ready, usually sometime around March. And, I don't even begin to think about Christmas until the day after Thanksgiving. That's when my mother, my sister, and I travel to Park City and do all our Christmas shopping at once. Things are much easier that way, and you spend less money because you haven't called every toll-free number and ordered every Christmas album that's been advertised since October.

But, since it is almost Thanksgiving, why not? "I'm dreaming of a white Christmas...."

Earthquake

A major earthquake, measuring 7.9 on the Richter scale, struck the mountainous area of eastern Turkey on Nov. 24, 1976. The quake killed at least 4,000 persons, injured 2,000 more and left 250,000 homeless.

Prophecy

As noted in the "Little Red, White & Blue Book," in his farewell address on Sept. 17, 1787, after serving two terms, George Washington gave strong warnings against permanent alliances with foreign powers. He also warned against big public debt, large military establishments and devices of "small, artful, enterprising minorities" to control or change government.

And you thought I would miss my yearly R.E.M. album review just because I'm a few thousand miles away. (What? And blow my chance to see my name in the world renown "Juniatian". No way.) For those of you who don't know I'm a big fan of REM. That does not mean I go to a concert and scream "Michael Stipe, Michael Stipe". That's not a fan. That's something else. That's also off the topic--on to the review.

Outside of four bootleg albums (two live/two studio) that I know of, REM, since 1981 have put out six pieces of vinyl before thier latest, "Document". REM started out pretty much as a "Punk" Rock and Roll band. They wrote songs about very ambiguous things like emotions and memories. These songs were sung even more ambiguously. With each album, they refined their music a little more and become, in my opinion, a little more in control of their abilities. On "Document", REM still are playing Rock and Roll, writing about an even more diverse range of topics, and (most of the time) singing in a way that normal English-speaking people can understand. In short, I'd just like to say that it's a great Rock and Roll album and you should go buy it (In long, however, I'm going to get a little more specific.)

For those of you who like your music on the powerful (and still "talented") side "Document" starts off on the right foot. "Finest Worksong" is the kind of song that is packed with energy and makes you want to play air guitar (or air anything). And if thats for you, then you'll really like "Strange", too. "The One I Love" kind of fits in here, but uses a more emotional power (and keeps up the "ambiguous meaning" tradition).

"Exhuming McCarthy" showcases REM's use of piano and organ on this album. (That means you'll hear those instruments in 5% of the song--REM tends to stick to guitar, bass, and drums). The song is about MCCarthyism (the anti-communist movement from the 50's), but you don't have to listen to or understand the words to love it. A song that McCarthy wouln't have liked is "Welcome to the Occupation" which deals with the nine to five scene (and could be good preparation for some of us!). "Disturbance at the Heron House" has some really good guitar riffs and vocal harmonies in it and sets you up for the next couple songs.

The second of which is "It's the end of the world as we know it (and I feel fine)". I have no idea how to best describe this song. "Happy Anarchy" is one possibility, but let's just say that you'll probably want to sing along with it, but won't be able to because of the machine-gun pace of the lyrics. Arlo Guthrie would be proud.

The last four songs of the album are the "What the hell are they singing about" songs. "Fireplace" is the first song by REM (that I know of) in which saxophone is used, but it does anything but detract from the quality. "King of Birds" sounds reminiscent of "Swan, Swan H" from Lifes Rich Pageant--it has a sort of military beat to it--and is the mellowist song on the album. This is good because on either side of it are the two most intense songs, "Lightning Hopkins" and "Oddfellows Local 151", and you need that chance to breathe.

Oh yeah, it's a great rock and roll album, so if that's what you like you should go to the nearest record store (40 miles or so at least) and pick up your very own "Document".

Sue Zarenski, the Student Government/Centerboard liasion reported on several new entertainment alternatives. The first was "Ellis College Center Weekends". Look for upcoming Juniatian coverage! Also discussed was the annual South Semi-formal, to be held on December 5. Ms. Zarenski also brought up the Madrigal Lip Sync. The contest is to be held in Baker Refectory with cash prizes for the winners. For the Madrigal Dinner on Dec. 10, entertainment will be provided by the student-groups Class and the Schola Cantorum, as well as magician Chuck Kensinger. The Madrigal dance will feature the band "The Screaming Ducks".

The senate next discussed the proposed removal of funds from Big 5 clubs Kvasir and the Juniatian for their failure to attend leadership modules. Reparations are being made by these clubs. Before closing, the senate also addressed several student concerns. A proposal was made that an anonymous phone line be established so that students could report those they knew to be guilty of vandalism. Currently, a witness can remain anonymous, but if the accused protests any punishment, he/she does have the right to see the accusor. Arnie Tilden urges all students to report young townies that hang out on campus to security, so that they may be politely ushered off campus. Fran Arcay asked about a rumor tht the administration was going to collect "illegal" milk crates. This led to the discussion of street signs as well. Tilden said that street signs that are safety oriented (ie. Stop) would be collected and returned to PennDot, but at this time, there are "No immediate plans to collect milk crates."

Secretary Angela Orwig reminded the senate that office hours for this semester end on the last day of classes. The senate will been once more before the end of the semester, on December 1 at 8:00pm. If any student has a problem or a suggestion, they are welcome to attend.

Bowman's Star Wars Lecture Informative and Enlightening

By Jen Wade

Last Thursday night in Alumni Hall, Dr. Robert Bowman, President of the Institute for Space and Security Studies, presented an interesting and enlightening lecture concerning the Star Wars defense system. Dr. Bowman, who served with the Air Force for 22 years and achieved the rank of Lt. Colonel, has been involved with weapons development for much of his career. Because of his experience, he is considered a very credible source of information about SDI (Stategic Defense Initiative).

Throughout Dr. Bowman's lecture, it became increasingly clear that Star Wars is an attempt by the government to regain absolute military superiority through offensive weapons disguised as defenses, and that SDI increases rather than decreases the threat of nuclear war. At the moment, nuclear weapons are an impotent and obsolete threat which SDI would make useful once again.

Dr. Bowman began with a slide presentation that explained what Star Wars is and how it works. Briefly, Star Wars is a method of ballistic missile defense which uses seven layers of protection to intercept and destroy nuclear missles before impact. Experts agree that is SDI is to be successful, it must intercept 96% of missiles in the boost phase when they are most detectable, more vulnerable, and when there are fewer targets to track and destroy. The boost phase lasts only about 90 seconds, however, and occurs over the Soviet Union.

The two outermost layers will be counted on to destroy most of the missles. The first layer involves 6,000 chemical laser battle stations orbiting the earth, each requiring a mirror and lots of fuel. The fuel would take years to deploy, and the lasers would have to be incredibly accurate in order to destroy enemy missles.

Most of the pressure falls on the second layer, consisting of calibration lasers on the ground which fire at the mirrors. The mirrors reflect the beams and relay them toward incoming boosters. Problems arise here, also, because eddies in the atmosphere can easily distort the beam.

Other than the difficulties involved in the layers themselves, the necessary software for the computer system would take years to develop--if it could be developed at all. But, if the system was completed, it would be useless because of the ready availability of countermeasures.

For example, one countermeasure involves completing the boost phase within the atmosphere (40-60 seconds), thereby rendering the first two layers useless and impractical. Or, missles could be launched from submarines, also allowing the boost phase to be completed within the atmosphere. Or, computers could break down or be sabatoged. In effect, SDI is vulnerable to attack and breakdown at any time and at any link in the intricate system of lasers, sensors, and computers. If the Soviets wanted to launch a nuclear attack, they could easily render SDI inoperative beforehand.

With all these prospective problems, why build SDI? Because, Dr. Bowman says, people in both countries believe that such a system can work. Experts agree that, at its best, Star Wars can stop 11% of incoming missles. Ninety percent of Soviet missles, then, would have to be destroyed before they were launched in order for SDI to be effective. SDI could destroy satellites, enabling the US to "seize military control of space", and then fortify it. It can also incinerate cities and destroy on-surface missles. In other words, SDI is useful only to an aggressor, and the Soviets are more vulnerable to a first strike than the US.

According to Dr. Bowman, the US currently has a 10-year lead in Star Wars related technology, and the Soviets are working on an anti-SDI program which involves improving existing defenses. But, if the US actually builds Star Wars, the Soviets will build one soon after, and Dr. Bowman sees deployment by both sides as a virtual guarantee of nuclear war. By stopping the development of SDI, Ronald Reagan could conceivably be remembered as a peace-maker rather than a warhawk.

The real cause of nuclear war will be fear. It is, therefore, very important to gurarantee the security of both nations, and of the earth. In order for this to happen, the US and the Soviet Union must approach arms control as partners, not as adversaries. Instead of putting billions of dollars toward nuclear weapons, the same resources could be put into other global space systems which can be used for humanitarian and life-enriching purposes.

What is the answer, then? A new attitude, a new way of thinking. The Soviet Union, under the leadership of Mikhael Gorbachev, has apparently gotten the message, and it must now be spread to Washington.

Arms Race Education Week was a Success

By Suzanne Lydic

Quite suddenly the week has come and passed--Arms Race Education Week. It was a product of hard work on everyone's part--especially PACs, Centerboard, and Student Government--but well worth the effort. New information and ideas flooded the campus, leaving many at times overwhelmed with information.

The first event, the film "War Without Winners", increased student awareness on citizens' views both here and in the USSR. We found that the nuclear race runs into many different unexpected areas of our lives.

That Monday night (Nov. 9), Marta Troy presented a lecture on "Seduction and the Single Congressman: What every citizen should know". Marta explained to us the importance of understanding how very different our "war thinking" must be when dealing with nuclear war: we are no longer talking about civileans picking up their shot guns to go out and fight off the Red Coats.

One sophomore who attended Marta's talk praised, "The campus is very fortunate to have Marta as part of the campus community." Her vast knowligible contributions to both the college and the outside world have deemed her the third most important female working for peace in the United States.

Tuesday night was the big coffeehouse, "Where have All the Bar Chords Gone?" The title of the whole show was finally made clear when it was explained that originally war and peace music dealt with simplistic bar chords rather then the complex synthesized music of today. MCed by Rick Bellagh, organized by Larry Mutti, and inspired with music by Andy and Terry Murray the evening was a success.

The movie, "The Tin Drum", Wednesday night let us look at the militiaztion of a nation as it prepares for war.

Thursday was a big day for the Arms Race Week. In the morning a symposium in Good Hall dealt with the issue of Peace through the eyes of four different faiths.

John Deppen, who attended the symposium, commented, "It (the symposium) was a very healthy discussion. Disagreements (between the faiths) were aired. It was good to get everything out in the open."

Thursday night, retired Lt. Col. Dr. Bowman gave a speech on "Star Wars: Reflections from a Soldier Scientist."

Many felt that Bowman's lecture was the hit of the week. He explained the pros and cons of SDI to all of us--although previously many of us had been scared away by the technical scientific jargon.

Freshman, Kelley Woodworth stated, "It (the lecture) opened my eyes a lot. It was scary, but it made me want to do something about it." Kelley went on further to comment about Bowman himself. "I am glad someone high-up like him is working near the government. I feel we can count on him."

As to any story there was opposition to Bowman's lecture. One junior who attended part of the lecture affirmed, "I think that the school should provide someone from the opposition to provide a different viewpoint rather than such a one-sided series of lectures aimed at swaying opinion rather than letting us decide for ourselves." The junior continued to argue, "Both sides should be fairly represented, but I don't think the school would allow the conservative opinion (to be represented)."

Overall the week was a success; it left us all a little more informed on the Weaponry Race of our generation. But the discussions should not just stop with the end of the programs. Many talks are forthcoming which deal with the same subject are (i.e. Symposium December 8th by "Empowerment in the Nuclear Age" students) so do not stop looking at this topic--it's so vital to our world.

As Marta Troy put it, "No one in history has ever had to deal with the awesome nuclear power our world holds today. Therefore, no one is an expert in the area, so we need to inform ourselves!"

CMB Appreciates Chris and Terry Noyes

By Amy Coursen

You already know Chris and Terry Noyes as the assistant soccer coach and Lesher's RD., but we on the Campus Ministry Board want you to know the real reason they're here! Chris and Terry work for the Coalition for Christian Outreach, a Pittsburgh-based organization which focuses upon developing the Christian communities on college campuses in Northern W.V., eastern OH, and western PA. Chris is the J.Omar Good Protestant Campus Minister. Terry is an assistant in the Campus Minnistry Office.

Chris and Terry come from different backgrounds. Chris' family is small, quiet and of British decent while Terry's is large, loud and Italian! Despite the obvious, forseen conflicts, Terry and Chris do have some things in common. They are both athletes, enjoy running and love watermelon.!

In the future, Terry is interested in getting her masters in counseling, being a foster parent and/or working with children from under priveleged homes. Chris would like to either go onto seminary or pursue a masters in political science. He would also like to fulfill his lifelong dream of developing and marketing a new lawn ball design.

CMB really appreciates Terry and Chris. Not only are they great workers and organizers--they are also attentive and caring listeners. We have so many resources to utilize at Juniata, each individual would most definitely gain from taking the time to meet Chris and Terry Noyes.

Arms Race Coffeehouse Entertainment was Great

By Rick Bellagh

Despite weather conditions that prevented the appearance of several of the acts that were supposed to appear, Tuesday nites Coffeehouse entitled "Where Have all the Barchords Gone" made for a successful and enjoyable evening. The peace and protest music performed both by the group "Bread, not Bombs" and by Andy Murray gave the large audience a good idea of what kind of influence the late 60's and early 70's must have had on political opinion.

The first group to perform was "Bread, not Bombs", a newly formed group of Huntingdonians who discovered their common like for singing at a recent march in support of the new INF treaty. The members of the group include Larry Mutti, Deb Glazier, Marta Daniels Troy, and Jane Crosby. Larry Mutti is a geology/PACS professor here at Juniata and the coordinator/editor of the local Freeze group. Deb Glazier is also a Juniata professor, now teaching a course entitled "empowerment in the nuclear age". Her guitar playing added greatly to the group's sound. Marta Daniels Troy, the executive director of Options, has been involved in peace activism for some time. She is a graduate of Juniata and often used her banjo-playing talent during the 60's to inspire non-violent protestors. Jane Crosby, also a Juniata graduate (1938) has been noted as being involved in "every good cause in Huntingdon." She contributed her ukelele playing and her voice to the group's A-1 performance. After playing a whole slew of spirited music as a group, Larry Mutti braved the crowd and sang an inspiring solo, followed by Deb Glazier.

After a ten minute break, Andy Murray entertained the crowd for about a half and hour with his usual pizazz, despite the absence of his "better half" Terry, and Bill Huston who was snowed in at Penn State.

When these scheduled performers were through, the crowd still wanted more, and Roy SantaCroce, Brian McCullen, and Steve LeCrone were happy to add their talents to entertaining late into the evening.

"Bikes not Bombs" Campaign has begun

By Tracey Mock

A Bikes not Bombs Campaign has begun, based in Washington, D.C. This organization is "recycling bicycles and organizing for peace while the U.S. Government sends weapons and organizes for war." The bicycles are sent to Nicaragua to help with health, education and development work. So far, over 900 bikes have been sent. According to their newsletter, these bikes have "helped to bring literacy to those who cannot read, to bring vaccines to children threatened by disease, and to bring urban gardening techniques to families subsisting on rice and beans. In the long run, they have indeed strengthened the sustainability of Nicaragua's transportation and energy use systems."

A Bikes not Bombs workshop has been established in Managua, Nicaragua, where bicycle mechanics are being trained. Over 200 bicycles are at the workshop awaiting overhaul and distribution. For more information contact Bikes not Bombs, Box 5595, Friendship Station, Washington, D.C. 20016.

and inadequate security measures at the university.

Clery cited FBI crime statistics for Lehigh University that reported 38 violent crimes, one murder, five forceable rapes, two robberies, 30 aggravated assaults, 748 property crimes, 195 burglaries and four arsons since 1984.

Clery said that after the criminal trial, he and his wife Connie gave interviews to local and national media to alert students and parents that "campuses that look safe...may not be safe."

"Because of these interviews, we received hundreds, and then thousands, of letters from concerned parents and students and, in some cases, from victims of college campus crimes," Clery said.

Clery said that he and his wife during this period developed a College Security Questionnaire to enable prospective students and parents to ask tough questions about the campus crime rate and security measures.

According to Clery over 5,000 questionnaires have been mailed to people in 20 states.

Clery called attention to a "curtain of silence" about crime on campus that colleges and universities have drawn to hide these facts from parents, reporters, and alumni.

McClatchy agreed.

"One of the best kept secrets in the Commonwealth, indeed in the nation, is the crime statistics and security measures at our colleges and universities," he said.

"The sad fact is that parents are woefully uniformed about crimes on campus and what security measure have been taken," McClatchy said.

The lawmaker indicated that the College and University Security Information Act he is introducing," takes a giant step forward in providing parents and students accurate data about crime and security at all Commonwealth colleges and universities."

The lawmaker noted that the act requires each institution of higher education, private and public, to provide a brochure relating crime statistics and security measures to parents and prospective students.

The format and distribution of the brochure will be determined by the State Attorney General, he said.

"Under the act the Attorney General has the authority and responsibility to compel compliance," McClatchy noted.

He pointed out the legislation provides for a civil penalty up to $10,000 if any institution is found by a court to have willfully violated or failed to comply promptly with the act.

"I am hopeful this legislation will generate a thorough self-examination of crime on campus by all colleges and universities in Pennsylvania," McClatchy said.

The lawmaker also indicated that he hoped vigorous measures will be taken by institutions of high learning to upgrade security where needed.

"Because campus crime statistics are a well-guarded secret on most campuses, students and faculty are not alert to potential danger," Clery said.

"I welcome the legislation introduced today and hope it will be enacted without delay," Clery added.

McClatchy revealed that the bill has the bipartisan support of 39 House members.

Wayfarer's Journal

Dear Juniata:

Hello and welcome to "The Wayfarer's Journal". I'm supposed to write this article to "inform, interest, and enthuse" all of you about my experience abroad and studying abroad in general. (I'm actually writing it as a back-up incase Jodie doesn't print my REM album review.) Be forwarned--I'm in the "thrill is gone" or "rejection" phase, according to all of the best available research, but I'll try to keep this from getting ugly. Fortunately, I've had a lot of previous experience in the above two areas, so this shouldn't be a problem.

"Naja", as most here would say... I'm in Germany. Specifically in Muenster, West Germany. For that reason, those of you who are still reading will find that this journal will tend to be about seemingly "German" kinds of things. (And even "Muensterish" things). Like, for example, bike paths. When you think of biking at Juniata, that translates into going down to Sheetz to cash that check (and save 50 cents) and coming back. You dodge cars, old ladies, and a few small animals and you're home free. Do that in Muenster and you are a dead man. The traffic here flows like beer on the floor of the Rebel Den after a party-it's everywhere-and there's no escaping it. That's the reason for the bike paths. My first two days in Muenster consisted of a constant battle trying to understand which path I should be on, which street lights I should bother stopping for, which people I could legally run over, etc. These bike paths, though at first a hassle, are really important in this city considering the fact that there are about 175,000 bicycles on the streets at any one time. But for the student, the bike is his best friend. (I mean, you couldn't ride your dog to classes four kilometers away, could you?) A bike can go a lot of places a car can't (sidewalks and one-way streets, for example) and you can always find a place to park. Enough about bikes and bike paths.

Something a little more general is in order...How about the LANGUAGE? The last time I was in Germany, some people were talking to their pet dog about the mess it had made and I thought they were talking to me... I don't have that problem any more. Let's face it though, after three years of high school German and two courses at Juniata, I am not United Nations Translator material.

So what's a person to do when he wants to talk to a professor, buy some lunch, or introduce himself to a girl he's never met before? You just go right ahead and fake it. I mean, you TRY. Sure, you may sound like a hearing-impaired kindergartener. Sure, the girl slaps you in the face. It happens, but, Life Goes On and you try it again after you get out of the hospital.

"Dorm Life", if there is such a thing, works somewhat differently in Muenster (and Germany) as it does at Juniata. A good analogy would be to take Mission and Pink houses, Tussey/Terrace, and East Houses, and mix them all together. You get the cooking facilities from the first, the room size from TNT, the lounges and overall look from East (except twice as tall). And you're also living in a single so there's just tons of room to do whatever in. Often times you'll have people from various cultures living on the same floor. This sometimes can bring conflict. There used to be a few Persian gentlemen who lived on my floor. At 3a.m. every morning they would walk around the halls saying their holy prayers and singing. I'm sure what they were singing was very nice and very important, but it was also very loud. We who were non-Persian were usually trying to sleep. One night, I, being the astute "International Relations" student that I am, whipped open my door and cranked up "Sledgehammer" on my box. No, no, that's not true (but I was tempted). That gives you an idea of some of the relatively uncommon experiences you might share as part of living in a German dorm, or foreign dorm anywhere.

And that, I think, will be all for this edition of "The Wayfarer's Journal". Tune in next week when somebody writes: "I can't believe it--all this time I thought Europe was a single country--and it's actually a whole bunch of countries. Wow!"

Sincerely,
Jef Buehler

Decoys

A thousand years ago, Indians made the first decoys to trick birds down to within arrow shot. They were made of bulrushes woven and twisted into duck shapes. This Indian invention was quickly adopted by North America's first white hunters. In the Old World, they used live birds to trap wild ones in a cage the Dutch called "ende kooi" which the English pronounced "decoy."

Pilgrims

In 1620, a group of religious dissenters known as the Pilgrims set sail on the Mayflower for the New World. In November of that year, they sighted Cape Cod and decided to land at Plymouth Harbor. Before going ashore, 41 members of the group drew up the Mayflower Compact.

JC cultural events drive far exceeds expectations

Under the leadership of Attorney and Mrs. Lawrence L. Newton of Huntingdon, the Juniata College Cultural Events Campaign has exceeded all expectations.

The campaign, which supports all types of cultural events on campus, had as its original goal the raising of $5,000. With almost 200 individuals and businesses having pledged support and new pledges still coming in, the amount currently raised exceeds $15,000.

"We are pleasantly overwhelmed by this outpouring of support for the cultural events program at Juniata," said Newton. "The success of this campaign says a great deal about the commitment our community has for outstanding theatre, music, films and lectures, and it has been a sincere pleasure to be a part of this effort," Newton said.

Mrs. Newton echoed her husband's remarks and said, "The programs of the Juniata Artist Series our community is enjoying this year are an expression of some of the things this funding will help to provide in the future. We have already enjoyed an outstanding presentation of the National Shakespeare Company's production of "The Tempest," and next week, Nov. 24, the community will be able to see the Barksdale Theatre Company's presentation of 'A Child's Christmas in Wales.'"

"Child's Christmas," the second feature in the annual artist series program, is produced by the Barksdale Theatre of Virginia. It dramatizes Dylan Thomas' moving story of a glorious Christmas from his youth in Wales. Curtin time is 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium on the Juniata campus.

Scheduled for the remainder of the Artist Series for the present academic year are The Ellis Humanities Series presentation of "An Evening with the Harlem Boys Choir," "Liz Lerman and the Dance Exchange," and "The Man of La Mancha."

Included in the total Juniata cultural events schedule are a Masterpiece film series, an exceptional selection of lectures, and a variety of musical and theatre presentations, as well as the Artist Series.

"I can't say enough for the outstanding job Larryand Becky Newton have done in chairing the Juniata College Cultural Events Campaign, nor about the generous support this project has received from the community," said Robert W. Neff, president of the College. "Juniata takes great pride in being a part of the Huntingdon community, and the spirit of cooperation that has been displayed gives me great encouragement as we consider future college and community programs. Juniata College is indebted to the people of the area for their generosity, and we are dedicated to providing the best cultural events schedule possible."

All presentations on the cultural events calendar are presented without charge, with the exception of the Artist Series, which has an admission cost of $8 for each of those programs.

Hockey players selected for Mid-East Squad

By Deb Dougherty

Three hockey team members were selected to play for the second team of the Mid-East hockey team. Joanne Thomas, Kathleen McGowan, and Amy Blough will be travelling to California over the Thanksgiving holiday to play at the National Hockey Festival.

Joanne Thomas is a junior majoring in Social Work. She has been playing field hockey since her freshman year in high school. She is also actively involved in Intramural Sports (IMs), Circle K, and is a tour guide for the Admissions Office.

Since she began playing for Juniata, Joanne has seen some changes in the team. She feels that the team is serious and willing to work. According to her, "they understand that effort is the only way to obtain our goal." The team doesn't give up, even when they are losing.

Joanne feels that playing for the Mid-East team is going to be a good experience. It will be fun to play with the experienced and talented players. She is looking forward to learning new skills and being able to play on a totally different level of competition.

Sophomore Kathleen McGowan was also selected for the team. She is a Pre-Dentistry/Communications major. She also participates in class activities, IMs, and is the Secretary for the Lesher RHA. In addition to this, Kathleen plays powder puff football and is a lifeguard.

She has been playing field hockey since her freshman year in high school. Her freshman hockey coach got her interested in the sport and her varsity coach, Meredith Scott, developed her as a player. She is looking forward to two more increasingly stronger years at Juniata and hopes to join a club team after graduation.

Participating in a sport taught Kathleen to budget her time. It makes a person more competitive on and off the field. She feels that playing in a sport is also a good way to meet many people.

Kathleen would like to see the Juniata College team become more unified. Individual and team goals need to be set, and then everyone has to strive to achieve them. During her next years playing for JC, Kathleen thinks that she and her teammates need to be more win and score-oriented. She feels that team effort is the key.

Kathleen says she is honored to have been chosen to the Mid-East team. She is excited about playing with experienced players and feels that there will be much to learn about playing hockey at a different level.

Amy Blough, a freshman Pre-Medicine major, began playing hockey when she was in sixth grade. She has attended various team camps and participated in the Olympic Developmental C Camp last summer.

Amy said that the major adjustment between high school and college hockey was that there is more passing and team effort in college. As a freshman, hockey helped her manage her time better.

Blough said that she was honored she made the team. The level of experience is amazing. Amy has always had a goal of doing something which is well-known in hockey, and she feels that this will be a good experience for her.

The biggest transition between playing for Juniata and the Mid-Atlantic team for all of the girls was the faster pace at the club level. Everyone had to learn to play together quickly, but the girls were more confident because they knew that someone was behind them for support. The communication, team effort, and pressure were also highly evident.

Coach Kathi Quinn said how great it was that the girls made the team and commented also on the good hockey experience they will receive in California. They are going to be playing with and against good people. It's going to make them better, which will, in turn, make the team better.

The opportunity for the college hockey team to try out for the Mid-East Squad was good for the general program, as well as individual players. The enthusiasm on the team was high during the tournaments. Quinn feels that this is a good start in turning the program around. The Juniata Hockey program is beginning to get the attention it deserves.

JC Grapplers ready for another season

In his twenty-seven years as head wrestling coach, Juniata's William Berrier has had his share of young teams. Though according to Berrier, "This freshman class has more ability than any I've seen. A lot of these athletes have excellent wrestling backgrounds, it's just a matter of them getting in there and getting used to the collegiate style of wrestling."

With only five returning upperclassmen, Berrier may be forced to start six freshmen. Returning from last year's squad will be senior Larry Krizner (190 lb), and juniors, John Swanson (142 lb), Lee Abromovitz (177 lb), Tim Crowley (177 lb), and Ed Hoffman (150 lb). Berrier believes that every weight class should be filled with some quality talent, but there will be limited depth behind the starters. Key freshmen include Brad Cherry (Phillipsburg, NJ), Jerry Look (Hershey), Jeff Sloan (Conestoga), and Steve Manderbach (Schuylkill Haven).

"The Middle Atlantic Conference is a tough league," comments Berrier, "with Lycoming, Elizabethtown, University of Scranton, and King's all having strong programs. The key to our season will be to field a full team and try to remain injury free."

The 1987-88 season begins with the Lebanon Valley Invitational on December 4 and 5. The first home meet will be Decmeber 12.

"BE THERE!!"

Women's Basketball team has a positive outlook

Good bench depth and talented freshman recruits create a positive outlook for the 1987 women's basketball team.

Coming off her first year as head coach, Kathi Qinn had a successful recruiting season with three of six freshmen standing 5'10 and taller. New height, including senior walk on Jodi Cox (5'11) combined with the experience of leading rebounder Sue Grubb (5'7) and junior Sue Lockawich (5'9) are all positive factors for the 1987 team.

The front court, though young will have good height and depth. Grubb, a guard/forward finished last season leading the MAC in rebounding with 13.7 per game. Lockawich, last year's tallest Indian was second in team rebounding with 8.2 bounds per game. Helping out underneath the boards this season will be 6'0 freshman Heidi McCarthy, a product of a highly competitive high school league in the suburbs of Washington, D.C., Colleen McGinn, a 5'10 forward/center from Pennsville, N.J. is a hard worker who was named to the first team Salem County and second team Tri-County during her high school career and Pam Wyrick, a 5'11 guard/forward from Governor Mifflin High School, was the captain of the Berks County Championship team. Quinn claims with her good moves inside and out, and on both sides of the court, she may use Wyrick and Grubb in the backcourt to take advantage of their height.

Quinn's biggest conern will be the development of the point guard. Quinn lost starting guard Laura Hoffman last season with a serious knee injury. Looking to run the team's offense will be freshman Kelli Sinkovich from Middletown High School. While Sinkovich has the most experience, Quinn will also be looking at Kelley Woodworth out of Stuarts Draft High School in Maryland and Andrea Smeigh, an Altoona High School graduate who was a member of the PIAA state championship team in 1986. The only upperclassman returing to the backcourt is senior Illona Gillette. The 5'7 guard will add versatility and strength to the bench because of her experience.

Although the 1987 team includes better height and depth, Quinn remains "cautiously optimistic". The team is very young and a lot may be determined on how fast the freshman mature and adjust to playing at the collegiate level. "The kids have been working hard on conditioning and we should be more competitive this year," says Quinn.

In addition to her freshman class, Quinn will also have the services of assistant coach Kelly Sparr. A student/athlete at the University of New Mexico, Sparr went on to play in the Ladies Pro Basketball Association. She has had experience coaching at the high school level and Quinn is looking forward to her association with the women's program.

JC Crushes Upsala in Season Finale; Finish the year with 7-3 record

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata Football Team wrapped up their season this past Saturday by dominating a helpless Upsala team 37-6. The 7-3 Indians controlled the game from play one and ended their fine season on a high note. Several Indians put their names in the record books as the offense, which returns all its starters next season, continued to improve.

After stopping Upsala's first possession (on a John Sparh interception) Juniata pushed the ball across the goal line in three plays. Don Betar's TD reception from Cubby Davis put the Indians in front 6-0 with only four minutes elapsed in the first quarter.

Upsala then mounted their only scoring drive of the game. Two plays into the second quarter Spencer Lester rolled left and scored on the keeper from four yards out. The 11 play drive covered 64 yards but was not enough to tie the game. The extra point conversion failed and Upsala would not put the ball in the endzone the rest of the game.

Juniata bounced right back, scoring three minutes later on Betar's second TD reception of the game. Mike Cottle's 24 yard reception was the big play of the drive, which put the Indians ahead 14-6 after Keith Watson added his second extra point. Upsala had a chance to put three points on the board, but a 42 yard field goal fell short.

The Indians next score came two minutes after Upsala's field goal attempt when freshman Dennis Derenzo hauled in a 19 yard pass from Davis. Watson's extra point put Juniata in front 21-6 with 5:26 remaining in the half. Watson added a field goal three minutes later after Bob Herzog set up the score with Juniata's second interception of the game.

Herzog set up the next touchdown by intercepting his second pass of the day at the Upsala 33 yard line. Four plays later Davis connected with Mike Cottle for his fourth TD pass of the day. JC led 30-6 with 10:58 left to play in the third quarter. After stopping an Upsala 12 play drive Juniata took over on their own 20 yard line. On the third play from scrimmage the Indians throw a flanker screen to Frankee Phelps who went 80 yards for the touchdown. JC led 37-6 with 3:11 left to play in the third quarter.

There was no further scoring in the game as the Indians season closed in a convincing matter. Three Indians set and tied school records in the process while Mark Dorner set a new college football record with 15 interceptions in one season. Cubby Davis became the first quarterback in Juniata history to pass for more than 2000 yards in a season, while teammate Mike Cottle broke Dave Murphy's record for most receptions in a season by hauling in 57 aireals. Cottle also is tied for most touchdown receptions in a career (25) with Murphy; a record which will most likely be broken in Cottle's final season.

In the game Juniata managed 12 first downs to Upsalas 18. JC rushed the ball 29 times gaining 113 net yards and compiled 223 yards through the air. The Indians averaged 6.46 yards per play, holding Upsala to a 3.35 average.

The Indians had four interceptions on the day and also recovered two fumbles. Juniata was 4 for 12 on third down conversions, Upsala was a shaky 3 of 15. The Indians got to Spencer Lester five times in the game, Chuck Rehn led the way with two sacks and ten tackles. Frank Gay had 13 tackles, giving him a team high of 101 tackles for the year. Ray Witmer and Jeff Haines had eight and seven tackles, respectively.

Pat Danneker rushed for 41 yards out of the fullback position, with teammates Dan Crossey and Dennis Derenzo combining for 54 yards from the tailback slot. Davis was 12 for 23 for 223 yards, five touchdowns, one interception, and was sacked three times. Mike Cottle had three grabs for 44 yards and one score, Don Betar had three catches for 39 yards and two TD's, while Jim Metz had 39 yards on 3 receptions.

Things look rather promising for the '88 Indian squad, especially offensively where the Indians will return all of their 11 starters. On defense Juniata will be forced to fill in some holes--spots where talent and experience will surely be missed. The absence of a quality Mark Dorner in the secondary will be among top priority for Coach Rob Ash. However, the Indians will also lose Greg St. Clair, Tom Yeager and possibly Chuck Rihn and Ray Witmer. Once again defensive coach Brad Small may be forced to move some players around, however, after losing the experience and talent from last years 9-2 squad, 7-3 is impressive and shows good signs for the future.

Editor's Note:

The Juniatian is reminding all those who are interested in being a sports reporter to come to the staff meetings every Sunday night at 7:00pm. This year looks to be nothing short of success for all teams winter-spring, but the lack of writers, information, etc. will hiinder the chances of letting the college and its comunity know of your success.

Just because you participate does not mean that you cannot write. If interested contact sports editors Mike Antenucci (Box 7) or Andreas Zavod (Public Relations Office-day) some time soon. Winter and spring teams, as well as clubs (ie.Ski) should keep this in mind for future refrences.

Juniata Spikers advance to Final 4!

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata Women's Volleyball Team is making yet another appearance in the Final Four after winning the Eastern Regionals this past weekend on College Hill.

After a first round bye the Indians easily swept Eastern Connecticut on Friday. Eastern Connecticut came from behind against Eastern Mennonite on Thursday, trailing 2-0 before winning the next three games. E.C. would not be as fortunate in their comeback attempt against Juniata.

The Indians would be in the finals against Cortland State. This time it took four games but the outcome was the same, an Indian victory and a trip to Chicago for the NCAA Division III Championship. Juniata will play Friday night in the semi-finals against Elmhurst College. In the other semi-final match on Friday Illinois-Benedictine will play the University of California at San Diego.

The winners will meet Saturday night for the national title, there wil also be a constalation match for third place. Juniata has played Illinois-Benedictine, losing in the finals of the Indian Classic. This time things wil be different as Coach Larry Bock wil look for his experienced players to take control.

Beth Hoppel, Cathy Miller, and Jackie Rebert will lead the way, while teammates Laurie Snow, Tanya McClucas, Rhonda Bygall and all the other girls try to win a national championship.

S.H.A.C. sponsors informative AIDS lecture by Dr. D'Augelli

By Jen Wade

On November 18, in Alumni Hall, Dr. Anthony D'Augelli, Associate Professor of Human Developement at Penn State University, presented a lecture on AIDS. The lecture, sponsored in part by the Student Health Advisory Committee, provided detailed information about AIDS transmission as well as disspelling some of the fears and phobias commonly associated with AIDS.

As a member of the Penn State AIDS Education Committee, Dr. D'Augelli has spent much of the past few years researching and dealing with the psychological effects of AIDS. His work has also kept him abreast of the latest information concerning the disease.

In the lecture he provided fairly current statistics concerning AIDS patients. At the beginning of October, there were 42,182 identified cases, with 41,600 occurring in people over 13 years of age. Of those, most are men; 66% are gay or bisexual; 16% are IV drug users; 8% are gay/bisexual IV drug users. Only 2% clearly acquired AIDS through repeated sexual activity with a high-risk partner. Agewise 68% are between 20 and 40 years of age, and 24% are adult cases while 54% of child cases are black.

When AIDS first appeared on the scene five or six years ago, it was identified as a disease which affected primarily gay men. Some people who oppose homosexuality on religious grounds feel that AIDS is God's punishment for homosexuals, who are "wrongfully protected" from harm by civil laws. Despite its prevalence among the gay community, the black community, and IV drug users, AIDS is a disease which can affect anyone, a fact of which more and more people are becoming aware. Dr. D'Augelli made it clear that the key issue in determining who gets AIDS is behavior, not lifestyle.

Much of Dr. D'Augelli's research information comes from surveys takem among Penn State students over the past few years. Most who complete the survey today know what AIDS is and how it is acquired. They are also increasingly aware that AIDS is not exclusive to gay men and IV drug users, and they are more concerned about how AIDS will affect them personally.

However, the surveys also indicate that many myths still exist. For example, many respondents believe that AIDS can be acquired by casual contact with someone who has AIDS, swimming in a pool with an AIDS patient, or eating in a restaurant where a waiter has AIDS. There also seems to be a relationship, even among professional health care individuals, between AIDS fears and negative gay/lesbian attitudes. The only way to dispel these fears is to openly discuss the subject.

As research into AIDS goes ahead, more and more information about the disease becomes available. We know that the incubation period is usually three to seven years. The virus has been found in body fluids such as saliva and tears but survives best in semen and blood. For this reason, there is no evidence that AIDS can be transmitted by kissing. There also appears to be no risk involved with oral sex.

The primary vehicle for transmission is repetitive receptive anal sex. It causes damage to interior linings fairly easily, allowing semen to pass directly into the bloodstream. When used properly, a condom is an extremely effective method of protection from AIDS and also from other sexually transmitted diseases.

138 CMU Co-eds Busted for Booze

Some of the 138 students arrested in an early-morning raid of two Carnegie Mellon University fraternity houses were amused, while others were outrage. State and city authorities were dead serious.

And Braden Walter, the university's dean of student affairs, said yesterday that he was "a little saddened that this could have happened."

Saturday's raid was conducted by a task force of 55 state police and Liquor Control Board officials, and officers from the city police and fire bureaus.<P<MSJim McDonald of the Bureau of Liquor Control Enforcement said the raid was organized because his office had received numerous complaints about underage drinking at fraternity parties. The operation had been planned for months, he said.

"What they're doing is illegal," he said.

Specifically, the students were selling, consuming, and possessing alcohol, according to the police and were taken to the Public Safety Building, Downtown, after the raids. Eleven students, ranging in age from 18 to 28, were arrested on charges of selling liquor without a license and selling liquor to minors. They were released Saturday on nominal bonds by City Magistrate Edward Borkowski and scheduled for hearings next Monday.

Borkowski accepted guilty pleas at summary hearings on underage drinking from 116 students and fined them $300 plus costs. The fines were suspended on condition that each student perform 15 hours of community service with the Pittsburgh Clean Cities Committee. Charges against 11 were dismissed.

During the raid, many of the students argued that what they were doing had been going on "forever" and would continue to go on "forever" on just about every college campus in the country.

"I can't believe this. We're raising money for muscular dystrophy (research) and we get arrested," student Joe Boltz said.

Boltz, 21, said a campus organization called SAMS (Students Against Muscular Dystrophy) raised $23,000 last year for MS research through parties. "We were hoping to raise $500 from tonight's party," Boltz said.

The fraternities were suggesting a $2 donation at the door.

"Our intention is not to sell beer, but to raise money for MS, and that's all," said Eric Tenbus, 21, a senior writing student and a member of the fraternities.

Walter said he will investigate the fraternity parties and the raid.

"I've heard a lot of things. Some students feel they weren't treated fairly or properly, but I've just got to wait until I get to work tomorrow to start an investigation into this," he said.

Peace On Earth

Peace activists in Huntingdon County are celebrating the end of the longest arms control dry spell in the history of the modern presidency, and their role in helping to bring it about. As the Administration prepares to sign the INF accord with the USSR, peace groups will be gathering to "toast" the accord.

"The experts were wrong to assume that the peace movement was dead after Ronald Reagan's reelection--we were just down in the trenches, and this INF accord is in part a response to our dogging the

The Holiday Season is upon us, possibly forced upon us by the retail industry. At any rate, every city street in America is a constant reminder of the rapidly approaching holiday. It seems as if the large Christmas decorations are strategically located to induce a mass panic that you will never get everything finished before December 25. At least this year we will not have to give "Juniata College gifts" from our bookstore because there will be time to shop at home.

When it is time to plan the lists of gifts that will be perfect for mom, dad, and brothers and sisters, the issue of cost comes to mind. We have basically managed our monthly paycheck to purchase the bare necessities, but these "unexpected" expenses such as holidays definitely cramp the monetary situation. With so much in mind to purchase and a lack of funds to do so, one begins to think of the possible ways that money could have been saved over the past year.

Just imagine what could be done with the money from meals that you have missed- just this semester. How realistic is it to purchase 21 meals for every week that we are here? Apparently, someone has a monopoly on food on this campus. For lack of another choice, every student must purchase the full amount of meals which leads me to believe that someone, somewhere is making a nice profit. How many people would pay McDonald's or O.I.P. for food that they did not consume? It only seems logical to pay for what is used- we use our residence hall facilities, hence we pay for that.

For the sake of argument, assume that there is an alternate plan to purchase 15 meals per week. The money that would be saved by those interested students could finance this holiday and a small vacation to Daytona Beach (sign-up at the information desk!). This little adaptation would not only make us (and our parents) happy, but it may be enough to financially place Juniata into the hands of many students who would otherwise be unable to afford such an institution. The dollars saved a week on meals may also be enough to keep students on this campus- the major appeal of living off-campus is the freedom to eat as many, or as few, meals as one wants.

With the "big" day approaching, this could be the perfect time to consider this appeal for an alternative to the existing standards of living. The money that could be saved may be enough to make your mother more understanding of the fact that you miss breakfast once and a while- or that you feel the need to eat out, only to save yourself from the monotony of Baker Dining.

HOW TO SURVIVE FINAL EXAMS AT JUNIATA COLLEGE? This question, it seems to me, is certainly on the minds of most students, particularly freshmen, at this point in the semester. Within the next week to ten days, freshmen will be "experiencing" finals for the first time.

There is an old expression that states, "You don't have to stick your finger into the fire to find out that it will get burned." Put another way, we can learn from others how to manage more effectively this critical period of time. There are, indeed, behaviors one can engage in to enhance performance on final exams so that we don't wind up getting "burned" in the process.

While this particular article is aimed primarily at the neophyte, first time final exam takers at Juniata, the following suggestions are offered for all you veterans as well.

Be positive and optimistic as you think about, plan for and enter into the final exam period. Take on the attitude that exams represent a challenge you can successfully meet as opposed to a threat that you are not sure you can handle. Evaluative situations can be threatening and anxiety-producing only if we allow them to be.

Manage your time and environment as effectively as possible. Structure and plan carefully when, where and how often you study. Avoid places that are not conducive to positive, productive outcomes (noisy residence halls, crowded libraries). Strive for quality and not just quantity, that is, work smarter not longer.

You don't have to be a hermit or a recluse during this period of time. In fact, it is crucial that you maintain some semblance of normality during this somewhat abnormal time. Exercise, diet, social interaction, relaxation, and proper sleeping patterns become even moe important during times of higher stress and anxiety.

Don't go it alone!! Ask your RA or other students how they prepare themselves for finals. Consult with your professors (they really were students at one time) regarding any suggestions they may have. Talk with your advisor(s) concerning any thoughts they might have. Peer advisors are excellent resources as are other student services professionals as Rds. Yours truly might even be in a position to help!

In the next article we'll talk about a few more suggestions regarding how to survive finals at JC.

Madrigal-what is this great event that creates such enthusiasm across the Juniata College campus? When I was a freshman I thought Madrigal at Juniata was just like it was in high school-a bunch of music students dressed up like 17th century minstrels eating turkey legs and baked potatoes. They couldn't give the tickets away!! At Juniata Madrigal is the great tradition of eating good food, being served by profs, and singing Christmas tunes. I'm not knocking Madrigal dinner. I think it's great. I go every year even though I get stuck in the alcove or Tote. What I am knocking is the process of acquiring tables this year.

It all started out the evening before the tickets went on sale. Shortly after dinner had digested, the hard core madrigalities were out in numbers knocking down the front door of Ellis. Parked in sofas or a number of different reclining positions, these people were determined to have the best seats in the house-and they weren't even freshmen.. That's sick!!! As soon as about ten of them got out there, the rampage began. Word starts spreading around campus, "there's at least fifteen people out in front of Ellis and you know what that means, fifteen tables gone!!"

So everyone starts running around like rabbid dogs getting meal sticker numbers and working out shifts to stay out all night. My shift was from 1 a.m. to 3 a.m., but I ended up staying unil 4 because my relief was at the Colonial. I couldn't sleep because some girl in a sea of blankets and pillows kept yelling "what number am I now." That brings me to another point. When we first got there we were number 32 and in the 3 odd hours that I was there we had miraculously moved to number 38. People were obviously saving spaces for people who weren't even there. Can you imagine telling five Hells Angels waiting for Grateful Dead tickets (in 20 degree weather for 7 hours)

By Joel Ranck, Promotions Director

Power 92 is moving to the top. WKVR is on a definite upswing at Juniata College. The station will soon be going to stereo to better serve the campus and community. This switch to stereo will be a big boost to the quality of sound that station will be broadcasting. However, going to stereo will take a very concerted effort by the Management Staff and college administration. Much time and effort will go into this switch, but we on the board know that the switch will go smoothly.

Presently the station is searching for a logo and a slogan for Power 92. A contest was initiated to give the campus an opportunity to decide upon our marquise. This new logo and slogan will be placed on all of the station's material including the new T-shirts soon to be printed. The new logo and slogan will be unveiled sometime in the coming weeks.

Where have the lounge parties gone? We at Power 92 asked that question and decided to find out. Our method out was to have our own lounge party but with a little twist-FOR FREE. Not only do we offer free admission but also the first 200 people coming to the party get a Power 92 Power Chug Mug. Be there on the 22nd of January, and look for more details around campus.

Yes, Power 92 is on the upswing, and we hope that you help us continue the shot to the top. If you have any questions or suggestions about WKVR, you are cordially invited to our staff meetings every Sunday at 9:00 p.m. in the Blue Room. Also, all staff members are invited to the all staff elections Monday, December 7, in Alumni Hall.

Always increasing the power.

Mike Laird is Juniata's Resident Student Nurse

By Trish Kazmerski

Who is the lucky guy who lives with the 150 girls of Lesher Hall? Why is he there? How did he get there?

His name is Mike Laird. He is the registered nurse, who is now attending Juniata as a biology major and hopes to enter medical school. Besides being a RN, he is also a paramedic and certified emergency nurse.

By now you realize he is not your ordinary college student. Since his graduation from Tyrone High School in 1975, Mike has been enrolled in many nursing programs. He spent two years at the Franklin County Vo-Tech School studying practical nursing. In 1978, he completed his training as a paradedic. He was trained at the Altoona Mobile Emergency Department, known as AMED, and spent five years there. He took night classes at PSU in Chemistry Tracking Nursing Courses. In 1981 he attended Altoona Hospital School of Nursing and graduated in 1984. After, he worked in the ICU wing for 18 months and eventually worked in the emergency room at Altoona Hospital. He quit there this past August in order to attend Juniata and pursue his medical career.

What makes a man spend 12 years studying, and then want to add another 10? It's called ambition. After reaching all these goals, Mike found out he wanted more. Thus, he is now aiming at becoming a doctor. However, with ambition also comes sacrifice.

Mike is married and has two children Michael,6, and Anne,4. His wife Robin is also an RN and is employed at the Altoona Hospital. Mike says he is constantly torn between depriving his family of his presence and achieving his goals. He is, however, comforted by the fact that his family is very supportive and come to visit him every weekend. Because of this, Mike wants to tell all JC students, "Do what you want to do now, while you are young, because doing it when you are older is frustrating and often conflicts with your lifestyle."

Mike said of Juniata, "It is a culture within a culture." He explains that the people here are so friendly that they go out of their way to say hello, while at Penn State they went out of their way to avoid you. He also said that the class work at JC is three times more demanding per credit than at PSU. His favorite part of JC is speaking with the foreign exchange students. He loves hearing about their countries, especially their medical systems.

Mike wants to remind all students that he is on duty Monday-Saturday (including Saturday night) from 6-8pm. He is on call, however, at all hours. He, however, also wants to remind students to be courteous and oblige the Health Center's hours. He, however, also wants to remind students to be courteous and oblige the Health Center's hours. He asks that you remember, he too, is a student and needs time to study. Only in extreme emergencies should he be called. Something like an ingrown toenail, Mike says, is not an emergency.

Mike also wants to remind students that the Health Center can save them, and their parents, lots of money. The Center can provide many prescriptions and also diagnostic tests and x-rays. Although the x-rays and some tests are performed at the hospital, you do not get charged for the use of the emergency room. According to Mike, this is a savings of $65.00. Also he urges students to use SHAC. This room contains a scale and information on every health issue-from nutrition to AIDS.

Speaking of AIDS, Mike wants to remind all students about the vital use of condoms. They protect you from getting AIDS, as well as all sexual diseases. He says that practicing safe sex is the most important topic people in the medical profession can relay to the public today.

For those wanting to contact Mike or any of the other Juniata medical staff. The Health Center is located on the west side of Lesher on the first floor. Mike's apartment is inside the corridor.

Do you mean to tell me that with all of the wisdoms and great minds associated with this institute of higher learning no one can figure out a decent way to give out tables? Maybe we should make it general admission, so all of the Madrigal freaks could run over to the front. There has to be a better way than pretending you're on the HOBO overnight to get stuck in Tote. Hoopsters suffer tough loss in season opener to W&J

The Juniata Mens basketball team opened its 87-88 campaign with a 70-65 loss to non-league oppenent Washington and Jefferson. The exciting contest, which was viewed by a Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center capacity crowd, was close throughout.

The Indians were forced to play catch up most of the game, trailing by as much as 12 points in the first half. The difference in the game was the poor shooting of the Indians. Juniata shot 35% from the field and only 60% from the charity stripe. Meanwhile, W&J shot 50% from the field and 42% from three point land.

Dan Jones led the Presidents with 17 points, while teammate Dave Brackin added 16. Wayne Paul paced Juniata with 14 points, getting help from teammates Duane Dise, Mike Antenucci, and Shawn Habakus, each had ten points.

This was not the only loss the Indians suffered this past week, however. The team was faced with the crushing announcement of co-captain Les Squair's decision not to play this year. Squair<r"s absence was rapidly noticed on the boards, where not one Juniata player matched double figures. Squair led the conference in rebounding last year, ahead of two All-American and All Conference centers.

Head coach Dan Helm feels that one key to Juniata's success will be the ability to crash the boards. The Indians out rebounded W&J 42-39 but out the Presidents at the line 26 times.

The Indians next game was nothing short of embarrassing for the Juniata players, as their failure to execute the offense PLUS another poor shooting exhibition, allowed Division I (Atlantic 10) medium, Penn State to cruise to a 83-32 blowout.

The Nittany Lions used their height advantage (6'8, 6'9, 6'8 front line), to control the boards and out rebound the Indians 50-31. Juniata shot a sloppy 23% from the floor, 18% from behind the three point stripe, and 66% from the line. PSU shot 51% from the field and 61% from the line.

PSU was led by Junior Tom Houassey who canned 17 points. Ed Fogell and Mike Peapos scored 13 and 10 respectively. Not one Indian reached double figures in scoring or rebounding. Antenucci led with six points while Duane Dise led JC on the boards with five.

Fortunately, for the Indians, the first two games were non-conference contests. The Indians league season started at the beginning of the week. JC travelled to Elizabethtown on Monday, Lycoming yesterday and will host Messiah this Saturday at 8:00. At the start of the week Senior Wayne Paul needed 42 points to reach the 1000 point mark for his career.

issue all around the country," said the Reverend William Sloane Coffin, who has recently assumed the presidency of the newly merged peace organization, SANE/FREEZE.

"This treaty is the result of consistent pressure created by many groups working together for peace and disarmament--people from every walk of like, in every town and village, reminding our leaders of the insanity of the arms race," said Larry Mutti, Coordinator of the Huntingdon County Freeze Campaign.

A recent local example of this, says Mutti, was the fourth annual Freeze Walk in support of the US-USSR INF accord. The walk through Huntingdon October 11 involved over 50 local citizens-who marched the 3.5 miles; and over 100 citizens who donated $1700 to the walkers to support peace activities in town.

While jubilant over the pending agreement, peace leaders warn that the INF must be seen in its proper light. "While we're celebrating the INF, we realize that it's just an icebreaker. It will dismantle less than 2.000 nuclear weapons.

Indian football wrap-up goal for strong '88 season

If Juniata began the 1987 football season with a lot of question marks in their line-up, there were nothing but exclamation points when the Indians finished their season with a 7-3 record.

Having lost eleven starters to graduation last spring, Head Coach Rob Ash and defensive coordinator Brad Small were forced to compile a game plan that fit the personality and skill of their players. With two All-America hopefuls, a GTE/CoSida Academic All-America candidate, numerous broken and several tied records, the Indians clearly had a successful season.

The start of the 1987 campaign began ferociously for the Indians with a decisive 23-0 victory over Division III powerhouse Randolph Macon. With successive victories over Delaware Valley and Lebanon Valley, Ash believes the 3-0 start exceeded all their expectations. "The losses to Widener and Moravian brought us back to reality. No doubt that that was the low point of our season, but I am really impressed with how the kids came back after two straight defeats," said Ash.

The memory of last season's 63-27 thrashing by the Lycoming Warriors was incentive enough as the Indians added a 10-7 victory to the win column. Freshman punter Dennis Derenzo kept the Warriors deep in their own territory with a record 12 punts for 507 yards.

After a win against Albright College, the Tribe found themselves one conference game away from having a shot at the title. For the third year in a row however, the Indians came up short of their goal, losing to Susquehanna University 14-13. "It's a shame that this group of kids that worked so hard all season had to fall a kick short from winning the league."

The Tribe wasn't about to falter, as they came back the next week to crush (then) tenth ranked Wilkes College 57-22 and had a record breaking afternoon the following week, to soundly beat Upsala 37-6.

"Our goal is to become conference champs every year, and our beating Wilkes shows that we have talent. I refuse to be discouraged about the season," said Coach Ash.

The Indians gained over 3,200 offensive yards behind junior quarterback Cubby Davis. Taking over for 1986standout Mike Culver, Ash believes Davis matured very well as their starting caller. "He had great performances throughout the season, but he especially came on strong in our last five games," said Ash.

Davis set individual season records for passing with 326 attempts, 169 completions and 2161 total yards. He finished the season tying a team offense record with five touchdown passes against Upsala.

On the receiving end of Davis's passes were an outstanding group of receivers. Senior Frank Phelps and juniors Don Betar, Mike Cottle and Jim Metz combined for over 130 receptions and 22 touchdowns. Cottle set an individual season record with 57 receptions while gaining 666 yards and seven touchdowns. Metz, a GTE/CoSida Academic All-America candidate grabbed 21 passes for 334 yards from his tight end position. Davis used his strength, and Phelps' speed to create a deep offensive threat against the opposing defense. Phelps finished his last season with 16 receptions, 366 yards and five touchdowns. Three touchdown receptions in the Randolph-Macon game ties an individual single game record.

Perhaps the biggest change in the Indian scheme was a different defensive philosophy. Cubby has another year to work with these receivers. Crossey and Danneker are also nice backs to have and our offensive line will be returning.

Senior co-captain Greg St. Clair made a transition from the defensive backfield to contribute 77 tackles from his outside linebacker position. Seniors Tom Yeager and Ray Witmer combined for 121 tackles while junior linebacker Frank Gay led all defensive players with 99 total tackles.

The Indian kicking game had some sweet and sour taste this season with sophomore Keith Watson connecting for seven of fifteen field goal attempts. Watson booted a 40 yard field goal to break a 7-7 tie late in the fourth quarter against Lycoming but broke his confidence on several attempts during the one point loss to Susquehanna.

DeRenzo and Spahr shared punting duties this season and both finished with similar statistics.

AFCA Names Dorner

Division III football, where television coverage is limited...players play for the love of the game...and sports information directors fight to get their school's team or players recognized around the country. No doubt however, that it's their talent that shines through a no frills, no thrills division. The American Football Coaches Association (AFCA) today named Juniata's Mark Dorner to the Kodak All-America Team for College Division II

The College Division II squad represents the best from NCAA Division III and NAIA Division II colleges and universities. Dorner, a 6'2, 205 lb. senior defensive back joins 1986 recipient Steve Yerger as the only players in Juniata College history to receive such an honor.

A four year starter for the Indians, Dorner has accumulated over 220 tackles, 53 pass breakups and more than 300 yards in punt returns. Dorner became a "household" name among coaching staffs with his NCAA record fifteen interceptions in one season. No other football player in the history of college football, Division I, II or III has had as many interceptions. The record was held by Steve Nappo of Buffalo with 13 in 1986 before Dorner's record breaking season. He also holds the team record for punt return yards with 202 yards in 15 attempts and tied a career interception record with 25 interceptions in his four year career.

Power 92 elects Board members

By Suzanne Lydic

On the evening of Tuesday, December 1, 1987, elections were held for six executive staff positions for our own in-campus radio station--power 92. Elections were held now--as opposed to February so the out-going members can slowly pass their responsibilities on to the new directors. The remaining of the 25 management staff positions for the station will be chosen by application this week.

Junior, Mike Barnett, was elected station manager. His major responsibilities will consist of overseeing the staff and monitoring the condition of the station as a whole. Barnett's goals for the station include increased community service and promotion. He also hopes to see the staff work towards increased communication through more staff meetings, newsletters, and parties. Mike also hopes to tailor the radio programs closer to student desires by taking periodic surveys of the student body's music taste.

Joel Ranck, Power 92's new Chief Announcer, will work with staff development by training the new staff and bringing alumni from the communications field in to speak with the staff. Ranck hopes to incorporate a more professional attitude into the station personnel and to improve the program for training new staff.

All record keeping and budget controlling will be supervised by Shawn Peck, new Business Manager. Peck will be a vital asset to the station as he works to procure sponsers from businesses in Huntingdon. Once enough monies are collected, the station may look towards installing a new stereo system.

What you will be hearing over the Power 92 waves in the coming months will be responsible to junior, Ann Telfein--Program Director. She will schedule the news, weather, and music shows and deal with airing ads and schedules of events.

Our speedy News Director will now be Laura Naughton. Naughton will bring us news both from around the area and around the world--via satellite dish and ABC. Laura hopes to incorporate a more regularly scheduled news program and to maintain the campus opinionary "Speak-Out".

Al Schroff, sophomore, will be busy this year acting as Chief Engineer. Maintinance of all station equipment will be kept up by Schroff who will also help in the selection of any new equipment (i.e. a new board, card machine, etc.).

Any persons still interested in learning to deejay may sign up in the lobby of the station. Joel Ranck will contact you about a Sunday afternoon training session. Following that session, you will sit in and observe experienced D.J.'s during a live show. Then Friday and Saturdays are reserved for first-time shows on rotation. Once you are trained you will be required to attend the "Chalk Talks" run by the Program Director and Chief Announcer to talk over the shows and to eventually choose a specialty staff.

When the staff of Power 92 found themselves attending fewer and fewer lounge parties, they decided to throw one of their own. On January 22, a FREE party will be given with the first 200 people attending receiving a Power 92 Chug Mug. Watch for details.

When new station manager, Mike Barnett, was asked his opinion of the new executive board he replied, "I am really happy with the new board of directors. I'm sure it'll be a good and fun year. I expect great things from this staff since it's so experienced and excited!"

Barnett also sent out thank-you's to "Jim Donaldson for all his help and support as an advisor. And to Joe Newhart, past station manager, for all of his help."

Scialabba recognised as Outstanding Young Man

By Deb Dougherty

Joseph "Joe" Scialabba was selected for the Outstanding Young Men of America Award for 1987 (OYMA). OYMA recognizes the achievements and abilities of men between 21 and 36 years old. The men chosen for this award have distinguished themselves in fields such as community service, professional leadership, academic achievement, business advancement, cultural accomplishments, and civic and political participation..

Joe is a native of Hunitngdon and attended Juniata College, where he majored in English/Communications. He now works for the college as an admissions counselor and the assistant basketball coach. He is also the announcer for the football games, advisor for the JCAA (the student admissions group), and he will help to serve at the Madrigal Dinner on December 10.

Joe is the coach for the 13 to 15 year old youth baseball team in Huntingdon. He was the commentator for the Turkey Bowl video, which benefitted the Easter Seal Society. He is also a member of the Pennsylvania Association of College Admissions Counselors.

As a senior, Joe received the John E. Blood Memorial Award for his high GPA as a student athlete. During his college career, he was a member of Who's Who in American College Students and the Honor Society. He was a four year letter winner in varsity golf and was the student assistant basketball coach when he was a senior. Joe also worked for the sports information center throughout his four years of college.

Come to the All-Campus Worship

Celebration, christmas music, glowing candlelight, and a warm sense of community, all share a part in this year's All Campus Worship Service. The service is on Sunday, December 13.

Prior to the service, there is protestant communion at Stone Church of the Brethren and Catholic Mass in the ballroom of Ellis Hall, each beginning at 6 p.m. The sounds of brass will be heard as the students gather together at Detweiler Plaza to proceed to the worship service at 7 p.m. Featured at the service will be Juniata's own Concert Choir and the popular group "Class".

Nominees are named

The 1988 edition of WHO'S WHO AMONG STUDENTS IN AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES will include the names of 30 students from Juniata College who have been selected as national outstanding campus leaders.

Campus nominating committees and editors of the annual directory have included the names of these students based on their academic achievement, service to the community, leadership in extracurricular activities and potential for continued success.

They join an elite group of students selected from more than 1,400 institutions of higher learning in all 50 states, the District of Columbia and several foreign nations.

Editorial

This being the final issue of "The Juniatian" for 1987, several thoughts come to mind. We've finished our classes for the Fall semester and are about to embark on the challenge of finals week. After this week, which usually seems like three, we will all be bound for home to spend some time with our families and friends.

The Yuletide Season is a special time to reflect on one's past. Thoughts of Christmases past fill one's mind and warm the heart. Everyone has at least one childhood Christmas memory that stands out among the rest. Remember your first bicycle or that dollhouse with all of the accessories? At first glance, this holiday seems to be every child's dream- a chance to ask for everything that they have always wanted.

Now as college students, we look at this time a little differently- how can we ask for anything considering the cost of Juniata? This is a special time to celebrate the birth of Christ and to appreciate the things that we have at the moment. We have all been blessed with our health, good friends, a safe environment, and loving families. We are aware of this all year, but the Christmas season simply creates the opportune time to express our feelings.

Unfortunately, the Holidays may generate sadness because there is something missing from your life. Memories become especially difficult to deal with- the past seems so real and close. At times, it may appear that Christmas just isn't going to be Christmas. That is when it is time to deal with these thoughts, put the past into perspective and appreciate the present. Maybe it is not too late to mend the troubled spots in your life, the things that are causing your unhappiness and creating the void in your life. The mending of a friendship or relationship may be the best Christmas present you could ask for.

"The Juniatian" staff would like to wish everyone a Merry Christmas and best wishes for the new year- may all of your hopes and dreams come true for the season.

At this very moment (not, of course, at the moment you're reading this -- you ARE reading this, aren't you? -- but, at the moment I'me writing this), I am not feeling very inspired. I've just printed out a file containing all the poems I wrote for Poetry Writing class (I'm sorry, all right? What do you expect an English major to take around here?). A whole semester's worth of inspiration -- including some reworking of past inspiration -- staring me in the face, and I cannot think of anything to write about. Pretty unbelievable, isn't it?

Actually it is not hard to believe if you really think about it mainly because writing this particular column isn't something I HAVE to do. It's also not due within the next half hour. How can I be inspired with no pressure? no deadline? Do you think I can just make a Sheetz run and pick some up? Wait a minute, I'll be right back. I bought an instant lottery ticket, too. Maybe I'll win some free inspiration.

I may be prejudiced, but I think that being an English major is pretty tough. Don't say it! I've heard them all before:

CHEM, BIO, or PRE-MED major: "I spent all afternoon in lab and the data is still no good." Or, "The whole class failed the practical because the prof gave us slides that were so blurry that we couldn't make anything out." First violins, please.

BUSINESS major: "Dr. Cherry threw everyone out of class today." Or, "I got lost on the HOBO overnight." Enter second violins, please.

PHYSICS major: "I was up until 3:00 in the morning trying to do those problems. They're impossible!" Or, "That test was so hard that the highest grade in the class was a 47, except for  (you know who you are), who had a 96 and ruined the curve." Enter trumphets, softly.

PHILOSOPHY major: "Why?" Flutes, please.

PSYCHOLOGY major: "All my rats died, and no one volunteers to take part in my experiment." Tympani, please.

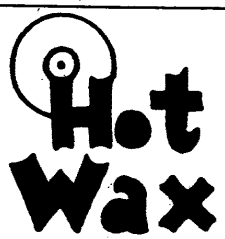
COMPUTER SCIENCE major: "The VAX crashed yesterday." Or, "I wish those English majors would stop writing all their papers on the Editor and hogging up all the terminals." All together now.

Well, what about us English majors? Most of you have either taken Freshman Composition and Art of Lit. or English I and II. English majors have chosen to make a college career out of taking courses like these. Who knows what our careers will be after graduation, but at least we'll have had a college career, right?

Do you know what English majors do? We read poetry, plays, novels and short stories. How do we know they're important? We wouldn't read them if they weren't, would we? Then we psychoanalyze them. Why? Because they are important pieces of literature, and therefore, must have some hidden meaning which we are led to believe is often of a sexual nature. Then we write paper and essay exam after paper and essay exam about these underlying meanings and allegorical representations that we have discovered through our critical psychoanalysis. Of course, remember that your psychoanalysis should be as similar to the professor's own psychoanalysis as possible. Why? Because if it<r"s not, we may not get a good grade.

I suppose that the hardest part about being an English major is the subjectivity of it all. I mean, in the sciences you pretty much know when something is right and when something is wrong. But, in English, it's all a matter of opinion. The "rightness" or "wrongness" of any particular explanation has a direct correlation to the number of people who believe it, unless that person is the professor -- then their opinion is undeniably the right one. Really, the hard part isn't finding the underlying meaning. It's trying to restate the prof's version of the underlying meaning in a way that is similar to it, but that is different enough to look like an original thought.

It's pretty tough to do that consistently for four years -- especially when you don't worship Jonathan Swift, and when you feel like you could get more out of The Far Side than Ferdydurke, which I'm still trying to finish before finals.



By Jen Wade

I was first exposed to the Smiths last year while in England, and I am not very familiar with their music. The few tracks I heard from their double album "Louder than Bombs" left me with two strong impressions: all their songs sound the same and lead singer Morrissey whines. On their latest effort, "Strangeways, Here We Come," Morrissey continues to whine, but I'm pleased to say that not all of the songs sound alike.

"Strangeways" is the Smiths' fifth and probably last album, as guitarist Johnny Marr and Morrissey both departed soon after recording. Appropriately, themes of death and parting dominate, with two of the 10 tracks referring directly to death in their titles.

Despite the overall depressing quality of the lyrics, six tunes come across as pleasing and a few as danceable. "I Started Something I Couldn't Finish" is a catchy little tune about insurety in a relationship. Their current single, "Girlfriend in a Coma," also pleases, as does "Stop Me if You Think You've Heard This One Before," a very listenable song about excuses and lying in a relationship.

Side two opens with the dirge-like "Last Night I Dreamt that Somebody Loved Me," but it picks up with "Unhappy Birthday."

Overall, I liked the album very much and may add it to my collection, but "Strangeways" will not quickly wear out a turntable needle. Unless you are a real Smiths fan, you may not want to listen to it all in one sitting.

Counselor's Corner

HOW TO SURVIVE FINALS AT JC: PART II. Last week we suggested, among other things, that you don't have to go at it alone with reference to successfully managing finals at JC. There really is a support system here that, if utilized, can enhance your chances of negotiating finals without getting "burned".

Counselor's Corner talked with some students and faculty over the past week and, based upon those discussions, prefer the following additional "survival" suggestions.

Interestingly enough, the two students and the two faculty members all made the point that the students should not wait until the last minute to begin preparing. Dr. Tom Baldino, who works with many freshmen, specifically stated that he did not think cramming and "all-nighters" were very productive strategies.

Jill Wilmer, a senior education major who also has served extremely well over the past few years in the peer advising prgram, advises freshmen not to compare and prepare for college finals as they may have for high school finals. She also suggests that students start early and make studying for finals a gradual process.

Lisa Traupman, senior resident assistant and veteran peer advisor, suggests that after students have studied well for a particular exam, they then talk to someone who is equally prepared. The notion is, of course, that many heads are better than one but only after all parties have studied the material.

Both Baldino and Dr. Jim Lakso strongly urge students to confer with their course instructors as they prepare for finals. Using previous tests was a specific recommendation made by Lakso as a way of getting a sense of what to expect on the upcoming final.

As an economics professor, Lakso made the observation that students might want to think about how to get the greatest return on their time and energy. Allocate your resources so that you get the "biggest bang for your bucks". By way of example, if you know realistically you can't get better than a "C" in a course, no matter how hard or long you study, then perhaps it is more profitable to concentrate on a course or courses where you are more likely to receive an A or B.

Hope these suggestions prove to be helpful. Do well on your finals and enjoy the upcoming holidays with family and friends.

Nicaragua faces the many changes of life

Has the revolution benefitted the people? Haven't the Sandinistas ruined the economy?

Some benefits from the revolution are undeniable. During 1980, illiteracy was reduced from 52% to 13%. School enrollment has doubled. Mass vaccination campaigns against measles, diphtheria, and polio as well as an extensive anti-malarial effort and the extension of health care facilities into the countryside have made major advances in health care. Many thousands of peasant families have benefitted from land reform programs.

From the outset, however, Nicaragua has had to face enormous economic obstacles: a treasury sacked by Somoza and his associates as they fled the country, a large foreign debt, falling world prices for its exports, and disastrous floods and droughts. There has been little new private investment and many skilled technicians and professional people have left the country. In addition, the United States has used its veto power in international lending institutions to block development loans to Nicaragua and has lobbied to keep other countries from helping with aid and trade. Finally, attacks by the contras have done damage amounting to hundreds to millions of dollars and have made long term development projects almost impossible, since about half the government budget now goes into defense.

From 1979 to 1982 the Nicaraguan economy showed remarkable growth as foreign aid flowed in and production recovered from the effects of the war. Since that time there has been little growth. Around 1985, the government, acknowledging that its programs for the urban poor had received a disproportionate share of resources at the expense of the peasantry, tood measures to redress the imbalance. In general, the government has moved away from more ambitious attempts at industrial development toward what it calls a "survival economy". Planners have ont been rigid but have taken a pragmatic approach and used market mechanisms.

It is important to note that living conditions have declined in all five Central American countries and throught Latin America since the late 1970s. For example, in 1985 when inflation hit 250% in Nicaragua, it was 1500% in Argentina, 600% in Peru, and 14,000% in Bolivia. Under difficult conditions, the Nicaraguan government is struggling to help people meet basic needs now while laying the groundwork for a more just economic order. An unquantifiable but real and visible achievement of the revolution is the people's sense of dignity, pride and hope in their future.

Everyone is Welcome

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Debra Ollinger

Have you ever been in the library and worse comes to worse and you feel you can't take it any longer--finally you just give in to frustration and you have to get up and actually use the bathrooms in the basement.

Have you ever sat there (or stood there as the case may be) and wondered what toxic chemicals they use to clean those cubicles of ill repute? No bathrooms in any of the dorms seem to reek with quite the same "odour" as do the wondrous library facilities.

Perhaps Spic and Span is in some kind of mind meld because of all the books oosing with knowledge that surround the poor defenseless rest room. Or, may be any building that even resembles an institution is bound by law to use the same hospital-smelling detergents to clean its lavatories.

Another added bonus of the library bathrooms is that anyone using the ONLY two VAX computers in the library knows you're in there and for how long.

I've often wondered if those people who seem to be at those two computers all the time are actually doing some kind of clandestine research on the bathroom usage--entering the data as you relieve yourself. The worst is that they can hear you relieving and know the instance you flush.

Wouldn't it be funny if everytime you flushed the water in the fountain outside would get hot and burn that person out there listening to you do your thing?

Sadistic, but funny.

OK, I just went in there to check and see if the smell is still there and it is. (After three years and half of the first semester the only thing that Juniata has failed to disappoint me is the stench of the library bathrooms.)

Now as I sit in the library I'm beginning to notice that perhaps it is not exactly the smell of the library bathrooms that is the real core of my annoyance. I'm beginning to be annoyed by a lot of things here.

There seems to be some type of boufont party going on about three tables away, while two guys to my left sit crossed legged and chinned propped discussing some type of literary device--starting each sentence with the word "indeed".

No, may be it's not the smell afterall, may be it's the plain fact that those bathrooms are in the library that troubles me. They still stink, mind you, but they're in the library to boot.

The Outdoor Exercise Course Is Now Open

By Jen Wade

During winter, most students add a few extra pounds. Then, during spring, they struggle and sweat to lose those pounds before beach season begins. This winter, Juniata College has provided two ways to help students shape up sooner, and in a fun, healthy fashion.

One way is by using the new outdoor exercise course, designed to promote cardiovascular conditioning, flexibility, and muscle tone. The course, initiated in conjunction with the wellness program, provides a safe, on-campus place to exercise. Support for the project came from Bob Williams ('86), a member of Student Government at the time, the Athletic Department, Bob Yanckello, and Dr. Arnold Tilden. Student Government and the Indian Club provided the financial backing.

The course begins and ends at the end of Sherwood's lawn, and consists of ten exercise stations located at various places around campus. Each station features an instruction sign, showing the user how to perform the exercises and listing repitition guidelines for both beginner and intermediate levels of conditioning. Student models on the instruction posters were members of last year's Student Government. In total, the course covers two miles, includes 27 different exercises and frequent heartbeat checks, and can be completed in 30-40 minutes.

For those who prefer exercise inside, a full range of Nautilus weight-training equipment has been placed in the multi-purpose room of the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center. Additional pieces, such as exercise bikes, have been placed in the dorms. Instruction in using the equipment and regular afternoon supervision are planned for the near future. The machines came from a health club which went out of business, and were the gift of a trustee.

In order to obtain maximum benefit from both the exercise course and the Nautilus equipment, students should use them about three times a week.

Ski Club Sponsors Skiing Trip

By Carolyn Kawecki

The Juniata College Ski Club is better than ever and really on the move.

The club will be running four nightly ski trips to Blue Knob Ski area, only 45 minutes away. The dates are January 22 and 29, and February 12 and 19. Buses will be leaving Ellis around 6pm ar returning around 12 for a full nig of skiing. Rental skis and lessons are also available. Sign-ups will be taking place at the information desk for members and non-members. A $30 deposit is needed for the trips at the time of sign-ups. This includes transportation and tickets for four nights of skiing. The balance will be due after Christmas break. The approximate balance will be between $25 and $35, this all depends on the number of people signed up to fill the buses. The more people signed up, the less the cost, so tell your friends so they do not miss out on some great skiing!

The club will also be organizing a ski trip to Vermont over spring break. All those interested should attend the next ski club meeting. Watch for signs posting date and time. Also coming up will be the ski season warm ups to take advantage of the nautilus equipment and get in shape for the fast approaching season.

The ski club is now selling club sweatshirts to members for $16 plus $2 dues for a club membership. Contact Dave Silver at Box 163 or 643-9877, 102 Tussey.

Hope to see you at the next meeting.

Students can save on tires

College students now have a way to lower their tire costs, according to a spokeswoman for the Tire Retread Information Bureau.

"The use of remanufactured (retreaded) tires can save a student as much as $100 for a set of four tires--and for High Performance tires, the savings can even be greater", says Jennifer Brodsky, a senior at the University of the Pacific and a spokesperson for TRIB. "Furthermore, remanufactured (retreaded) tires offer the same comfort, handling and safety features as comparable new tires", she added.

Remanufactured (retreaded) tires are used by airlines, school buses, taxis, emergency vehicles and millions of motorists.

For a free brochure about the features and benefits of remanufactured (retreaded) tires, write to: TRIB, P.O. Box 374, Pebble Beach, CA. 93953.

Central American Threat is U.S. Militarization

It is absurd to think that the United Stated could be "threatened" by a country whose population is scarcely more than 1% of the US population (3 million vs. 230 million inhabitants) and whose economy is not even one-thousandth the size of the US economy (a gross national product of $2.4 billion vs. the United States' $4 trillion).

Nicaragua has certainly increased its military forces, but it has done so in response to the contra attacks and in order to be prepared for a direct attack by the United States. Nicaraguans see such an attack as all too likely, given their own experience of being occupied by US marines from 1912 to 1933 and the long history of US military interventions in Latin America and the Caribbean (CIA-organized overthrow of the Guatemalan government in 1954, Bay of Pigs attack on Cuba in 1961, marine invasion of the Dominican Republic in 1965, invasion of Grenada in 1983, as well as dozens of lesser interventions) and numerous instances of covert actions. Since 1983 regular US army, navy and air force units as well as reserves and national guard units, have gone to Honduras for an almost continuous series of military training exercises. In that time, the US has built or expanded ten airfields, constructed base facilities for US troops, roads, two radar stations, tank traps, and fuel storage areas, and put in place a 1200 person interservice task force to coordinate activities of US troops.

Nicaragua would be foolhardy to attack its neighbors, for to do so would invite a devastating counter-attack by the United States. Similarly, if Nicaragua allowed a Soviet military presence aimed at the United States, it would itself become a nuclear target.

The "threat" in Central America is not Nicaragua, but the continuing US militarization of the region. To reverse that militarization, the Contadora countries (Mexico, Venezuela, Columbia, and Panama) have been pressing for peace through negotiations.

The 3 Muskateers Head the CMB

Amy Coursen comes to Juniata from St. Louis, Missouri. She is majoring in Peace and Conflict Studies and is hoping to attend graduate school. On campus, Amy is actively involved with the PACS committee, and in Juniata's Student Government, as she is its president. Amy enjoys stimulating conversation with others as well as visiting places of diverse interest, and she also enjoys eating. One additional piece of information Amy would like to share is that her great, great, great..grangparents sailed to America on the Mayflower.

The smiling face of Jennifer Howells is quite often seen around campus. Jen is a junior from Roaring Spring, Pa. Pre-Medicine/Biology comprise her POE, and she plans on furthering her education by attending graduate or medical school. Many are the activities that Jen is involved in, they include, being a resident assistant, a tour-guide, as well as belonging to the Student Leadership Development Committee and Tri-Beta. For fun, Jen enjoys horse-back riding, skiing, and spending time with friends.

Junior,Dave Fouse is from Yardville, New Jersey. Dave's POE is Peace and Conflict studies and he will also be attending a graduate school. When asking Dave about his interests, music was top on the list, as he is involvedactively with it. Dave sings withi he campus musical group "Class" and with the Juniata Concert Choir. Dave is also a disc jockey for WKVR FM as well as chief announcer. Dave enjoys eating ice cream and watching Bugs Bunny re-runs.

Food Addict Hotline Set Up By FIT

The School of Psychology of Florida Institute of Technology and the Heritage Health Corporation have established the Food Addiction Hotline. The purpose of the Hotline is threefold. First is to provide information to callers about what food addiction (bulimia and compulsive overeating) is and where and how help for the disorder might be obtained. Second is to gather information about the nature and extent of the food addiction problem in the United States. With the creation of such a data base, professionals can begin to better understand the problem and to respond with appropriate treatment methods. Third is to raise the awareness in the population that food addiction exists, is a devastating disease, and that treatment is available.

Food addiction, as a concept, differs significantly and qualitatively from the descriptive phrase, eating disorder, which has been used extensively in the past. Food addiction implies that an underlying physiological, biochemical reaction in the body is the basis for a craving for refined carbohydrates. This craving and its underlying bodily mechanism is analogous to the craving for alcohol that commonly besets alcoholics. Food addicts develop tolerance to refined carbohydrates--that is, they need more and more to satisfy the craving, and they also exhibit withdrawal symptoms when refined carbohydrates are removed from the diet. These withdrawl symptoms typically include dizziness, chills, nausea, shakiness and headache, and they may persist for more than 48 hours.

Food addicts rarely improve under simple dietary changes or weight control programs. They may show transient improvement, only to fall prey once again to their foods of addiction. Treatment approaches based upon 1) abstinence from foods of addiction along with strict dietary regimens, 2) social support and reinforcement from fellow sufferers, and 3) planned aftercare have shown the most promise for long-term effectiveness.

Callers to the F.I.T.-Heritage Food Addiction Hotline will be given basic facts about food addiction. They will be asked a variety of questions about themselves and their eating habits. Based upon their answers to the questions, they will be referred to sources within their local communities, such as Overeaters Anonymous. Those callers who are in crisis will be referred to a counselor for crisis intervention.

Two Seperate Lawsuits Pending Against KUNM, Public Radio

Albuquerque, NM (NSNS)--A programming change made without student or listener approval at KUNM, a public radio station licensed to the University of New Mexico, has mushroomed into a bitter fight between administrators and student and community leaders. Two separate lawsuits charging fraud and civil rights violations are now pending against UNM administrators and KUNM management, and the controversy has sparked numerous rallies and protests on campus.

At issue is a decision made by management last May, after students had left for the summer, to replace a 20-year-old KUNM tradition known as "Freeform" broadcasting, an eclectic mix of music and cultural perspectives described by one DJ as "anything from Mozart to Motown to high Andes folk music." In its place, managers opted for a straight jazz and classical format. Now, led by a coalition of students, citizen Freeform fans and members of the Latino community here, a backlash movement has frozen much of the station's funding and galvanized support from thousands of listeners.

"Ultimately, this is an issue of student involvement in a democratic system," said Harry Norton, president of Students for KUNM, which is the main student group involved in the dispute. "The students provide the station with $105,000 a year in mandatory fees, and have no control under current policy." Norton charged that KUNM made several public denials of plans for a programming change, then waited until students and faculty had left campus and went ahead with one. Management of the station is handled by UNM administrators and employees; there are no students involved.

Norton explained that the format change goes deeper than mere musical tastes. "Freeform included many cultural forums and issues," he said. "We had an outspoken women's rights advocate: she's been suspended. Another guy would dedicate songs to inmates in New Mexico prisons and comment on prison issues. He's gone. And the Latino community feels that they've been forced out, and are losing a valuble outlet for cultural expression."

Charges of censorship began later in May, when announcer Andres Mares-Muro voiced his opposition to the format change, and program director Pat Conley allegedly attacked and tried to choke him. The scuffle was heard by KUNM listeners tuned in to the live show. When a volunteer DJ announced a June 26 campus rally, campus police locked ten salaried employees and volunteers out of the station for participating in the protest, and two officers escorted another volunteer out of the studio.

On June 30, attorneys for a group of 2300 listeners calling themselves Friends of Freeform Radio filed a lawsuit alleging that KUNM management defrauded subscribers and listeners by deliberately concealing the planned format change during fundraising drives. District Judge W.C. Smith signed a temporary restraining order barring station officials from spending any listener-contributed funds during the previous nine months. The following day, officials shut down the station for two weeks, citing threats against staff members and university property.

A second suit was filed July 29 by 21 volunteers, about half of whom are students, charging management and administrators with civil rights violations. The volunteers claim they were unlawfully dismissed for voicing opposition to the format change. Both suits are still in process.

In August, students for KUNM placed an ad in the "Daily Lobo" which made several charges:

•that dissent over the decision was met with gag orders and suspensions of more than 20 volunteer programmers, and that listener outrage was ignored.

•that an existing volunteer agreement and grievance procedure was scrapped by General Manager Tim Singleton in favor of a policy enabling management to dismiss a volunteer for any reason. (The policy also prohibits commentary on relevent issues.)

•that Singleton locked the station's doors and shut down the transmitter, depriving listeners of programming for two weeks, and permanently barred five long-time volunteers from the airwaves for dissenting opinions.

The ad called on students to refrain from volunteering or contributing to KUNM, and to write Singleton and UNM's president and vice president in protest. On September 15, the UNM Graduate Students Association agreed to a Students for KUNM request to freeze indefinitely about $800 in GSA funds that are contributed to the station's budget. Three weeks later, the Associated Students of UNM voted to withhold $105,000 in station funding until a policy-making radio board, at least half its members being students, is formed.

East House Hosts Season Party For Special Kids

More than 25 Juniata College students brightened the holidays for a group of special education students from Huntingdon School District on Tuesday afternoon.

The Residential Hall Association of East Houses kicked off the Christmas season with a party for more than 15 special education students. The festive occasion included traditional music and food, a tree trimming project, gift exchange and a special visit from Santa Claus.

"The College students really wanted to do something for the special education students in the various local schools. Everyone was really excited about this project. It was a great event! I think the children really enjoyed themselves," said Nora Dickey, resident director of East Houses.

Three students currently sit on an advisory board, which functions without decision-making power.

KUNM General Manager Time Singleton, while unwilling to comment on matters currently under litigation, spoke out against such a governing board, saying it "would not be legal under our FCC license, which is held by the Board of Regents." Singleton, while admitting that the advisory board was not involved in the format change decision, maintained that the board chair was consulted and gave his approval.

"We are not strictly a student station," Singleton said. "We are a full-service NPR affiliate serving the communities of Albuquerque and Santa Fe, and must consider all of our audience." Singleton also pointed out that the ASUNM refused to fund Students for KUNM, and claimed that not all of the group's members are students. "We've added some rock to the program for the students, but the fact is that until it became an issue, the majority of students never listened to KUNM."

JC Men Hoopsters win 2 of 3
Crush Messiah 87-56

After getting off to a slow start, the Juniata Indians Mens' Basketball team gathered two wins during a week which featured three conference games. The Indians only play 10 games at home this season, and the road victories will be no easy task in the balanced MAC's.

This was evident in Juniata's first contest of the week when the Indians traveled to Elizabethtown to take on the Blue Jays. After being outscored 42-29 in the first half Juniata made a great comeback effort only to come up short 74-72. Coach Helm stated "Half number two is the way this team can play, unfortunately we dug our own hole earlier."

The Indians full court man to man pressure spearheaded the comeback. With 19 seconds remaining to play, Shawn Habakus threw an alley-oop pass to Wayne Paul to tie the game at 72. An E-town shot with 20 seconds remaining failed; however the Jays grabbed the rebound and were fouled in the process. Tom Strohm missed the front end of the one and one, but once again E-town beat JC to the ball. This time Brent Brugler was fouled while going up for a shot. He iced the game from the charity stripe connecting on both his free throws.

Habakus went the length of the court but missed a tough 10 foot off balance jumper which could have sent the game into overtime. The Indians were paced by Wayne Paul's 20 points (8 for 11 from the field), followed by Antenucci's 12 and Habakus' 10 points. Freshmen Jay Nicholson and Dan Lizun led the Indians off the glass with seven and six rebounds, respectively.

Juniata had only a day to gather itself before traveling to Lycoming where the Indians hadn't won in the last six years. The Indians earned their first victory of the season by throuncing the Warriors 78-63 in Williamsport.

Coach Helm was more than pleased with his team's performance noting the outstanding play of junior Duane Dise. Dise went 10 for 12 from the field and canned a three pointer on the way to his game high 22 points. Once again the Indians played tough man to man "D" giving the Indians a 37-32 halftime lead.

Juniata shot an incredible 62% from the field, including a blazing 77.3% in the second half. Coach Helm noted, "We played a smart game with the lead and blended well as a team. I think things are starting to come together. "The Indians moved their record to 1-3 and 1-1 in the conference. Wayne Paul added 17 points and Shawn Habakus had nine. Freshman Bob Dombrowski led the way for Juniata on the boards, ripping down 12.

Only one Lycoming player managed double figures, while JC blocked nine shots to the Warriors' one swat. Habakus also added seven assists.

After playing three road games in a row the Indians finally came back to College Hill to host conference foe Messiah. With another fine shooting performance, as well as another good defensive stand, the Indians cruised past Messiah 87-56.

The game saw senior captain Wayne Paul reach his 1,000 point career mark with a game high 20 points. It was fitting that Paul's 1,000 point came on a break away slam dunk. Paul added another slam, as did Dan Lizun (who also poured in 14 points), along with Jay Nicholson ("rocking the house" two handed tomahawk. Lizun also grabbed seven boards.

Duane Dise continued to score, pouring in 16 points, dishing out five assists and grabbing six rebounds. The Indians shot 60% from the floor and 55% from the floor, while Messiah only shot 53% from the line and a horrendous 30% from the field.

Juniata now 2-3 overall upped its conference record 2-1. The Indians' travelled to Lebanon Valley on Monday and hosted Susquehanna yesterday. LVC is one of the top teams in the Southern Division. JC travels to Pittsburgh Saturday, to play Division II UPJ and Tyrone Dolman.

The Juniata Men's Basketball team would like to extend their appreciation to all who participated in the Team Raffle!

Thanx for the support!!

Congratulations to Wayne Paul for surpassing the 1,000 career point mark!

Best wishes for the remaining season — show Europe what you have, guys!

Also, "The Juniatian" wishes the Women's Basketball Team, the Wrestlers and the Swimmers very successful seasons!!

Indians selected for MAC All-Star Team

After a successful 7-3 season, the Juniata College Indians boasted ten selections to the Middle Atlantic Conference Football All-Star Team.

First team selections included wide receiver Mike Cottle, tight end Jim Metz, guard Mike Martin, down lineman Tom Yeager, defensive back Mark Dorner, place kicker Keith Watson and punter Dennis DeRenzo.

Tackle Todd Ferrara and linebackers Frank Gay and Chuck Rihn received honorable mention honors.

Cottle and Metz combined for 78 receptions and over 1000 yards. As part of the offensive line, both Martin and Ferrara helped lead the offense to over 3200 total offensive yards.

Tom Yeager, a four year starter accumulated 36 tackles and one interception in eight games.

Dorner, the conference's most valuable player, broke an NCAA record this season with 15 interceptions. He also holds the record for punt returns with 202 yards in 15 carries and tied a career interception record with 25. A co-captain, Dorner is credited with 61 tackles. Aiding the defense were junior linebacker Gay who finished with a team high 99 tackles and Rihn, from his outside linebacker spot, recorded 15 of Juniata's 39 sacks.

Watson registered 23 extra points and seven field goals to finish second in team scoring with 44 points, while DeRenzo averaged 39.9 yards per punt with a long of 59 yards.

Head coach Rob Ash said, "This is one of our best showings in the Middle Atlantic's voting in recent years. I'm very happy for all of our players. They worked extremely hard and deserve just recognition."

Lady Spikers boast three All Americans

Beth Hoppel, Cathy Miller and Jackie Rebert all have something in common with baseball, hotdogs and apple pie - they are "All-American."

The three Juniata College volleyball players can boast such honors for their outstanding 1987 performances. Hoppel, Miller and Rebert were named I.V.C.A. Russell All-Americans at the NCAA Division III volleyball banquet at Elmhurst College, the site of the Division III National Championships.

Recognized for the third consecutive year as a first team All-American, Hoppel led this year's squad to a 53-3 mark. She has accumulated 1,382 assists, 47 serving aces, 218 digs, 123 kills and 74 block solos.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hoppel of Johnstown and a graduate of Bishop McCort high School.

Miller, one of the finest middle blockers in the country, holds the school record for most blocks in a season with 176 solos. She has recorded 137 digs, 109 ace serves and 382 kills, making her a first team selection, also.

A graduate of Cambria Heights High School, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wiliam Miller.

Rebert was selected to the second team for her outstanding performance as an outside hitter. The fierce hitter has accumulated 414 kills, 57 ace serves, 285 digs and 41 solo blocks this year.

From Spring Grove High School, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dale rebert of Spring Grove.

JC Women's basketball fights Messiah for win

The womens basketball team went 1-2 this past week in MAC action, getting their first win of the season against Messiah this past Saturday.

The girls got off to a slow start against MAC powerhouse Elizabethtown, but came up short in the end. The results were the same for coach Quinn against Lycoming, as Juniata battled tough, but once again fell short.

The 69-63 victory for JC over Messiah was the Indians first victory of the season, giving JC a 1-4 overall record. Sue Lockawich's 23 points paced the Juniata attack, while teammates Sue Grubb (18 points), Pam Wyrick (14 points), and Colleen McGinn (10 points) all contributed.

The women will be idle until after Christmas break.

JC Frosh named to MAC All-Star Team

Jill Schadler, a freshman on the Juniata College field hockey team, was recently selected to the Middle Atlantic Conference All-Star team.

A sweeper for the Indians, Schadler had an outstanding defensive performance as a rookie, recording 17 defensive saves.

"Considering the outstanding teams in the Southwest league, I"m delighted that Jill received this honor. She impressed all the coaches in the Middle Atlantic Conference with her excellent skills," said Head Coach Kathi Quinn.

Schadler is a graduate of Perkiomen Valley High School. She is the daughter of Richard and Gloria Schadler.

Cry Freedom: Donald Woods presents lecture

South African journalist Donald Woods, whose award winning books provided the inspiration for critically acclaimed film "Cry Freedom," will present a lecture of the same title at Juniata College this evening at 8:15 p.m. in the college's Oller Hall.

The film, nominated for four Golden Globe Awards and considered one of the year's ten best films, chronicles Woods' relationship with the young, black South African leader Steven Biko.

Woods, a fifth generation white South African, studied law at the University of Cape Town before entering the field of journalism. In 1965, at the age of 31, he became editor-in-chief of the 114-year-old South African newspaper, the Daily Dispatch.

His editorial attacks on the racial policy of apartheid drew increasing fire from the South African government and from many white readers of the newspaper. During twelve years of editorship, he was prosecuted in court seven times by the State under South Africa's strict publication laws restricting criticism of government policy.

In 1975, Woods believed that through his newspaper he was effectively playing an enlightened role in the struggle to end aparteid. Then, accepting a challenge, he agreed to meet a black man, thirteen years younger than he, who had been declared a banned person. His name was Steven Biko.

Biko was the first black African Woods had encountered who treated him as an equal. And, by obliging him to reevaluate his "liberalism," using friendship and logic, this courageous and charismatic leader proceeded to alter the entire course of the editor's life.

A persuasive man of peace, Biko undoubtedly also had the ability to sway many more minds and hearts, possibly even helping to avert the bloodbath that had been increasingly predicted for South Africa. On September 12, 1977, however, having sustained horrific injuries during interrogation by the South African Security Police, Steven Biko died. That his name, his ideals, his vision and his life story were not buried together with his broken body is due, in very great measure, to his friend Donald Woods.

Becoming himself the subject of a Banning Order, harassed and under constant surveillance by the same Security Police, Woods decided with his wife, Wendy, that they and their five young children must leave the country. To do so meant abandoning their home, relatives, friends, life savings...everything. All they would take, apart from one bag of belongings, was a manuscript--the journalist's biography of Biko, written illegally in secret--which could only be published abroad.

The Woods' escaped, involving disguise and deception in a nail-biting race against the clock, had all the elements of a fictional thriller.

"Biko", the book which Woods, disguised as a priest, risked his life to smuggle out of South Africa, was published in 1978. Translated into twelve languages, it was--and still is-- specifically listed as a banned publication by the South African government. Its author's five-year banning order, imposed in 1977, was renewed in absentia during October 1982.

A Banned Person in South Africa ceases publicly to exist. Effectively, he is imprisoned in his own home and forced to act as his own prison guard. In addition, he may not be quoted by name in the media. He is forbidden to write anything--even in a private journal. Apart from members of the immediate family, he is not allowed to be with more than one person at a time. He is prohibited from entering educational, printing or manufacturing businesses. Lastly, he many not

College Communications welcomes David Gildea

Juniata College President Robert W. Neff has announced the appointment of David A. Gildea as the director of college communications.

In this post, Gildea will provide Juniata with direction in representing the college to its various constituencies. He will be responsible for developing a program to promote and market Juniata's outstanding academic reputation on the local, regional and national levels.

"Mr. Gildea brings to Juniata a wealth of experience in every phase a communications. We are looking forward to putting his creativity and excellent communicative skills to work," noted Dr. Neff.

Gildea is a graduate of Indiana University of Pennsylvania and received his Master of Arts degree in public relations from the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications at Syracuse University.

Regarding his appointment, Gildea said, "I'm very excited to be returning to Juniata College and Huntingdon. I'm looking forward to meeting the challenges of the position and I'm ready to get started!"

Gildea returns to Juniata, having earned his masters degree in 1986, and serving as director of public relations at Manhattanville College, Purchase, NY. He was responsible for supervising a full-service public relations program at Manhattanville including the news bureau, publications, printing services, photographic services, advertising and marketing.

A familiar face to Juniata, Gildea served as the college editor from 1981 to 1983 and associate director of public relations and publications from 1983-84. He was also responsible for the sports information department.

Gildea was the assistant director of public relations at Altoona Hospital and has a background in television, serving as program director of CIUP-TV, Indiana.

A member of the Council for Advancement in Support of Education (CASE), Gildea has received numerous awards for his outstanding publications from the professional affiliation.

Gildea, a native of Hollidaysburg, PA, is married to the former Christine Rodli; they have one son, Benjamin.

Deblase, Scialabba promoted

Tracey L. DeBlase and Joseph M. Scialabba, two Juniata College employees, have been promoted to assistant directors of college communications according to college President, Robert W. Neff.

DeBlase earned her Bachelor of Arts degree from Juniata College in 1985 and immediately joined the staff as the assistant director of public relations and publications. Her primary responsilities have been to supervise the sports information department and photography services, while assisting with publications.

During the last three years, DeBlase has assisted in the development of a national software package for sports information directors, promoted student-athletes for 21 All-America honors and numerous All-Conference and All-East awards and successfully served as an NCAA regional tourna-

It is not often that we are afforded the opportunity to look at ourselves objectively - from another's point of view. This weekend I was fortunate enough to have my best friend visit me at Juniata, and I got to see things, both good and bad, through a newcomer's eyes.

The largest form of culture shock for my friend seemed to be how friendly everyone is. What I call the "obligatory Juniata College hello" was a pleasant surprise to him.

A second distinct difference from his school was the "relaxed" alcohol policy. More and more it seems that other schools have tightened their policies - at his college, any party of more than ten people has to be reported to an RA, and a campus security officer will be assigned to that party to regulate the distribution of alcohol and to prevent distribution to minors. Taking that in stride, I feel less inclined to complain about the disappearance of open keg parties.

The only really negative comment that we discussed was the sense of "close-mindedness," particularly when it comes to religious or racial differences. The lack of minorities at Juniata was obvious, but the college is not to totally blame for the atmosphere.

In all the report card was good. Tote's food is edible (although Baker needs work). Second Lesher should have "A" visitation. Be thankful for the traditions: Mountain Day, Madrigal Dinner, All Class Night, and Mud Volleyball because they don't happen anywhere other than at Juniata College.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

As a member of the Juniata College community, I have, for the most part, been aware of the existence of an office in Founders Hall labeled International Studies, a man named Buff Vocke, and a program entitled Junior Year Abroad. I have noticed certain people's year long disapearance and have interacted with their foreigh replacements since my freshman year. Despite this general knowledge, however, I never really felt that study abroad had an ability to affect me. Recently, however, this attitude has been dramatically changed.

Toward the end of last year, I viewed the study abroad program as some sort of evil dragon which was "gobbling" up several of my friends and dragging them away from Juniata and me. I could understand and accept the benefits the program offered my friends and was happy for their excitement. The problem was that I saw no program that offered anything positive to me. I was a mere victim of it.

Throughout the past months, however, I have come to realize that even though I am playing the role of "the junior who did not go abroad," I, too can benefit from Dr. Vocke's program.

Friendships being the way they are, I have been corresponding regularly with my friends in England, and I was fortunate enough to visit them over Christmas break. Seeing my friends in this new environment, proved to be very invigorating. Having them expose me to a small taste of the culture to which they are now familiar reinforced my strong, positive feelings about how the program benefits those who participate in it.

However, my excursion also proved to me that if I utilize my available resources, I, too can be a beneficiary of the study abroad program. My friends have become a warehouse of cultural, geographical, and social knowledge and are more than ready to share their newfound knowledge with any willing listener.

Granted, by physically being in Europe with them, I had the advantage of actually seeing a great deal of what they were sharing with me. I realize, however, that when they return, they will have an enormous amount of different experiences and ideas to share through words and pictures. All I have to donate is my time.

I graciously thank Beth, Christine, Georgia and Donnell for sharing a great time and a wonderful learning experience with me. I also thank Juniata and Dr. Vocke for maintaining an excellent program.

I would like to challenge each and every Juniata student to take advantage of the resources created by the International Studies Program. Talk to students who have studied abroad and to those who are on our campus for a year. These people have a wealth of knowledge attainable only through the exciting experience of living in a foreign land. Take some time to share it.

Thanks again Beth, Christine, Georgia and Donnell. I miss you terribly, but I am glad you are where you are.

Sincerely,
Jennifer Howells

Three years after a horrifying famine claimed the lives of one million Ethiopians, the specter of hunger has appeared once again on the horizon of that strife-torn African nation. "The situation is not yet as bad as it was two years ago," Time magazine reports. Therefore, we should act now before the situation worsens.

There are countless arguments against continued aid-it sits on the docks, it doesn't get to the people who need it, we should be helping people at home, etc. For me there is one compelling argument for continued aid-there are children dying in the African desert. In the words of jay F. Morris, Deputy Administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID), "Given our American tradition of providing help it would be barbaric for us to turn our backs."

By Brian Roselli and Jim Kauffman

We have been asked to construct a coherent essay discussing the advantages and disadvantages of studying abroad for a year. This means that simply saying "This is a great opportunity, so don't miss it!", is not acceptable. So we must evaluate what we have experienced thus far.

If you are thinking of spending a year in another country, you must realize that there are some negative aspects to consider. However, both of us sincerely feel that the positive aspects greatly out-weigh the negative ones.

First of all you are getting the opportunity to experience life in another country, under a different culture. But this also means you'll be 4000 miles from home; being a good letter writer is a prerequisite. Of course, the special added bonus is the opportunity to travel to other nations. This attraction is enhanced by the relatively efficient rail and bus networks that exist throughout Europe and the U.K.; most of which is relatively inexpensive. Travel is probably the bait that lures most of us to study in Europe for a year, however, we must not forget how impressive it looks on the resume. Just imagine, you can get your cake and eat it too.

By now many of you realize that this experience entails leaving your family and friends for an entire school year. But this is not so bad, soon you'll forget your old friends, because they never write anyway (hint). Besides you'll have ample opportunity to meet and make new friends, and as far as your family is concerned, many of you may not realize it, but Europe is equipped with phones, so they are only a phone call away. Plus, if you are on exchange, you will adopt your host family, and they'll become your home away from home.

"Listen Brian, I still detect a bit of skepticism. I hear students asking questions like... Won't we experience culture shock? Will we have to adopt a new way of life? Won't we have to adjust to a new educational system?" Well, to these questions, we frankly answer "Yes!"

"You know Jim, as far as culture shock goes, I didn't find it that hard to adjust to drinking good beer. However, I did almost get killed a couple of times by double-decker buses, cause I looked the wrong way when I crossed the street."

Let us not forget about discussing the new way of life and adjusting to a new educational system. As far as adopting to a new way of life is concerned, you must get mentally prepared to drink legally under the age of 21. Seriously though, the aspects of everyday life here in England are not that drastically different from life in the states. Therefore, culture shock and adaptation are really not issues that should cause major concern.

"OK Brian, now tell them about how much easier their educational system is over here!"

"No way, you goof ball, you can't say that!"

Honestly though, at first glance, it seems easier because their system is much more relaxed then ours. They place more emphasis on individual motivation, rather than giving you weekly assignments. Therefore, you must be careful not to let all your work pile up at the end of the term.

Well, that is all for now, due to a prior social engagement, we must cease transmission of this communique. So do seriously consider spending your junior year abroad, it is an experience you won't soon forget! If you are at all interested we encourage you to explore every possibility, you won't be sorry.

Good bye for now and look for our new book: "How to Cram a Term's Worth of Work into Two Days", and our new video to be released soon: "Jim and Brian's European Vacation".

Good day and we thank you for your support!

Have you ever heard the saying "Watch what you wish for--you might just get it?" This old adage is my perfect response for the often asked question, "How was your break?"

Think back.

It's final's week, you haven't slept or showered for days, your best friend has turned into "the roommate from hell", Baker is serving some unkown entity like jiggs sandwiches and your dorm room is about 85 degrees at night and 15 degrees during the day.

The only thing keeping you going at this point is the comforting hope that you'll soon be home in the caring bosom of your family for the holidays.<P<MSNext scene.

I'm sitting in my kitchen staring at the phone wondering why the world hasn't called to welcome my home and beg me to go whoop up Altoona.

My sixteen year old sister is in my bedroom squeaking to her friend about who likes who and what they had to let them touch to get them to like them. Good ole' dad has asked me at least ten times if I've checked or changed the oil (or any fluid) in my car lately. This poor man foolishly maintains the belief that I can or would even consider doing either of these activities. The dog and I are having the most intriguing current conversation in the house. He's thinking about trying out for the part of the Davis's dog on the 4-C commercials--then he plans to go into producing.

What about all those great pals of mine from high school? Well they have all gone to the "campus" which is Altoona's equivalent of Huntingdon's "the college" except for the fact that locals actually go to the Altoona campus. Now these same pals all live together in obscurity in State College wondering how anyone could move away from Altoona and like it.

My brother belongs to this "campus" contingency and his mind is in standard deviation from mainstream America, but that's another Muddy Run story.

My mother, "Christmas Joy" has had me baking and cleaning my life away for all those guests we never get through the holidays. She cannot accept the proven fact that college senior's need to sleep until 1:30 pm daily.

My same shrilling sister, upon return from a mission of mercy where she gave the cookies I baked to an elderly neighbor, looks me straight in the eye and says, "While you were sitting here thinking about good will and Christmas cheer, I was living it."

At this point all I want is a few tests to take, a couple of papers to write and a jiggs sandwich. What do ya' know I got it again!

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

(A note from Counselor's Corner: This is the first in a series of articles concerning Adult Children of Alcoholics (ACOA). They are intended to heighten our awareness as to the extent and severity of the problem and, where appropriate, encourage "victims" to seek help.)

ACOA-Adult Children of Alcoholics. That's right! Adults who were themselves children in an alcoholic family. Considering that experts in the area estimate that at present there are as many as 34 million children of alcoholics, the need to identify, understand and then to help these "victims" appears absolutely essential to society as a whole.

Think about the following well-known individuals who are adult children of alcoholics: President Reagan, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, Jason Robarts (himself a recovering alcoholic), Carol Burnett, and Brooke Shields.

What are some of the problems that can manifest themselves as a result of growing up in an alcoholic family? Psychologist and founder/director of the Stanford Alcohol Clinic, Stephanie Brown, suggests that children of alcoholics have an exaggerated sense of responsibility, find it difficult to trust others, possess a great need to control and have a fear of intimacy. While these feelings are experienced by most of us at times, Brown says that children of alcoholics seem to experience them with an even greater intensity and to a greater degree.

Some clinicians suggest that as many as eight of ten persons treated by them for depression, anxiety disorders and marital problems are children of alcoholics.

Psychologist Steven Bucky and psychotherapist Claudia Black conducted a two-year study comparing adult children of alcoholics with adults reared in non-alcoholic homes. They found the following:

*Nearly twice as many ACOAs than non-ACOAs had trouble trusting others;

*In the area of expressing and identifying feelings, ACOAs have almost twice as much trouble as do non-ACOAs;

*Twice as many ACOAs as non-ACOAs describe themselves as confused and depressed all the time.

For those interested, an ACOA support group is being started on campus. The first meeting is Wednesday, February 3, 1988 at 6:30 pm in the Gold Room of Ellis College Center.

In our next article we'll discuss the dynamics withing the alcoholic family that appear to be problematic. Until then, be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

This is the third year that Martin Luther Kind Day has been observed in America, and it is interesting to look at just how we have chosen to commemorate the birth of this incredible figure in our nation's history and in particular, what we have chosen to focus on in his life. As one who respects and admire Dr. King tremendously, I have kept a close watch on this since the first holiday in 1986, and I have seen and listened to people focus mainly on the dream--that glorious vision on America that Dr. King presented to the world in August on 1963. "I have a dream," he said,"that one day on the red hills of Georgia, the sons of former slave owners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood. "I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character." Most of us are familiar with his famous speech, but how many of us are aware of the revolution that Dr. King called for later in his life?

During the first decade or so of the civil rights movement, from 1955 to 1965, nonviolent efforts to expose injustice were concentrated mainly in the South. The numerous opponents of the movement, such as Public Safety Commissioner Bull Connor, in the 1963 Burmingham civil rights campaign and sheriff Jim Clark in the 1965 Selma demonstrations for voting rights, were easy to identify and were representative fo the basic problems being confronted: white racism and white reluctance to comply with laws that provided for a greater degree of equality for blacks. The tactics and instruments that Connor and Clark used in trying to break up the movement in their respective communities (the firehoses and police dogs in Birmingham, the cattle prods and mounted police in Selma) were revealed to the nation and to the world by the news media. The sight of this police brutality brought outrage and condemnation upon the white opposition and brought crucial support to the civil rights movement, support which helped to bring about two of the movement's greatest successes--the passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

In 1966, Dr. King decided to spread the movement into Northern urban areas. The first main thrust occurred in Chicago. Efforts there to improve black voter registration and black housing conditions were moderately successful, but Dr. King realized that an entirely different enemy was being confronted in the North--it wasn't as dramatic as Bull Connor and his fire hoses; it wasn't as exciting to demonstrate against as segregated lunch counters or segregated bus stops--the enemy was economic inequality. Dr. King saw that the progress made in the South during the first years of the movement had not touched the blacks in the North--they were still languishing in the ghettos. In the long, hot summers of the late sixties, they were beginning to give vent to their frustrations through bloody, destructive riots. Many blamed Dr. King and the movement for stirring the people up, but Dr. King knew that the cause of the rioting was the fact that his people were being crushed by the horrendous weight of poverty and that they were now losing their patience. President Lyndon Johnson had promised a war on poverty, only to pour manpower and resources into the hopeless quagmire of the Vietnam War. Dr. King knew the only was to prevent further ghetto rioting was to address the problem of poverty and to address it immediately.

Dr. King said that "we must recognize that we can't solve our problem now until there is a radical redistribution of economic and political power. This means a REVOLUTION of values and of other things...We must see now that the evils of racism, economic exploitation, and militarism are all tied together, and we really can't get rid of one without getting rid of the others." Dr. King saw that this revolution, if it was to be successful, had to transform America from a property and profit oriented society to a person oriented society. It had to be a revolution of love AND power, for a King emphasized, "all too many people have seen power and love as polar opposites" when in fact "the two fulfill each other...power without love is reckless, and love without power is sentimental." King though this revolution was the best way to bring about true integration in America, and was the best way to set the nation on the road toward what he termed, "the beloved community".

Dr. King did not live to see the revolution which he advocated bring about any meaningful change. If we take a close look at America today, twenty years after his assassination in Memphis, we see that the revolution is far from finished. Hundreds of thousands of Americans are still trapped in ghettoes; millions of Americans are still trapped below the poverty line; countless Americans are still the victims of racism and economic exploitation; America as a nation is still a perpetrator of militarism (one only needs to look at the Persian Gulf or Central America to see that

By Jen Wade

Hear ye! Hear ye! For a long time, the column known as "Along Muddy Run" dealt with insignificant, trivial subjects, specifically, those long recognized as of no importance whatsoever. Under the guise of serious journalism, and after watching one too many episodes of the Brady Bunch or having one too many at the Colonial, people have used and abused this forum to inflict tales filled with trifles and frivolity upon the readers of this esteemed publication. No more. As we ring in the new year, let's also ring in a new column. We'll still call it "Along Muddy Run" (to avoid confusion), but trivialities and insignificance have no place in this or future columns.

With that thought in mind, I propose to seriously review the qualifications of the many presidential candidates. All in favor? It seems the "Aye"'s have it.

At this time, the leading Republican candidate appears to be current veep George Bush. But, how much did this man actually know about the Iran-Contra affair? How many people outside the news media are genuinely interested in how much he knew? Should we vote for a man who apparently believes that vice-presidents should be seen but not heard? Tough questions--which need tough answers.

Running second is Senator Bob Dole, former Senate majority leader. Would he turn the U.S. into a banana (or pineapple) republic? His wife, Elizabeth, a cabinet member, is probably also qualified to be president. Is this a good or bad thing? How would she get on with Raisa Gorbachev? No easy answers here, either.

Pat Robertson's run for the Republican seems to have slowed to a jog. After eight years with an actor at the helm, does this country need or want to be led by a TV evangelist, especially one whose son was conceived out of wedlock? Is this man as moral as he claims, or is he just in it for the money?

As for the Democrats, have they ever heard the old saying that too many cooks spoil the soup? It's hard to keep track of the frequent comings and goings of all the candidates, and, thus far, no clear leader has emerged.

Currently grabbing the most media attention is recent entrant Gary Hart. He says that America needs him and his new ideas. He also says that Donna Rice is "just a friend". Does he really think the American public is that gullible? Do we really need a president who owns a yacht named "Monkey Business"?

Following the revelations of the Douglas Ginsburg Supreme Court nomination, candidates Albert Gore and Bruce Babbitt admitted to having smoked marijuana during the 1960's and 1970's. Didn't they listen to Nancy and "Just say 'No'"? If William Scranton isn't qualified to be governor of Pennsylvania, are these men qualified to lead the country?

Andy Rooney, on "60 Minutes", recently revealed to the entire nation that Babbitt's favorite drink is a brand of Mexican beer. We complain about the current trade deficit, but, with Babbitt as President, we could see a whole new meaning for the term "consumption of foreign goods".

Well, what about Paul Simon.

Do you mean the rock singer with anti-apartheid sympathies who incorporated the rhythms of black African music into his latest album, Graceland? The same man who penned such brilliant songs as "Hazy Shade of Winter", "Bridge Over Troubled Water", and many, many more? I'd vote for him.

No, I mean the short man from the Midwest who wears glasses and bow ties.

Oh, sorry about that.

Next we have the Rev. Jesse Jackson. Does he have the time to run a political campaign? Doesn't he have hostages to free or something? Shouldn't he be out scouring the four corners of the earth in a desperate attempt to find missing church envoy Terry Waite?

Finally (I think), there is former governor of Massachusettes, Michael Dukasis. He seems well-qualified, but his wife was once addicted to prescription drugs. That says a lot about the man, don't you think?

Now that you've read this column, written in a very serious style, you're probably depressed. Apparently there is no one in the race who is absolutely qualified for the job. But, don't panic. We still have one hope for salvation:

Ollie! Ollie! Ollie!

Study Death Valley at San Jose State

You can study the wonders of Death Valley March 27-April 1, 1988, with San Jose State University Field Studies in Natural History and earn university credit, too. You do not have to be already enrolled at SJSU to attend.

The annual trek to death Valley gives you a chance to see the beauty of the desert, warmed with spring heat, while the surrounding mountains are still capped with snow.

Bighorn sheep, kangaroo rats, geckoes, chuckwalla lizards, sidewinders and other creatures will be waiting for you. More than 600 kinds of plants are there, too. Daily field trips explore the geology, plants, animal life, botany, ecology, and zoology. Evening entertainment, mini-lectures, films, and more fun make a fun and fact-packed experience.

An organizational meeting will be Friday, March 18, 1988, on the SJSU campus. Cook groups and carpools will be organized then. Participants may earn one unit of credit, Natural Science 151. Repeating participants may earn an additional unit--no more than two repeat trips, though, for credit.

For costs, further information, and registration assistance call (408) 924-2625, or write: Death Valley Trip, San Jose State University, Field Studies in Natural History, Office of Continuing Education, San Jose, CA 95192-0135. You must be 18 years old.

travel outside his Banning Area, normally the few square miles of the district in which he lives.

In his second book, the autobiographical "Asking for Trouble", which was published in 1980, Woods wrote about his relationship with Steven Biko whom he hails as "the most impressive man I ever met". He also described what happened after Biko's death, which officials ascribed to a hunger strike. Woods, at great risk of government retaliation, threw himself and the entire resources of his newspaper behind a campaign to force the authorities to hold an inquest.

It was these two volumes, the biography and the autobiography, which Woods parcelled up with brown paper and many misgivings in 1983. At the suggestion of a mutual friend, he mailed them to Sir Richard Attenborough, producer/director of the epic film "Gandhi", in the hope he might consider turning the story of his friend's life into a movie.

With the release of the film "Cry Freedom", the world will come to know the tragic story of Steven Biko and Donald Woods.

Admission to the program will be $4.00 for adults and $2.00 for students and children. The program is jointly sponsored by the college's Centerboard, Student Government and the Peace and Conflict Studies Committee and the Juniata Arts and Lectureship Council.

Radio Hour replaces Boys Choir

The Harlem Boys Choir scheduled to perform on January 23 as part of the Juniata College Artist Series has been cancelled. The choir is beginning a European tour.

Replacing the Boys Choir will be a highly acclaimed Big Band Show entitled "The 1940's Radio Hour", scheduled for February 14. The most successful musical ever performed by the Chimera Theatre in St. Paul will delight the audience with an authentic look at a radio station in the 1940's.

"Be prepared for a trip back to 1942, complete with zany commercials, home-made sound effects, studio confusion, letters to the boys overseas, great songs, great dancinmg and some poignant moments." (WAYY-TV and Radio)

Bring a friend and share a special Valentine's Day on Sunday, February 14 at 8:15 in Oller Hall. Tickets for the Boys Choir may be used for the radio hour performance. For more information contact the Juniata College information desk at 643-4310, ext. 330.

The RA selection process has begun

By Jen Wade

At noon on January 26, the Resident Assistant selection process officially began. That time marked the deadline for interested students to submit their applications to the Residential Life office. Students also signed up for one of the Information Meetings, held January 27 and 28 at 6:30pm in the Faculty Lounge. Here, candidates received an explanation of the selection process and a job description, followed by a question/answer session with current members of the Residential Life staff.

The next step involves Group Process sessions on Sunday, January 31 at 1:00 pm in the Faculty Lounge Annex. Group Process locations are announced at this time. Then, from February 4-17, group interview, in which the candidate meets with one RD and three RAs, take place. After the interviews, the candidate pool is evaluated and some "cuts" may occur.

Sometime between February 25 and March 4, candidates have a personal interview with either Randy Deike, Betty Ann Cherry, or Nancy Van Kuren. Everyone receives letters of notification on Thursday, March 17, and Multiple Occupancy assignments are announced on March 22. When placing RAs, both the nature of the location and the RA's apparent strengths and weaknesses are considered. The goal is to hopefully balance comfort and challenge.

If the selection process seems long and involved, it's because the job of an RA is also serious. Neither can be taken lightly. According to Betty Ann Cherry, two important characteristics of an RA are a basic enjoyment of people and common sense. RAs should obtain satisfaction from working with people, have the maturity and confidence to be confrontational if necessary, and trust their own judgement. These traits are important in fulfilling the many duties associated with being an RA.

The roles and responsibilities of the RA fall into five major areas. In their role as peer counselors, they help students become accustomed to life at Juniata, assist in the resolution of roommate conflicts, and refer students to the proper authorities if they need special help. Their role as resource people requires them to provide information on college policies and events, and to encourage participation in campus activities, such as intramurals. As programmers, RAs initiate social and educational programs for the floor during each term. In their capacity as disciplinarians, they interpret and enforce college and residence hall policies, reporting infractions when necessary. And, they have administrative duties such as completing room inventory and roster forms, reporting necessary repairs to the Physical Plant, and assisting with the opening and closing of residence halls.

Both candidates and other members of the student body must take the selection process seriously because the quality of RAs directly affects the quality of student life.

Some people may be wondering whether or not the time, effort, and money were worth simply switching WKVR-FM from mono to stereo. Well, read this article, listen to it, and decide for yourself.

WKVR-FM has been working for six years to make the improvement, but financial constraints did not allow the change. Surprisingly, it finally occurred during the end of this past Christmas break. Power 92 has been broadcasting in stereo since the beginning of January.

Joe Newhart, Station Manager, had one thing in mind concerning the radio station-it needed to broadcast in stereo, and he achieved just that. The materials needed to make the change included a stereo broadcast board and a distribution amplifier which cost a total of $5,000. Joe and his staff decided to try to raise the money themselves and started by recognizing the station's business department. It was altered to include a Business Manager, a Financial Manager, a Sponsorship Director, and an Assistant Sponsorship Director. WKVR-FM, being the largest campus organization, is not allowed to raise money on campus; therefore, they decided to begin a Sponsorship Program. This program involves soliciting area businesses to sponsor the station's specialty shows, live sports events, and other special events coverages. The FCC does not allow them to use commercials to raise money, but the station can use a sponsorship program. Shawn Peck, Business Manager, helped Matt Varner, Sponsorship Director, and Patty Sykos, Financial Manager, to raise money throughout the year. This job was not an easy one-getting a staff together and raising nearly $2,000,but they got the job done. It seems to be well-appreciated.

The Juniatian should also be thanked for donating nearly $4,000 which was left in their budget at the end of the year. All the money, raised and donated, was greatly appreciated by the station's staff and students to help this campus improve.

A set back occurred when the change in frequency took more time and money than WKVR-FM expected. Meetings were held in mid-November to determine if they would be able to purchase the stereo board by Christmas break. The Engineering Staff, consisting of Ken Bear, Al Schroff, and Kelly Koup selecting a stereo board, and the Business Department, Peck, Varner, Sykos and Newhart decided to go ahead and buy the board.

The stereo board installation was the work of Ken Bear, Chief Engineer, Al Schroff, Assistant Engineer, and Brian Baker who came back a week early to install the board. The installation was a bit tedious, but Bill Blazina, Instrument Technician, contributed a great deal by interpreting the complicated instructions for Ken, Al and Brian.

Mike Barnett, Program Director, stated that the new stereo board now allows compact discs to be played on the radio, but the station does not yet have a compact disc player because they are fairly expensive for broadcasting. That's the next job! For now, DJs may be allowed to use their own CD players to plug into the stereo board for their shows.

The stereo board is said to be much easier to use. Everything is much more centralized; the turntables can be started from the board. According to Ken Bear, "the quality of sound is better," but as he said , he might be biased. He also feels that "people like to have it in stereo," and many more students will listen to Power 92 now that it is in stereo. Will you?

Joe Newhart is very pleased with the many successes the station has seen this year. He stated that there has been more accomplishments in one year than the station has seen in over six years. He would like "to thank everyone on my staff who enabled us to broadcast 24 hours a day, broadcast in stereo, bring live coverage of football games and volleyball Final Four from Chicago, utilize ABC national news from our satellite, and change our frequency on the dial all in one year!"

Many students, including myself, did not know that the renovation to WKVR was going to be made. Some could not even tell, after listening to Power 92, that it was stereo as opposed to the old mono. Listen to WKVR now and see if you can hear the difference! Was it worth it? I definitely think so!

this is true) and America is clearly and unfortunately still a property and profit oriented society, rather than a person oriented society.

One might ask, when looking at the pervasiveness of these problems, "Can this revolution ever be finished?" In my opinion we will not know this until we make the effort. The decade of the 1980's has seen many Americans become complacent and indifferent. Too many Americans have allowed themselves to be lulled into complacency by a paternalistic Chief Executive. Many of us are now concerned only with what affects us personally. We have become jaded by the images of suffering and violence that confront us daily in our newspapers and on our TV screens.

By Mike Barnett

Now that the spring semester is <"officially underway", there is a lot happening at Power 92.

Perhaps the biggest news to report since our last column in the fall is that our brand new stereo board is installed and we are sounding better than ever. Stereo broadcasting is certainly a rarity among college stations. I would like to thank Shawn Peck, Matt Varner, the business department of Power 92 and the "Juniatian" for the help in raising funds for the board. Thanks also to Ken Bear, All Schroff and Brian Boker for installing the board over Christmas break. Tune in and hear the difference!

This Monday, February 1, marks the official change in management at the station. We are now in the long-range planning process. We are currently accepting applications for a Promotions Director. Applications are available in the station lobby. See Mike Barnett for a job description. No experience is necessary and the applications are due this Saturday.

If you can't make it to Jello Wrestling this Saturday night, Power 92 will be broadcasting all the action live, beginning around 8:00 p.m.

As the new station manager, I am very eagar to hear any and all comments or suggestions from anybody in the Juniata community. Staff meetings are held every Sunday at 9:00 p.m. in the blue room in Ellis. The meetings are informal and are a great way to get the inside scoop on your campus radio station.

Finally, we felt that the free Power 92 lounge party this past weekend was a huge success. Thanks to Bill Huston and all the staff members who helped to make the party a lot of fun! Until next week...keep rockin'!

As the assistant director of college communications, DeBlase will supervise the news bureau and photography operations, while assisting with the writing, editing, design and production of more than 150 publications. DeBlase has served as a volunteer writer and photographer for the Pennsylvania Maple Festival for six years and the Allegheny Ballet Company for two years.

A native of Boswell, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph L. DeBlase. Her interests include sports, music, and people.

Scialabba, a graduate of Juniata College, joined the staff as an admissions counselor after earning his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1986.

In this new role, Scialabba will direct the sports information department while assisting with the news bureau and photographic services. Scialabba brings a wealth of talent and knowledge to this position.

An independent study in sports information during his junior year enabled him to gain valuable experience in publication design, news writing, and photography. As a student assistant for four years, Scialabba compiled statistics, reported scores and organized pre-game materials. He has been an independent newspaper sports reporter for four years and served as sports broadcaster and director for WQRO from 1983 to 1985. Scialabba is an assistant varsity basketball coach for the Juniata Indians and is involved in a variety of community sports leagues.

A native of Huntingdon, he is the sone of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Scialabba. He enjoys golf, basketball, running, and travel.

Governor Casey called on to support higher education in PA

State Rep. Ron Cowell (D-Allegheny) today called upon Governor Casey and the Legislature to commit Pennsylvania to a 5-year plan of appropriations and program initiatives intended to significantly increase state support for hihger education.The chairman of the House Education Committe said his Pennsylvania Higher Education Enhancement Plan would "strengthen our public and private colleges and universities, enhance higher education opportunities for Pennsylvania"s citizens and , in fact, increase the rate of participation in postsecondary education among Pennsylvania"s residents."

Ccowell said Pennsylvania can no longer afford to rank near the bottom nationally in support for higher education and in participation rates among residents who continue their education after high school. He cited a Bureau of the Census study which reported that Pennsylvania ranks 50th among all the states with state appropriations for higher ed for $112.34 per capita while the national average is $215.51. Similar studies show that most other states with which Pennsylvania competes for for jobs have increased their support for higher education withlarger rates of increased appropriations than has been the case in Pennsylvania.

Under Cowell"s proposal, higher education would receive an 11% boost in funding for the 1988-89 fiscal year adn slightly smaller increases in each of the following four years.

He suggested that colleges currently receiving state assistance get an increase of 8% in 1988-89, 9% in 1989-90 and 10% in the following three years. In return, Cowell said, "policy makers, taxpayers and students have a right to expect that tuition rates in the public sector will become more stable during the next several years." He noted that public colleges in Pennsylvania currenly have among the highest tuition rates of any such schools in the country. He also said the Legislature should fund its one-third share of the cost of community college education, a commitment it has not met in recent years.

Cowell also called for 10% increases in the PHEAA grant program for full-time students during each of the next five years. In addition, he said it was time for the Legislature to recognize that some students take five years to complete their undergraduate program. He also proposed a Pennsylvania Scholars Award which would award a scholarship to the top ranking high school senior in every high school class in Pennsylvania if the student would attend a school in Pennsylvania.

Also included in Cowell"s Plan are proposals to:

--allocate 1% of all higher education funding for a special new fund to be used for grants to improve the quality of undergraduate instruction;

--create a pennsylvania Faculty Fellowship Program to prepare new faculty for the '90"s;

--re-establish an instructional equipment grant program to help schools acquire new equipment;

--expand a "rural initiatives" program in unserved or underserved geographic regions of the state;

--increase support for Act 101 programs which are intended to help educationally, economically and culturally disadvantaged students remain in college; and

--provide computer software packages to all high schools to help counsel students and their families about career, educational and student aid opportunities in Pennsylvania.

If Cowell"s Proposal is fully implemented and funded during the next five years, total state support for higher education would increase by more that 63% and more than $660 million by 1993.

The seven-term legislator acknowledged that his proposal "is bold<R." He said "if we are serious about maximizing the use of our higher education institutions and committed to improving educaitonal opportunities for Pennsylvanians, then we need to do things differently and better than we ever have in the past."

Cowell said he presented his proposal now so that Governor Casey would have time to consider the suggestions for inclusion in his proposed 1988-89 State Budget. He called his presentation "the beginning of a dialogue...about our commitment to higher education...and the future of our citizens."

JC Swim team nipped by Lyco 45 — 41

Juniata's Swim Team had a respectable day against Lycoming but came up a bit short in their 45-41 defeat.

According to Coach John Dickey, the team "had a very strong showing against Lyco. We were winning 41-38 going into the 200M Free Relay. The girls swam their best."

Mary Strapple won the 500M Freestyle, 100M Freestyle, and 200M Freestyle (6:21, 1:06, and 2:22 respectively). Sue Humphrey placed second in the 100M Freestyle and fourth in the 100M Breaststroke. Mary Bell Ridenhour won the 50M Freestyle (30.2) and placed second in the 100M Breaststroke. Colleen Lau took second in the 100M Breaststroke and fourth in the 200M Freestyle.

Mindy Winter won the 100M Backstroke (1:18) and placed fourth in the 100M Individual Medley. Sue White placed fifth in the 50M Freestyle, 100M Breaststroke, and 100M Freestyle. Michele Miller took second in the 200M Butterfly and second in the 100M Individual Medley. Kathy Fonzo placed fourth in the 50M Freestyle, and Elaine Roberts finished third in the 100M Butterfly.

Ted Bair was the only male to swim for Juniata. He finished a respectable third in the 50M Freestyle, second in the 100M Backstroke, and third in the 100M Freestyle.

Past performances of the Swim Team include a 79-92 loss to Elizabethtown, and a 51-87 loss to Susquehanna University.

Congratulations to Sue Grubb on reaching her 1000 point career mark at J.C. We're proud of you!

Paul 6th leading scorer

Juniata senior Wayne Paul of Johnstown moved into the sixth position on the Indian career scoring chart last Saturday with a 22-point performance in the Tribe's 86-61 win at Delaware Valley.

A 6"<R2 guard, Paul now has 1,147 career points, moving past Dan Feruk's 1,139. The fifth spot, held by Donnie Williams with 1,250 points, is also within reach for the team captain from Richland High School.

"Wayne has had an excellent career at Juniata," said coach Dan Helm. "We are very excited about the remainder of the season as we push toward a winning season and our league playoffs. Wayne is a major part of our efforts."

Juniata is 8-5 overall and 7-2 in the Middle Atlantic Northwest section, alone in first place.

Paul, a personnel management major at Juniata, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Paul of Oakridge Drive, Johnstown.

Grubb reaches milestone

Juniata College senior Sue Grubb reached a major milestone in her basketball career last Saturday. A 5'7 forward from Elizabethtown, Grubb scored 22 points in a 60-51 Indian win over Wilkes, giving her 1,004 career points and moving her into third place on the Juniata career scoring chart.

Grubb, who is also third in career rebounding, passed Nancy Zinkham's 994 points, and trails only Julie George (1,004) and Patti Ryan (1,126) in career scoring at Juniata.

Grubb was also recognized as the Middle-Atlantic Conference Co-player of the Week of the Northern Division. She averaged 19.5 points and 15.5 rebounds per game last week to share the honor with freshman Dana Tamuccio of Drew University.

"Sue Grubb has been steady throughout the season," said Coach Kathi Quinn, who starts four freshmen alongside Grubb. "She is the focal point of our team and provides excellent leadership for our freshmen. We are very happy to have a player like Sue Grubb on our team."

The Indians are 5-5 overall and 5-2 in the MAC Northwest.

An English/Communications major at Juniata, Grubb is the daughter of Lavonne Grubb of Ridge Road, Elizabethtown.

Sue Lockawich, a junior from Williamsburg, and Wayne Paul, a senior from Johnstown, have been named for their efforts on the basketball floor in December.

A 5'9 forward for coach Kathi Quinn's Lady Indians, Lockawich scored a career-high 23 points in Juniata's 69-63 win over Middle Atlantic Conference foe Messiah. She is the second-leading scorer and rebounder for the Tribe, averaging 11.8 points and 7.7 boards per game.

The leading scorer and captain for coach Dan Helm, Paul surpassed the 1,000-point career mark with a game high 20 points in an 87-56 victory over Messiah. Paul, the eigth-highest scorer in Juniata history, also poured in a career-high 38 points in the Tribe's 84-76 triumph at Lebanon Valley, the most points for an Indian since Roger Galo hit for 38 or more five times in 1978-79.

Lockawich, whose program of emphasis is management/computer science, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Steven Lockawich of R.D. 2, Williamsburg.

Paul, a personnel management major, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Paul of 218 Oakridge Dr., Johnstown.

Vol. XXXVIII No. 14 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 February 4, 1988

Frosty the Snowman greets prospective freshman as they came to tour the campus of Juniata. The Class of '34 donated the wall that was erected last spring.

Divesting Issue causes uprising on Campus

About a year ago, University of Missouri at Columbia police were arresting 41 people who had invaded President C. Peter Magrath's office, demanding the university sell its investments in firms that do business in segregationist South Africa.

The arrests, it turned out, were but one of a series of upheavals on the campus, where protest shanties were repeatedly vandalized and administrators complained of harassment.

But the MU campus was quiet two weeks ago when, on Jan. 11, its trustees voted to sell all the South African stocks in question.

The change was indicative of the anti-aparteid movement on U.S. campuses recently. It has, in short, been very quiet.

"The movement is a victim of its own success," said Wayne Glasker, a grad student and anti-aparteid activist at the University of Pennsylvania, which will divest by June, 1988.

It was three years ago, in January, 1985, that the anti-aparteid movement--a fitfully active effort on a handful of campuses since the 1960s--abruptly became a national phenomenon as dozens of campuses erupted in protests, rallies and sit-ins.

Since then, of course, the issue dominated political life at hundreds of schools, and many of those campuses have compiled with protestors' demand that they sell the offending stocks.

By contrast, in January, 1988, Eastern Michigan University students forced South African golfer Gary Player--who, in fact, opposes aparteid--to disassociate himself from an EMU golf course project.

Otherwise, colleges have been quiet.

One reason, some observers say, is that South African censors have cut the amount of news coming out of that country, robbing students of the sense of outrage that motivated them in the past.

Others blame a trendy U.S. media, which don't cover the issue much. "The problem with the media", complained Prof. Jacqui Wade, head of Penn's Afro-American Studies program, "is that it measures success by the numbers that attend a rally, not by the issues raised."

Still others see a natural evolution occuring.

"On our campus," said Missouri student Jacqueline Judie, "you can trace the stages of the movement. It started as a polite movement, and students went through the proper channels to raise the issue. They were ignored, so they organized protests that made headway."

Judie says the rallies, arrests and protest shanties MU students were still building as of last October "embarrassed the university" into taking action.

"Students show support when there is something to do," she maintained, "and they're still interested in the issue".

The trick to keeping pressure on South Africa to dismantle apartheid, others say, is in finding ways to let students here do something about it.

"Activists must work to find ways to deal with people's daily lives," said Kim Paulus of the National Student Action Center. "They need to engage that moral outrage."

Josh Nessen of the American Committee on Africa, which has organized hundreds of campus anti-apartheid efforts during the years, contended the movement is still building at some campuses though he conceded that, at others, "people have moved on to other issues and broadened their agendas."

They have broadened, too, their definition of which stocks campuses should sell.

University of Washington students, for instance, are challenging UW trustees' announcement that they finished divesting on Dec. 1, 1987. The students maintain the school still holds $2.5 million in stocks in firms with indirect ties to South Africa.

At Penn, Glasker is monitoring Penn's holdings in Coca-Cola, General Motors. IBM and Shell Oil.

"The reasons for divesting from GM and IBM are even more compelling," claimed Patrick Hagopian, another Penn activist. "Now these corporations have in a formal sense sold out to local managers who are not bound by guidelines like the Sullivan Principles," a list of civil rights companies agreed to respect among their South African workers.

Still other groups are shifting their focus to racism in the U.S. University of Utah Students

JC Hosts special event

Juniata College will be the site of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics Volleyball Tournament on Feb. 20-21, 1988.

Thirty-two teams of Pennsylvania Special Olympians will travel to Huntingdon and participate in the events to be held at the College's Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center. In addition to the individual team competitions, (11:15 a.m.-4:30 p.m., Saturday, Feb. 20 and 9 a.m.-2 p.m., Sunday, Feb. 21), highlighted events will include Opening Ceremonies (9 a.m.), an all-day clinic/demonstration by the nationally-ranked Juniata College Women's Volleyball Team, and a dance on Saturday with the Awards Presentation and Closing Ceremonies (2 p.m.) on Sunday.

The Huntingdon community is encouraged to support these special athletes and share in their moments of glory by attending the weekend's ceremonies and competitions.

For more information, contact the tournament's public relations director, Jennifer Nicholson, at (814) 643-3119.

Mission statement for Juniata College

Members of the Mission Statement Planning Committee, Mark Hochberg, Andrew Murray, William Alexander, Ronald Cherry, Janet Lewis and Jodie Monger have completed the task as charged by President Robert Neff. This revised draft of the Mission Statement will be submitted to the Board of Trustee in May for their approval.

Juniata College is a community dedicated to providing the highest quality liberal education. The aim of that education is to awaken students to the empowering richness of the mind and to enable them to lead fulfilling and useful lives.

As a community, Juniata is especially concerned with the environment necessary to foster individual growth. It therefore values mutual support, the free exchange of diverse ideas, and the active pursuit of both cooperative and individual achievement.

Individual growth first requires the development of basic intellectual skills: the ability to read with insight, to use language clearly and effectively, and to think analytically. A Juniata education helps students to understand the fundamental methods and purposes of

This past weekend, I was fortunate to be involved in one of Juniata's newest traditions, only one year older than the upcoming President's Ball. As a Jello Wrestling judge, I was proud of the participation of the wrestlers and the enthusiasm of the crowd. Juniata's community, with its sense of pride and generosity, and the Residential Life Committee banded together to raise $2000 for the United Way.

To add to the charitable sucess story of Jello Wrestling, it was preceeded by a marathon volleyball tournament that was organized by the Resident Assistants of East Houses. The participation was once again outstanding with over 60 students playing volleyball for twelve hours. Pledges of $2195 were collected by these dedicated students to be donated to Special Olympics. This money, along with numerous other donations from area sponsors, will be used for the Pennsylvania State Special Olympics Volleyball Tournament to be held on our campus.

So many people have been involved in the organizing of this event- an event not only for these special athletes, but also for the special helpers and volunteers. We have been presented with an opportunity to be a part of this state event- an event which presents the chance for us to give a part of ourselves.

Juniata displayed the hearts of our students this past weekend for these important organizations and now we can get involved with the "real" people. Sign-ups to be helpers for the volleyball tournament will be held in the lobby of Ellis Hall beginning on Monday and if you miss these times, leave your name at the information desk.

Here's the perfect opportunity for you to be someone special.

I just ate a simply nutritious and delicious dinner of batter fried perch and broiled potatoes in Baker Refectory. But, don't be alarmed, I'm not going to waste yet another Muddy Run column complaining about the food here at Juniata. That subject has already been beaten into something like the orange stuff that was also available tonight. No, I'm going to talk about something much more serious: the new arrangement of tables in the cafeteria.

Now, you're probably saying to yourself, "Just which arrangement does she mean?" Well, that's a perfectly legitimate question. There was one time when the cafeteria staff rearranged the tables, salad bar, etc. at least two or three times in as many days. Things went from different to bad to worse, until, finally things were returned to their original positions. But, I don't mean that series of arrangements.

I mean, rather, the spontaneous rearrangement of tables that seems to take place sometime between 5:00 and 5:15 p.m. on weeknights and 4:30 and 4:45 p.m. on weekends. At that time, certain groups of "movers" arrive for dinner. Not finding that current arrangement to their satisfaction, they move chairs and push two, sometimes three, tables together. That seems to make them happy, and they all sit down and eat a happy meal--together. But, why do they do it?

I guess togetherness is good. Isn't that what college is all about? Juniata is your home away from home. That makes your hallmates and friends your family away from home (stop me if you're not following the logic). Families eat together. Therefore, it makes sense that everyone from a hall, or groups of friends, or teammates, would want to eat with each other, right?

But, this is the 80's, the age of going your own way. We're young, active people who don't have time to eat with the family. Dad's never home because he's out on the road earning a living so you can go to Juniata. Didn't you come to school in order to get away from your family? No family eats together every day of the week anymore.

Now that we've established family togetherness as a poor excuse, we must try to find some other, more deeply hidden reason for this phenomenon. Could it be that they're all business majors, and this table arrangement is merely practice for the board meetings they'll be attending some day? Or, do they think that such an arrangement will afford them a more complete angle from which to view the entire cafeteria? You know, like a motion picture filmed in the round, like you see at Epcot Center. I'm afraid I'm wrong on both counts.

Having ruled out family togetherness, simulated board meetings, and scoping in the round as probable, legitimate reasons, I can only conclude that there is no good reason for this spontaneous rearranging of tables. Which means the only possible reason these groups eat together is so they can leave together, too.

International Studies

Susquehanna University will once again be offering students the opportunity to gain an international flavor to their education this summer with its 1988 Susquehanna at Oxford program.

The Oxford Summer Session, July 4 through August 7, composes the majority of the program and gives students a chance to take credit courses taught by British professors while living at Oxford's Corpus Christi College.

In most cases, students enroll in two courses worth three to six semester hours of credit each. This summer, courses will be offered in British business management, economic history, archeological history, politics, society, education and literature.

Participants are encouraged to join the summer-session group early for a three-week excursion, June 14 through July 3, throughout England with extended stops planned in LOndon, Bath, Stratford, Edinburgh, York and Wales.

They may continue their European travel following completion of their Oxford course work with a post-Summer Session excursion. This 19-day tour, August 7 through 24, will begin in Munich, West Germany and move on to Italy for extended visists in Florence, Rome, Ravenna and Venice before concluding in Innsbruck, Austria.

Another Susquehanna at Oxford program is a course on British Theatre in London, June 1-27. Students will attend seminars on the history of British theatre and its current issues.

Costs for the Susquehanna at Oxford programs are $975 for the British Theatre Course; $2,950 for the Oxford summer session; $1,175 for the 19-day post-session tour and $325 for the six day post session tour. Airfare is extra.

For more information and applications for any of the programs, contact Dr. Robert L. Bradford, Director, Susquehanna at Oxford Program, Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, PA 17870. The application deadline is March 25.

Smoking banned

While hundreds of campuses in recent years have designated no-smoking areas, Stanford University apparently became the first to ban smoking in many outside areas as well.<P<MSSmoking was prohibited at all the school's outdoors athletic facilities beginning on Jan. 29, according to associate athletic director Alan Cummings.

Cummings said banning smoking just from certain areas of the facilities would have "disrupted the seating of longtime ticket holders."

Moreover, they "can move to concourses or other outdoor spaces if they wish to smoke," he added.

Various schools found ways to restrict "the weed" during the past year. Harvard banned smoking in "public places", which was interpreted to mean offices. Ohio State University instituted a similar ban, while the University of Texas decided to permit residence hall residents to smoke only in their bedrooms or other designated smoking areas.

The University of Iowa banned smoking in dining halls. The University of Arizona removed its last cigarette vending machine.

But at U. Illinois, a resolution banning smoking in all buildings at Champagne-Urbana was defeated.

Wayfarer's Journal

"Drop everything America! Catch a flight to Britain." I cut that headline from an airline advertisement in a newspaper last year as I was planning to come to England to study. Now that I have been at the University of Leeds for awhile, it means even more to me. For juniors and seniors the chance is gone, but for those of you who are sophomores or freshmen, you have a tremendous opportunity that you should not let go by without considering. You can choose to spend your junior year living in and being apart of another culture. As someone who has taken advantage of the study abroad program, I can honestly say that this is one of the best decisions I have ever made.

Every day in England is an adventure. Every event is a new experience. I had to learn to cook most of my own meals when my only cooking utensils were a saucepan and an oven tray. We live in a 102 year old converted Victorian building. There is no heat in the kitchens or bathrooms, and the showers are in what use to be a doorway. When we get up in the morning, sometimes we can see our breath. All of this just makes life more of a challenge.

I've had the chance to experience carving turnips instead of pumpkins on Halloween. I once had a meeting with a professor and a group of students, and during this time we usually discuss Physiology. But, this time we socialized and drank wine (provided by the professor!). Sometimes in the middle of a lab experiment, we have a coffee and biscuit break. Some of the best times have been spent travelling. I can go on weekend trips to London and Scotland, and instead of spending spring break in Florida, I'll be going to Germany, Italy, Austria and Sweden just to name a few countries. I never could have experienced these things with a junior year at Juniata.

The academic structure at an English university is much different than the American system. I only had three classes for the entire year, and this is a normal load. As a student I am much more on my own. I had to choose my own textbooks (we had a choice of eight standard textbooks for Physiology), do my own reading (there are very few assigned readings), and manage to keep up when there is very little evaluation before the final. The finals at the end of the year are weighted very heavily. It is worth 80% of my Pharmacology grade, 75% of Physiology and 100% of my Latin grade. It is a big change from the American system, but I have learned to adapt.

I've never regretted my decision to come to England. I wish that everybody could share in the experience of studying abroad. If you haven't seriously considered it yet, please take time to do it now. I realize that it takes a lot of thought before you can decide to take this step. In the spring of my sophomore year I had a lot of doubts and plenty of fears about going through with it. I saw everything I was leaving behind: friends, family, and perhaps most of all, Juniata College where I felt comfortable and where I felt a part. That was the hardest thing, to leave behind the security to encounter a strange and far away place. However, I didn't let those fears hold me back, and I hope you won't either. The rewards you will get back are definitely worth what you give up. It's a once in a lifetime chance. Don't be afraid to take advantage of it. I know I'm glad I didn't.

What is really in Founder's Hall

By Alex Jones

How much do you know about Juniata College and its history? "Juniata" is an eponym of Indian origin which means beautiful. Legend has it that the Juniata River is the namesake of an attractive Indian girl, "thus showing that nature's children love and admire what God has created. And so when the Brethren's Normal College was christened anew as Juniata College, Henry Brumbaugh claimed that since so much of the nearby river was visible from the bell tower of Founders Hall, which was then the main campus building, it was only natural to rename the college for the river.

Unfortunately, that inspiring view of the Juniata is no longer there for us to see. The river is still there, but the tower, as well as the third and fourth floors has been condemned because of "faculty strutural support."

Founders Hall, built in 1873 and the only building left from the original college, still bears the inscription "BNC" on its front facade, which faces the Stone Church. The building housed, for many years, all of the dormitory facilities and, after an extension in 1890, the Juniata Business College and the art and music studios on the fourth floor, and classrooms and the gymnasium on the ground floor. The second and third floors served as dormitory space.

As Founder's Hall grew into disrepair, the college was expanding in size. Shoemaker Gallery, the original library, was built in the early 1900's. The Cloister followed, in 1928. Founder<r"s Hall was utilized, in its entirety, throughout the second world war. Then the bulding began to show wear; a thin mortar used to join the bricks was crumbling, there was some leakage, and the building itself was starting to settle and move apart. Reconstruction of the building frame included steel girders from the ground floor to the highest point of the bell tower.

After the building of the J. Omar Good Hall and the Brumbaugh Science Center, most of the college staff had modern office space and thus shunned the outdated facilities of the nineteenth century Founders Hall. Soon the English and Communications Departments left for the newly constructed Humanities building. With no need for office space, the two upper floors of Founders Hall were found unfit for use, and ultimately sealed off from the public.

Which leads to the question: What is up there now? I had not given it much thought until I heard rumors of a haunting. Now, I do not believe in ghosts, but I was interested in learning more about the myths which have come to be since the upper portion of the building was closed. After hearing several stories from multiple sources, I was surprised to find many strange consistencies.

Footsteps, which pace in the empty hallways of the third floor, mysteriously shuffle to an abrupt stop, and then disappear. A dank chill pervades the air of the upper halls and, on occassion, takes to following people through the building. Unexplainable lights, and sometimes silhouettes, have been seen on both the third and fourth floors and in the bell tower. One night a candle was seen burning.

The haunting of Founder's Hall is allegedly the spirit of a young woman, perhaps a past resident of Ladies' Hall, the extension added to the original building in 1890. Other rumors speculate that the "ghost" in Founders is not alone on the Juniata campus. Another popular specter is the "Lady of the Arch," who appears on nights with a new or full moon. Clad in a simple white dress, she descends from the Cloister porch at midnight and disappears in the early morning near the quad on the north side of the wing.

The purpose of this story is not to convinve you that JC is spooked. I was just surprised as to how many people knew these stories and others like them. Maybe someday, Founders upper floors will be reopened, and the students can share Henry Brumbaugh's inspiring view of the river. For now, a rope bars the foot of the stairs and the question remains: What is really in Founders Hall.

Tour guides improtant to JC

By Andrea Romano

"The tour guides are the most important part of the campus visit," says Assistant Director of Admissions, Michelle Bartel. She emphasizes that a prospective student's first impression is made at this time.

Bartel believes that it is time the guides are lauded for a job superbly done. However, she is not the only one who feels this way.

A while ago, Admissions received a letter from the University of Pittsburgh at Bradford commending Juniata's tour guide program. The letter inquired as to how Juniata recruits and trains it guides and added that the program is quite effective and well-known.

The guides learn throughout their experience, according to Bartel. They become more flexible by dealing with sticky situations. They always handle them well and impress the student and parent.

Twenty seniors will leave in the spring and at least 20 slots will open in March. Bartel emphasizes the importance of the role of the guide since the number of visitors on the Juniata campus is growing.

She encourages all interested students with good academic standing, responsibility, and a willingness to gain flexibility to apply in March. The selective process continues with an interview and will then be finalized.

Bartel hopes that all students realize and take advantage of the many opportunities waiting for them with a job as a tour guide.

Besides the official change of our Power 92 staff on February 1st there are a couple of events to be aware of.

Yes, once again Power 92 will be distributing a general survey to all our campus listeners. The purpose of this survey is to find out just what kind of music you want to hear and when you want to hear it. So when one of your favorite D.J's comes tapping on your door within the next few weeks with a survey-fill it out! The results should lead to a Power 92 that is more atuned to our listeners.

Now for a little romance!! If you haven't noticed it's February, and we all know that this is the month for love. In order to help you express those special feelings Power 92 is sponsoring its "Dedicate Your Heart to Charity" show. All you have to do is fill out the paper (which will be arriving in your mail soon) with a dedication to your sweetheart. It is only $1.00 a dedication, and all proceeds will be going to the Huntingdon chapter of the American Red Cross. The Show will be aired February 11th at 6:30 p.m. until all dedications are played, so dedicate your heart to charity.

As you can see this is another busy month for Power 92, but we are always interested in any suggestions you may have. If you have any comments or would just like to get involved stop down at the station in the basement of Ellis.

Student Government

By Megan Hartman

Juniata College Student Government held its ninth meeting on January 19,1988. Twenty-four members were present with two absent for the yearbook picture at the meeting.

Amy Coursen started the meeting with presidential remarks. The members chose their office dates for the spring semester which began on January 21. The Student Government in conjunction with Centerboard is planning a scenerio debate of the 1988 Presidential candidates. The purpose is to enhance the community of election awareness and voter participation. Amy told the members that she volunteered them to make decorations for the Presidential Ball on February 20, 1988.

Nancy Van Kuren continued with the Advisor's remarks. The preparation for the Future Emerging Leaders conference is underway. RA sign ups began a couple of weeks ago. Each Juniata student will receive a dinner ticket from President Neff. This will be used to invite a professor to dinner in Baker.

From Budget and Management, the news of the used bookstore was successful. The search for a student government treasurer and assistant treasurer for the 1988-89 year has begun. Those applications will be accepted until February 1, 1988.

The committee of Student Concerns will be attending the Huntingdon town meeting in February to discuss the Scott Street issue.

The Residential Life committee reported that everything went smoothly with the making of jello for Jello Wrestling. Melinda Brandt attended the United Way Banquet to receive a certificate of appreciation on behalf of the Student Government and Juniata College.

The student leadership development committee reported that there will be a module on February 3, 1988.

The old business was that the pay merit of Juniata employees will not be changed to twice a month. The new business was that the off-campus RHA has finally set up elections and have begun.

Against Aparteid, for example, picketed a Salt Lake City tailor shop after the owner posted a sign on the front door warning, "Black people may not enter."

"If Salt Lake City is practicing racism, then how can we expect the rest of the world to solve their racial prejudices?" asked Utah student Tom Price.

At Missouri, "the anti-apartheid movement has sparked a lot of awareness of racism on campus," Judie reported.

But when George Washington University students tried to refocus their anti-apartheid group to broader racism issues, "we got bogged down, we had no concrete goals," said GW organizer David Hicks.

Glasker agreed, noting "what attracted people (to the apartheid issue) was the moral clarity of the issue."

Now, however, "the issue is no longer as clear. It's hard to mobilize that sense of outrage. As a result, we may have lost some people. They may feel we've achieved the objective (and wonder) 'what more do you want?'" academic inquiry and encourages them to achieve an informed appreciation of the cultural heritage. On this foundation, Juniata students are stimulated to develop creativity and to examine those fundemental values--spiritual, moral and aesthetic--which give meaning and structure to life.

The qualities of mind and character nurtured within the Juniata community enable our students to realize their full potential as contributors to society, informed citizens, and caring and responsible adults.

Any comments, questions or concerns regarding the Mission Statement should be directed to Dr. Arnold Tilden, Vice President for Educational Planning and Student Services.

3rd ANNUAL JELLO WRESTLING-1988

proceeds to benefit the United Way

By Deb Dougherty

What was funny, tricky, cold, slimy, and all for a good cause? Why, it was the 1988 Jello Wrestling Tournament, of course. The Residential Life Committee of the Student Government sponsored this third annual event Saturday January 30 in the Memorial Gym. All of the proceeds went to the United Way of Huntingdon.

Five three person teams were entered in the competition. Four of these teams consisted of two females and one male and the fifth was comprised of three males. A special feature was a tag team who wrestled ten females. The contestants were judged on showmanship and skill.

There was a tie for third between the tag team, Jaba and Rondo vs. 1/2 Ton of Females, and The Outlaws vs. The Law. Taking second was the team of The Indians vs. The Lone Ranger. The Brats vs. Teddy Ruxpin took first place. The real event of the night was when a future "Michael Jackson" decided to test his moves out on the crowd.

When asked why they were wrestling, The Outlaws, Karin Guido and Deb Connor, said that it was fun and for a good cause. They were planning on putting a few tricky moves on The Law, Joe Newhart. Their only real fear, though, was of the jello being too cold.

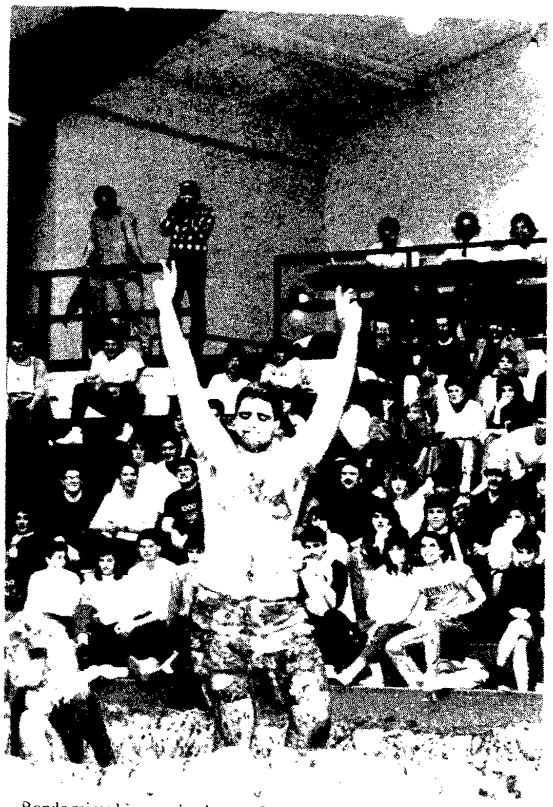
Three of the females from the 1/2 Ton of Females, Maria Yurkovich, Jen Knabb, and Karen Pretrella, felt that the wrestling event was a good fundraiser. It was fun to do and they wanted to help the cause.

Fran Arcay, co-chairperson of the event, said that the United Way was chosen to receive the money because it would stay in Huntingdon. The $2000 which was raised will be put into a pool which would then be distributed to the 18 agencies of the United Way, according to Frank Fischer who is the representitive for the organization. These agencies include such organizations as the Hemlock Girl Scout Council, the Huntindon Nursing Home, the Community Counseling Center, the American Red Cross, and the Salvation Army.

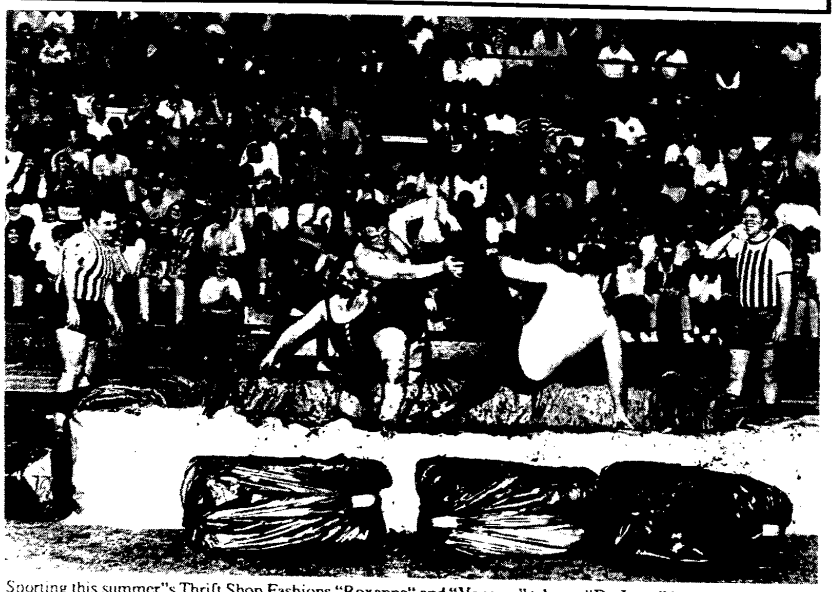
The United Way"s primary interest is people. The goal is to provide satisfactory life fulfillment for every individual.

The contribution made by Juniata College through the Jello Wrestling Tournament will enable the 18 agencies to continue to provide help and assistance to those in need. According to Fischer, the involvement of the young people is great. He feels that it is a shame all young people can"t get involved the same way.

Though the soul interest of the tournament was to raise money for charity, everyone who attended the Third Annual Jello Wrestling Tournament had a good time. Have no fear though, the 350 gallons of jello that was made for the event was disposed of properly by Physical Plant, but not into the Baker Refectory refrigerator.



Rondo raises his arms in victory after dumping Jen Zollers in THE JELLO! He may have won the battle, but did the Tag-Team win the war?



Sporting this summer"s Thrift Shop Fashions "Roxanne" and "Vanessa" take on "Dr. Love" in the Jello. The high cut of the bathing suits really do flatter the legs guys!

Jaba struts around with a 1/2 Ton of Women surrounding him. Nice boots Jaba!

"Operation Deadbeat" put into action

The federal government has announced another "full-scale, coast to coast assault on deadbeats" who owe money to the government, including those who haven't repaid student loans.

Attorney General Edwin Meese, in announcing "Operation Deadbeat" Jan. 15, said the federal government would withhold delinquent borrowers' federal tax refunds, seize their property and hire private lawyers to help prosecute them.

The program is aimed at collecting about $80 billion in unpaid obligations to the government. About $5.3 billion is held by former students who haven't repaid student loans.

At his press conference, Meese reported a U.S. attorney in western Kentucky seized a BMW from a teacher who had defaulted on a student loan taken out in 1976.

The Reagan administration, of course, has for years attempted to recover unpaid student loans from defaulters. In November Secretary of Education William J. Bennett threatened to expel colleges and trade schools from all federal student aid programs if they allow future loan default rates to exceed 20 percent. In October President Reagan approved legislation that allows the Justice Department to hire private attorneys to litigate defaulted loans.

In recent years the education Department has also worked with the Internal Revenue Service to withhold tax refunds from defaulters, reported to credit bureaus, hired private collection agencies and garnished wages.

Four days after the debut of "Operation Deadbeat," a "default summit" called by Rep. Pat Williams (D-Mont.) to forge a national plan to cut the number of Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) defaults ended, with Williams saying he had enough information to write a bill.

College aid directors and education associations were represented at the meeting, which discussed remedies ranging from better screening of students wanting loans to cutting schools with high default rates out of the GSL program.

East House's v-ball marathon raises $2,195

The Resident Assistants from East Houses sponsored a 12 hour Volleyball Marathon to raise money for the PA State Special Olympics Volleyball Event which will be held at Juniata Feb. 20-21. Over 60 students (making up 7 teams) participated in the event which raised $2,195 in pledges. Most of the students were residents of East House, however, the interest was so great, the event was opened up to those in other residence halls.

The volleyball marathon was East Houses "Kick-off program" of new ideas for this semester's Wellness Approach. Students collected sponsors to pledge them for the 12 hours of play. All money collected will go to the Special Olympics event held right here at J.C.

"The enthusiasm and spirit displayed over the entire 12 hours was fantastic," said Nora Dickey, Residence Director of East Houses. "I think the students are excited about donating the money to a Special Olympics event which will be held here at Juniata." Lisa Traupman, RA in East Houses and Director of Financial Development for the event said, "This money will help us so much. We never thought the even would be such a success, but we're glad it was."

A special thank you to all the faculty, staff and students who supported the marathoners in their efforts. We hope to see you all at the Special Olympics event. One student asked, "Are we having this again next year?"

Another said, "this is a great idea-lots of fun, too!"

Is drug use fading among college students?

"The unhealthy romance between many of America's young people and illicit drugs" seems to be fading, a new study of drug use among this year's college freshmen indicated.

Yet 40 percent of the students in the high school Class of 1987 will try cocaine by the time they are 27 years old, the 13th annual University of Michigan survey of student drug habits also found.

In announcing the survey results at a Washington, D.C., press conference Jan. 14, Michigan Prof. Lloyd D. Johnston said they seem to suggest the end of the "romance", noting 10.3 percent of the students reported using cocaine in the past 12 months.

In the 1986 survey, by contrast, 12.7 percent of the seniors said they had used coke.

Student marijuana use also continued to decline, Johnston added, from its 1978 peak--when 11 percent of the student body was smoking it daily--to 1987, when just 3.3 percent said they smoked it daily.

Some 36 percent of the students confessed to having tried marijuana "at least once" during their high school careers.

Otis Bowen, secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, which cosponsored the Michigan study, attributed the drop in student cocaine use to publicity surrounding the 1986 drug-related deaths of University of Maryland basketball player Len Bias and Cleveland Browns football player Don Rogers.

"It is indeed a shame that the deaths of many talented young people took place before the danger of cocaine was widely believed by youth," Bowen said.

Grad School guides received

Copies of the 1988 "Graduate School Guide" have been received in the college's career planning and placement office.

Students who are interested in continuing their studies towards a master's or doctoral degree will find up-to-date facts about graduate degree programs at over five hundred colleges in the Northwest and Midwest. Information provided includes majors, tuition, names of deans and satellite campus addresses.

A cross-reference section of graduate programs will help students identify those colleges which offer graduate degree programs in their preferred field of study.

"Graduate School Guide" also provides a section of handy student reply cards which make it easy to write away for admissions literature and application forms.

Colleges exhibit liberal attitudes toward condoms

While Catholic colleges across the country opened the new term with the theological problems of even talking about condom, the nation's secular campuses kept signing up to sell prophylactics at a rapid pace.

Students returning to Platts-burgh State College in New York, for example found condom vending machines installed for the first time in dorm bathrooms while, 2,000 miles away, the University of Colorado was choosing 1 of 5 companies to distribute condoms to its dorms.

They were far from alone.

In just the last three months, the University of California at Irvine, Cal-Santa Cruz, Stephens College in Missouri, the Universities of North Dakota, Arizona, Texas, Illinois, Maryland, and Maine at Farmington, Metropolitan State College in Colorado, Ohio State, Franklin and Marshall College in Pennsylvania and Yale, among scores of others, have started selling or distributing condoms to their students.

Some schools have gone beyond just making condoms available. New Mexico State University pharmacist Wes Dixon, for one, recommended students use only certain brands (Shick or Yung).

Now that schools themselves are in the condom business, however, student-run condom delivery services--Harvard and Texas-Austin had them for a time during the 1986-87 school year--seem to have grown scarcer.

Nevertheless, University of Pennsylvania sophomore Gil Hastings did operate a delivery service called "Rubber Express" during the fall term, offering a "1.99 Special: Two rubbers and two cigarettes."

Sometimes, too, college officialdom is less than amused by students' involvement in the issue.

University of North Dakota police, for example arrested student Paul Noot for celebrating his school's new condom distribution policy by wearing to an October hockey game a 3-foot, paper mache "work of art" resembling a penis with cellophane over it.

And not all secular college officials are comfortable with the trend for other reasons. Michigan State health service Director Dennis Jurczak said in November it was the students'--not the university's--responsibility to secure condoms.

Georgia Tech and University of Georgia administrators refused to place condom vending machines in dorms, though both schools offer them in their health clinics.

Special Olympics coming soon to Juniata

By Suzanne Lydic

What do the Schriver Kennedy and the Kennedy Sports Center have in common? The Special Olympics!! On Feb. 20-21, Juniata College will host the Pennsylvania Special Olympics Volleyball Tournament. Three hundred fifty five athletes and 88 coaches from across the Commonwealth will come together to display their volleyball sportsmanship in the Kennedy Sports Center.

The concept of Special Olympics came back in 1968 when the (Schriver) Kennedy Family conjured up the idea of hosting special games for handicapped children. Like many relatives of retarded children, they dreamed of taking their idea of positive teachings to other special kids. Hence, Soldiers' Stadium in Chicago became the first site for a formal, organized game time. Since that time Special Olympics has progressed far into the future.

Athletes who participate undertake a rigorous (minimal) 8-10 weeks of training in their particular sports area. Through this training, all academic and social skills, which these special participants have learned, are focused into one area-working and participating together to make something succeed. The progression for advancement works much like the ordinary olympics: competition begins on the local level and progresses through the county, state and eventually international levels.

Curtis J. Brewer, Director of Games and Competition Management for Pennsylvania Special Olympics, began working with the Special Olympics after attaining a Masters Degree in physical education and special education. Brewer ran a pre-adult gym program for handicapped athletes, and thus found himself organizing various activities for the games. Now he organizes the 11 major events across the state and works with the staffs in training and preparing the volunteers while acting as a resource link between the groups.

Brewer, like many who praise the efforts of the Special Olympics, has a mentally retarde brother. Growing up in that type of situation taught Brewer the importance of encouraging opportunities for handicapped children.

When asked why he thought the program works, Brewer replied, Special Olympics gives the special athletes a chance to come out of the closet. For once in their lives, these kids are accepted by the community as "heroes." He continued, "You can actually measure their progress--by distance, speed, or even time. As their self-esteem grows, they learn that they actually CAN do something--as opposed to always failing in their efforts."

Brewer is very pleased with the persons he has to work with for the February event here at Juniata. Nora Dickey, East R.D., who acts as the Special Olympics Area Manager, has played a large role in arranging for Juniata's ,hosting of the volleyball tournament.

On February 20-21 Juniata will play an important part in the history of the Special Olympics. Let's not miss the event, for this outreach is rapidly moving forward, and Juniata has the special support to help it move on.

Questions about becoming involved in this event may be directed to Nora Dickey in the East Houses.

The Juniatian wants to wish the Indian grapplers "good luck" in the meet with E-town on Saturday afternoon. Also best wishes to the men's and women's basketball teams as they travel to King's.

Win streak snapped JC wins 2, drops 1

The Juniata Mens basketball team continued their win streak this past weekend by defeating Lycoming and Drew. However, the Indians were shocked by conference foe Albright on Saturday evening. Snapping JC's five game win streak.

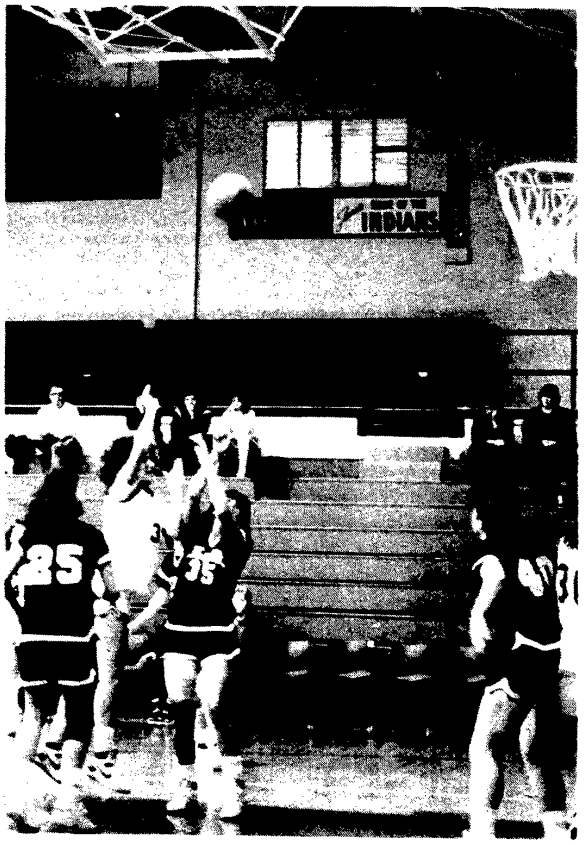
The Indians streak may have ended two games earlier if a Lycoming shot hadn't missed at the buzzer last Wednesday night in Kennedy Sports Center. JC escaped with a one point victory 79-78. Sophomore Shawn Habakus poured in a game high 20 points while teammate Wayne Paul tallied with 18. As it has been for most of the season the Indians gave up too many fouls, sending Lyco to the line 26 times. The Warriors connected 21 times from the charity stripe, and JC was seven for eight.

Bob Dombrowski had nine rebounds to lead the Indians on the boards. JC out rebounded Lyco 37-26. The Indians put the three point shot up 20 times, connecting from the 19'9" mark eight times.

Drew University was the next stop for the Indians. After playing a nip and tuck first half, the Indians went into the lockerroom with an eight point lead. However, the Indians soared in one of their best halves of their season to win by 21 points. JC had seven dunks in the game, five by freshman Jay Nicholson. Duane Disc played intense defense by taking Drew's leading scorer out of his game.

The second game of the weekend trip wasn't as pleasant for the Indians. After beating Albright only two weeks prior to Saturday's contest, the Indians found themselves struggling against a lower caliber team of the Northwest conference. Leading by three at the half the Indians found themselves in a hard fought defensive battle. In the end the Lions were on top, handing the Indians their first loss since second semester began.

The Indians are now 10-6 overall and are tied for first with a 9-3 record in the conference. This past Monday the Indians played at Gettysburg in a non-conference tilt, and they hosted Elizabethtown last night for the inside track to first place of the Northwest section. This weekend JC travels to Kings and FDU-Madison for two of its last conference games.



An unidentified Lady Indian shoots for two last Wednesday against Lycoming. The ladies put up a good effort but lost to the Warriors 73-54. The Indians now have five games left in their season. They travel to Scranton to take on Kings on Saturday.

Vol. XXXVIII No. 15 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 February 11, 1988

The Broadway musical comedy,"The 1940's Radio Hour", comes to Juniata via the Artist Series. The show will be in Oller Hall on February 14, at 8:15 pm.

Artist series takes us back in time with "The 1940's Radio Hour

You'll arrive at Oller Hall, take your seat, and suddenly the band members and singers start to fill the stage. It's fifteen seconds till showtime; the stage manager reminds you to clap enthusiastically when the applause light goes on; and you hardly have to pretend that you're in the audience of a live, New York City radio studio in 1942 because the set, the sounds and the costumes of "The 1940s Radio Hour" are convincingly like those of the era.

This Broadway musical-comedy, written by Walton Jones, comes to Juniata College on February 14, at 8:15 pm following two successful two-month runs in St. Paul, Minnesota, which helped launch the current national tour. The show first opened on Broadway in 1979 to critics' delight. What a wonderful opportunity to bring your sweetheart and share a very special Valentine's Day.

Clive Barnes of the New York Post referred to the show as, "a glowing mixture of golden tunes from the golden days of the radio. The music from 'Chattanooga Choo Choo' to 'Strike Up the Band' proves splendidly memorable. Walton Jones has caught the atmosphere extraordinarily well." During a Dallas run, Dan Hulbert of the Dallas Times Herald observed, "'Radio Hour' takes on a life of its own, so that by the time lovely Ann Collier offers her tender rendition of ' 'Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas' for all those homesick boys in Guadalcanal, we feel a distinct lump in the throat."

"The 1940s Radio Hour" is a re-creation of a live radio broadcast at Christmastime in 1942. The show is complete with a give-away contest, comedy routines, a narrated drama, commercials of the era, jitterbug numbers (that home audiences never saw), and those old songs made by Glenn Miller, Duke Ellington, Artie Shaw, Cy Oliver, Les Brown and others. Those sitting in the theater audience are led to believe they're watching the live broadcast in the Algonquin Room of New York City's Hotel Astor.

And it is believable. The performers' hairdos, their clothes and shoes, their slumps and stances all bring the characters to life, and when the "On the Air" light goes on, you'll hear authentic renditions of some of the '40s greatest music.

Few stereotypes of the time go unparodied: Sinatra, Vallee, the golden-toned master of ceremonies, and daffy dames parade before the WOV microphones and bicker backstage. The show's script faithfully captures the patriotism and sentimentality of American life during World War II, and the "radio show" in progress is full of '40s hallmarks: corny commercials about popular products, such as Eskimo pies; and the clever sound effects devices that were used during radio dramas.

"If you lived through the "40s, you are likely to well up with teary eyes and then chuckle with delight," wrote Richard L. Coe in The Washington Post. "If you arrived too late for that, you first will hoot and then become ever so tender."

The performance, part of the Juniata College Artist Series, will be held in the Oller Auditorium at 8:15pm on Sunday, Feb. 14. For more information call 643-4310, ext. 330. Tickets are $8.00 at the door.

Spring play features JC actors and director

By Diane Hontz

"But Why Bump Off Barnaby?" is being performed at Juniata College this spring. The play is a mystery farce by Rich Abbot and produced by Samuel French, Inc. It is set in the present time in the parlor of Marlgate, the ancestial home of the Leducs. It is a three act play--the first act on Friday night just before sunset, the second act is very late that same night, and the third act is the next morning just before dawn. Therefore, the whole play takes place in approximately a 12-hour period of time and will be performed Feb. 25, 26 and 27 in Oller Hall.

This is the first year a student has ever directed the spring play, and most people think that Walt Cupit is doing a great job. Walt is a senior communications and theatre arts major here at JC. In the past he has been on stage at Juniata in "Charley's Aunt", as Thoreau in "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail," "The Time of Your Life", and numerous other plays. Locally he has appeared at Theatre in the Park in "Godspell". Walt is a 1984 graduate of Hamilton High School West in Hamilton Township, New Jersey. His future plans include going to New York to perform on Broadway and to Hollywood to be in films. Also this year in April, Walt will be appearing in Juniata's musical, "Carousel", as Jigger Cragin.

There are ten characters in the spring play, but there are no true lead characters. The characters include Medkins, a serenely capable butler, Magnolia, a very apprehensive maid, Orion Leduc, an arthritic British baronet, Barnaby Folcey, a poor relation to the Leducs, and Lady Barbara Fenwick, a rather deaf peeress. Also included in the play are Rosalind Barstow, a flamboyant fortune-hunter, Cleo Barton, a middle-aged Hollywood actress, Jeff Barnett, an intrepid police reporter, Miss Barnsdale, an old nearsighted family governess, and Dora Dunstock, an adorable young dim wit. The cast includes John Petrovic as Medkins, Becky Berger as Magnolia, Kevin Seachrist as Orion Leduc, Erich Eichenschr as Barnaby Folcey, Marylou Miller as Lady Barbara Fenwich, Lisa Mitschang as Rosalind Barstow, Jodi Mock as Cleo Barton, Alex Jones as Jeff Barnett, Patti Stepp as Miss Barnsdale, and Sharon Cadman as Dora Dunstock.

John Petrovic, playing Medkins is a senior majoring in International Relations. He has returned to the Juniata stage after studying abroad last year in Barcelona, Spain. John is a veteran Juniata thespian having had major roles in "A Thurber Carnival", "Little Women", and "The Time of Your Life" directed by Hollywood actress Nancy Kulp of Beverly Hillbillies' fame.

There was no information available on Becky Berger who is playing the part of Magnolia.

Kevin Sechrist, who is playing Orion Leduc, is a junior Literature major at JC. He is a graduate of Manheim Central High School and has been involved in dramatics for three years. He also appeared in "The Time of Your Life", and "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail". Kevin is also the editor for Juniata's Literary magazine, "KVassir".<P<MSErich Eichensehr, casted as Barnaby Folcey in the play, was born in Huntingdon and went to Neshaminy High School in Langhorne, Pa. He was in <"LGodspell" in high school. Erich is a psychology major and appeared in "Charley's Aunt" last semester here at JC.

Marylou Miller plays Lady Barbara Fenwick in the spring play and was also involved in her high school senior class play, "Murder in the Magnolia's", as the 400 lb. Sheriff Billy Jerk. Marylou is a communications/journalism major, Centerboard Secretary, RHA Treasurer in her Residence Hall, the January 1988 was celebrated as Freedom of the College Student Press Month and "The Juniatian" would like to encourage discussion about and commentary on our First Amendment freedoms. As stated in the U.S. Constitution: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or of the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Despite this amendment, there were numerous attempts at censorship of the college press during the 1986-87 school year as reported in "Student Press Law Center Report". Censorship continued to be a problem for the college press in 1987-88. Administrators concerned with maintaining the image of their schools and student leaders consumed with the power of their Student Government positions are all candidates to attempt to censor the campus press. Numerous editors and advisors have been removed from their positions resulting from information appearing in print- a form of punishment or an attempt to censor?

Campus newspapers have been supported by the courts in the observance of the First Amendment when suspended editors and advisors have been reinstated. The readers of any newspaper, campus press or the Washington Press, should expect no less than the freedom that is guaranteed in the Constitution. Therefore, the college press should never be considered to be anything less than an informer of news and campus-related issues and events and, as stated in the Fourteenth Amendment, should not be denied equal protection of the law.

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

SADS- seasonal affective disorder syndrome! In more understandable, less-psychological terms, the common wintertime blues and blahs. Just recently the American Psychiatric Association officially recognized this condition as an ailment that can lead to serious depression.

Since we are headed right into the that time of year, what can we do to lessen the chances of being smitten by and succumbing to the blues and blahs of winter? We must keep in mind that mild depression is a common problem. In fact, it is the most common emotional disturbance but, if left unattended, can lead to the more serious types of depression- moderate depression and severe depression.
Consider the following suggestions for warding off the blues and blahs of winter.

*Get meaningfully involved in your environment. Join that club or organization, do the volunteer work you have been wanting to do or take on that special project you have been thinking about.

*Start a regular exercise program. It's a mood elevator, it helps you feel good about yourself and it can also be a social activity where you can meet new people.

*Get outdoors as much as possible. Psychologists and counselors suggest that we get out more during the winter. It can help combat the "cabin fever" so prevalent during the long winter months.

*Work on your relationships. Having a supportive network of family and friends can go a long way in managing wintertime depression. Being a friend to others will also help you to think more positively about yourself.

*Plan special activities from time to time. We all need a break from the regular routine. An off-campus dinner with friends or an all-day shopping trip (you don't have to spend a lot of money) can provide the emotional uplift and escape that we all need.

*Examine the stressors (people, events, situations) in your lifespace that seem to be causing problems and preventing you from feeeling good about yourself. Talk things over with your RA, your peer advisor, the RD, yours truly, or other caring persons. As we have urged so many times in the past, you do not have to go it alone.
That"s all for now and until next time, be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

By John Petrovic

For years I have been dreading the fact that sooner or later I would have to take a General Ed. Course. Well, I am in my final semester here at Juniata, and the time has come. This semester I have the Medieval Mind. I have discovered that all of that dread was certainly warranted.

Three weeks have passed, and I still have not figured out why I am being forced to take this course on the history of theology. All these years at Juniata, and I never realized that not only do we get a diploma at graduation; but we are ordained. But, I do not want to be ordained, so do I still have to take this class? Yes!

Why?? I am not interested in theology nor am I interested in taking another history course, especially dealing with that period. But, do not tell any of the professors that I called the Medieval Mind "just another history course." They have worked very hard to make it seem more than that. If you read the course description and objectives from the syllabus, you will see what I mean. It is no wonder that this is a required course. Any course that solves all your life's problems and reserves you a place in heaven should be required, right? Thanks, but no thanks. I would rather try to solve my problems by taking a course that has some relevance in my life.

Granted, the Middle Ages is an exciting period. Knights in shining armor rode gallantly through the towns. Evil barons and lords burned, plundered and ravaged cities. Let us not forget the many a damsel in distress. Unfortunately, we are studying monks. Yes, monks are boring from their greasy hair to their smelly feet (they do not bathe you know).

So, why I am in this class? I had a choice right? I could have taken the Greek Mind or the Seventeenth Century. Some choice! I did learn one thing however. The term liberal arts comes form the ancient Roman word "liberi" which means free and only free men were allowed to be educated. What I would like to know is who changed the word liberal from meaning "free" to "required?"

Well, I guess I will have to tough it out for four hours a week (so nice of them to make it a four credit course)> I have no other option. Anyway, we are going on a nice trip to Washington ($15 more please). Why not go? Really, I am already paying hundreds pf dollars for a class I do not want, so what is $15 more?

If I am lucky the discussion part of class may get a little more interesting after this letter. It may even be discussed in some SVS class. I have already had SVS, and that is another letter in itself. But, I am glad I had it because I know that no self-respecting employer would hire me knowing that I had the opportunity to take SVS and did not (another required course to my rescue!!).

Now I am guaranteed a job and a place in heaven. A job and a place in heaven, that is what liberal arts is all about--I mean, that is about which liberal arts is.

Lisa Mitschang, playing Rosalind Barstao, is a 1987 graduate of Laurel High School. This is Lisa's first appearance on stage at Juniata, but she was last seen on the Laurel H.S. stage in MsVann's production of "The Wiz".

Jodi Mock is playing the part of Cleo Barton in the spring production and is a sophomore Biology major here at JC. She is a graduate of Altoona Area High School where she performed as a major character and a member of the chorus in several musicals.

Alexander "Doc" Jones has been cast as Jeff Barnett and was last seen on the stage with director Walt Cupit as they portrayed Larry and Vince, the crashdummies in "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail". Doc is a sophomore political science/communications major, a DJ at Power 92, and the managing editor of the Juniatian. He is a 1986 graduate of Highstown High School where is last performed as Curly in the 1986 production of "Oklahoma!". When not on stage, Doc can be found playing his synthesizers or singing with Concert Choir. His major hobbies include wrestling (with his roommates) and hanging from the cliffs when it is past his bedtime.

Men's B—Ball looks foward to MAC's

The Juniata Men's Basketball team is hot! Winning is usually something which rarely occurs for the Indians in the MAC's, however, this year is a totally different story. Last week the Indians beat Gettsyburg College 79-68, after trailing by seven at halftime.

The Indians only shot 51% from the floor but managed to get back in the game by playing tough man to man defense. Gettysburg scored the first two points of the second half but the Indians answered with 15 straight points. Four Indians reached double figures paced by Wayne Paul's 14 pints. Shawn Habakus chipped in eight, which Duane Dise added 11 and Dan Tizun had 10.

JC was 6 for 13 from three point land and has started to hit the long range shot more at this point of the season. Last year the 3-point shot was the key to the Indians rebuilding year and is now becoming a potent part of the offense well at least six players who can hit from long range.

Then the Bluejays of Elizabethtown came to town. This was the first place showdown for the MAC Northwest. The Indians lost to E-town 74-72 early this year and needed a win to gain sole possession of first place and practically clinch a playoff spot. A 28 point effort from Wayne Paul and 17 poinsts from Duane Dise lead the Indians to a 84-72 victory.

Both teams shot 54% from the field and 50% from 3-point land. However, the Indians had 17 steals to the jays 10. Shawn Habakus nearly had more assists (10) than the whole E-town team (14). Coach Dan Helm stated before the game that this was the biggest gamne of his career at Juniata College. Jay Nicholson had 12 points and nine rebounds and Bob Dombrowski added 10 points and six boards.

This past weekend the Indians travelled to Kings to play them on their Homecoming weekend. Sunday they played at FDU-Madison and yesterday hosted York. If the Indians won one of their two games this past weekend they wrap up first place in their conference and head to Scranton to get another shot at Division III's number one ranked team on the Northern section of the MAC.

This Saturday afternoon the Indians host non-conference opponent Alvernia College. Alvernia is a .500 club who can test the Indians with their outside shooting. The Indians beat Alvernia the last time they played two years ago. Game time is sloted for 2 pm Saturday afternoon.

A Juniata wrestler finds himself in trouble against a Lycoming grappler on Saturday afternoon. The match was part of a four-team tournament which also included Messiah and E-town. JC had two 2nd place and three 3rd place finishers. The team sees action this Saturday when they host a triple dual match against teams from Muhlenberg, Scranton, and E-town. The action gets started at 12 noon in the IM gym, so go out and support your team. Photo by Dave Farling.

Ladies seek support down stretch

By Deb Dougherty

The woman's basketball team has been hampered all season by a shallow bench and injuries. Sue Lockawich, one of the teams most consistent shooters, has been out with a knee injury, and Kelly Woodsworth has seen limited time on the court because of her knee. Heidi McCarthy, the tallest girl on the team, was starting to peak when she contracted mono and could not play. Despite all of this the nine women team is third in the league with a 5-4 record and is 5-8 overall.

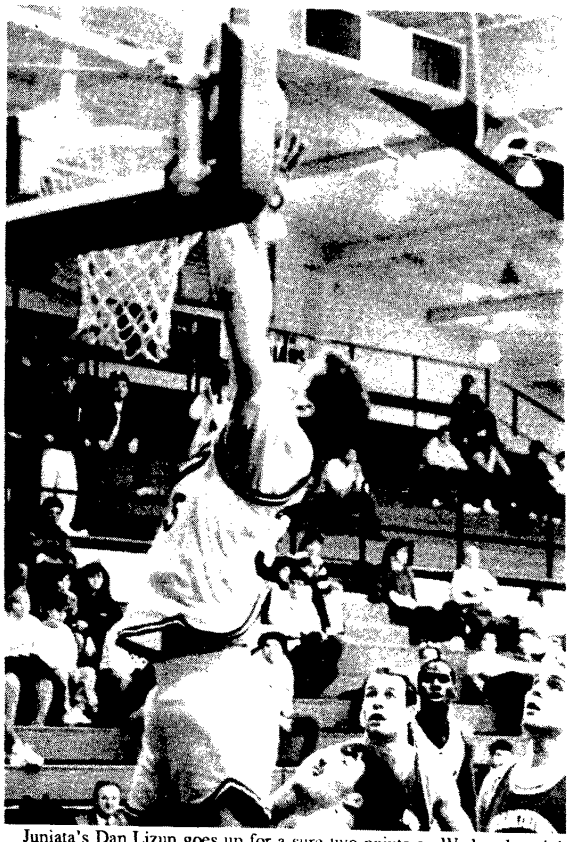
According to Coach Kathi Quinn, the team has held up remarkably well. They have had five come from behind wins and have played good defense. Because of the small numbers, Quinn thinks the players are under a lot of pressure because they want to do well. She feels that they have a good shot at finishing with a .500 record, which would give them a successful season.

The highlight of the season for Coach Quinn was when Sue Grubb hit her 1,000 point mark. Quinn had never had this happen before in her coaching career, and it was extremely special to her. Quinn feels that Grubb has been a very good leader an and off the floor and in practice. With this year being a building season, she "couldn't have asked for a better senior to set an example for the freshman."

The Lady Indians lost their recent match against Gettysburg 75 to 51 when Juniata played their worst first half and Gettysburg played their best. In their next game against Elizabethtown, Quinn felt that the game was closer than the 62-43 score indicated. Juniata dominated in the second half before E-town began sinking the ball, and the Lady Indians could not stop them.

Last Saturday the team travelled to Kings College to defend their third place position. Juniata led the first ten minutes of the game when someone on the opposing team got hot. Going into the second half, the Indians were down by six. In the second half the Indians came within three but could not capitalize on an opportunity to get ahead. The game ended with a 69-56 score.

Quinn wishes that the college community would show more support for the team. In the past two games they made dramatic come from behind attempts, and there were no fans to cheer them on. The advantage of home court is to have plenty of peole to cheer. So Juniata lets go and support our Lady Indians, and cheer them on to a winning season!!!



Juniata's Dan Lizun goes up for a sure two points on Wednesday night against MAC foe Elizabethtown. The Tribe won the game 84-72. The win avenged an earlier loss to E-town and virtually guaranteed the Indians a playoff spot.Photo by Henry Marche.

JC honors Don Smith

Juniata College honored longtime Elizabethtown College basketball coach Don Smith before Wednesday night's meeting between the Indians and the Blue Jays. Smith will retire at the end of the season, his 34th in collegiate coaching.

Smith was given a clay sculpture created by Juniata art professor Jack Troy, a nationally-known pottery expert. Juniata College athletic director William Berrier made the presentation during a pregame ceremony.

"Don Smith has been a cornerstone of the Middle Atlantic Conference in basketball," said Berrier. "He is one of the reasons the conference has been recognized for its outstanding play over the years."

Smith, a 1950 graduate of the University of Mississippi, coached Bucknell between stints at Elizabethtown. His career coaching record is 412-374.

Positions on the Editorial Staff of "The Juniatian", will be opening up within the next month. Anyone interested in a position is invited to visit our office during our next lay-out: Monday, Feb. 15, at 7:00pm.

Senior Glen Peters drives to the basket against Alvernia in a recent victory

Beat the blues with The Presidents Ball

The Juniata community will have a chance to beat the winter blues this Saturday evening during the First Annual Presidential Ball. The evening will consist of a reception, a pops concert, and the Kim Sherry Band. Many students will start off the evening at individual residence hall association get togethers in the lounges. The evening of entertainment officially begins at 8:15 pm with a reception on the top floor of Ellis in the carpeted area. The reception will feature "mocktails" and various light hor d' oeuvres.

The Juniata College Band, under the direction of Professor Ibrook Tower, will take to the stage at 8:45 pm in the ballroom, performing several Pops numbers.

The Kim Sherry Band is returning this year by popular demand after providing music for last winter's Innaugral Ball. They will be preforming from 9:30-12:30 am in Baker Refectory. One of the reasons for the band's popularity is because they play a wide variety of music. Expect to hear a mixture of rock, big band, polka and traditional festive music.

Ellis Hall will be decorated in a winter theme, with lot's of white lights and silver tree branches. The evening will have an International theme as well thanks to Hallmark Food Service. Look for five different areas in Baker Refectory, each featuring food and beverage from a foreign country.

The evening, which is entirely free of charge, is optional black tie. Many Juniata students, however, will be dressed similarly to that of Madrigal Dinner.

All students are invited and should have received an invitation through campus mail. The RSVP date has been extended through tomorrow (Friday) for students Simply RSVP to the President's office on the main floor of Founder's Hall to dance the night away with the Kim Sherry Band. C'mon....Beat those winter blues!!

Residence halls programs based on wellness

By Jen Wade

Juniata College's revamped mission statement calls for the college to produce a "total" student through positive development. Because of this institutional priority, Student Services, in conjunction with the residence hall staff, has introduced building-wide programming based on the conception of "wellness". The goals of the programs are to make students aware of the need to balance the various aspects of their lives, and to emphasize that the life style decisions students make during the college years have long-range influence on their lives.

Individual wellness is defined as a balance of six different dimensions: occupational, intellectual, social, emotional, spiritual, and physical. The RDs of the various residence halls, along with other staff members, are being asked to provide at least one program in each area during the semester. Staffs or some dorms have already implemented the program by introducing students to the concept and dimensions of wellness through special activities.

According to Dean of Students, Nancy Van Kuren, RAs will still be responsible for planning social and educational programs for each hall.

The idea of wellness is not new to Juniata. Nurse Jane Brown, SHAC, and Dr. Jay Buchanan have worked at promoting the idea for the past few years. Over the summer and throughout the fall semester, Dr. Buchanan, along with Van Kuren, and Bill Huston, Director of Programming and Conferences, discussed ways of effectively implementing the idea across the campus. Their idea of using the residence halls as a base evolved out of a study of similar programs at other colleges and universities.

Initial response to the program has been good. People seem to enjoy the activities, and the idea of wellness provides a general theme around which to develop and coordinate residence hall programming. There may possibly be a survey taken near the end of the semester to evaluate results and attitudes more completely.

If the response is favorable, other staff and faculty members may be included in the upcoming years, and idea may also be introduced at freshman orientation. A more thorough evaluation process will probably also be developed.

It takes alot of loot to attend Kalamazoo

Some private colleges raise their tuition rates not to meet rising expenses, but to look more selective and prestigious, David Breneman, president of Kalamazoo College in Michigan told a college finance conference recently.

"Right or wrong," Breneman told the National Center for Postsecondary Governance and Finance conference Jan. 21, "price is a message to the public of what we are. I do nothing for my college if I am a good citizen and I raise tuition only five percent."

Keeping Kalamazoo's tuition lower than other independent colleges', he said, would lead potential students to think the school isn't as good as its competitors.

It may be good marketing, but the revelation didn't sit well with some of Breneman's students.

Cheryl Harants, Kalamazoo's student government president, called Breneman's views "a very shortsighted analysis." Although school officials say they're committed to establishing a diverse student body, tuition increases designed to maintain prestige are turning Kalamazoo into a "white, middle-class, elitist school."

"It's a real disservice to the

What exactly is campus security? This is a question that I have been pondering over the past week. In my search for this answer, I asked some of my fellow students about the meaning of our campus "police force." The most interesting response was- we don't have one. How have these uniformed security officers managed to elude this student? I happen to know that we have a campus security because I have seen their car and the tickets they leave behind for unappropriate parking. However, I am curious as to why they are and are not responsible for.

How are we, as students and citizens of this community, expected to know the boundaries that these officers cannot overstep? As children, we were told to look for a police officer if we were lost or had a problem, so naturally we seek out the security officer when in distress. Finally locating one does not guarantee that your troubles are over, especially if your dilemma requires a service that is against the regulations. How do you know what needs will be met under these rules and if these rules are applicable every day?

Recently, I made contact with the campus security office which led me to my original question. This experience was the first in three and a half years at Juniata- except to purchase my parking permit. I desperately needed to have my car jump-started so that it could be driven to a garage for a new battery. I needed help (the operative word here) and campus security has a "reputation" of assisting students. The connection was logical.

Well, needless to say, I was not up to date on the implementation of the regulation restricting this procedure. Reason behind this--it will damage their cars. I suppose that I owe the security office an apology for asking them to perform such a risky operation and now every student can be aware of this alteration in regulation.

This brush with "the law" of Juniata raised this question of the extent to which a security officer will assist a student in distress. I would welcome the reponse of Rocco to my question of their responsibilities and I am sure that other students would like to know as well.

Hola, Juniata!

I'm writing this letter on Thanksgiving Day while you are home with your families eating turkey. Today the BCA students will have turkey, too. I can't wait for my phone call from home to talk to everyone around the Thanksgiving Day table.

Thanksgiving is one of the few American things they don't have here in Barcelona. On TV you can watch the Cosby Show, St. Elsewhere, Miami Vice and Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck to name just a few. Every weekend you can listen to Casey Casem counting down the Top 40. For snacks there are M&Ms and Wrigley's gum. And beverages-you still need to make a decision between Coca-Cola and Pepsi. Everywhere you go you will see Spaniards in Wrangler and Lee jeans and Nike and Adidas sportswear.

At times it's easy to forget that you aren<r"t in a big city like Philadelphia in the U.S.A. Then someone will ask you a question in Catalan (a language that is a mixture of French and Spanish), and really sets in. I'm in Barcelona in Cataluna (even though the majority of the world thinks Barcelona is in Spain), and reality sets in. Catalan is spoken just as much as Spanish is, and it is the official language of the University. At times, reading the signs about classes and the libraries can become quite a chore because because the signs are always in Catalan.

Getting things done can be difficult. Everything closes here from 2:00-4:30pm (more or less). There are many specialty stores and the owners have their own ideas of what is best for you. You may wait an hour in the line at the bookstore or at the library to find out that the book you want won't be in until next week---or sometime.

The Metro is an experience of its own. It may take a half hour or twice as long to get across town-depending how long the Metro waits at each stop. Everyone rides the metro-grannies and infants, executives and workers, students from grade school on up. Another group of people in the metro are the accordian players, the cripples and the gypsy mother and baby or children asking for money everyday, the same line and the same time. These people, riding the metro, can give it a quite detestable smell-who knows when some of them showered last. Whew! You know that God has heard your prayer when a new 'spaceage" type metro pulls into the station, and you can even sit down!

The cold season has begun here in Barcelona. There are only two seasons, the cold and the hot; fall and spring don't exist. Sunny afternoons feel like cool or chilly autumn days. Mornings and evenings can become bitter cold. I'll be bundled up in my wool coat and gloves when I leave for my morning classes and when I return from my evening ones. Some of the things I miss in this cold season are snow, seeing my breath when I speak and heating ducts. Cold days are much colder when you can't return to a warm room (at 72 degrees Fahrenheit). I am more fortunate than others-my family has two gas stoves and a little electric heater in the bathroom. The gas stoves are only on for several hours during the evening. Most people don't have heaters in their bathrooms and as one students said, "I thought I saw the Tidy Bowl man wearing iceskates." You can really freeze your little "culo' taking careof business in the bathroom.

Overall, I am really enjoying Spain. The reason I came here is the same as to why I came to Juniata- the people. I have a great family and all the families in this neighborhood with BCA students are warm and caring. (The man at the tobacco shop where all of us buy our stamps is very accomodating as well).

Thank you to those who have written. Here, I get two types of airmail-letters from the USA and the empty mailbox. I've enjoyed all your letters. I'll enjoy, even more, returning to Juniata to see all of you. God Bless!

Dear JC,

I know the whole, silly event is over, but I can't help but sit back and reflect on last Friday's "All Class Night."

I would like to once again compliment the audience-including the more than rowdy bunch in the balcony-for their supreme manners. I'm serious when I say that this was the first time in four years that I was able to hear all the dialogue from each class. The crowds were loud and boisterous when appropriate and quiet when needed. What a pleasant surprise! Anyway, the audience's performance was super.

I would also like to thank the judges for their time and effort last Friday night. Thank you: Bob Reilly, Karen Rosell, Clay Pheasant, Jim Gooch and Don Mitchell.

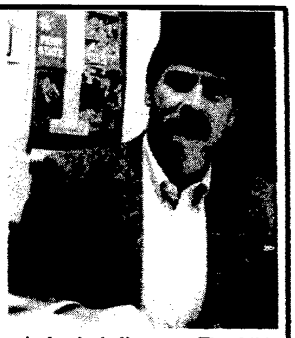
My compliments also go out to every class for their great skits and limitless enthusiasm in performing them. I was really psyched to see a freshman class skit with a PLOT! The sophomores, of course, were A-1. I wish I could come back in the next few years and watch "All Class Night." I'm sure you'll get even better. The juniors were very together and original, and the seniors-well, what can I say? We were top notch-the best we have ever been, and perhaps that's the most important part to remember.

Finally, I've got to say something that IS NOT meant to offend anyone. I'm not trying to detract from the victor's pride, but only to lighten the hearts of those poor seniors who didn't get to experience even one ACN victory in four years. At the final count of the judges' scores, the seniors did have the highest number. But, because of a ten point overtime penalty, the sophomores ended up as the overall winner. Perhaps this point will encourage next year's performers to watch the time limitations more closely. Of course, all of the scores were irrevelant because as far as I am concerned, everyone was a winner.

Anyway, as I used to say after Cross Country races "Oh well, life goes on ya know? EH!!!" So I think I'll end this little reflection and go on with other things in my life.

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan



(A note from Counselor's Corner: This is the second in a series of articles about Adult Children of Alcoholics (ACOA). In this article we will briefly look at what it is like growing up in an alcholic family).

FACT: One of every three families in our society is affected by alcoholism!!! Researchers will generally agree that the major problem of ACOAs is poor self-concept. Janet Woititz, author of the book "Adult Children of Alcoholics," contends that children in alcoholic families have distorted and damaged feelings of self-worth. ACOAs are far too familiar with their weaknesses and all-too-often unaware of their strengths.

Woititz also says that ACOAs, as a result of being raised in an alcoholic family, may be too self-critical, serious, responsible and controlled.

Most alcoholic families deny that there is a problem. It is never discussed, but nonetheless the children know that something is definitely wrong. According to psychologist Dr. Stephanie Brown, this denial of the problem contributes to a great deal of confusion on the part of the child.

Consider the following scenario: The child says to himself/herself that his/her dad or mom acts very differently when he/she has had a few drinks. Things that were alright just a few minutes ago are not alright now. These parental inconsistencies suggest to the child that perhaps he/she is the cause of the behavioral change in the alcoholic parent. The child distorts the situation and concludes that if he/she were better behaved, the "problem" would not exist. According to Brown, the family members, and not the alcoholic, are to blame for the drinking.

In our next article we will talk more about the dysfunctional aspects of alcoholic families. Until then, be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

What taxes are doing to help parents finance their children's education

Seizing what has become a trendy idea, the Reagan administration is expected to propose giving federal tax breaks to parents who buy savings bonds for their children's college tuitions.

Administration officials hope the tax breaks will encourage parents to save money for college, lessening their needs for federal loans and grants.

The president is expected to announce details of the plan when he makes his formal federal budget proposal soon, and college officials--while expressing reservations--seem to approve.

"The higher education community supports the idea, but if it competes with funding of need-based aid, we can't support it," said Charles Saunders of the American Council on Education (ACE). "If it's designed to complement need-based aid, we support it."

"It's a modest proposal, and if it encourages savings, that's good," said Art Hauptman, an ACE consultant. "But I wouldn't fund it over basic student aid."

The Reagan plan--also proposed by Vice President George Bush in his presidential campaign--will be included in the fiscal 1989 budget the administration will soon send to Congress.

The government now taxes the interest people earn on savings bonds, and people have to pay the taxes when they cash in the bonds.

Under the president's proposal, the government would not tax the interest if it's used to pay for education.

The idea "has political appeal," said Hauptman.

The idea, in fact, isn't new.

Illinois and North Carolina have state "education bond" programs designed to encourage parents to start college tuition nest eggs. Last week, Kentucky and Nebraska legislators were debating starting similar plans in their states.

More than half the nation's state legislatures considered them in 1987.

Six states now have "pre-paid" tuition plans in which parents pay a flat fee to cover future--and presumably higher--tuition costs at the school of their choice.

Several private companies, including Boston's Fidelity Investments and New Jersey's College Savings Bank, now offer college savings plans.

In early January, Illinois families snatched up $93 million worth of College Savings Bonds in just days.

The concept's popularity doesn't mean it's foolproof, Jennifer Afton of the Education Commission for the States warned. Illinois and other states that have adopted similar plans may have been "hasty", she said.

"There are risks to parents and the state", Afton said.

"There's a danger that people will assume if they take one action at one time, they think they're fixed," said Kathleen Brouder, a spokeswoman for the College Scholarship Service of the College Board. "Like any investment, this is the kind of thing you have to watch closely."

Pre-paid tuition plans are particularly risky, Afton noted, because they require parents to select a school for their child long before the student is ready to go to school. A school's quality also can deteriorated, leaving parents buying less education then they thought.

The Illinois bonds, Afton said, address those issues, and the Reagan administration should work along the same lines. "If the federal government does get involved, a bond is the way to go. Futures are not where it's at."

Still, said Saunders, the Reagan proposal is really a "side show compared to the real problems" because while it addresses the need of the middle-class, it doesn't do anything for parents without the resources to purchase bonds.

"We have some serious problems with the scope of the plan. The administration should really provide for those without resources, not provide another break for people who can afford to save ahead for their children's tuition."

"The administration is showing its priorities by assisting the middle class" and ignoring the poor, said Hauptman.

"The focus--developing national solutions for rising tuition costs--is a useful one. It's focused a lot of attention on the need for college savings," said Brouder. "But I don't know that one single plan will work for all families."

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

After reading "Along Muddy Run" last week, I felt compelled to relate my own GE200 experience.

I took Greek Mind during the fall of my sophomore year. Everyone (well, quite a few people) said Medieval Mind was the one to take if you had to take one (which you do), but I had to be a rebel. I had to be different. Maybe, considering all the apparent benefits of Medieval Mind, it was kind of stupid to choose Greek Mind. But, at least I didn't choose Decadence to Disaster, which undoubtedly would have been one.

Now that I'm done with that little digression, I'll move on to the real point of this column: Discussing my Greek Mind experiences. What did I learn? Let's see--it was so long ago. Oh, yes. I don't know if you can call this learning, but we looked at lots of pictures of statues of naked men, women, gods, and goddesses. Don't laugh. It was all done very tastefully--you know, black squares over certain parts, and Dr. Wagoner was very careful with his pointer.

I was actually interested enough in the art and architecture to visit the exhibition in the British Museum and see the relics from the Parthenon, the statues, and all that other good stuff. They looked just like the posters on the walls. Now I can say that I've seen them up close and personal. Isn't that special?

We also read a lot of Greek plays by great playwrites such as Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides. Many were about family fun. There was Orestes (he killed his father, or maybe it was his mother). Then, there was the Oedipus family, and we all know what happened to them. Some involved love triangles, such as the Paris-Helen-what's-his-name triangle that instigated the Trojan War. This stuff was better than Dallas or Dynasty. Even Shogun can't compare.

We learned about ropes, and caves, and lines when reading Plato's Republic. Unfortunately, Plato was never very impressed by the virtues of poets, and therefore, I could never put much stock in what he said. I mean, what kind of man believes that poets are second-class citizens? He does, however, seem to hold philosophers in pretty high regard (nothing like tooting your own horn, is there?). Since Plato is obviously someone to be revered and emulated, I am now dabbling more seriously with philosophy.

We learned about great men like Achilles and his lover Patroclus. It was all very tragic. We studied Thucidides, who experienced the plague of Athens and lived to tell about it (probably because he wore a condom), and Socrates, who could talk his way out of a paper bag but who never really told you anything you wanted to hear. We learned about Homer, who traded his eyesight to the poetry muse in exchange for divine inspiration and everlasting fame. The list goes on...but I won't.

Basically, what we learned about the Greeks is how greatly they've influenced our culture. But, the ancient Greek civilization, like all the Medieval monks, is dead. We're not.

Let's get on with it already.

People like it—but will it pass the Cloister Test?

Coors Extra Gold, one of the newest products of Adolph Coors Company, was recently made available nationwide as of February 15.

The introduction of Coors Extra Gold, a robust draft beer with a full-bodied taste, is seen as an all-out attack by the Golden-based brewer to more aggressively compete in what has been termed the "beer wars".

According to Bob Fox, group brand director, Coors Extra Gold has been researched more thoroughly than any other Coors products with extremely positive results. In addition, the brand has been well received in the 14 states where it is currently available.

"While we find many customers who are satisfied with the distinctive smoothness and drinkability of Coors, we have seen a move on the part of some consumers to try new brands within the premium segment--a segment which represents more than 40 percent of the industry volume. We are responding to this change in consumer demand," Fox said.

"We also find consumers who now say they want a more robust taste. Coors Extra Gold will capture the distinctive attributes these consumers say they want without sacrificing drinkability," he said.

The theme "Grab hold of a Gold" was developed by Tatham, Laird and Kudner, Chicago, for use in print, radio, television and outdoor advertising. The theme and tagline, "Golder and Bolder Draft," highlight the rich, golden color of Coors Extra Gold, which is indicative of its full-bodied, robust taste.

Adolph Coors Company pioneered packaged draft beer in 1959 with the introduction of the sterile fill process, eliminating the need for pasteurization, which deprives beer of its taste.

"We are convinced that Coors Extra Gold will prove to be as strong an addition to the Coors product line as Coors Light has been," said Fox. "Adding Extra Gold will provide a full range of Coors products for all consumer tastes and ensure future growth for the Coors franchise."

Coors Extra Gold will be marketed in 12-ounce non-returnable and long neck bottles, 12-ounce and 16-ounce cans, quarts and one-half barrels. The product was initially introduced in April 1985 and expanded into additional markets in 1986 and 1987. With this current expansion, Coors Extra Gold will be available in all of Coors' marketing territory, including 47 states and the District of Columbia. The brewer will expand into Pennsylvania and Delaware this year, with plans to enter Indiana by 1990.

Power 92's annual "Dedicate your heart to charity" show was another success! Thanks to all you lone struck students (especially S.D. and S.G.) we will be donating all out proceeds of over $40.00 to the Huntingdon chapter of the American Red Cross.

Thanks to all of you who dedicated your heart, time, and effort-especially Mike Barnett.

We're off to a fine start this year in the business department. We have started organizing our sponsorship drive with the development of the new sponsorship task force. Also, a new sponsorship package has been created and sent out to local Huntingdon businesses. We hope this term's sponsorship drive is successful in bringing us to our goal of $1,500.

The funds received through this operation are going to be used to pay off long-term loans. We also have plenty of new ideas which can be funded with this money.

We're always interested in new faces and ideas in the sponsorship department. Feel free to contact us if you're interested in getting involved. It's great experience.

How does Juniata compare to Wesleyan?

Despite enormous student population growth over the last fifteen years, Wesleyan still boasts one of the lowest student-faculty ratios of colleges across the country. But as President Colin Campbell has pointed out, "the change in the faculty ratio from 6:1 (in 1970) to 11.5:1 creates greater demands on the faculty in the classroom and outside the classroom.

As a result of that and other professional pressures, it seems as if it is going to be more difficult for faculty members to give as much time as they might have in another era to student-faculty relations broadly described. One explanation often cited is that professional demands on faculty make them less available for interaction than they used to be.

Professor Richard Vann, who arrived at Wesleyan in 1964, remarked that "any young faculty member who isn't hard at work doing some scholarly work isn't going to be here very long. Now that everyone feels an increase in work pressure, they spend a minimum amount of time in office hours."

For others the change is not exactly quantifiable in time measurement, but manifests itself as a difference in attitude. Professor of German Herbert Arnold pointed out, for instance, the difficulties now being encountered in the University Course program.

The program, which Arnold directed at one time and which constitutes one of the centerpieces of Wesleyan's commitments to small classroom education, now depends for its survival on its coordinators having to "essentially go begging to departments for faculty."

The reason, he explains, is that "the primary allegiance of faculty today is not to the institution as a whole, but to a specialty within a discipline," said Arnold. Campbell said that the claim by professors that they must turn down university courses to devote themselves to their department is perhaps not wholly justified.

"Our faculty is large enough and our departments are large enough that we can meet major program demands, advance course demands and provide strong general education opportunities at the introductory level, including university courses," he said.

Still the number of university courses offered each year continues to decline, while the philosophy of general education continues to be debated.

Professor of Classics Marilyn Arthur said that the professionalization of the faculty is only a "relatively minor factor in a wider constellation" of changes that have contributed to "worsened" relations and "reduced" possibilities for student-faculty friendships.

"What makes for special relationships with students is involvement in a common enterprise," she said. "But the degree of commonality has drastically diminished over the years. More and more I look to the students like someone from Mars. They can less and less imagine why a seemingly intelligent adult would want to spend her life learning about the ancient Greece."

She also noted changes in the schizophrenic on this issue, the lip service is very much to a set of ideals, to small classes and individual attention."

Campbell defended both students and institution against Arthur's portrayal of an "instrumental" education. He said, "I see an awful lot of student during the academic year and see that their academic interests are broad and deep and that people generally come here for an education for life and not to get a job."

Student commitment to intellectualism aside, some faculty feel that students just are not taking enough social initiative any more. "Students don't take much enterprise now. There seems to be a forgetfulness about what the social possibilities are. It is not animosity, but just social carelessness," said Provost William Kerr.

Vice President of Academic Affairs Nathanael Greene said, "Students are more conservative today, not just politically, or in their career orientation. There are an awful lot of different compartments in the student body. Some student just don't get out of those compartments and perhaps they should."

Students become aware of rising campus crime

In Philadelphia, some 200 angry urban residents march to protest inadequate police protection.

In Buffalo, people meet with their landlord to demand he improve security.

In Kalamazoo, Michigan, others petition for police reassurance their area would be safe from rapists.

The people demanding better protection were, of all things, students reacting to campus or near-campus crimes since September.

Their emergence as a force seems to indicate that "law and order," once an issue largely among middle class property owners, has become a student political priority in recent months.

"In recent years, there's been a greater awareness of crime issues than in the past," said Dan Keller, the director of public safety at the University of Louisville who helps train campus police departments around the country. "Students are more conservative, and they want more anti-crime programs."

"Students--and the campus community in general--are more attuned to things going on around them than in the past," said University of Georgia director of public safety Asa Boynton, who also serves as president of the International Association of Campus Law Enforcement Administrators. "They're a more informed public that wants things addressed."

Some are so upset that they want to make colleges tell prospective students how bad crime is on their campuses.

Largely at the urging of the parents of a student murdered at Lehigh University, the Pennsylvania legislature, for one, is considering a bill that would force all schools in the state to make public their crime rates.

The issue's emergence was prompted by a new reality, Boynton noted: that crime is moving onto campuses.

Boynton theorized that, as police become more effective in traditionally high-crime areas, criminals move to new territories--including suburbs, rural areas and colleges.

"The situation has gotten worse," said Wayne Glasker, a grad student at the University of Pennsylvania, where scores of students have been robbed and attacked in surrounding Philadelphia neighborhoods in recent years and where the fall,1987, stabbings of three athletes provoked the protest for more police protection.

"Times are hard," Glasker figures, "and people are desperate. College students are easy prey."

"People are afraid to walk around at night, even if they have a companion, " said Penn student Sander Gerber. "It's just not safe."

In Kalamazoo, the violent rape and murder of a Western Michigan University student in November "shoot everybody up," WMU student Don Soper said.

At the University of Washington, three attempted sexual assaults on campus during a 2-week period in January have created widespread concern.

It's a significant change from the recent past, said State University of New York at Buffalo public safety Director Lee Griffin, when campuses were viewed as "Fantasy Islands" that were immune to crime.

Thanks to that heritage, moreover, campuses are hard to secure.

"A university is not meant to have a fence around it," argued Sylvia Canada of Penn's Department of Safety. "We're an open campus."

"We haven't closed the campus. We won't throw up barricades," said Western Michigan spokesman Michael J. Matthews.

Boynton added that student insistence that residents be free to come and go complicates security efforts.

A Michigan State student, for example, was attacked in her dorm room Jan. 9 by a man who was signed into the building by other residents. A subsequent investigation conducted by The State News--the MSU student newspaper--revealed that students and housing employees often ignore security procedures.

And when students victimize other students--the source of most property crimes, Boynton said, although "most of the major crimes are committed by people not part of the campus"--schools sometimes are reluctant to treat it as a criminal, as opposed to a disciplinary, problem.

Attitudes frustrate campus crime prevention, too.

"Many males," Boynton said, "don't consider date rape as rape."

Students, particularly middle class kids from suburbs, also have a sense of immortality that clouds their judgement and makes them easy marks for criminals, added Canada.

Nevertheless, students are trying to make campus officials be more aggressive in insuring law and order.

Glasker, for one, charges Penn hasn't done enough to educate students to minimize their chances of becoming victims.

"The immediate streets surrounding Penn aren't patrolled by university police, and Philadelphia cops offer just the barest security in those neighborhoods," he added.

Students at WMU are happier with their administration's efforts, said Soper. The school began addressing the issue of campus security well before the tragic murder, installing additional lights around campus and sponsoring escort services and on-campus student safety patrols.

Some are doing more than using their own common sense: In Atlanta, students from Georgia State University, Morris Brown, Clark, Spelman and Morehouse colleges are patrolling city streets on the alert for crime and lost tourists. Indiana University fraternity members provide funds and volunteers to drive women home from the campus at night.

Volunteers needed

Volunteers are needed for a variety of spring programs at Shaver's Creek Environmental Center. If you are interested in gaining experience working with children in an outdoor setting, Shaver's Creek is the place for you. Become involved with day long programs, such as maple sugar programs or make a commitment to be a counselor for Outdoor School, a series of week long resident programs to prepare you for the activities that you lead. Upcoming training sessions are Volunteer Training for Maple Sugaring on February 20 and Teacher Training for Volunteers on April 7. Outdoor School has two training sessions, March 30 and April 5. If you are interested in any of these volunteer training sessions, please call the Shaver's Creek Environmental Center at 814-863-2000 or 667-3424. The staff will be glad to provide you with further details.

Lower tuition? One school says YES!

While campus regents and trustees around the country are meeting to set--and normally raise--tuition for the 1988-89 school year in February, one school has said it will lower tuition next year.

Washington University (of St. Louis) School of Medicine trustees announced Jan. 27 they were lowering tuition by 5 percent, or about $700, for next year.<P<MSThe trustees said they were lowering the rate to try to relieve students of the need to enter only the highest-paying areas of medicine in order to repay their student loans. The American Medical Association found in 1987 that the average new doctor left med school $32,000 in debt.

"That debt may be forcing young physicians to select the higher-paying specialties in order to repay their financial indebtedness," said Associate Dean John Herweg in announcing the unusual rate reduction.

He hopes the tuition cut from $14,100 this year to $13,400 next year will push students to specialize in less-lucrative fields like "academic medicine, family practice and some of the other primary care areas."

Herweg added he wished other schools would follow Washington's example, but the wish may not come true.

The University of Illinois on Jan. 18 imposed a special, mid-academic year tuition hike of $150 for all undergrads, to help it compensate for severe cuts in state funding.

Similarly, Michigan Tech students discovered they, too, will pay $46 more in tuition.

While mid-year tuition increases-a practice first popularized during this decade to help defray sudden losses in public funding--are less widespread this year, trustees and regents normally meet during January and February to set tuition for the next school years. Observers expect them to raise tuition an average of 5 to 7 percent for next year.

Furnishing alcohol to minors is a crime

The Social Host class required of all Juniatians wishing to have a party with a keg is informative and facilitates an understanding of the law. Basically, underlying this class is the message that furnishing alcohol to minors is especially risky. A recent court decision serves to emphasize this fact to Social Hosts. The following article is from the Associated Press.

A Carbondale man was convicted yesterday of furnishing alcohol to five minors who were killed last year in a fiery one-car crash in Susquehanna County.

The jury acquitted the man, Stephen Miller, 22, of a more serious charge, the corruption of minors. Lackawanna County Judge S. John Cottone imposed the maximum penalty for furnishing alcohol to minors-a $500 fine.

The key prosecution witness was Michael Saltsky, 16, a friend of the victims, who said he and William Conigliaro, 16, of Carbondale, gave money to Miller two days before the accident to buy six cases of beer at a Carbondale distributor.

Conigliaro was killed in the Oct. 25, 1986 accident on Route 944 near Clifford, along with the driver, Richard Gillott, 16, of Carbondale, Jeffery Davis, 16, of Jermyn, and Patrick Cassaro, 16, and Christopher Robinson, 15, both of Carbondale.

student body to make tuition so expensive," she said. "The goal of attracting the rich is contrary to the goal of attracting an ethnically diverse student body."

Tuition, room and board at Kalamazoo cost $12,183 this year, up seven percent since the 1986-87 school year. Spokesman Terrence A. Taylor said Kalamazoo's fees are among the lowest of the schools in the Great Lakes College Association, a group of private midwestern liberal arts colleges.

The College Board reported last summer that tuitions at 4-year private colleges rose an average of 8 percent for the 1987-88 school year. Tuitions at public 4-year institutions rose 6 percent.

U.S. Secretary of Education William Bennett long has charged colleges raise their tuitions not to meet their financial needs, but because the market will bear it.

In mid-January, he again told the American Council on Education convention, he suspected some private college raise tuition each year to maintain their "snootiness".

Indian hoopers clinch division

After winning eight out of nine games, the Juniata Men's basketball team suffered back to back losses to conference foes. Despite the losses, the Indians will still represent the Northwest conference as the first place team going into the tournament next week. The Indians clenched the spot when Lycoming beat second place Susquehanna. Juniata's lone conference game will be played at Wilkes this Saturday afternoon.

The 14-8 (10-5) Indians need to win two out of the next three games to tie a school record for wins. Juniata's first loss of the overnight trip came at the hands of Kings College. The Indians shot 59 percent from the floor but managed to lose the 13 point lead they established in the first half. The Monarchs, in front of a packed Homecoming crowd, rallied of a 12-2 run and event 12-12 from the charity stripe in the games final minutes to post an 81-68 victory.

Wayne Paul had 16 points for the Indians, while teammate Shawn Habakus added 14. Juniata then travelled to New Jersey to play FDU-Madison. After trailing by as many as 14 in the first half the Indians pulled within a point (81-80) with 16 seconds remaining to play. Forced to foul, JC put the Jersey Devils on the line. Then trailing 83-80 with just seconds remaining a Shawn Habakus three point shot fell short.

As the Indians did earlier in the year against Scranton, they put their opponent to the foul line 39 times (to Juniata 3 for 4 effort) the Indians repeated against FDU. FDU outscored the Indians from the foul line by 24 points. Bob Dombroski and Shawn Habakus each had 14 points, while Dombroski hauled down 18 rebounds.

The tribe got back on the winning track a week ago yesterday when visiting York College fell victim to a 21-4 run in the first five minutes of the game. However, York did not quit, closing within nine by the half (40-31). The Indians shot 53 percent in the first half and were 8-10 from the line. York outscored JC in the second half but fell short (78-74) when time was up.

Senior, Wayne Paul, led the way with 34 points (his best effort of the season was against LVC when Paul poured in 38). Bob Dombroski and Jay Nicholson each had 14 points, with 10 of the 12 Indians in the game scoring. Dombroski continued to hit the boards, ripping down 12 rebounds.

This past Saturday afternoon the seniors were honored for their efforts over the past four years at Juniata College. Wayne Paul, Andre Constantino, Glenn Peters, and Trainer Steve Monich were all greeted with plaques before the game. Afterwards, the Indians went on the defeat NAIA opponent Alvernia College. Tuesday the Indians hosted Western Maryland, a Southern Conference team in the MAC.

Tonight Juniata hosts another Southern division team, Dickinson College, at 7:30 in Kennedy Sports Center. Dickinson, one of the toughest teams in the Southern Conference, have beaten the Indians the last two years. This is a make-up game which was originally scheduled for mid-January but was cancelled because of snow. The Indians travel to Wilkes-Barre Saturday to play Wilkes College in the last regular season game. Next week the Indians will travel to Scranton and participate in the MAC Northern Section tournament. As of now it looks as though the Indians will face FDU-Madison in the first round with Scranton hosting either Susquehanna or possibly Lycoming.

Lady Indians place third in section

The women's basketball team defeated York College on Feb. 10, ending their four-game losing streak. Sue Grubb led the team in rebounds and points with 13 and 19 respectively.

Coach Cathi Quinn felt that the second half was excellent. The team came from six points down and beat York 66-47. The Lady Indians broke their dry shooting spell in the second half and shot almost 50% from the field.

Quinn noted that all seven players played very well. Kelly Woodworth had a season-high five points. Pam Wyrick had 14 points and 12 rebounds, while Colleen McGinn added 15 points and 11 rebounds. Andrea Smeigh led the team in assists with seven.

The Lady Indians travelled to Wilkes on Saturday, Feb. 13. They lost this game 54-47. Sue Grubb led the team in points with 14 and in rebounds with 12. Grubb is now the fourth highest rebounder in the nation.

The women have only one game remaining, which they play on Feb. 20. The team is guaranteed a third place finish in the MAC's and still has a chance for a .500 record. Good luck to the team as they finish their season.

Then-new head coach, Dan Helm, is surrounded by his Juniata players. Last Saturday, Juniata welcomed back many of its former basketball stars from the past four decades in honor of Juniata's all-time leading scorer, Jake Handzelek '56. The "Shickshinny Sharpshooter" scored 1,950 points in his career. Alumni who played in the game included Chris Frew, Dick Scialabba, Clay Pheasant, Bob Musser, Dan Feruck, and Tay Waltenbaugh. Hopefully, the game will be the first in a long series of alumni games. It preceded the men's game in which JC defeated Alvernia.

Indian grappler Steve Manderbach takes on an unidentified opponent as part of a triple dual match which also featured teams from Muhlenberg, Scranton, and Elizabethtown. The Indians did not fare well, losing to all three teams. John Telenko and Larry Krizner each recorded two victories for JC, and John Swanson scored a win and a tie. The Indians travel to Kings on Saturday, and then go to Messiah for MAC's the following week. Photo by Brent Flickinger.

"Who Bumped Off Barnaby?"—Find out tonight!

Finally, the answer we've all been waiting for!

A student production of the play "But Why Bump Off Barnaby?" will be performed on February 25, 26, and 27 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium at Juniata College. The mystery farce was written by Richard Abbot and is produced by Samuel French, Inc.

For the first time a student is directing a major production at Juniata. Senior director Walt Cupit is a Communications and Theatre Arts major from Hamilton Township, New Jersey. He has a wide range of stage experience including numerous Juniata productions.

The play is set in the present in the parlor of Marlgate, the ancestral home of the Leduc family. It is a three act play-the first act taking place on a Friday night, just before sunset; the second act is very late that same night; the final act takes place just before dawn.

The ten character cast offers a mix of upperclass student actors and firsttimers. Senior John Petrovic (Hookstown) plays Medkins, the butler, while classmate Marylou Miller (Wexford) is Lady Barbara Fenwick.

Juniors Kevin Seachrist (Lancaster) and Patricia Stepp (Secane) are cast as Orion Leduc, a baron, and Miss Barnsdale, an elderly governess.

Sophomore Becky Berger (Huntingdon) is the maid, Magnolia. Jodi Mock (Altoona), also a sophomore, is cast as Celo Barton, a middle-aged Hollywood actress, and classmate Alex "Doc' Jones (E.

The "Homo Hut" will soon transform into the "Hetero Hut"

By Suzanne Lydic

Changes are happening all around us here at Juniata. One of the most dramatic changes will be in the housing arrangements for next year--particularly in Sherwood-a traditional male residence hall. Any persons venturing up to the third floor of Sherwood next semester will not be greeted by the usual male residents-but by a totally new breed-WOMEN. The change is now official-the 3rd floor of Sherwood will become a designated female "B" visitation area. Although the ratio of guys to girls for the J.C. community is now about 50/50, the female side is rising slightly. The number of requests for an all male dorm has been steadly declining: only 11 requested housing in a single sex male dorm this year. These-along with the difficulty of utilizing dorms that were originally designed for male occupants-has forced the housing department of Juniata to seek new means of housing for the female population.

Physically, Sherwood Residence Hall will remain the same. However, the visitation policies will be changed so that the first floor will have "A" visitation and 2nd and 3rd will both have "B" visitation. Most female requests for co-ed "B" visitation next term will be placed on 3rd Sherwood.

Randy Deike, Assistant to the Dean of Studnets, feels that the change to Sherwood will make the residence hall more attractive. He also feels that the co-ed option will produce "positive" side effects and draw more upperclassmen.

Deike stresses that those men presently living on 3rd Sherwood will not be left in a lurch. The option remains open for placement on the 1st or 2nd floor. Although it is not required that an "All Male Residence Hall" exist, single sex male wings of North and Cloister Residence Halls would also be available. Deike plans to take all steps to try to keep the groups of friends from 3rd Sherwood that wish to be together on a common floor.

Naturally, a dramatic change like this on Sherwood stirs up a spectrum of opinions.

One sophomore strongly felt that the strong bond of community, which has been built between the men of 3rd Sherwood, should not be physically severed. He thought that a less contraversial area should have been changed.

Mike Barnett, R.A. on 3rd Sherwood disagreed, "I feel that it's (the change) a great idea. It should create a better environment and better relationships within the residence hall." Barnett continued, "Having a co-ed dorm really helps with hall programming. It's nice to have someone from the opposite sex to talk with."

Currently 3rd Tussey and Terrace are all female floors--although they have been co-ed in the past. Next semester these floors will be co-ed again.

Many students who had originally planned to remain on their respective floors next term (i.e. TNT or Sherwood) will have the chance to be moved to a room on a different floor in the same residence hall before room draw. Deike invites any persons having difficulty with these changes in housing to visit him in his office in Founders.

The Ball resulted in a good time for all

By Trish Kazmerski

The fairy godmothers were out in full force on Saturday night spreading their magic on the entire Juniata campus.

On Saturday night the second annual Presidential Ball took place in Baker Refectory. Those attending were greeted by President and Mrs. Neff, who hosted the gala event. The ball was well attended and provided a refreshing social atmosphere of elegance. Pre-Ball festivities included both a reception and a Pops Concert performed by the J.C. Band in Oller Hall. It really "Heated" the evening up.

The fashion scene at the ball went from the very formal, with guys in tuxedoes and ladies in floor length gowns, to the quiet spohistication of sports coats and knits. There were no set standards of dress, however those who dressed more casually had the advantage when it came time to dance.

The "Kim Shery Band" provided a mixed array of traditional ball medleys. Some included the "chicken" dance and everyone's favorite-good ole polkas. The dancing was fun, and except for a few broken toes, there were no casualties reported.

There were light refreshments served consisting of punch, coffee, cakes and Chinese egg rolls.

The ball ended approximately at 12:45. Comments that were heard indicated that everyone had a fun time and were glad they went.

Editorial

The arctic winds were no match for the heart-warming events of this past weekend. Despite the below freezing temperatures, Juniata radiated a special warmth.

In the same spirit as the Winter Olympics, the Presidential Ball united the Juniata community. The events in Calgary have been successful in generating pride in our country- similar to the rejuvenated pride and sense of companionship felt once again on this campus. Faculty, administration, alumni, and students rarely have an opportunity to meet on a social level- it is a comfort to be reassured that those of authority are "real people" too. Doing the Chicken Dance with a "personality-lacking" professor helps one to see the other side, to see a complete person.

Thank you President and Mrs. Neff for hosting that special evening- and congratulations to the organizing committee and to Hallmark Food Service for a job well done.

The Ball may have accented the Juniatians in us, but the Special Olympics brought us together as human beings. Being involved with those athletes gave a new meaning to the word special. Juniata College hosted the perfect opportunity for us to share ourselves with others.

The most amazing thing about the Special Olympics was realizing that these athletes were unaware of how special they truly are. To themselves and to each other they were competitors- volleyball players, but to the volunteers they were a catalyst for kindness. One can only hope that the feelings of love and caring could continue throughout the year.

The events of the weekend past will certainly go down in Juniata College history as being SPECIAL.

By Nora Dickey

"You are ALL winners...", said Juniata's Athletic Director, Bill Berrier at the Closing Ceremonies of the Pennsylvania State Volleyball Event held here at Juniata this past weekend. I think all of you would now agree with Mr. Berrier. The Special Olympians that visited our campus this weekend left Huntingdon with accomplishments and satisfaction that made each of them a winner. Some wore gold medals around their neck; some wore ribbons. It didn't seem to matter. A team from Schuylkill County exemplified this when their team was called for a Fifth Place ribbon and they "ran" to the awards table with the same enthusiasm, spirit and pride of gold medal winners. There was no difference to these athletes. They were ALL winners.

The Juniata College community opened its arms and hearts to the Special Olympians of Pennsylvania. And in return, we received memories and feelings that possibly we had never experienced before. Our College Nurse, Jane Brown, had the opportunity to meet an athlete that came to her complaining of a hurting wrist. Jane gave hime her love and attention and wrapped the wrist and everything seemed to be "all better". Minutes later, the athlete returned to Jane saying he had made a mistake, it was the other wrist. Needless to say, a huge smile appeared on both their faces. Jane now had a "special friend" for the weekend.

Bill Huston, Event Director for the Volleyball Competition, said, "I'm not sure who is learning from who." Special Olympics has brought so much joy and purpose to the things I do in my life. It is the athletes and the entire program that has taught me and many others what the true meaning of life really is. I have learned from the athletes that instead of taking the time to complain about the "little things", take the time to look at all the good and enjoy it while you can! Our everyday "trials and tribulations" are uncomparable to the segregation and lack of opportunities available to our mentally retarded population. Special Olympics provides the opportunity for mentally retarded individuals to grow, learn, share and experience satisfaction and accomplishments, thus feeling good about who they are.

It provides opportunities in athletic competition...and we did see some fantastic competition, that I think impressed us all. Many of the athletes here this weekend CAN play Volleyball. They need to be trained by the rules and play by the rules. If we take this away from them, we take away the chance to grow and improve. Special Olympics provides the opportunity for athletes from across the state to meet each other and develop friendships; the opportunity to experience staying in a hotel for the weekend; the opportunity to visit a college campus and participate in organized athletic competition; and the opportunity to have fun and feel good. Too many doors have been closed in their faces. Special Olympics opens these doors for each and every athlete and says, "You can do it".

These Special Olympians showed us what team spirit and support really are. They showed us what the spirit of living is all about. They are all special SPECIAL OLYMPIANS, but you are all special people too. It is you who gave them the chance this weekend to say, "I can do it!"

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Jen Wade

Last semester, in preparation for a debate in Social Psychology, I spoke with Randy Deike concerning the housing policies on this campus. He said that coeducational dorms and floors are beneficial to student development. I agree.

However, Juniata seems to be moving in another direction. With an overabundance of freshman girls and a minority of freshman boys, it was necessary to make 3rd Tussey and 3rd Terrace, usually half-and-half, all girl floors. This arrangement is fine, but it only leaves three half floors on men in TNT. Of course, maybe they don't really mind being outnumbered.

But this arrangement defeats the purpose of coeducational dorms. So, why not transfer men from some other dorm to those floors and put the girls somewhere else? Wouldn't that make much more sense? Wouldn't that promote personal development by maintaining a status quo aimed toward such promotion? Surely it would.

I propose, then, that in the coming room draw, 3rd Terrace and 3rd Tussey be returned to their beneficial coeducational status, and that another, more appropriate floor--Thunder Alley--be turned over to the women. After all, the girls on 3rd Northwest are forced to contend with four floors of men. This change would at least make the odds a little more even.

Besides, Thunder Alley's reputation seems to have fallen off a bit. Sure, North hall still sustains a lot of damage (i.e. broken windows, broken doors, chopped down trees) during the course of the year. But, as far as I know, the men of Thunder Alley are not the culprits. Such would not have been the case just a few short years ago.

I have never walked through Thunder Alley very often, and I still don't. In the past the intimidation factor kept me away. I never knew what those wild guys might say or do to an innocent freshman girl walking all alone through their dark hall, and I never really cared to find out. Now, my absence is more a matter of respect for the myth of Thunder Alley than a matter of genuine intimidation.

But, maybe some women's rugby players can restore Thunder Alley to some semblance of its former rowdiness. We should also mix in a few intellectuals who enjoy a good practical joke in their spare time and some decidely impressionable and trainable freshmen. Thun-

Atlanta universities ban Morehouse's "School Daze"

Director Spike Lee's first film--a low budget sex farce called "She's Goota Have It"--made him famous. But, when the now-successful Lee returned to Morehouse College, the Atlanta school from which he graduated in 1979, to shoot his second movie, he wasn't very well-received. In fact he was asked to leave.

Lee says it was because the film--now being released across the country--is about class and color divisions among students at a black college.

Morehouse administrators say it was because Lee wouldn't tell them what the movie, called "School Daze," was about.

"We asked him what the film was about," recalls Dr. Hugh Gloster, then Morehouse's president, "but he wasn't inclined to tell us. After the film was being shot, we began to receive reports concerning what it was about from the students."

He didn't like what he heard.

"School Daze," it turns out, is set at a fictitious black southern college called Mission, where the students divide themselves into cliques of lighter-skinned "wannabees"--as in "want to be whites"--and darker skinned, lower income students called "jigs."

It all sounded "downgrading" to Gloster, who then told Lee to get off the school grounds, and the ban on filming the movie was extended by the 5 other presidents whose schools share the Atlanta University Center (AUC) campus.

"He wouldn't show it," AUC Chancellor Dr. Charles Merideth said of Lee and the script, "we couldn't see it, so we said it could not be shot."

Lee figured, "I had nothing to gain by letting them read the script," adding that he thought its subject would be enough to provoke the presidents into exiling him.

Lee insists "School Daze" is accurate, that Morehouse was socially divided along skin tone and class lines when he attended. "We exaggerated it (in the film), but there were cliques."

Gloster disagrees. "It happens in black society, yes, but not among our college students."

Merideth also concedes that "a long time ago there were fraternities and sororities for light-skinned people only, but nothing would suggest that's operative today."

"It's a lie," asserts Dr. calvert Smith, President of Morris Brown, another AUC college. "You're not going to find that kind of differentiation on these college campuses."

Campus residents themselves are not sure.

"There are cliques," observes Janet Jones, a senior resident at Spelman, Morehouse's sister school, but I don't think it's a matter of skin tone as much as socioeconomic background."

Spelman freshman Tracy Williams doesn't see divisions of any kind, noting her circle of friends are a diverse group.

Classmate Stephanie Brown thinks "there are cliques, but it's not really obvious. Most of the light-skinned girls hang with light-skinned girls, and the dark-skinned girls hang with dark-skinned girls. But it's not as if they don't like each other. They just don't hang together."

Morehouse senior John Atkinson disagrees. "It doesn't matter how light your skin is. Everyone is of one race. We stick together. That's how I see it."

"Spike's main aim is to make films and make money," Gloster says. "Our concern is to protect our schools while he's doing that."

"His portrayal was sensational in an effort to make money," Smith adds. "I hope he gets rich, but not at the expense of black institutions."

Lee ultimately did move the filming off Morehouse grounds, though he finished shooting at other parts of the AUC campus because of a previous binding agreement he'd gotten.

Student government update

By Megan Hartman

The Student Government held its tenth meeting on February 9, 1988. Twenty of the group's 27 members were present.

The Presidential remarks were made by Amy Coursen. The Presidential Ball was held on February 20, 1988. The senate of the Student Government will helped put up decorations and with ushering before the ball. On April 18, 1988, the Presidential debate will be held. The committee is trying to have a Presidential candidate visit the campus.

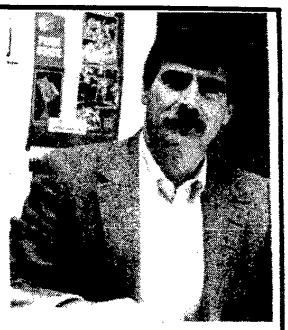
Arnie Tilden presented the advisor's remarks. The college is trying to establish a gradual wage increase based on class. The freshmen will receive $3.35, sophomores $3.70, juniors $4.00, and seniors $4.30. The administration is checking into this with the aid of the Student Concerns Committee.

Angela Orwig represented the Executive Committee of the Faculty with the approval of the Senate. A charter for the Brethren Fellowship was passed; the fellowship has 20 members.

Fran Arcay and Melinda Brandt were given special thanks for their dedication and hard work with Jello Wrestling. From the Student Concerns Committee the Scott Street issue was cleared up by the Huntingdon Borough. The joint lecture was another huge success thanks to the efforts of Larry and Centerboard Chairman Chris Hester. The lecture made profit that will go toward other lectures. Upcoming events sponsored by Centerboard are a dance group workshop on March 4, and James Gallegar lecture on March 20-23.

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan



SADS-seasonal affective disorder syndrome! In more understandable, less-psychological terms, the common wintertime blues and blahs. Just recently the American Psychiatric Association officially recognized this condition as an ailment that can lead to serious depression.

Since we are headed right into that time of year, what can we do to lessen the chances of being smitten by and succumbing to the blues and blahs of winter? We must keep in mind that mild depression is a common problem. In fact, it is the most common emotional disturbance, but if left unattended, it can lead to the more serious types of depression-moderate depression and severe depression.

Consider the following suggestions for warding off the blues and blahs of winter.

Get meaningfully involved in your environment. Join that club or organization, do the volunteer work you have been wanting to do or take on that special project you have been thinking about.

Start a regular exercise program. It's a mood elevator, it helps you feel good about yourself, and it can also be a social activity where you can meet new people.

Get outdoors as much as possible. Psychologists and counselors suggest that we get out more during the winter. It can help combat the "cabin fever" so prevalent during the long winter months.

Work on your relationships. Having a supportive network of family and friends can go a long way in managing wintertime depression.

Plan special activities from time to time. We all need a break from the regular routine. An off-campus dinner with friends or an all-day shopping trip (you don't have to spend a lot of money) can provide the emotional uplift and escape that we all need.

Examine the stressors (people, events, situations) in your lifespace that seem to be causing problems and preventing you from feeling good about yourself. Talk things over with your RA, your peer advisor, the RD, yours truly, or other caring persons. As we have urged so many times in the past, you do not have to go it alone.

That's all for now, and until next time be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

Should the law regulate how much nonsense can be taught?

U.S. Secretary of Education William Bennett, long a critic of what and how colleges teach students, blasted campuses last week for approving faculty "trashing of Plato and Shakespeare" in favor of trendy courses that don't do students any good.

Speaking to the convention of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities--a group representing private campuses around the U.S.--in Washington Feb.4, Bennett warned "the serious voices are being drowned out by the trendy lightweights in our midst."

Many of the campus presidents that assembled to hear the speech were angered.

"It would not be a college unless we provided an arena where nonsense could be spoken, debated and refuted," said George Drake, President of Grinnell College.

American University President Richard Berendzen, while conceding many schools leaven their curricula with nonclassical courses and that not all campus teachers always are erudite, noted, "There are even a few government officials who say foolish things. I think I heard one this morning."

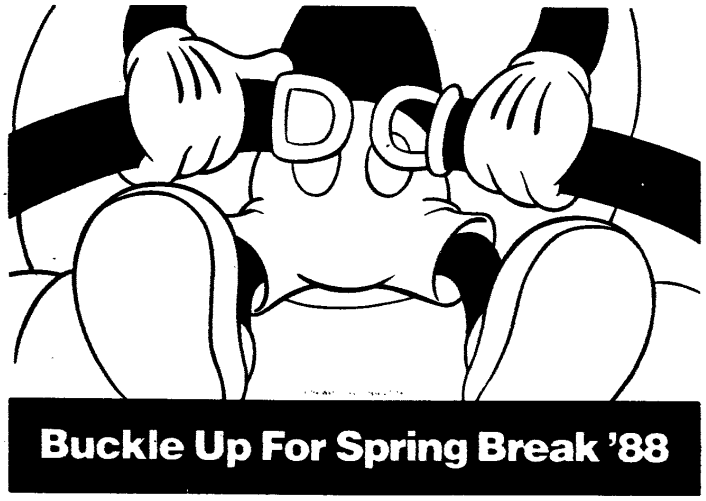
While many college presidents vehemently disagreed with U.S. Secretary of Education's Feb. 4 assertion that some courses do not belong on college campuses. Virtually every school in America apparently has offered some classes that don't seem narrowly ained at classical literacy.

Pomona College, for example, offers "Principles and Practices of Pagan Magick," taught by a real life witch. One of the most popular courses at the University of Alabama was "Home Brewing World Class Beer," until state officials shut it down last year because it violated a Prohibition Era statute.

In 1985 The University of New Haven offered a do it yourself course on how to assemble and build a nuclear bomb. Cuyahoga Community College in Ohio is the place to be for aspiring disco owners: it offers classes on how to make it in the nightclub business, covering everything from lighting, sound and video to marketing.

San Francisco State offers "The Bay Area Music Industry in Historical Perspective," a review of the Grateful Dead, Jefferson Airplane and Blue Cheer.

But perhaps the class most likely to inspire Bennett's ire is offered through the University of Missouri's Adult Extension Program. "Advanced Class Cutting for the Over Committed" guarantees no bells, no grades, no class. The course description advises students to just "put it on your calendar and don't go.



Sue White, Jay Moreau and Sheri Artz, members of the Campus Ministry Board show their excitement as they help plan the Lenten Season festivities.

Campus Ministry Board rejoices during Lent

By Amy Coursen

We on the Campus Ministry Board come from diverse church backgrounds. Some of us with a Protestant history may not understand the purpose of the Lenten season because we haven't experienced it as the Catholics have.

Lent can be a difficult period. It is a time when we search our souls, examine our sins and our relationshiops with God and people. But, it is also a hopeful time. One for preparing for renewal, grasping an understanding of forgiveness and rejoicing in seeing God more clearly in humans and in the world.

This is exactly what Sue White, Jay Moreau and Sheri Artz are doing! Rejoicing! Sue is a senior from Valhalla, NY, and her POE is Humanities. Some of the campus activities she is involved in are intramurals, all aspects of college theatre, and the band where she is a majorette. She is also a campus tour guide and a member of the swim team. She is in love with life and enjoys singing, dancing, acting, travelling, and smiling a lot.

Jay is a senior with a POE in Marketing from Indiana, PA. Jay is also extremely active on campus. He is a resident assistant in East Houses, Senior Class Treasurer, Campus Tour Guide, and the most awesome Student Government Treasurer in the world! In the future Jay is planning on working in Sales or Banking for two years and then enter a MBA program. He enjoys weightlifting, running and spending time with his family and friends.

Sheri is also a senior. She is from Hegins, PA, and her POE is in Chemistry/Computer Science. Sheri, along with Jay and Sue, is a member of the Campus Ministry Board. She is also involved in Circle K, the Chemistry Club, Computer Society, and she is an assistant at the Computer Center. She would like to get a job in Computer Science. She will be successful in all her endeavors because she's fun and doesn't babble!

We on the Campus Ministry Board, are growing during this season of heart. It is a bit painful, but we rejoice in realizing how much we learn and gain!!

Positions available at Easter Seals camps

The Pennsylvania Easter Seal Society is once again taking applications for staff positions for their summer residential camps for the disabled for the 1988 Summer season.

The residential camps, operated by the Pennsylvania Easter Seal Society are located in four areas across the state. They include: Camp Easter Seal, in the Laurel Hill State Park, Somerset County; Camp Daddy Allen, in the Hickory Run State Park, in the Poconos; Camp Lend-A-Hand, at Conneaut Lake, Crawford County; and the newly reconstructed Camp Harmony Hall, located near Middletown, Dauphin County. All four camps are accredited by the American Camping Association.

According to Recreation and Campin officials, staff positions currently available are: camp director, assistant camp director, program, arts and crafts, and nature directors, counselors and support staff. Also needed are certified water safety instructors and registered nurses. The Summer camping season is set to begin on June 12 and will run through August 11, 1988. Salary requirements are based on position, and staff members receive meals, lodging, laundry facilities, and work both 5 and 11 day sessions.

"As a member of the camp staff you will be provided with training in an outdoor setting working with a special population of campers," says Robert B. Rosenberger, Jr., Coordinator of recreation and Camping, "it is a unique and rewarding experience, one that will live with you forever."

For more information on how you can become a staff member contact: Coordinator of Recreation and Camping, Pennsylvania Easter Seal Society, P.O. Box 497, Middletown, PA. 17057. Telephone (717) 939-7801.

Muscians to perform at Band Festival

By Jen Wade

On March 4, 5, and 6, while most students are in Florida or at home, five Juniata musicians will perform at the 41st Pennsylvania Intercollegiate Band Festival in Wilkes-Barre. The students were selected by a committee composed of members of the Pennsylvania Collegiate Bandmasters Association.

According to Prof. Ibrook Tower, a total of 11 students applied. The five chosen were seniors Illona Gillette (euphonium) and Wendy Williams (clarinet), junior Mary Mahlon (trumpet), and freshmen David Wivagg (trumpet) and Richard Fronheiser (alto clarinet). In past years, Juniata has sent as many as eight people to the festival.

Students from colleges and universities all across the state are eligible to apply. Those selected compete for chairs at the festival.

This year marks the second appearance for Williams, who hails from Unionville, CT, and also for Mahlon, who is from Clearfield. Gillette, from Deer Park, NY, is making her third trip. Wivagg, from Tolland, CT, and Fronheiser, from Lehighton, are making their first appearance.

This year's guest conductor is Lawerence Rachleff, Music Director and Conductor of Wind Ensembles at the Oberlin (OH) Conservatory of Music.

The program includes "Salvation is Created" by Paul Tschesnokov, "Symphony in B-Flat" by Paul Hindemith, "The Passing Bell" by Warren Benson, and "His Honor" by Henry Fillmore. The band will also play "Salute to the P.M.E.A." and the national anthem.

1988 Special Olympics Volleyball has been labeled a huge success

By Deb Dougherty

The Americans might not be doing so great at the 1988 Olympics, but this past weekend a very special group of Olympians brought home the gold.

Juniata College had the privilege of hosting the 1988 Pennsylvania State Special Olympics Volleyball Tournament. The culmination of five months of planning, organization and hard work has been labeled a huge success by all involved.

It all started last fall when Nora Dickey, manager for the area J Chapter of the State Special Olympics, Proposed that this year's tournament be held at a college or university. Her opinion reached the ears of Bill Huston, and Juniata became involved.

Juniata bid for the spot. After an on-site visit of the campus and its facilities, Juniata was asked to host the event.

After receiving the go ahead, Bill Huston recruited many Juniatians to begin preparations for the event. Among the many helpers was Betsy Mason, Directress of Competition. Together they had a total of 230 people volunteer and sign up. There were nine people who took a special interest and responsibility in organizing the competition: Cary Larrick (Administration), Rich Birnich (Human Resorces), Lisa Traupman (Financial Development), Jennifer Nicholson (Public Relations), Robert Yanckello (Special Events), Linda Price (Support Services), Stephen Lecrone (Support Services) Curtis Brewer (S.O. Program Staff Liason), and Nora Dickey (Area J Manager).

The key word was volunteer. As Betsy Mason stated, "It was refreshing to see people do something they wanted to do even though they weren't told. Besides the many Juniata volunteers, the coaches, the officials, the medical staff, and athletic association were all recognized for their sacrifices. Highly recognized was the Huntingdon Key Club for their donation of $1800 which was to be used for the local and state Special Olympics. They raised this amount by sponsoring a marathon volleyball tournament earlier this month.

The opening ceremonies took place on Saturday. Chris Noye gave the invocation, which was followed by President Neff's welcome. He said that he could see that there was plenty of sunshine in the group of people that had gathered. He said that it was fitting to have the Volleyball Tournament at the home of the best Division III Volleyball team. Dr. Figg led the national anthem, and Beth Hoppel and Kathy Miller lead the athletes in the oath, "Let me win, but if I cannot win, Let me be brave in the attempt."

Soon after the fun and competition began. A total of 27 teams participated in hard and practiced competition. The degree of sportsmanship, perseverance, and capability was astonishing and well received. Results of the matches were; Division I: Chambersburg Trojans, Meadville Mash, Westmoreland Spikers; Division II: St. Michael Area, Svhuykill Crusaders, Double Trouble; Division III: Chambersburg Knights, Butler Tornadoes; Division IV: Westmoreland F-Troop, Area G-Whiz Kids, Netco Nasties.

On Sunday the closing ceremonies took place. Two Penn State football players handed out the medals to the Olympians. Bill Berrier gave a reflection of the games by saying that "a person is never rewarded more than when he has worked with children." He told the participants that they were all winners and that going out and trying is the most important part of competition. Curt Brewer presented Pres. Neff with a plaque thanking him for allowing the S.O. to be held at Junita. In response the president said that it was a privilege to receive the award. He added that there would always be a welcome mat for the Special Olympics.

Juniata College has been asked to sponsor the event again next year, but they have not yet responded.

Nora Dickey and Bill Huston wish to extend a BIG thank you to all of the student volunteers. The athletes came to Hunitngdon to do more than learn volleyball; they came to learn to interact on larger scale. The volunteers made the event truly special.

Of course, there would be some rules and regulations placed on these new queens of the underworld. For one, they could paint neither the hall nor their rooms pink. Well, maybe a bright shade of hot pink but certainly not a pastel. No lacy curtains in the windows, either. Remember, you've got an image to restore and uphold. And, of course, you would have to yell crudities at the men who DARED to pass through. Whether these remarks are flattering or insulting is left to the individual.

I think it is a workable proposition. I see definite possibilities here. We've already lost Raft Regatta. Let's not let another time honored Juniata tradtion slip away.

Men win last five, gear up for MAC's

The Juniata Mens Basketball team capped off the regular season by winning five games in a row, giving them the momentum they'll need heading into the MAC playoffs tomorrow in Scranton. The Indians will face FDU-Madison in the first game, which starts at 7:00. Game two pits host Scranton and Susquehanna University. The winners will meet Saturday for the MAC Northern section title.

Juniata wrapped up a 9-1 home season, with the first loss coming in the beginning of the season, by defeating Dickinson College 77-63 last Thursday night. The Indians were paced by Jay Nicholson's 21 points and 10 rebounds. Duane Dise poured in 17 while Wayne Paul added 14. Nicholson was 10 of 15 from the floor, Dise 2 of 3 from beyond the 3 point stripe, and Shawn Habakus was 5 for 6 from the foul line.

JC shot 45% from the floor while Dickinson shot 54%. Dickinson was led by Cal Williams' 24 points. The win broke a Juniata College Mens basketball record for the most wins in a season.

The Indians travelled to Wilkes to play Wilkes College in the last conference game of the season. Juniata, behind Wayne Paul's 30 points, defeated Wilkes by 10 points. The Indians finished 11-5 in conference play and 17-8 overall.

The Indians travelled to New Jersey three weeks ago and lost to FDU-Madison 83-80. However, the Indians outscored FDU by 20 points from the field. The game will be on a neutral court this time around, and the Indians will have starter Duane Dise for the game and Wayne Paul at 100%. From here on in, eachgme is a must win. A loss would end the Indians successful season.

Lady Indians end season

By Deb Dougherty

The women's basketball team played Dickinson February 17 at Juniata. The Indians played a tough first half and went into the second half with a two point deficit.

Juniata kept the score within six points for the remainder of the game. Both teams were playing good defense and making many defensive rebounds. The Indians could not stop Dickinson from answering each of their baskets, and the final score was 48-52.

The following Saturday, the Lady Indians travelled to F&M College for their last game of the season. According to Coach Quinn, the team played one of their better games. F&M was ranked seventeenth in the country, but the girls entered the game with a good attitude. Quinn said that it was a good way to end the season.

Juniata kept the game to a five point margin until there were about eight minutes to go. The referees began to make some questionable calls that influenced the proceedings of the game. The game ended with a final score of 51-69.

Quinn felt that overall the women deserved praise and credit for their hard work during the season. The team felt they should have won more games, but they could not get an offense going. As a whole the team shot 35% for the season. The coach commmended Sue Grubb on a fine season and for her character and leadership.

Vol. XXXVIII No. ~~17~~ 18 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 March 3, 1988

Built 60 years ago, the Cloister was not just an ordinary building. The cost of construction was over $140,000. Sixty years later Cloister is still here and hopefully always will be. It has earned a much loved reputation for a guaranteed good time.

Juniata hosts Liz Lerman and the Dance Exchange as the fourth performance of the Artist Series

The fourth performance of the Juniata College Artist Series will feature Liz Lerman and the Dance Exchange on Thursday, March 3 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

The Dance Exchange, Inc. was founded by Liz Lerman in 1976 as an outgrowth of her performances as a Washington dancer/ choreographer and the classes she was teaching in the community. The equal and inseparable concerns of artistic excellence and community involvement have defined the Dance Exchange's unique identity ever since. Liz Lerman/Exchange has been presented by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, the Smithsonian Institute, Wolf Trap Farm Park for the Performing Arts, Baltimore's International Theater Festival, San Francisco's New Performance Gallery, New York's Dance Theater Workshop, and the Museum of Contemporary Art in Los Angeles, among others. Its work has been featured nationally on "The NBC Nightly News" and the National Public Radio's "All Things Considered", and in stories in "The Wall Street Journal" and "The New Yorker". Members of Dancers of the Third Age are almost always included in repertory pieces presented by Liz Lerman/Exchange, and are senior members of their dance community.

Dancers of the Third Age have performed for scores of elementary schools, colleges and senior citizens centers. Sponsors of these performances include the National Council on Aging, the American Jewish Congress, the Gray Pantes, the DC Special Olympics, the Kennedy Center and Washington Very Special Arts. In addition, DTA has offered residencies in Toledo, Ohio; Durham, North Carolina; Stockholm and Goteborg, Sweden; and the Smithsonian Institution's Discovery Theater. The company has continued to receive national media attention; it has been featured on the "CBS Morning News", "Hour Magazine", and NPR's "All Things Considered".

Community programs for senior adults and special populations implement the Dance Exchange philosophy that dance belongs to all members of the community. These programs are specifically tailored to the needs and expectations of those involved.

The Dance Exchange will do several workshops and perform for a variety of groups in the community during their residence at Juniata College from March 2-4.

The Huntingdon County Arts Council is the joint producer of this event. The Area Agency on Aging has contributed to producing the program. This program was made possible by a grant from the Mid Atlantic Arts Foundation in partnership with the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts and is supported by the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency.

Tickets for the March 3 performance can be purchased for $8 at the information desk in the Ellis College Center. For more information call 643-4310, ext. 330.

Historical Cloister retains Rep. for LOUD FUN!

By Diane Hontz

Many students probably think of the Cloister as an old, drippy building that should be replaced with a shiny new residence hall. If that was to occur, Juniata College might lose some of its personality.

Built 60 years ago, the Cloister was not just an ordinary building. The cost of construction was over $140,000 and was designed to hold 120 students. According to Earl C. Kaylor's book L"Truth Sets Free: A Centennial History of Juniata College, 1876-1976," the architect was Edwin Brumbaugh, son of the president of JC at the time, Martin Grove Brumbaugh.

According to the "Messenger," Edwin Brumbaugh chose the style of the dormitory because he felt that the Church of the Brethren would be remembered through this Germanic architecture. This style highlights the beliefs and values of 17th and 18th century Germany.

Edwin's work can be called restoration, but he believes that "restoration is not a style. It is reproduction, whether I like it or not." I suppose that in this sense Edwin admits to a rebel streak. He loved the Church of the Brethren, where several generations of his family attended, but he later joined the Christian Science Church. He says that his ancestors were also rebels.

Sixty years of service to Juniata College. The Cloister did not originally have a name. It was simply known as "The Men's Dormitory." Not until 1933 did it recieve the name "Cloisters," later to be called The Cloister. A sign with its name did not appear until around 1966. When it was built, it was divided into two parts, the Arch and the Annex. Back in 1928 it had the Ranch House, The Penthouse, and J-Club room. It has always been well-known for its maze-like corridors.

In the 1930 Alfarata, Cloister was referred to as "a charming haven of work, rest and play." The Cloister's reputation of "work, rest and play" seems to have stuck with it through 60 long years, and no one, except a bulldozer, can take that away.

This reputation might have come from the first two residents of the dormitory. Both were junior Art majors, and they officially moved into Cloister on Feb. 3, 1928. Glenn W. Reiman was the type of guy who did not mind "laying aside his work to enjoy a bit of recreation." The other was Ray M. Schrock, and he was an excellent talker who asked a lot of questions. Combining these two Juniata men, we have Cloister's 1988 image: always out for a good time with no reserves about making noise. Therefore, The Cloister is a monument which has retained its original reputation of LOUD FUN!!! This reputation will continue to exist, even pass the inevitable destruction of The Cloister.

"Election 88: A priviledge or a responsibility?"

Looking for an opportunity to present your view of the 1988 election and win $500 at the same time?

On Monday evening, April 11, the John M. and Thomas F. Bailey Oratorical Contest will be held in the Faculty Lounge, Ellis College Center, with a $500 award to be given for the best presentation. The final competition will begin at 8:15 p.m., with the contest open to any Juniata College student. The theme for the contest is "Election '88: A Privilege or a Responsibility?"

The original Bailey Oratorical Award was established in 1915 by the Honorable Thomas F. Bailey,

Editorial

The opening phrase of Charles Dickens" "A Tale of Two Cities" best describes my time as Editor-in-Chief of "The Juniatian"--It was the best of times, it was the worst of times... The time has come for me to step down and to retire from the newspaper business.

I look back on this experience with many fond memories and it is extremely difficult to imagine my life without "The Juniatian", for it has been a large part since my freshman year. What will I do with the hours that are usually spent in this office?

I seem to be suffering from a post-partum syndrome before I have even left. The sad part will be leaving my staff- they are a bunch of hard-working individuals who have somehow learned to understand me. Without this supportive staff, the newspaper would lack its creativity- they have cornered the market on writing headlines and captions!

In addtion to the support of my staff, I have benefitted from contact with the Public Relations office and from the words of wisdom from Dr. Arnold Tilden and President Robert Neff. I appreciate their support and guidance. There is a myriad of significant others- faculty, administrators, and students- who, through their suggestions and input, have helped me to improve the quality of this paper.

The worst of times- the missed deadlines, equipment failure, criticisms, frustration- have all been outweighed by the good times, sometimes mediocre times, as the Editor. I have great pride in "The Juniatian", as I always will, and seeing people read it and hearing discussion about it has made everything more than worthwhile. I have said before that Juniata is what you make it and being involved with the newspaper, and everyone who comes with it, has truly made my experience at Juniata special.

It is with great pride, and great sadness, that I retire from the staff. I have cleaned off the desk where I sit to write editorials and have passed the pen to the new CO-editors of "The Juniatian". Congratulations to Michele Johnson and Linda Lloyd for earning this position- I envy the year that lies ahead of you.

By Suzanne Lydic

In the last issue of the "Juniatian," an article concerning housing changes for next semester written by me--a staff reporter--appeared on the front page. The article was titled, "The 'Homo Hut' will soon transform into the 'Hetero Hut'." I would like to take the liberty now to explain that I did NOT choose that title for my article.

I submitted my article, as usual, to the "Juniatian" office where it would be edited for publication. It was during this editing process that the above title was given to my article. Apparently, the person who titled my story meant it to be read in such a manner that it dealt with changes from a homogeneous to heterogeneous environment. I do agree that this is the kind of change taking place in housing. However, many people are not reading the title in that frame of mind. Instead many are reading the title with "homosexuality" etc. in context. I in no way intended my article to even brush with that subject area. I hope that those readers who have read my article in that light will realize that I was not dealing wih that area; I especially hope that those who assumed I was making a condescending blow towards the homosexual community will take the time to realize that I never intended for that to be done.

My apologies to any who have felt slighted in any way by this article. Please feel free to respond to the "Juniatian" or its editor if you have any difficulties with this issue.

By Eichiro Ochiai,

Mr. Petrovic (Feb. 11) raised an important issue about GE 200 courses, which all of the campus, I believe, ought to think about. This was followed by an anonymous letter on "Greek Mind." The issue, I repeat, is too important to let go undebated. I was hoping somebody would follow these two articles up and start a conversation on the issue, but none has appeared yet. So here is my opinion. I am not too concerned directly with the original question: i.e., whether a GE 200 course should be required. The issue is more profound than the mere technicality.

The issue consists of two fundamental questions: (1) necessity or value of the so-called "Liberal Arts" education and (2) whether our present Liberal Arts courses, above all GE 200's , are adequate in today's world, given the constraints we have.

What is "Liberal Arts" education anyway? This is the question I, having come from a different background, have been pondering upon. Is it "learning a mere collection of fragmentary knowledge of this and that?" Of course not, the advocates say. They have a very lofty ideal for "Liberal Arts" education: "liberalizing one's mind." If in reality it is not serving that purpose, however, it could be completely a waste of time and resources. The kind of knowledge, if it is a mere knowledge, imparted in Liberal Arts courses can be readily gained by reading appropriate material. One does not have to attend a college. It may not be necessary to point out that "Liberal Arts" education is unique to the United States. The main purpose of college education in most other countries is professionsl-training. An implicit assumption in these other cultures is that people would acquire liberal arts through high school level education and/or by themselves. I do not see, (maybe I am wrong), that college educated people in other countries are particularly less knowledgeable in liberal arts than the corresponding people of this country.

Individual learning, however, has its limitations; one cannot get out of one's constraint imposed by one's upbringing. "Liberal Arts" education is supposed to free us from this kind of narrow perspective. Fine. If this is what is actually happening, America is way ahead of the rest of the world. If on the other hand, this is not the case, i.e., the so-called "Liberal Arts" education is a mere collection of bits and pieces of information, however, America is bound to produce mediocre college graduates, particularly weak in professional training in comparison to other countries because they are given about the same limited amout of time. "Liberal Arts" education was hailed by business leaders of this country several years ago; that has prompted the recent upsurge in the interest in liberal arts education. The same business leaders, unfortunately, have brought about the present indicament: the decline of American competitiveness.

Let's assume that the liberal arts education is still valuable, and I believe it is, provided that it is done properly. The next question is whether the presently offered courses: "GE 200's" as the core of liberal arts education are suitable for the today students. We are talking about their merit within our limited conditions. Any learning would be valuable if you have an infinite amount of time. You can relate "crusaders" to the contemporary issues of religious fanaticism, or you may relate the fluorishing of arts and music in the 17-19th centuries' Europe to the financial gain from the New World's gold and other commodities they obtained by exploiting the native people-i.e., perhaps the causes of today's North-Souh problems. But how relevant are these era's of the European history to the contemporary world? Are they worth students' time, given the time available? Aren't there other meaningful subjects which students benefit from learning?

Many schools have already started to reconsider the relevance of the traditional Western civilization approach as the core of liberal arts (see Newsweek:On Campus, March, 1988).

What I am interested to see offered within GE 200's concept is the studies of contemporary issues or the area studies. For example, areas such as Latin America (why they call themselves "Sandinista?" What implication would the Brazilian default have on the world economy?, etc.; there is a large number of issues here which have relevancy to our daily life), East

The final scene of "But Why Bump Off Barnaby" has Lady Barabara Fenwick (Marylou Miller) revealing her "most comforting thought" while Rosalind Barstow (Lisa Mitschang), Orion Leduc (Kevin Seachrist), Miss Barnsdale (Patti Stepp), and Dora Dunstock (Sharon Cadman) all stare at her in confusion. "But Why Bump off Barnaby?" was a success!

By Jen Wade

"But Why Bump Off Barnaby?" was performed on the stage of Oller Hall February 25, 26 and 27. The play, a mystery-farce in three acts, was written by Rick Abbot and directed by Walt Cupit, the first Juniata student to direct the spring play.

Cupit's production was fast-paced and witty. There was never a dull moment, as characters disappeared, reappeared, died, came back to life, and never fully understood one another.

All action occured in the parlor of Marlgate, the ancestral home of Orion Leduc. Leduc, played by Kevin Seachrist, has called a reunion of family members in order to dissolve the tontine which was established by his father. Each member of the five-person tontine was given a line of a limerick. When put together, the lines reveal the hiding place of the family's cache of gold.<P<MSThe five members of the tontine were Orion Leduc; Lady Barbara Fenwick (MaryLou Miller), a taller, statelier, more sedate version of Emily Litella; Cleo Barton (Jodi Mock), a famous actress; Dora Dunstock (Sharon Cadman), the slightly spacey relative from America; and Miss Barnsdale (Patti Stepp), governess to three generations of Leducs.

But, murder and mayhem complicated the picture almost from the outset when Barnaby (Erich Eichensehr), the poor relation, was killed. He scratched out the letters "BAR" before he died, throwing suspicion on almost everyone in the house. He also revealed that two members of the party were imposters, but was killed before he could name names.

The play also featured Doc Jones as Jeff Barnett, an American reporter and Dora's fiancee. When confusion reigned, Barnett acted as the logical detective, restoring some form of order to the proceedings.

Lisa Mitschang portrayed Rosalind Barstow, the young fiancee of Orion Leduc. She often seemed more interested in fighting with Cleo than in supporting Leduc in his time of trouble.

Becky Berger played Magnolia, a hired waitress with a chip on her shoulder. Magnolia died at one point, but was cured by the miracles of modern medicine and returned for the final scenes.

And, finally, John Petrovic portrayed Medkins the butler, who was neither who nor what he seemed. Medkins was really Barnaby, and he killed the first Barnaby, really a hired actor, in order to keep him quiet. He learned the lines of the limerick and planned to keep the gold for himself. But, he was eventually brought down by his own greed and ended up as a slim fraction of his original self.

"But Why Bump Off Barnaby?" was one play in which the butler really did do it.

All the performers did a great job. Berger, Mitschang, Mock, and Cadman did very well in their first performances.

Credit must also go to Mrs. Goehring's Play Production class, which successfully designed a set requiring a staircase and a rotating wall. Members of the class were also in charge of lights, sound, make-up and costumes, props, and publicity. The class will now begin work for the musical, which takes place in April.

JC Concert Choir to tour in five states

Continuing a tradition that began more than five decades ago, the Juniata College Concert Choir has announced its 1988 Spring Tour Schedule.

The 45 voice choir, conducted by Dr. Joseph W. Figg, will sing nine concerts in a period of ten days and visit five states plus our nation's capital. Beginning its tour in York, PA on March 4, the choir will then travel to Lancaster and Lebanon, PA; Watertown, Conn.; Portsmouth, RI; Boston, MA; Union and Yardville, NJ; and for its final performance has been invited to sing for the morning service in the National Cathedral in Washington, D.C.

The choir, which over the years has made numerous radio and television appearancs, in addition to presenting regular campus concerts, will present a repertoire that has been chosen from a wide variety of choral styles, ranging from Renaissance to Broadway.

Preparation in several fields of music is available at Juniata. In addition to studies in performance, often leading to graduate work in voice, winds, or keyboards, students can pursue history, theory or musicology backgrounds.

Juniata choirs and glee clubs have toured since 1920. The Concert Choir--once the A Capella Choir--has toured since 1932. Members of the choir are selected by competitive audition.

Dr. Figg assumed the duties of Director of Choral Ensembles and Assistant Professor of Music at Juniata College in the fall of 1984. Choirs under his direction have been invited to perform for numerous regional and national conventions, and have appeared in concert with such prominent artists as Robert Merrill and Vincent Price.

Dr. Figg has presented workshops and served as choral clinician and adjudicator throughout the United States. He is an active recitalist and oratorio soloist, and he has appeared in opera and outdoor theatre.

River Rugby Club heads to Daytona

By Robert DiAntonio

The Juniata River Rugby Club will travel to Daytona Beach, Fla. March 4-13, to compete in the National Collegiate Sports Festival Rugby Football Tournament. The 'Rats', consisting of 24 players, will start the trip with a round robin tourney against Georgia Sounthern and the 'Dawgs' of the University of Georgia on Saturday, March 5. This will take place on the campus of Georgia Southern in Statesboro, Georgia. The club will then move South to Daytona Beach for a week of exciting competition. The field will include such schools as: the University of Maine, Indiana State, Temple University, University of Tennessee, Vanderbilt, the midshipmen from Navy, and possibly the University of Michigan's Rugby Football clubs. The tournament will begin on Monday, March 7 and continue throughout the week on a double elimination basis, with the championship on Friday, March 12.

The entire tournament consists of two separate weeks of competition, wherein the weekly champions will return the following Fall (all expenses paid) to play for the Tournament Championship.

Rats president, Steve DuMars, has faith in the group, stating that "the guys have a lot of gumption. It takes a lot of spirit to want to play some of these teams, as strong as they are."<P<MSAside from the tournament, individual performanes are expected from Mike Martin, who will be defending his belly flop title; and Dan Ballentine, who hopes to make it out to the racetrack for a few test laps, thereby fulfilling a lifelong dream. Finally, it is believed that freshman Matt Carson will attempt to take on the entire Navy Rugby Club in "any physical matchup of their choice".

The National Collegiate Sports Festival, sponsored by the US Marines, American Airlines, and the ESPN network, will also be holding events in: flag football, golf, tennis, aerobics, ultimate frisbee, swimming, arm wrestling, cycling, volleyball, tug-o-war, and the USMC fitness test.

If you are in Daytona Beach, or anywhere in Florida during that week, and you want to catch the 'Rats' in action, call 1-800-343-3071 for information or match and event schedules. If you forget to copy this number, then just look for the guys in 'black and gold' when you get there.

"Catch a Wave" is theme of Spring Fest '88

By Michele Johnson

As springtime approaches, so does Juniata College's Annual Spring Fest. Rich Brnich, senior, and Becky Abraham, junior, are co-chairpersons for the committee, which has been busily making plans since February.

To kick off the events a coffeehouse will be held on April 12 and the Joint Lecture Committee is preparing possibly a Laugh-Off for April 14. Mud volleyball, three-legged football, various games, and loads of entertainment will all be part of the exciting weekend. "Catch a Wave" has been chosen as this year's theme by the committee members. To promote spring fest, t-shirts will be sold at the end of March. Watch for further details as plans are being made.

Chairpersons for the committee include: Rob Glenny, physical plant; Dana Glenny, student events; Sue Gulla, Andrea Lupinetti, and Michelle Yomer, entertainment; and Beth Angerole and Sue Nichols, publicity. Deb Dechert, food service; Ann Marie Dinwoodie and Lisa Keyes, fun and games; and Tim Phelps, mugs and t-shirts are also taking part in the plans. If anyone is interested in helping with one of these committees, meetings are held every Thursday at 6:30 in the Blue Room of Ellis Hall.

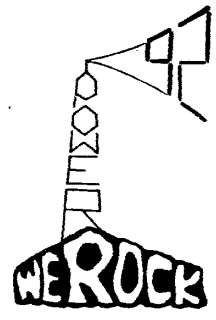
The Faculty's Academic Planning Committee would like students to submit their concerns about library polices. The Student Representatives to the Academic Planning Committee are Joy Sagan and Sharon McCullen. The five elected at-large faculty members on the Faculty Planning Committee, "Professors Lewis, Beard, Scheller, Reilly and Donaldson", will serve ad hoc as a Learning Resources Sub-committee. Please send your comments to Professor Donaldson, Chairman of the Committee, in writing no later than March 16.

Your cooperation would be greatly appreciated. .

Congratulations to the men's basketball team for a season to be proud of!

Look for an update on the spring sports in "The Juniatian"

Power 92 wishes you a safe and rockin' SpringBreak!



As spring rolls around the corner, Power 92 would like to let you know about some upcoming events.

On Saturday, April 9, Power 92 will sponsor a Dance-A-Thon to benefit the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation of Pennsylvania. The event will be held in the main gym from 10pm to 8am. Watch for more details, so you can dance the night away for Cystic Fibrosis.

Friday, April 22, Will be the date of another lounge party sponsored in part by Power 92. Admission will be free, and we will be giving away albums and Alfaratas!! This is the last weekend before finals, so don't miss it.

Finally, listen to Power 92 in the coming weeks. We will be giving away lots of Big Macs and salads from McDonalads. Also, listen for your chance to win a free copy of an Alfarata.

Colloquim to meet in March

At the March meeting of the Social History Colloquium, Professor Steven Stowe (Department of History, Indiana University at Bloomington), will present the lecture, "'The Plodding Things of Physick': Society and the Discontents of Doctoring in the Old South."

The Colloquium will meet on March 16th in the Rare books Reading Room, 3rd floor West Pattee Library. Refreshments will be served at 3:15 PM, and Professor Stowe will speak at 3:45.

For further information please contact: Peter Gottlieb, Historical Collections and Labor Archives, W313 Pattee Library, the Pennsylvania State University, University Park, Pa. 16802 (Telephone: 814-863-2505).

Men end season with a two point loss to FDU-Madison

By George Zanic

It was the typical Juniata College Men's basketball bus ride. Duane Dise playing his invisible guitar while listening to Jimmy Hendrix, Bob Dombrowski and Neil Gerhart beating up Mike Welker, and Dan Helm reading the newspaper, but deep down I think everyone on the bus felt a little remorse because this was the last bus ride of the season.

A season that started with three straight losses including an embarrassing loss to Penn State and a season that ended abruptly when Wayne Paul's three point attempt fell short in the MAC playoffs. In between those valleys, however, the Indians climbed a huge mountain.

The goal of Dan Helm at the start of the season was simply a winning season, something he had never had in his seven prior seasons as the Indian boss. But, after four consecutive wins and a 4-4 record going into Christmas there was no more talk of just a winning season but talk of a school record 16 victories.

Christmas break brought the Indians trip to Europe which pulled 16 players into one. Although they had many disagreements and small confrontations, the 10 days of constantly being together molded the Indians into a team that would win more games than any team in the history of the school.

Traveling through Luxemborg, Belgium, and France and playing five games that taught the Indians about a more physical brand of ball, Juniata was ready for a grueling schedule when they returned to the states.

After a 40 hour nightmare from Luxemborg to Huntingdon, the Indians had to immediately head to Scranton where they were easily defeated by the number one team in the nation. However, that was only a minor setback, and Dan Helm's team, led by his senior guard Wayne Paul, bounced back and had a school record six straight wins. This gave them a commanding two game lead in the MAC Northwest division.

To Wayne Paul first place must have seemed unbelievable. After starting for four years and never getting close to the playoffs, he was taking his team there with the help of seven freshmen who probably had no idea of the frustration Wayne had gone through.

Bob Dombrowski was one of the top rebounders in the MAC. Jay Nicholson's dunks were electrifying the crowds. Dan Lizun led the league in shot blocking, and Neil Gerhardt contributed with his three point shooting.

When the Indians defeated arch rival Elizabethtown on Feb. 3, Dan Helm knew this team was something special. They had clinched a playoff birth for the first time since the 1974-75 season. A road weekend against Kings and FDU-Madison handed us a couple of losses, but that didn't slow anyone down as Juniata easily won their remaining five games, including a victory where seniors Andre Constantine and Glenn Peters put on a show for the home crowd.

After defeating Wilkes, the Indians had a week filled with anticipation before the playoff game that most of the team had wished for throughout the season. FDU-Madison would be a rematch of an earlier 83-80 defeat, but this time it would be on a neutral court. After a horrible first half and a 16 point deficit, Joe DeBlase, Mike Antenucci, and Duane Dise brought the Indians back to take the lead. Although the final result didn't favor the Indians, that could very well be foreshadowing of what will come next year.

The three men who led the Indian's comeback-Dise, Nuch, and DeBlase-will have to fill the leadership role vacated by Paul, and I think the FDU game proved that they are more than capable.

With point guards Shawn Habakus and Mike Welker returning to add experience, and next years sophomores Nicholson, Dombrowski, Lizun, Gerhardt, Hughes, Zamboni, and Frank Shue, this seems to be a team with a will to win. They will no longer accept losing. Dan Helm will take the Indians to a 20 win season and a MAC title in 1989.

I just hope that when they're celebrating, they look back and remember 1987-88 and the leadership Wayne Paul brought to a team that never knew how to win, until he taught them with his silent leadership.

A note in closing, Sports Editor Mike Antenucci only needs to average 38.5 points per game to follow Wayne Paul in reaching the 1,000 point plateau!

Hoppel and Miller feted by ASICS

Juniata College players Beth Hoppel and Cathy Miller were recognized in the March issue of "Volleyball Monthly" as 1987 ASICS/Tiger All-Americans for Division III.

A senior from Bishop McCort High School, Hoppel was a first team selection. She has received All-American honors the past three years.

Miller was selected to the ASICS/Tiger second team. A senior from Cambria Heights High School, she was chosen a third-team GTE/CoSida Academic All-American this year as well.

"We are certainly proud of the honors Beth and Cathy have received," said Juniata coach Larry Bock, whose team finished fourth in the NCAA Division III last fall. "What is most impressive is that Beth and Cathy were the only eastern players selected to the first or second teams in any NCAA division. It is a great accomplishment for them and their teammates."

Hoppel is the daughter of William and Mary Hoppel of Sunshine Avenue, Johnstown. She is a computer science major at Juniata.

A biology major, Miller is the daughter of Bill and Camilla Miller of St. Benedict.

The contest will be judged by a panel of three outside experts: the Reverend Dr. Earle K. Fike, Jr., pastor of the Stone Church of the Brethren; the Honorable Newton C. Taylor, president-judge of Huntingdon County; and Dr. Cynthia Begnal from the department of speech communications at Penn State University. Doris P. Goehring, assistant professor of speech and theatre will serve as moderator.

All interested students are invited and encouraged to enter the competition, and lack of experience should not be a deterrent. For more information and for applications please contact Kay Stephenson in the development office in Founders Hall, or call extension 216.

Asia (China, Japan, Korea, Philippines and others-trade problems, etc.), Middle East (problems within Islamic World-Iran/Iraq, etc.) and Africa (the causes of famine, its historical reasons/colonialisms, etc.). There are a number of problems all over the world today which somehow or other affect our lives and require better understanding.

Please do not misunderstand me. I am not passing judgement on our GE courses. I simply do not know them, I'm sorry to say. I just wanted to point out that GE 200 courses, because they are central to our liberal arts education, deserve a fresh look.

Wayne Paul honored by NABC

Juniata College senior guard Wayne Paul of Johnstown has been selected to the National Association of Basketball Coaches (NABC) College Division III Middle Atlantic All-District team.

The 6-2 captain, Paul, led the Indians to a school record 17 wins against eight losses and helped the Tribe qualify for the Middle Atlantic Conference playoffs for the first time since 1974-75. Juniata won the MAC Northwest section title with an 11-5 finish.

Paul, who shot over 55 percent from the floor in averaging 18 points a game, was joined on the first team by Lou Stevens of Widener, J.P. Andrejko of Scranton, Terry Scott of Franklin and Marshall, and Bernie Ivin of Moravian. All five players, plus Jim Hepfer of Elizabethtown, appear on the ballot for the NABC All-America voting.

"It is a well deserved honor for Wayne," said Juniata coach Dan Helm about the school's fourth leading career scorer. "He has been a key factor in our success this season and has had an outstanding career. I feel he is the best all around basketball player I've seen at Juniata College."

A Richland High School graduate, Wayne is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Paul of Oakridge Drive, Johnstown.

Special Olympics Returning to JC?

By Deb Dougherty

One week after the Special Olympics, the campus was still buzzing about the event. The two day tpurnament had touched everyone who had been involved. The question on everyone's lips was whether or not it would come to Juniata College once more.

When several people were asked why they had been involved with the Olympics, the most common answer was that it would be fun. The athlete were full of energy, right down to the ones who could not play volleyball. One person noted that there was 12 year old who was not very good, but he still tried very hard and did not get discouraged. He was having fun, and that was all that mattered to him.

A volunteer vould not help feeling special themselves because the athletes showed so much appreciation to everyone who had offered the smallest bit of encouragement. One specific instance was cited by a team escort. She said that her team had been losing all morning, but when they finally won their first game, they were jumping up and down on the court. When they saw her on the sidelines, they came over and hugged her. These kids were not ashamed to show their affections; these people had been helped by someone, and they wanted to show their gratitude in the best way possible-a simple hug.

Many of the student volunteers enjoyed helping out the Olympians. They were always affectionate and full of life, which made the job pleasant. The kids were happy with what they were doing, and this spilled over to everyone involved.

When asked if they thought the Special Olympics should be brought Juniata again, the overall response was yes. The volunteers had shared a special moment with these athletes and wanted the opportunity to do so again.

The several who did not attend or help out had scheduling conflicts or did not know that they could volunteer. They did express an interest in the games returning to the college, so the Olympians would be happy once again.

The talk about the Special Olympics will take awhile to quiet down. The college community had the opportunity to assist, as well as learn from, a very unique group of people. Anyone who helped with the event in any way left with a very special feling. Any of life's hurdles seemed surmountable after seeing what the athletes put forth. Everyday problems seemed trivial comparod to what the Olympians face on a daily basis. Watching the Special Olympians was an inspiration because they showed that obstacles could be overcome with effort and determination.

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXVIII No. 19 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | March 24, 1988

Icon Exhibit to open at Juniata

Juniata College will celebrate the easter season with the opening of the exhibit "Russian Icons of the golden Age" on Monday, April 4, 1988. The exhibit of sacred image marks the 100th anniversary of Christianity's introduction to Old Russia in 988 A.D.

The exhibit will begin with an opening reception at 8pm on April 4, in the college's Shoemaker Gallery. Regular gallery hours will be Monday through Saturday, noon to 5pm; Tuesday and Thursday evenings, 7 to 9pm; and Sunday, 1 to 5pm. The exhibit, organized by Juniata faculty members Robert Wagoner and George Dolnikowski, will remain at the college until April 30.

Following the Juniata venue, the exhibit moves to The Rare Book Room of the Cathedral Church of St. Peter and St. Paul in Washington, D.C. from May 9-31. The exhibit will then move to New York's Interchurch Center from July 5 to August 8, Lafayette College in Easton, PA from September 1-October 7, and the College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass. from November 3-30.

The exhibit consists of more than 40 colorfully painted icons from the fourteenth to the seventeenth centuries. This period, following the fall of Byzantium (Constantinople) in 1453, is recognized as the high point in the development of Russian icons as an art form.

In the Primary Chronicle, a written account of the early history of Russia, it is said that in 986 A.D. Prince Vladmir was visited by representatives of three faiths: Judaism, Islam and Christianity, each trying to convert the Prince of Russia to his own religion. the Chronicle says he was baptized in the Orthodox faith in 988 A.D., threw his stone idols in the Dnieper River, and by 996 had completed the first stone cathedral in Russia. He went on to become the very model of the Christian ruler and was later canonized.

The Russian Orthodox Church was effectively cut off from the West in 1240, when the Mongols overran the country and for many reasons that separation remains today.

Juniata College is pleased to be taking a step to bridge these centuries of separations by marking the Millenial Year with this exhibition. The public is encouraged to visit the exhibition of Russian icons. Admission to Shoemaker Gallery is free.

"Man of La Mancha" closes Artist Series

"To dream the impossible dream, to reach the unreachable star.." So soars the anthem of Don Quixote, the hero of the legendary musical MAN OF LA MANCHA. Translated into 28 languages and performed in over 24 countries, this phenomenal musical has inspired almost as many dreamers as the classic novel that is its source. MAN OF LA MANCHA, written 375 years after Don Miguel de Cervantes completed the last pages of "Don Quizote," is the most successful adaptation of this novel ever made. This phenomenal hit ran six years on the New York stage amassing over 2,328 performances. It then went on to be revived twice on Broadway, spawned several national tours, and played long runs in cities all over the world-including Paris, Rome, Madrid and London. MAN OF LA MANCHA was the third American musical to penetrate the Iron Curtain when it played to packed houses in Moscow in the early 70's. The show was even made into a major Hollywood film starring Sophia Loren, James Coco, and Peter O'Toole. Now, on Monday, March 28, Daedalus Productions of New York presents this celebrated smash hit at Juniata College, in Oller Hall, as the grand finale of the 1987-88 Artist Series.

Set in 16th century Spain, MAN OF LA MANCHA is a brilliant adaptation of the classic novel DON QUIXOTE in which a determined old man believes he's a knight errant in his rough world, the Golden Age of Chivalry. Accompanied by his reluctant squire Sancho, Don Quixote rides off to vanquish evil. From tavern brawls and moonstruck reveries to the chilling trials of the Spanish Inquisition, the Don's on-stage adventures project a medley of striking moods. Most engaging of all is his courtship of an earthy tavern wench, Aldonza. In this particular "quest," Don Quixote gives vent to one of musical theatre's most unusual and magnificent love songs, the unforgettable "Impossible Dream."

Much of MAN OF LA MANCHA's success is due to its writer, Dale Wasserman. best known for the stage version of ONE FLEW OVER THE CUCKOO'S NEST, Wasserman first became interested in adapting the Cervantes novel for the theatre when he was contracted to write a TV adaptation of the same material. For inspiration, he traveled to Madrid to research the time, place and circumstances which produced the classic novel.

As Wasserman recalls it, "...Madrid seemed the appropriate place to explore DON QUIXOTE. So I set forth on a two volume journey and arrived at its end with one firm conclusion: that this sprawling work could not and should not be dramatized. As I discovered, DON QUIXOTE had been rendered in other media scores of times--in ballets, motion pictures, plays and even opera. I was aware, too, that the attempts invariably failed. Capturing this work was like trying to force the sea into a bucket; ambitious but impractical. But what continued to haunt my thoughts was not the novel but the shadowy figure behind it."

"Miguel de Cervantes, famed Spanish author...who was he? What manner of man could pour such incredible wit and wisdom into one work that nearly all living literature is still in its debt. With interest that was to nearly become obsessive, I set out in search of Cervantes."

"Misfortune was the pattern of his life," comments Wasserman. "Failure and disaster, this is the record--until his fifties. Shamefully poor, infirm of body and with dimming sight, he undertook the writing of a book he hoped might bring him ease in his remanining years."

"Here, I discovered the design for the play I wanted to write, Not an adaptation of "DON QUIXOTE" but a tribute to the spirit of his creator. To blend and merge their identitites--for what I had learned was that in all essential ways Miguel de Cervantes WAS Don Quixote. The upsets of his existence never dimmed the brightness of his vision, never soured his compassion nor his humor, never stripped him of his faith."

The result of Wasserman's research was an Emmy award winning TV play and a script destined to become, at the suggestion of friends, a musical for the theatre. After a successful tryout in Connecticut, the play was optioned for the New York stage. It opened on November 22, 1965, starring Richard Kiley as Don Quixote and Joan Diener as Aldonza--the same case as in Connecticut. And after glowing reviews, it became the hottest ticket in town. The show won all the major theatre awards for the season, being named Best Musical by the N.Y. Drama Critics' Circle, the Outer Circle, the Variety Poll, and Saturday Review.

Juniata College is not a typical small college when it comes to the vast amount of cultural opportunities. It is amazing the vast amount of cultural advantages available to the Juniata College community. Within the next month, many major cultural events are being offered on campus, all of which should be attended by the students and faculty.

Dr. James Gallagher, national and foreign affairs editor of the Chicago Tribune, is visiting us all of this week as part of the cultural program. He brings with him 16 years of experience in the field of journalism. During this time, he has played roles as both national correspondent and Moscow bureau chief. His expertise on the U.S.S.R. and in the field of journalism holds great advantages to be sought by all students. During his visit he spoke to several classes in addition with talking to members of the "Juniatian."

Another special event on campus will take place April 4, when the college hosts the opening of the exhibit "Russian Icons of the Golden Age." The exhibit marks the 1000th anniversary of Christianity's introduction to Old Russia in 988 A.D. After visiting Juniata, the exhibit will move on to the National Cathedral in Washington, D.C. The importance of this exhibit is phenomenal. It will be to the advantage of the entire college community to visit this historic exhibit.

One on-going Juniata cultural event, continuing next week, is the Artist Series presentation of "Man of LaMancha" on March 28. This extravagant play ran for six years on the New York stage. Daedalus Productions will present this smash hit in Oller Hall as the finale of the 1987-88 artist series.

Juniata College is a small liberal arts school whose goal is to give students a well-rounded education. The many cultural events, guest speakers and artist series are an attempt to achieve this goal. The college can offer these special events, but it is up to the individual to take the initiative to attend them. Help Juniata College achieve its goal and attend these sessions, completing your well-rounded liberal arts education.

Here in Barcelona, we are now officially in phase #543, i.e. we don't mind not having ice cubes anymore, we don't notice the smoke in class anymore, we can't spell in English sometimes, and we don't find it odd anymore to answer the phone and say, "Speak."

So what have we been doing for the past seven months? The first month was spent in the Intensive Language Training and Vacation Period. During that time we went to the beach, slept, tried our first strong European beers, learned how to buy fruit and had a couple of hours of class. All in all, it was pretty fun. While the tourist phase came to a close, we had to face the reality of living here until June.

The big questions were: Will our bodies actually be able to digest all this olive oil? Will we learn how to light the water heater without burning down the house? Will we learn to stop asking what kind of meat we're eating? Will our dictionaries fall apart from over use? What is this strange language called Catalan? And, why haven't our friends written to us yet?

Well, by the end of November (phase of #178), we had those things under control. And some of our friends had finally written. And we were sick of Spanish sightseeing, so we went travelling through Europe.

It was a great experience! We saw big churches, a big tower, some really important buildings, some doodles by some famous guys, and some crazed animals. We even celebrated New Year's Eve in the jungle (ask Jef, Rush, Donna, Nena or Marilyn the next time you see them)! Then it was back home to Barcelona. It was great going home to exam week! (Yes, we have been doing some work!)

Actually, the classes that are offered by BCA are well-organized, beneficial and worthwile. University classes tend to be harder and more intense but not impossible. They usually include 1 or 2 exams for the whole year and a lot of individual work is needed. It was really hard adapting to only having each class two days a week, and we were depressed for months when we found out we'd never have class on Wednesdays!

Now, being in phase #543, things are normal. We've fully adjusted, and our alcohol tolerance levels have risen incredibly! Being in Europe is something we are never going to forget. Where else could shaving your legs be cause for celebration? Don't miss your chance to experience another culture and live something you'll always remember. A little culture shock never hurt anybody! (You're allowed to say that once you're past phase #500!)

Dos besos a todos!
Hasta pronto!

From the Pen of...

By John E. Deppen

I could think of only one thing as I watched the films of the US troops disembarking in Honduras-Mr. President, if any of our men get hurt, it will be because of your senseless and irrational policy towards Central America.

Mr. President, time and time again you have failed to seize the opportunity to pursue peace in the region. You have antagonized the government of Nicaragua by funding a terrorist faction seeking to overthrow it; you have aided the government of El Salvador, a government which has used death squads to oppress its people; you have neglected the negotiating table as a viable option in addressing the problems in the region; in short, you have spent the last seven years rattling your sabre instead of sheathing it and extending an olive branch.

Now, with the recent development of men from the 82nd Airborne Division and the 7th Infantry, you have doubled the size of our force in Honduras. You say they are on an "emergency deployment training exercise" (or some laughable euphemism such as that)> How far will you go, Mr. President? How many more scenes of American soldiers landing in Honduras will we have to see on our national news? How worried should we be that our friends in the armed services will be sucked into the maelstrom you are creating by your belligerent actions?

Mr. President I have stood at the Vietnam Memorial, as many have, and pondered the cost of that tragic "conflict." I desperately hope that years from now, I will not be standing at a memorial to the soldiers who died in a Central American debate created by your hands.

I know you want to leave your mark on history, Mr. President. Let that mark be a sign of peace rather than a bloodstain.

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

(A note from Counselor's Corner: This is the third and final article dealing with Adult Children of Alcoholics (ACOAS). In this article we will briefly look at how victims who have grown up in alcoholic families can be helped.)

Experts generally agree that treatment for ACOAs consists of many approaches such as individual and family therapy, group therapy, educational efforts, support groups and self-help groups. Let's concentrate on the support group as a recovery tool for ACOAs.

Debbie Krovitz, a licensed psychologist and ACOA therapy group facilitator, suggests that at the very beginning time should be devoted to the all important issue of group and individual goals for the support group. A safe environment characterized--by trust for one another is a primary goal for any ACOA support group.

Another ACOA support group issue to enhance recovery group is structure. Krovitz says that it is not sufficient to just talk about problems and issues. Group members must learn to change outdated rules, to learn to have positive, healthy relationships, and to learn to live in the present. Groups can be structured so as to cover critical issues such as low self-esteem, isolation, unresolved grief, lack of intimacy, being in control, and detaching oneself from the alcoholic parent(s).

According to Kravitz and Celeste Norcia, a group co-facilitator, a number of common problems need to be examined so as not to be counterproductive to both the group and the individual. Among the problems are a tendency for ACOAs to blame and try to change other people. ACOAs are encouraged to work on changing themselves and not others. (Sounds like good advice for us all!!!).

Another common problem that can arise within a support group is termed enabling. Krovitz says this occurs when members do not challenge or confront inappropriate, incongruent, or self-destructive behavior on the part of individual group members. Historically ACOAs are overly nice to each other and, according to Krovitz, it can lead to problems. She encourages members to learn to give and receive feedback as a regular aspect of the support group environment.

The support group works hard at helping fulfill the need for belonging so critical to ACOAs. Learning to trust and to risk closeness with other group members helps ACOAs come to grips with the past and to deal more effectively with the present and the future.

Take the time to tell those special people in your life just how much you care for them. Be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

By Jen Wade

Well, here it is, March 24. Time for a reflection on Spring Break. What did you do during this long awaited holiday? Had you starved yourself for the past two months or spent three hours a day working out on the Nautilus machines in order to look good while you lounged around Daytona Beach (or at least to someplace with sun and sand and warm weather)?

Not me. I went home to the thriving metropolis of Lehighton, a major suburb of the Lehigh Valley, the home of the largest collection of shopping malls anywhere in the world. In other words, I went home to a small town to be bored.

How did I know I would be bored? Because I am always bored at home.

For one thing, I don't have a car of my own. Not having a car is a major asset to a boredom. Not having a car means that I'm not forced to take road trips to the mall. It means that I don't have to go to the bar downtown or the nightclubs in the Valley and waste my money. It means I can stay home and watch TV with my parents.

Unless, however, I manage through some deceitful measures to acquire usage of the family car for an evening or two. Of course, it has to be the right car. I don't like to drive the Buick with the crack in the windshield and the rust spots on the door. Besides, the door on the driver's side doesn't open from the inside. Being seen driving the Buick is not cool.

No, I will only be satisfied driving the sleek, sporty, five-speed foreign car. Unfortunately, my parents guard it with their lives, and are very reluctant to let me drive. I may, however, be counting my chickens before they are hatched. Spring Break hasn't officially begun yet, which still gives my mother an entire day in which to crash the car, just like she's crashed every new car we've ever had.

Let me clarify that. She's crashed every NICE new car we've ever had. The Buick was used when we bought it, and she managed not to wreck the '72 Comet and the even-older-than-that station wagon.

She's also crashed my father's first car and has gotten a speeding ticket (going 51 in a 35 m.p.h. zone). And this is the same woman that doesn't like the way I drive. She is also afraid that I might have an accident! Imagine that.

Well, at any rate, while you were in Florida or the Bahamas, I hope you thought about what a wonderful time I was having in Lehighton. Of course, maybe it's best you didn't. I wouldn't have wanted you to be jealous.

"TONY" Awards fell to five participants in the production--one each to composer, lyricist, director, designer, not to mention Best Actor in a musical to Richard Kiley, who immortalized the leading role.

By 1969 it had already surpassed the runs of SOUTH PACIFIC, and THE SOUND OF MUSIC, while other parts of the country and the world were sharing the happy experience of New York theatre-goers. Several highly successful touring companies played throughout the U.S., and productions were mounted in every major city in the world. Appropriately, the first of these was Madrid on the 350th anniversary of Cervantes' death. Productions followed in Israel, Sweden, Denmark, Australia, Poland, Austria, England, and even South America. Paris saw singer Jacques Brel make his legitimate stage debut in the starring role.

MAN OF LA MANCHA ended it's mammoth New York run in 1971 after amassing a total of 2,328 perfomances. It later played for 54 weeks in Chicago setting the record for the longest running resident professional theatre production in the U.S. It would return to New York in 1974 for another successful engagement at Lincoln Center and then resurface for the third time on Broadway in 1977.

After such thunderous acclaim, MAN OF LA MANCHA refuses to fade away. At present a fresh mounting of this celebrated hit is in rehearsals in New York. Decked out in a new national tour, MAN OF LA MANCHA will soon entrance audiences coast to coast all over again. From March to May, the production will give over 50 performances in 25 states from New England to California. It is presented by Daedalus Productions, the company whose most recent national tours have included AIN'T MISBEHAVIN, EVITA, THEY'RE PLAYING OUR SONG, AND PURILE.

National tours are often scaled down version's of their show's first productions. Not so for Daedalus' LA MANCHA. The rich and warm colored costumes are all duplicates of the first designs by theatre luminary Howard Bay. The production will encompass all the scenic elements of the Broadway original-including the great suspended drawbridge staircase hovering in the shadows, waiting to be dropped down into the dungeon of the Spanish Inquisition.

In short, this new MAN OF LA MANCHA promises to bring fresh life and glory to a show whose appeal is eternal. As Clive Barnes of The New York Times wrote a decade after the show's Broadway opening, "MAN OF LA MANCHA is one of the modern classics of the American Musical Stage. As vibrant and timeless as ever, it is a brilliant stroke of theatre."

Tickets for the March 28 performance may be purchased in advance at the information desk in the Ellis College Center for $8 or at the door. The curtain opens at 8:15pm in Oller Hall.

Student Government

By Megan Hartman

On February 23, the Student Government held its eleventh meeting. Twenty-two members were present and four members were absent.

Amy told the senate that the Presidential Ball was a success and is to be a new tradition at Juniata College. Letters to the Presidential candidates have been written and sent out to them. Sue London, Betsy Hoban, and Jodie Hafer have been assigned to do the preparations for the end of the year banquet.

Arnie Tilden asked the senate for its opinion on the 1987-88 calendar in order to design the 1988-89 calendar. Beth Loych will be the Treasurer for the 1988-89 school year.

The Student Government Concerns Committee is looking into the student pay rates and the driver list for the social hosts. The Emerging Leaders Module is going very well. A social for these leaders with established leaders on campus will be held sometime in the near future. Dickinson College student government representatives will meet with some of our members on March 26 here at Juniata College.

The preparations for Spring Fest are underway. The week before Spring Fest will include a lecture and coffeehouse. The Friday of Spring Fest will be Mud Volleyball. The tennis courts will be the sight of the Spring Fest on Saturday.

The Senate gave its opinion on the formation of credit for attendance of cultural events or that the events should be free for students.

Under new business, clubs inquired whether they could be reimbursed for meals when they go to events off campus. The Student Government is looking into a computer for its records.

The motion for adjournment was made and the meeting was adjourned.

Dramatic Presentation comes to Juniata

By Janine Hyde

"Animal Farm," the second student production this year at Juniata College is underway. The production of "Animal Farm," based on George Orwell's biting satire, substitutes dramatic reading for the pig costumes one might be expecting. It replaces setting and props with creative imagination on the part of the audience and vocal flexibility on the part of the readers. Dramatic readings have the ability to set the audience free from the confinds of the theatre and place them in the open fields of their imaginations.

"I feel that this form of theatre often goes unjustly neglected," said director, Tommy Kochel. "It lends itself more completely towards imaginative thought. Secondly "Animal Farm' in particular has a general political message of warning against corrupt governments which I feel is pertinent enough to be heard even today."

Dramatic readings are not new. On the contrary, they can be traced back to the earliest of time. Story telling is the less developed root of dramatic reading as are ballads, and can be traced back to the Middle Ages.

The emphasis on "Animal Farm" is on the threat of totalitarianism. Orwell exposed it, pointing out that it is merely an idealist's dream converted by realists into a nightmare. In Nelson Bonds<r" adaptation of the play, the audience will see animals whose characters are much like those in today's news headlines. With characters like Boxer and the plowhorse, the play also deals with the dangers of blind faith in government or any institution.

"Boxer is not too bright to begin with, and he is further moved to agree with what everyone else says and thinks," explains Bryan Miller about his gullible character.

Besides theoir performance at Oller Hall on March 24 and 25, the cast performed for the State Correctional Institute in Huntingdon on Saturday, March 19, where the cast performed for the Lifer's Association.

The seven readers have added their own flair to the characters. Since dramatic readings require a great deal of skill on the part of the actors, the seven have spent a great deal of time getting their voices perfect, especially considering that each character has a minimum of two character voices.

Jonathan Matthews (Narrator/Jones) is, a Business major from London, England. Last semester Jonathan was seen as the stoic butler, Brasset, in Juniata's production of "Charlie's Aunt."

Bill Samuels (Snowball/Benjamin) is a freshman from Lemoyne, PA where he portrayed William Jennings Bryant in his high school production of "Inherit the Wind." Bill is a biochemistry major, and he is also a DJ at WKVR-FM.

Senior Eric Danaway (Squealer/Frederick/Moses) is a director in his own right. He co-directed "The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy" two years ago at Juniata. Eric a Geology/Business major is active in Phi Chi Theta and the Conservation Club.

Brian Kerr (Major/Napoleon) is a senior Marketing major from West Grove, PA. Brian's last performance at JC was as Sir Francis Chesney in "Charlie's Aunt." Besides drama, Brian is a DJ at WKVR-FM and a member of the international club.

Freshman Bryan Miller (Boxer/Pilkington) has worked in the Penn State Practicum, the 1986-87 U.S. Chorus at Penn State, and was active in a number of plays in high school. Bryan hails from Boalsburg, and is an exploratory student.

Junior Nicole Hudak (Mollie/Muriel) is a transfer from Duquesne University. Nicole is an English major and is co-editor of "Kvasir," JC's literary magazine. "Animal Farm" is Nicole's theatre debut.

Vicki Conway (Clover/Cat) also a junior, hails from Cresson, PA. Vicki, a chemistry major, is also involved in the chem club. She was also active in her highschool productions.

Petra Kleine (assistant to the director) is a biology major from Paderboan, Germany. Petra is a member of the international club and was last seen as Amy in "Charlie's Aunt."

Senior director Tommy Kochel is an International Studies/German major from Lancaster, PA. Tommy has been in a long list of productions at Juniata. His last performance was a Jack Chesney in "Charlie's Aunt." Tommy is also a member of the international club, and he is also a magician.

Besides the unique characterization, Russ Miller, on recorder, will be accompanying Tommy, on guitar, to create the proper mood for the different scenes and also to accompany the cast.

Curtain time is at 8:15pm tonight, and it is also 8:15pm on Saturday night. Admission is free. All you need is your imagination.

Circle K participates in public TV telethon

A group of student volunteers from Juniata College and the school's Circle K Club recently manned the phones on Tuesday, March 15, for March Festival '88 at WPSX-TV. WPSX is the regional public television station located on the University Park Campus at Penn State.

The Juniata group answered pledge calls throughout the evening during prime-time programming on channel three. The students were seen live during several on-air pledge breaks.

"This is a good way for Juniata College to help public television," said Kevin McCullen, Juniata director of development. "It's also appropriate for our students and Circle K to get involved in a service project of this nature."

The Circle K, a branch of Kiwanis International, is just one of many co-curricular clubs and organizations at Juniata.

The WPSX-TV Festival continues throughout March. The goal for the event is $200,000. As of March 15, $115,000 had been raised.

Michael Christy, New Controller at JC

Juniata College President Robert W. Neff has announced the appointment of Michael W. Christy, a former executive vice-president of Gateway Foods of PA, to the position of controller of the College.

Christy comes to Juniata with several years of upper level management experience in wholesale, retail, purchasing, data processing and corporate accounting for Gateway Foods. He had been with the company since 1972.

As controller, Christy will report to the vice-president for financial affairs and will have operational responsibility for general accounting, payroll, accounts receivable/payable, purchasing, budgeting, financial statement preparation and bookstore functions.

A 1964 graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, Christy is an active member of the community serving as trustee and treasurer of the J.C. Blair Hospital. He has served as president of several local efforts including the Huntingdon Rotary Club, the Borough Council of Alexandria and has been the recipient of the Jaycee Distinguished Service Award.

Christy, his wife and four children live in his self-built house at R.D. 4 Huntingdon.

Love Feast Celebration reenacts Last Supper

This year's Love Feast celebration will be Wednesday evening, March 30 at midnight in Ellis Ballroom. The Love Feast is a communion service which enacts the Last Supper. The ritual includes a fellowship meal, the washing of feet, and the bread and cup. It is a service of quiet dignity and simplicity which involves the worshipper in the timeless ritual of the Lord's Supper.

The celebration is open to all and you are cordially invited to attend. Please sign up at the Campus Ministry office by March 28 at 5:00 pm.

Nothing to do Saturday night?
Try the Colonial!!

Guest Curators to lecture on Icons

Vladmir and Natalie Teteriatnikov, two of the foremost experts on iconic art, will present both programs dealing with the art form on Wednesday, April 5, in Juniata College's Shoemaker Gallery. The "Rublev and the Moscow School" will begin at 4:00pm, and "Russian Icons in the Western World will begin at 8:15pm.

The Teteriatnikovs, guest curators of the exhibit, will discuss "Rublev and the Moscow School" (Natalia-April 5) and "Russia Icons in the Western World" (Vladmir-April 5).

The icon exhibit will consist of more than 40 colorfully painted sacred images and will mark the 100th anniversary of the introduction of Christianity to Old Russia in 988 A.D. The exhibit will begin with an opening reception in Shoemaker Gallery at 8pm on April 4 and wil remain at the College through April 30. Regular gallery hours will be Monday through Saturday, noon to 5pm; Tuesday and Thursday evenings, 7 to 9pm; and Sunday 1 to 5pm.

Natalia Teteriatnikov is a graduate of Moscow University and New York University's Institute of Fine Arts. She is currently curator of visual resources at Dumbarton Oaks Research Library in Washington, D.C.

Dr. Teteriatnikov began her career as a teaching assistant at the National Central Scientific Research Laboratory of Restoration and Conservation of Art Objects in Moscow. She has served as a teaching assistant at the State Historical Museum, and the Andrey Rulbev Museum, both of Moscow. Prior to her curatorship at Dumbarton Oaks, she served as a visiting lecturer at St. Vladmir's Orthodox Seminary in Crestwood, NY and as a research assistant in the department of art and archaeology of Princeton University. Dr. Teteriatnikov has lectured and is widely published in the areas of iconography and Russian art forms.

Vladmir Tetriatnikov was employed at Moscow's All-Union Central Scientific Research Institute of Restoration and Conservation of Works of Art from 1964 until his emigration to the United States in 1975. Concurrent with his work at the Institute, Mr. Teteriatnikov worked for Novo-Export as an expert in icon restoration.

Upon his emigration to the United States, Mr. Teteriatnikov established the firm of Teteriatnikov Art Expertise Ltd. The firm provides art consulting and restoration for clients in the United States, Canada, and Europe. As a restorer he has worked primarily on panel painting, polychrome sculpture, enamels, stone, wood, furniture and ivory.

In 1980 following extensive research, Teteriatnikov discovered that the most famous collection of Russian icons in the western world (the George R. Hahn Collection) consisted primarily of fakes. The shock waves created by Teteriatnikov's disclosure are still being felt throughout the art world.

Admission to both presentations will be free, and the public is cordially invited to attend.

Juniata River Rugby ends successful tour

By Bob DiAntonio

The Juniata River Rugby Club ended a successful tour of Georgia and Florida, going 2-2-1 over the week. After manhandling fatigued University of Georgia/Georgia Southern team 22-8, the club moved to Daytona Beach for the National Collegiate Sports Festival Rugby Tournament. Other teams competing in the event were the University of Maine, Val Parisio (Northwestern Indiana), and Navy. After two days of recuperation and sunshine, the Rats faced the Navy "B" team in the first round and took a 6-6 tie. The following day proved more favorable as the club upset Val Parisio, 28-4. Thursday, however, was Juniata's final day of competition. An exhausted group took the field twice that morning, first facing the Navy "A" side who proceeded to blast the team out of the water.

The rats record in the tournament put them in the semi-finals against the University of Maine. This time a severely crippled squad, with three rookies on the field, fought valiantly. However, they could not find the energy to make a strong, late match comeback, and they fell 7-6.

Perhaps "the loss was a blessing in disguise," said Club President Steve DuMars, "by giving the club a few days to enjoy the sun, sand and surf, it prepared them for the start of the regular season next weekend."

Highlights of the trip include: a remote Ranch party South of the Border, South Carolina with 35 Juniata students; sweet Georgia peaches in March; the untouchable Chris Bistline in his element at a Daytona Beach McDonalds; the proclamation of the University of Mount Union at Penroads; Mike "Fatty" Martin successfully defending his belly flop title (with shoes and socks on); "Jailbird-ma man!"; team memeber portfolios during a barbecue; and periodoc visits to the Sugar Shack.

The outstanding rugby performance must go to Dave Farling who tried six times over the five match tour.

The Rats will be at home this weekend. Don't miss the action as the team faces the Altoona Men's Club and Penn State. Also, the Rats will be holding their Rugby Festival on April 9, with Carnegie-Mellon University, Wheeling College, and Dunkirk Men's Club in attendance. Be sure to come out and support your favorite off campus club for a full day of Rugby Fun!!

In addition to this he is also a member of Circle K, treasurer of PA Newman Province and President of CMB. Rich enjoys spending time with friends, playing sports and singing.

Bishop Job to speak on Icon Exhibit

As part of its celebration of the Russian Millenium, Juniata College will host an evening with The Right Reverend Job, Bishop of the Hartford and New England diocese of the Orthodox Church in America, on Tuesday, April 19 from 7 to 9 p.m.

Bishop Job's program will coincide with the exhibit of Russian iconic art in Juniata's Shoemaker gallery and will begin with a prayer service of thanksgiving at 7 p.m. in the gallery. The program will then move to Alumni Hall for Bishop Job's 8:15 p.m. presentation entitled "Theology of the Orthodox Iconography".

The exhibit of sacred images, marking the 1000th anniversary of the introduction of Christianity to Old Russia in 988 A.D., will be on display at Juniata from April 4-30. Regular gallery hours will be Monday through Saturday, noon to 5 p.m.; Tuesday and Thursday evenings, 7 to 9 p.m.; and Sunday, 1 to 5 p.m.

Bishop Job, who has been a painter of icons for over 25 years, served as cantor and choir director at St. John the Baptist Orthodox Church in Black Lick, Pa. from 1970 to 1973. He was ordained to the priesthood on December 22, 1973 and served as rector at St. John's until his 1983 consecration to the Episcopate of the Orthodox Church of America. He was installed as the Ruling Bishop of the Diocese of New England following his consecration.

Admission to Bishop Job's presentations will be free. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Wilson Fellowship winner speaks at JC

Juniata College will host James Gallagher, national and foreign affairs editor of the Chicago Tribune, during week-long activities which began on Monday and will run through Friday, March 25. Mr. Gallagher will be in Huntingdon as part of the Woodrow Wilson Visiting Fellows Program.

Mr. Gallagher will take part in various activities throughout the week including classroom presentations, a visit with local high school gifted students, dinner with area high school teachers, and a presentation before the Huntingdon Rotary Club entitled "Gorbachev".

The highlight of the week was the public lecture on Tuesday, March 22 entitled "What About the Russians?" The program was jointly sponsored by The Baker Institute for Peace and Conflict Studies and the Arts and Lectureship Council.

A graduate of Manhattan College majoring in American history, Mr. Gallagher received his master's degree in American literature and linguistics from New York University. He has had a variety of experiences during his 16 years as a journalist. Prior to his tenure with the Chicago Tribune, he held positions with The Woodbridge News Tribune in New Jersey and The Detroit Free Press. In addition to his current position, he has served the Tribune as a national correspondent, as the Moscow bureau chief from 1977-82, and as the science and education editor.

His experience as a journalist and his experience and travel in the U.S.S.R. are the two main areas of expertise he will share with the Juniata community. His unique perspective as an American parent sending his children to Soviet schools is an additional area that will be discussed.

Mr. Gallagher is currently completing a documentary film in conjunction with Bill Kurtis of CBS-TV, on the Chernobyl accident.

The Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation is a publicly supported nonprofit educational organization, named after the former college president who was dedicated to the ideals of good teaching and education in the nation's service. The Visiting Fellows program was begun in 1973 with a $1 million grant from the Lilly Endowment, and has since received grants from more than 50 other foundations and corporations.

Individuals selected for fellowships are representatives of a wide range of non-academic professions who spend a week on college campuses exchanging ideas with students, faculty, administrators, and community members. In addition to Juniata, some of the other participating colleges include DePauw University, Colgate University, Skidmore College, and Allegheny College.

Concert Choir labeled a success in East

During spring break, while many Juniata College students where relaxing at home or in Florida, the members of the Juniata Concert Choir where on a tour of the northeastern part of the country.

The tour, which lasted ten days, included stops in Boston, New York, and Washington, D.C. The choir performed nine formal concerts, including two on the first Sunday and a final performance in the National Cathedral in Washington.

The choir consists of 45 Juniata students and is directed by Dr. Joseph Figg. The group was also accompanied on tour by Mrs. Dottie Hershberger, the Director of Alumni Relations. The choir tour serves the college as both a means of maintaining alumni relations and recruiting new students to the college.

Final concerts of the 1988 season were given Sunday, in the First Presbyterian Church of Tyrone, PA, and Monday in Oller Hall.

Each performance included 13 pieces, two were spirituals and two were the popular showtunes "I Dreamed A Dream" and "New York, New York." Except for the three Sunday church services, the tour show also included songs by various soloists and the group "Class."

"Class," which performs regularly on campus, brought ten members on tour. The soloists included Marianne Blatchley, April Evans, Patricia Fogel, Jennifer Graham, Doug Heart, John Petrovic, Doug Spotts, and a duet by Lora Willitts and Ty Furman.

The highlight of this section of the program was the Master of Ceremonies, John Petrovic. His humorous antics made even the New England crowds laugh. At one stop, he even had the audacity to call for a juggling act, which was provided by junior Doug Kovach, in the middle of the performance.

It should be pointed out that the choir did not restrict its performances to just the churches they visited. Impromtu coincerts were given over a lunch break at the Lancaster Farmer's Market, after a tour of the Old North Church in Boston, and finally in the Boston subway.

The latter concert, given initially from both sides of the tracks and continuing in the subway car itself, almost led to an altercation between choir members and three local youths. The choir concluded the subway session with its favorite piece, "Locus Iste A Deo Factus Est," by Anton Bruckner. Ironically, this song was written to the dedication of churches and translates into "This place is made by God."

With the concert season over, the choir has now turned its attention and talent towards the production of the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical "Carousel." The dramatics, the singing, and the orchestra will be directed by Dr. Howard Krouch. Dr. Joseph Figg, and Dr. Ibrook Tower, respectively. The choreography will be directed by freshman Melanie Hartsough.

"Carousel" will show in Oller Hall on April 21, 22, and 23. The leading characters will be portrayed by seniors Roy Santa Croce, Molly Bagwell, Mark Heinley, and junior Marianne Blatchley. Supporting roles will be played by Carol Carlisle, Dave Fouse and Ty Furman.

Jazz Great to perform at PSU

Faddis will show State College his inspiring talent in a performance with the award winning Penn State jazz ensemble, Centre Dimensions, at 7pm, Saturday, March 26, in the Recital Hall of the Music Building on Penn State's University Park campus.

Faddis will be performing with the jazz ensemble Centre Dimensions, an 18-piece ensemble made of the top jazz students in the Penn State School of Music. Conductor and faculty member Dan Yoder is pleased to have the opportunity to perform with Faddis. "He is the state-of-the-art trumpet player today--the heir apparent to Dizzy Gillepsie himself," said Yoder. "He is an inspiring role model for brass students."

The program will include two Gillespie arrangements "Samba Hia" and "Lover, Come Back To Me;" Chick Corea's "Con Alma;" Theolonius Monk's "Round Midnight;" "The Fadd" and "I Remember Clifford."

Faddis comes to Penn State to present a master class at the 1988 Brass Performance Seminar on Saturday afternoon. He hopes to show students that being good is important, but there is life after music. "You can lock yourself away and practice for 10 hours a day," Faddis said, "But you will not be living life that way. Other musicians that you interact with will see that. Your ability to live life will show."

Admission to the performance will be $2, and tickets will be available at the door only.

Faddis' visit is made possible through a grant by the Equal Opportunity Planning Committee (EOPC).

New Faculty Member announced for JC

Dr. Donald F. Durnbaugh, professor of church history at Bethany Theological Seminary in Oak Brook, Illinois, joins the Juniata faculty for the 1988-89 academic year as the thirteenth J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity. He succeeds Dr. W. Ward Gasque, sheppard professor of biblical studies at Regent College in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Dr. Durnbaugh received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Manchester College in 1949 and holds a Master of Arts degree from the University of Michigan. He earned his Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania in 1960 and did advanced study at the Phillips-Universitaet Marburg, Germany.

He has traveled extensively throughout the world and has taught church history at numerous colleges, including a four-year stay at Juniata from 1952-62. His experience abroad includes trips to Austria, Germany, Poland, Czechoslavakia, Yugoslavia, Switzerland, France, USSR, Italy, Belgium, United Kingdom, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, England and Spain.

Dr. Durnbaugh has received several honors and awards from his outstanding accomplishments. He was a University of Pennsylvania Scholar and University of Pennsylvania Fellow. He has received the Colonial History Award from the Colonial Society of Pennsylvania and the Alumni Award from Manchester College.

An effective speaker, Dr.Durnbaugh has presented numerous lectures during his career, but perhaps he is best known for his effectiveness as an educator and a writer.

The author of 10 books, his works include: "European Origins of the Brethren", "The Brethren in Colonial America" and "The Believers' Church: The History and Character of Radical Protestantism." He has been the editor of several publications and his articles have appeared in more than 20 reference manuals and journals including the "Encyclopedia Britannica", "Encyclopedia Americana", "Journal of American History" and "American People's Encyclopedia".

His accomplishments in the literary, educational and religious communities have earned him recognition in "Who's Who in Religion", "Who's Who in the Midwest" and "Who's Who in America".

Students are reminded that they can register for Durnbaugh's fall course, "Evanglicalism: Historical Background and Present Reality" during pre-registration. This course pursues the definition of Evangelicalism in historical perspective, by distinguishing it from liberalism on one front and fundamentalism on the other. Its rise in visibility and political influence in the 1970s and 1980s is analyzed. Parachurch agencies and the phenomenon of "televangelists" are described, with assessment of their relationship to traditional church structures.

Men's tennis team gearing toward season

By Becky Abraham

Juniata College opened its 1988 men's tennis season on Saturday, March 19, with a conference match against Wilkes. Inclement weather, however, caused the postponement of the match. Coach Rob Ash has five of the top six players back from last year's 8-4 team, and they're hungry.

"We have the nucleus for another outstanding season", said Ash. "We tied for the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest title last year (4-1 record), but missed going to the playoffs because of the tie-breaker system. That has made the players more eager and confident heading into the season than I've ever seen in my eight years here."

Senior Danny Corazzi, one of the best players in the MAC, and classmate Mark Kearns will anchor the lineup for a fourth season. Juniors Chris Glover and Rich Gottschall are back for their third springs while sophmore Jon Seckinger returns after an excellent rookie campaign. Seniors Dave Carter and Todd Mullen, sophmore Mike Welker, and freshmen Jeff Clukey and Scott Peck will add their experience to the team in hopes of a winning season.

Ash will need to replace graduate Doug Yokoyama, who had a great season in 1987. THe veteran coach feels he must find a solid sixth player, and settle on a doubles lineup earlier this year with at least two winning combinations out of the three spots.

"Overall, I'm very optimistic," said Ash."We hope to have good competition for the sixth starting position. If our vets can all equal or better their individual records from last year and we find the doubles combinations, we should contend again for the MAC Northwest section title."

The complete schedule: March 29 St. Francis; April 4 Elizabethtown; 6 at Susquehanna; 8 at St. Vincent; 11 Lock Haven; 13 at York; 16 at IUP; 18 Lycoming; 20 Gettysburg; 21 at St. Francis; 23 at Albright; 25 Dickinson; and 27 Messiah.

Wrestling wrap-up, future looks good

The Juniata College wrestling team finished 19th out of 21 teams in the Middle Atlantic Conference tournament on February 16-17 after an 0-6 regular season. However, veteran coach Bill Berrier can look to a promising future.

The young Indians wrestled with four freshmen and only one senior in a lineup that was handicapped by forfeits at the 118 and 126 pound weight classes.

"I think we wrestled very well," said Berrier about the MAC tournament finale at Messiah. "We scored three times the amount of points we did last year despite our lack of depth. We had some nice individual efforts."

Juniata scored 6 3/4 points, ahead of Lebanon Valley and Upsala. Lycoming outdueled Delaware Valley for the MAC title.

"The stronger schools really dominated," said Berrier. "There were a whole raft of teams below ten points, so we were really five points or so out of 12th spot and the middle of the pack."

Senior Larry Krizner of Dunbar completed his fine career with an 11-9 record at 190. Krizner lost two one-point decisions in the MAC tournament.

The only other Juniata wrestler with a winning record in 1987-88 was John Swanson. A junior from Warren, Swanson finished 11-7-1 in the 150-pound class.

Junior Lee Abramovitz of Pottstown was 3-10 at heavyweight while classmate Tim Crowley of Summit, NJ, was also 3-10.

Sophomore John Telenko wrestled well at the MAC tournament in a tough 167-pound weight class. A 1-2 performance set the Elizabethtown native's record at 7-9.

Berrier's talented freshmen foursome was led by Steve Manderbach of Leesport and Jim Weaver of Johnstown who completed their seasons with 5-11 and 2-8 marks respectively after MAC's. Freshmen D.J. Koriewitz (1-6) of Johnstown and Jeff Sloan (4-10) of Wayne gained valuable regular season experience.

Berrier, who completed his 28th season as head coach, will now look to fill the lower weight class and find some depth for next year.

Johnstown Senior named to all MAC team

Juniata College senior Wayne Paul of Johnstown was selected to the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division All-Star First Team in voting by the league coaches. He was a second team pick last year.

A 6'2 guard, Paul helped the Indians to a 17-9 record in 1987-88 for the most wins in school history and first winning season since 1976-77. Juniata won the MAC Northwest section title with an 11-5 mark and qualified for the playoffs for the first team since 1975-76.

Paul led the team in scoring with a 17.7 points per game average. He was eigth in the MAC in scoring, and fourth in field goal percentage (.562) and free throw percentage (.808).

Paul was joined on the All-MAC North team by forwards John Milano of Drew and Jim Hepfer of Elizabethtown, center Floyd Adams of FDU-Madison and forward J.P. Andrejko of Scranton, who was also selected as the M.V.P. of the league. Roger Kendall of FDU-Madison was "coack of the year" and Rob Grim of King's was chosen as "rookie of the year".

"Wayne had a fine season", said Juniata coach Dan Helm. "He was in contention for player of the year, and was the only guard selected to the first team."

Paul was also the only guard on the National Association of Basketball Coaches Division III Middle Atlantic All-District team.

A Richland High School product, Paul finished his collegiate career as Juniata's fourth-leading scorer with 1,402 points. He is a Personnel Management major at Juniata and the son of Kenneth and Leona Paul of Oakridge Drive, Johnstown.

Women's tennis preview

Six letterwinners return this spring for the Juniata College women's tennis squad. The Indians were 5-4 last year for rookie coach Ray Pfrogner.

Leading the returnees is senior Laura Beck of York. Juniors Lynda Cass of Chaddsford, and Lara Mann of Waynesboro, VA are also back in '88. Sophomores Aimee Buckbee of Warwick, Sue London of Clarks Summit and Julie Thaler of Easton were also letterwinners last year.

Pfrogner lost Alison Kellock to graduation while junior Georgia Stanaitis is studying abroad this year in England

Juniata finished 3-2 last year in Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest section matches. Scranton took the section title last year followed by Susquehanna and Juniata.

The Indians will face a tough schedule, including section matches with Scranton, Susquehanna, Wilkes, Lycoming, and King's. Dickinson and Elizabethtown will also present stiff challenges.

Juniata opens its 13th women's tennis season on March 29 at Penn State-Altoona campus.

McDonald's Players of the Month named for March

Seniors Sue Grubb of Elizabethtown and Wayne Paul of Johnstown have been named McDonald's Juniata College athletes for the month of February.

Grubb, a 5'7 forward for the Women's basketball team, completed her outstanding career as the team's top scorer and rebounder this season. She is second in both career scoring and rebounding at Juniata.

Paul, a 6'2 guard, was the leading scorer for the Men's basketball team, which set a school record for wins with a 17-9 finish. Wayne finished his career as the fourth top scorer in school history and was chosen to the NABC Middle Atlantic All-District team.

Grubb is the daughter of Lavonne Grubb of Ridge Road, Elizabethtown. She is an English/Communications major.

A Personnel Management major, Paul is the son of Kenneth an Leona Paul of Oakridge Drive, Johnstown.

B-ball team travels south; beats MAC foe Albright

Juniata College opened its 1988 Baseball season this past Spring Break at Ferrum College. The Indians played seven games in Virginia before opening their Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest schedule on March 19 at Albright.

Veteran coach Bill Berrier will have 15 freshmen and newcomers on a roster that returns ten lettermen from last year's 14-16 squad. Although rebuilding, Berrier sees reasons to be positive.

"We are going to have to play with a very young lineup," says Berrier. "However, with the incoming players our defense is going to be stronger this year than in a long time, especially on the infield. I think our pitching can hold its own too."

Junior second baseman George Zanic, a second-team All-MAC pick last spring, will quarterback the infield while classmate Jim Tomasetti returns to third base after missing most of last season with a shoulder injury. Sophomore Daryle Dobos is the top prospect at first base.

Freshman Craig Eby will push to take over at shortstop. Berrier expects other rookies Dave Crissman, Kevin Neff and Nick Spadea to play key back-up roles on the infield.

Senior Dan Webb, last year's top hitter and a second-team All-MAC selection, will do most of the catching. Freshman John Bulger and junior Dave Reed will back him up.

On the mound, senior Kurt Speiss is expected to be a top performer. Junior outfielder Paul Hayduk, Tomasetti and sophomore Sean Filliben also add experienced pitching arms. Freshmen Andy Larmore, Eby and Neff could also be called upon to take the hill.

Senior Dan Sunderland could help in the outfield, where Berrier will use Hayduk, Neff, sophomore Vic Huber and transfer Scott Close. Outfielder Amo Cianci and catcher Reed are front-runners for the designated hitter assignment.

"I'm extremely hopeful," says Berrier. "Along with our infield, we have some outfield speed and good arms. It's just a question of if we hit."

The Tribe, which was 6-6 in the MAC Northwest section last spring, again faces a demanding schedule.

"We went down to our last two league doubleheaders last year," recalls Berrier. "Hopefully, we can get to that position again this year, but win those key games."

In the season opener the Indians lost a heartbreaker to Ferrum 4-3. Juniata, who traditionally has problems down south, played inspired baseball all week long but found themselves on the short end of the stick at the end of each outing. George Zanic went 2 for 5 and scored 2 of JC<"s runs. Kevin Neff's solo homer in the top of the fifth tied the ball game at two , but Ferrum answered with two runs in the bottom half of the inning to gain the win. Daryle Dobos had a chance to tie the game in the ninth with a man on third and two outs, but struck out looking to end the game.

The second day in Virginia seemed like Deja Vu to the Indians. The 11th ranked (Division III) Ferrum Panthers handed the Tribe their second 1 run loss in consecutive days. This time it took 12 innings and a throwing error by pitcher Kevin Neff. Amo Cianci led the way at the plate giong 3 for 3 while Neff and Jim Tomasetti were 4 for 6 and 3 for 6 respectively. Coach Berrier noted his Indians were playing good baseball for this early in the season.<P<MSJuniata now was to face an even tougher southern squad in Division I Liberty University. After sticking to a 1-1 tie in the fourth, Liberty exploded for 9 runs in the bottom of the fifth. Kevin Neff added the last Indians runs of the game with a solo blast in the bottom of the ninth. That was Neff's third homer in as many games. The final score was 15-3.

JC lost the last game of the trip 12-9 to host Randolph-Macon. The late start of the Indian bats, and the quick start of R-M's (who opened a 5-0 lead after the first 2 innings) led to the Indian's demise. Juniata was led by Dan Webb's 3 for 4 effort. The Indians traveled to Albright this past Saturday for their first Conference action, and will travel today to Western Maryland. Then they will host Lock Haven at 1:00 on Saturday.

In the conference opener with Albright, JC came out the victors. Mike Reed won the first game with Scott Close recording the save in game one. Kurt Speiss recorded the victory in the second game of the twinbill. Kevin Neff hit his fifth homer of the year in game two and George Zanic went 3 for 6 on the day.

Softball season underway

The 1988 Juniata College softball season was delayed on Saturday when inclemate weather caused the postponement of its first scheduled game with St. Francis College. The Indians will play a challenging 26-game schedule with eight Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest section contests.

Third-year coach Dick Scialabba sees the season as one of much promise, but certainly no guarantees. His Indians will rely upon a strong but untested freshmen class to make immediate contributions in an attempt to improve last year's 13-13 record.

"We'll be a very young team," says Scialabba. "However, our players come from solid high school backgrounds. Plus, we have some excellent talent, including one of the top pitchers in this area, freshman Kate Bradley of Phillipsburg."

Bradley will be the successor to graduated ace Kathy Bednarczyk, who pitched virtually every inning the past two years. Scialabba lost five other letterwinners along with Bednarczyk.

The Tribe does return five letterwinners, including senior first baseman Sue Stump and classmate Jen Wade, who was studying abroad last spring. Junior catcher Emily Beach is back along with sophomores Roberta Goschler (2B), Kirsten Grell (3B) and Pam Lau (SS).

However, another veteran that hoped to return will be sidelined again. Junior Laura Hoffman, who started as a freshman, will miss her second straight season due to a knee injury.

"We are going to work hard on the fundementals and go from there," says Scialabba. "The girls have a positive attitude and are looking forward to a successful season.

The complete schedule: March 19-St. Francis; 26-Susquehanna; 29-Gettysburg; April 5-at Wilson; 7-at St. Francis; 9-Wilkes; 13-Messiah; 16-F&M; 19-at York; 21-Lebanon Valley; 23-Elizabethtown; 27-Chathan; 30-Dickinson. (All doubleheaders).

Men's track preview

Juniata College head coach Alan Hartman is hoping quality is more important than quantity in the 1988 men's track season.

"This year's squad may be few in numbers but it doesn't lack quality," said Hartman. "Since a majority of our meets are triangular in nature we should be competitive. Our strength is probably in the field events.

Chuck Long, Bill Mundy and Brent Bittner throw javelin. Jeff Burket, Roger Long and Randy Martin will throw shot with Long, Martin and Jim Weaver throwing discus. Jim Golden will high jump and pole vault while Eric Arone should long and triple jump.

Senior Frank Phelps will lead the sprinting events with help from Eric Mitchell. John Flesher, Bill Creps, Mundy and Martin will work at the 400 meters. Jeff Moseman comes off a fine cross-country season to give some greatly needed help in the long distance runs. Daniel Cain, Arone and Weaver will cover the hurdles while Mike Cottle and Scott Harper will run with the relay teams and do some sprint events.

Hartman lost just one senior to graduation from a 3-5 team last spring, but he was a big one. "Doug Spayd consistently won the hurdles and ran the anchor leg of our relays," said Hartman. "He's a significant point-scorer we need to replace."

The Indians have three home meets this spring, and look forward to the completion of Juniata's new stadium and track for next year.

Links Outlook

Coach Duane Stroman knows the top portion of his Juniata College golf lineup. However, he's not as sure about the lower part. Depth will be a key factor for the Indian golfers in 1988.

The top returnees, juniors Tim Garvin and Mike Speaker are expected to play at the first two spots for Juniata. Stroman is also looking for junior Cubby Davis and sophomores Jeff Bertram and Jeff Jacquat to contribute. A leading freshman could be Melvin Parker.

"I'm really up in the air in terms of how this season will turn out," said Stroman. "We'll just hope we can get some practice time during qualifying, and let the lineup sort itself out."

Stroman's rather inexperienced squad faces a demanding schedule this spring. The Tribe has ten playing dates, including two tournaments.

One change this spring is that the Indians will be unable to compete in the Middle Atlantic Conference tournament due to a conflict with commencement exercises. Last spring the Tribe was 16th out of 20 teams at MAC's after finishing 4-8 overall.

"We scheduled more matches to make up for missing the MAC tournament," said Stroman. "The tournaments at Dickinson and Susquehanna will be large and very competitive."

Women injury plauged

Coach Alan Hartman's 1988 Juniata College women's track team has been hit by preseason injury problems, but hopes are still high. The Indians look to improve on last year's 3-7 record.

"The injuries could hurt us," said Hartman. "Laurie Snow has been hampered by a shoulder injury and many of our distance runners are plagued by cross-country aches. Still, the spirit is good."

Snow, a NCAA national qualifier in the javelin last year as a freshman, may be restricted to just the sprint events because of her injury. Angie Orwig will help in the sprints.

Diane Hontz will run hurdles while promising freshman Lisa Baker and sophomore Leigh Trautman should go at 400 meters. Crickett Julius, Shelly Stepke, Sue Gulla and Helene Tingle are the long-distance runners.

In the field, Renee Malkin and Louise Gloss should long and triple jump with Malkin and Ann Telfian high jumping. Betsy Halkais will throw shot and discus.

"We lack depth, but the team has several hard-working and dedicated women set on reaching individual goals," said Hartman. "Upon completion of our new stadium/track facility this summer, I believe there will be a significant change in our program. I'm very excited about the future."

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXVIII No. 20 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 March 31, 1988

This past Wednesday Wellness Day came to Juniata. Here a JC student takes advantage of the many free tests available. More of Wellness Day inside.

Will Congress raise the minimum wage? Will it help or hurt?

A bill now in Congress that would raise the minimum wage from $3.35 an hour to $4.65 in the next few years might make it harder for students to find summer and part-time jobs, campus placement officers say, but probably would help them more than it would hurt them.

A Senate subcommittee approved its version of the bill two weeks ago, setting the stage for a final congressional vote before the end of 1988.

Students, the bill's advocates say, need the extra money a higher minimum wage would bring.

"The minimum wage has stayed the same for seven years," said Jay Harvey, an aide to bill cosponsor Sen. Edward Kennedy (D.-Mass.). "Tuition has increased tremendously during that same period, while financial aid has dropped."

"The minimum wage should be increased," agreed Veleria Shavers of Kentucky State University's career placement office. "Since it hasn't been raised in seven years, the cost of living has outpaced earnings."

Shavers also agreed that businesses, forced to pay more, may not be able to afford to have as many jobs to offer students.

"But", Shavers maintained, "students will always be able to find part-time jobs. The jobs will still be there. They may just have to look harder for them."

For more than a year, Congress has been debating raising the federal minimum wage about the current $3.35 an hour floor. The legislation, cosponsored by Kennedy and Rep. Augustus Hawkins (D-Cal.) would, if approved increase the minimum wage during a 3-year period to $4.65.

Kennedy's version of the bill also would revise the minimum wage in the fourth year to a rate one-half of the "average privat, non-supervisory, non-agricultural hourly wage as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics," Harvey reported.

Harvey argued that raising the minimum wage would motivate people on welfare to enter the job market, would ease the financial burden of the working poor and give students a better chance to save money for college costs.

An increased minimum wage, said Harvey, will "put cash in the pockets of people who will spend it," stimulating economic growth.

But critics of the plan--including the U.S. Department of Labor and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, as well as many businesses--say increased labor costs will force employers to reduce the numbers of jobs and hours they can offer workers.

"Whenever there's an increase in the minimum wage, there's an increase in costs," said Junius Kaufman of the Tulane University student employment office.

But Christopher Pratt, the director of career services at Seton Hall University, said the minimum wage debate may be a moot point.

He doesn't foresee fewer jobs because of an increased minimum wage; he sees fewer workers because of demographic trends. The pool of 18-to 24-year-olds is shrinking, he said, and businesses will have to pay higher wages anyway if they are to recruit and retain employees.

"This labor shortage," said Pratt, "will go on well into the next decade."

Harvey agreed, pointing out that in many states with low employment rates--he cited Massachusetts as one--even fast-food restaurants which normally pay minimum wage have had to increase their hourly salaries to $5 or $6 an hour to keep workers.

That labor shortage, said Marylin De Tomasi of the Southern Illinois University at Carbondale placement office, already has given college students as edge in the summer and part-time job market,

'88 Grads are getting more job offers

Students of the Class of 1988 generally are getting more job offers and higher starting salaries than last year's grads, the College Placement Council (CPC) reported Feb. 12.

In its preliminary assessment of how student job hunting has progressed since September, 1987, the CPC found the stock market crash of October 19, had virtually no effect on corporate recruiting of new grads, even those with Masters of Business Administration degrees.

Petroleum engineering majors are doing the best, getting average starting salary offers of $33,432, said CPC spokeswoman Dawn Gulick.

The CPC, Northwestern and Michigan State University all publish forecasts on recruiting at campuses. In their forecasts they predicted the crash would narrow student's job prospects somewhat as corporations, worried that a recession would follow, said they were cutting their hiring by 5%, but it doesn't seemlike companies have scaled down their hiring.

Starting salary offers are rising. Accounting grads are starting off at $23,376 on the average, a 7.5% increase over the average July, 1987, offer.

Among the other majors the average starting salaries reported were: mechanical engineers ($29,100), Allied health graduates ($24,048), nursing students ($24,444), banking and finance grads ($22,056), human resources majors ($19,284), hotel and restaurant students (19,032), advertising majors ($18,576) and journalism grads ($18,624).

Jose Nieto selected to teach courses

Jose C. Nieto, professor of religion and history at Juniata College, has been selected to teach two courses at the McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, Ill. this spring.

Nieto will present "Spanish Church Reformers in Spain" and "Spanish Church Reformers in Exile". His program will be an intensive course to provide historical and theological knowledge of the origins and the history of the reformation in Spain among Catholics and non-Catholics and implications of the reformation on Latin America.

The courses will be targeted toward students entering the ministry with a Spanish speaking background. These students will eventually be located in major cities with large populations of Spanish speaching people.

The Baptist Theological Seminary, the Lutheran Theological Seminary and the Chicago Divinity School with all participate in the program.

Nieto has also contributed to the recently published book "The Spanish Inquisition and the Inquisitorial Mind". The Juniata College professor addresses the topic of "The Non-Mystical Nature of the Sixteenth-Century Alumbrados of Toledo."

Are you sick of going to your mailbox, just to find another free magazine? They're referred to fondly as junk mail and the chances of you receiving any is far less after April 4 when the cost of a stamp will increase to 25 cents, in addition to this, bulk rate mailings, will also increase.

As the situation exists now, companies can still afford to send me junk mail. After the increase, though, I'm terrified that I may only be receiving the ever-feared "air" mail. I cannot complain about this, however, because the decision also carries with it some good points.

There are those rare occasions when a far-away friend decides to stifle the breeze of my mailbox with a letter. It is on these phenomenal occasions that I want my mail on time, as soon as humanly possible. Without the increase in price, this might not have been possible. Prices have risen everywhere and in order to compete with companies like Federal Express, the US Postal Service must increase their prices to provide the services we have taken for granted. The money is needed to keep all employees on-the-job, as well as to keep efficiency high.

The consequence of not raising the price could be a shift from public to private enterprise. This is comparable with the split up of MA Bell three years ago. Since then, in my opinion, the efficiency of phone service has declined tremendously. The problem with this new free enterprise system is that not everyone has received the choice of what company they want to do business with. Do we want the same competition with something as precious to us as our mail?

In the end, the rise in price for stamps may be beneficial, but it will be especially difficult for college students to recognize this because of the assumed decline in junk mail. So, beware Mrs. Glenny for the strong winds that are about to pass through Ellis.

Did you "Catch a Wave" this past weekend? No, don"t worry you didn't miss Spring Fling. On the other hand, you did miss what was easily the best party of the year. The Wave Party, which swept through East Apartments on both Friday and Saturday nights, drew crowds of students to a virtual beer bath unlike any that has been seen on the Juniata campus since the banning of the open keg parties two years ago.

In light of the heightening student-perceived administrative phobia pertaining to kegs and alcohol in general, I thought it would be good to point out that the Wave Party was a success for students in more than one capacity.

First of all, there were no extreme behavioral problems. Nora Dickey, the East Houses Residence Director, said that students did a "good job keeping people (drinkers) in the rooms" and that "Overall, it (the party) went pretty well."

Next, the students showed that they could be creative resourceful, and responsible. The Wave Party, which involved the consumption of kegs from the first tower to the eight tower on both nights, was conceptualized last year by Chuck Cummings and organized by Jim Tufano and Maria Yurkovich. The kegs, of which I have now accounted for 20, were purchased in Mt. Union at a prearranged discount price. The kegs were consumed within the guidelines of the college rules and at this point I have no news of any students being "written up".

Finally, the students had a good time. Attendance at the Wave Party was extraordinarily high for a 1988 Juniata party. Few residents of East Houses went home for the weekend. Although there is some student sympathy and understanding for the administrative position, a popular solution to the attendance problem at JC lounge parties would be to loosen the alcohol policy and once again permit the open keg party. In the same breath, it is easy to say that futher restrictions within the alcohol policy would severely damage campus morale and further aid this school in becoming a suitcase college.

On behalf of the residents of East Houses and the student body, I would like to thank all those who helped make the Wave Party such a success.

MANUFACTURING MANAGEMENT TRAINING PROGRAM

R.R. Donnelley & Sons Company, a Fortune 500 communications company, has unique opportunities for high potential college graduates who have the desire to develop their managerial style by participation in a Management Training Program leading to initial placement as a first-line Manufacturing Supervisor.

This program consists of assignments/projects in Production and Administrative Departments, a direct working relationship with people and is designed to provide a broad base of experience to enable the candidate to grow in higher levels of line management. Candidates must be willing to work shift rotation and overtime.

This opportunity is designed for achievement-oriented individuals who can demonstrate analytical/independent problem-solving skills, a leadership ability, sensitivity to people, mechanical comprehension, and adaptability. Candidates must have a BS Degree in a technical discipline. Preferred consideration will be given to Engineering Majors.

We offer excellent career growth opportunities in a stable and growing industry. We are the undisputed leader in our field and have unparalleled growth opportunity for those with a sincere interest in working in a "hands-on" manufacturing environment in a dynamic, high technology industry.

Qualified applicants should send their resume to:

A symposium of American foreign policy

Crisis and Choice, a symposium of American foreign policy will take place in Washington D.C. August 14-26, 1988. An optional third week seminar on American-Soviet Relations will take place August 7-13. This symposium is designed for students that are interested in foreign afairs and American government. Colleges typically grant 2-3 academic credits for successful completion of the symposium. The registration deadline for the program is May 2, 1988.

The Internship Initiative in the Independent Sector is designed for students who have demonstrated leadership qualities, and who are interested in working with senior level executives in national nonprofit organizations and foundations. The program runs for one semester, and students are required to have a 3.0 minimum grade point average, and a sophomore standing or above. The application deadline is June 1 for the Fall Semester 1988.

Both of these programs give students a unique opportunity to experience Washington, and work directly with our leaders. If you would like any more information about Washington Center programs, please feel free to contact Jennifer L'Herbette at (202)624-8023.

By Jen Wade

As April approaches and the countdown to graduation hurries on, I thought it appropriate to reflect back on some of the changes that have (or have not) taken place during the four years the Class of 88 has spent here at Juniata.

If you think about it, we have lived through some of the most drastic changes in the college's history. We have experienced an upsetting switch from trimesters to semesters. We have seen a revolution at the top. We have seen charging privileges at the bookstore and affordable check cashing thrown to the wind. And, most disturbingly, we are now forced to bring our own alcohol to lounge parties. The days of tolerance are over, and more changes could be on the way in the very near future.

But, throughout these trying times of readjustment, however, one thing has remained constant: things are COOL. Campus slang tends to come and go fairly regularly, but "cool" just won't quit. It was here when we arrived, it was here before us, and it will undoubtedly play a vital role in the vocabulary of future generations of Juniata undergrads.

Because "cool", a versatile word, lends itself to many forms of expression, it's used frequently by just about everyone, sometimes without even thinking, like a knee-jerk reaction. If something is good, the automatic response is "Cool!" (or one of the many, many variations thereof). If something is not so good, the response is, "Oh, that's cool!" And the list goes on. Adapting the word to any situation is easily done. Perhaps only one other word in the English language is as versatile and as expressive as "cool".

Habits, whether good or bad, are hard to break. When I went to Leeds last year, I had to try really hard not to say "cool". At least at first, I had to force myself to say "ace" or "brill" instead. But, because British students are a fond of them as we are of "cool", it didn't take too long to catch on.

Still, I can't honestly say those words completely took the place of "cool". There were times when the JC sland just kind of slipped out. And when it did, it never failed to stun, shock, and surprise.

I remember a time in late May. Exams started in about a week, and revision had lost what little interest it might have had in the first place. Two of my medic friends and I were walking down the street when one asked me if I wanted to help work the door at a MedSoc dance that weekend. Still retaining some of my Juniata ways, I naturally asked what was in it for me. When she said, "free beer", I got quite excited ("free" being the key word, or course). In my excited state a simple "Yes" would not suffice. Naturally, I said "Cool!" Both of them had a good laugh about that one.

There was another time, but it involved another word, so I won't go into it here. Let me just say the experience I'm thinking of was definitely uncool, requiring the use of much stronger expression.

1988-89 Residential Assistants have been selected by committee

By Deb Dougherty

Most residents on campus have an image of what the ideal resident assistant should be like. Anyone who is judgemental, needs an ego booster, or lacks communication skills will not be good. If someone is outgoing, fun loving, and easy to talk to, then he will be a good RA. The selection process allows the present residential life committee to interact with the candidates and determine which of the qualities they possess.

The selection process can be a very rigorous, but fulfilling experience. Thirty students recently completed the selection process and will be RA's for the various residence halls for the 1988-89 academic year.

This process is separated into three parts. The first is the filling out of the application. Each candidate's application is judged on how each person responded to the questions and how they stated their answers.

The next part involved interaction with the present resident life staff. The candidates met a minimum of eight resident life members through a group processing and a group interview. Candidates were also evaluated by questionnaires filled out by hallmates, present RA's, and faculty members. All of these were looked at by the RD's, Betty Ann Cherry, Randy Deike, and Nancy Van Kuren.

The final step of the selection process was a one-on-one interview with a member of the professional staff (Deike, Cherry, Van Kuren). These people used the files on the candidates, which had been collected from the previous steps, and asked questions about anything that they were curious or unclear about. The final cuts were then made after the entire residence life staff met to hear final remarks about the candidates.

According to Betty Ann Cherry, the process went surprisingly easy. There was a strong pool, especially for the males, which made the final cut evening fun. Cherry also stated that the 30 people chosen were chosen as a total staff, not individuals. The people who were selected must be able to work well together.

Cherry's overall comment about the process was that she "hoped that the majority of the students who went through the process found it an interesting and helpful process as far as personal observation.

Career Fair for 1988 postponed until fall

By Suzanne Lydic

The Career Planning and Placement Office has had to postpone Juniata's eigth Career Fair originally scheduled for April 6. This event brings new alumni back to the JC campus every other year to reflect on their particular vocational area. However, due to a poor response from participating alumni, the event had to be rescheduled for November 7, 1988.

The Career Fair on November 7 will be held in Baker Refectory with not only alumni being present, but also a new addition--graduate schools. With this addition, students will not only be able to feel out their careers but also explore further schooling.

Contacting alumni for the November fair will be easier since an updated directory is currently being compiled. The focus on alumni will continue to be on those who have just recently entered their vocational areas.

William Martin of the Career Planning and Placement Office suggests that students' participation in returning forms surveying occupational areas of interest would greatly help in planning the fair. If the forms are completed, the fair can be geared more to the particular interests of students.

In addition to the career fair, a job fair is also being offered next February in Harrisburg. Interested college students may be bused to the fair if interested. Approximately 30 separate companies will be represented.

Another program offered through the Career Planning and Placement office is Operation Extern. This program held every other year alternating with the career fair sets up career "shadows" during spring break. This gives students the opportunity to follow and observe first hand the duties of persons working in their particular line of vocational interest. Operation extern is scheduled for spring break '89.

Junior meetings are also being run by the Career Planning and Placement office to assist juniors in vocational and educational placement. Profiles are being done, and literature and video information are offered thru the CP&P library. The electronic memo board in the post box area also offers current placement information.

Martin was also happy to acknowledge the college placement office's consideration of another award for the co-curricular transcript program.

Any questions concerning these programs may be directed to William Martin of the Career Planning and Placement Office in the lower level offices of Ellis.

The Concert Choir bids farewell for the season

By April Evans

On Monday March 21 the Concert Choir presented their final concert of the season (I thought I might point out that fact, since many people were not aware of it judging from the size of the audience.) The choir's repetoir, carefully chosen by its director Joseph W. Figg, ranged from Baroque pieces as "Locus Iste" to show tunes like "New York, New York". The show was presented much as it was on tour, including solo performances by Jennifer Graham, Patty Fogel, Marianne Blatchley, and Class (Class consists of Molly Bagwell, Marianne Blatchley, Lisa Macneal, Jennifer Graham, Leigh Trautwein, Jeff Boshart, Greg Weaver, Doug Heart, David Fouse, and Class director Mark Heinly), and the unique humor of our M.C. John Petrovic.

The conert ended with the upbeat spiritual "Halleluja" after Dr. Figg presented the Seniors to the home audience. The Seniors are Molly Bagwell, Karen Marburger, Carol Carlisle, Patty Fogel, Walt Cupit, Doug Heart, Mark Heinly, Roy Santa Croce, Robert Ferry, John Petrovic, and myself (Yes Dr. Figg, I am a senior).

Speaking as a senior I won"t miss four hours a week of going over and over songs I already know and despise, I won't miss the geeky polyester choir dresses, the piercing sound of Dr. Figg's pitch pipe, being told once again "This is the first time we've sung this music. This is the first time this particular audience has heard this music..", or going around the same block fifty times till we find the church we were supposed to sing at.

But just the same, when Dr. Figg introduced the seniors, I found myself feeling a bit misty. After three years of going through long rehearsals, listening to the same long-winded speeches (we all know by whom), and the tour with its long bus rides (and the craziness that ensues), and nightly performances there's a comraderie that develops between choir members that is hard to imagine unless you've gone through all of this. One learns a lot about people that one spends between three and seven hours a day with on a bus.

Yes, I'm going to miss these people, their crazy antics, their commitment to music, and their individuality. And yes, I'll miss Dr. Figg too. He taught me a lot about music, and about my ability as a singer. Thank you Dr. Figg. And thank you Concert Choir. You're a group of great individuals.

Duquesne University suspends landmark pre-paid tuition plan

The school that pioneered one of the now-standard experiments in helping parents prepay tuition years before their children get to college has dropped the idea.

Just weeks after the Reagan administration asked Congress to adopt a similar plan for the whole country, Duquesne University in Pittsburgh announced March 2 it was suspending its landmark prepaid tuition plan.

"The economy has changed so drastically that we have to re-evaluate the program to make certain it's a good venture,"said Duquesne spokeswoman Ann Rago.

Duquesne attracted national attention in 1985 when it initiated its program that enabled parents to pay it a fixed amount that, by the time their children grew to college age, would cover four years of tuition at the school.

"We have been on the cutting edge by starting this program," Rago said. "Now we will be on the cutting edge in reevaluating it."

At the end of February, moreover, the National Governor's Association cautioned the federal government against adopting similar plans that would "pre-empt" state prepaid tuition efforts that have already been adopted or are under consideration.

The governors also stated their concern that the federal government would use a tuition savings plan as an excuse to reduce student loan and grant programs.

Officials in many states also are anxiously waiting for the Internal Revenue Service to rule on the tax status of pre-paid tuition plans before proceeding with their own.

Duquesne officials said they were stopping their program because the bonds they'd invested in to help pay for it were not earning as much as they had anticipated, and because they had to raise tuition much faster then they had planned.

As a result, their investments would not return enough money to pay the tuition of the children when they finally got to Duquesne.

The 662 families already enrolled in the program will not be affected, said Rago.

Governors, legislatures and private college officials around the country have been weighing variations of the Duquesne plan, which lets parents pay a lump sum that would--after being properly invested by the school or the state--grow into enough money to pay for four years of college by the time the student gets to college age.

Michigan, for one, already has adopted such a plan, but is still waiting for the IRS to rule on its tax status.

The IRS is to decide if it will tax the plan the same way it taxes other investment gains.

If the IRS decides to treat a tuition investment the same way it taxes all other investments, some critics say the plan will provide too little incentive to participate. Other states are postponing establishing such programs until the IRS reaches a decision on the Michigan program.

The Reagan administration also has proposed a plan to give tax breaks to parents who buy savings bonds for their children's tuition.

While the National Governor's Association did not object to the Reagan proposal, spokeswoman Emily Yaung said the governors wanted to "set some parameters for federal action" when they asked the administration not to upset other state savings plans now being debated.

Still others think the plans, like Duquesne's, would be destined to go broke, and require states to bail them out.

"What you may be doing," said Aims McGuiness of the Education Commission of the States, "is shifting the burden of education from the next generation of students through loans to the next generation of governors through state subsidies."

Private Duquesne, without a state to help it, figured it was only making 8.5 percent from the bonds it bought with the money parents had given it in advance.

John Finnerty, the executive vice president of CSB Holdings, a financial services concern, calculated Duquesne needed to make a 14 percents return to cover projected tuition charges. Such a rate, he said, "is an unrealistic objective."

Outward Bound is hard work and fun

In 1988, as Outward Bound begins its twenty-sixth year as this country's poineer adventure based education organization, it will serve over 17,000 men and women who will select from over 500 courses.

Included among this broad spectrum of course offerings are experiencs ranging in diversity from sailing , cycling, backpacking and sea kayaking--to whitewater rafting, mountain climbing, skiing and even dogsledding. "All told our courses this year will use the vast majestic wilderness and urban areas of twenty-two states," notes John F. Raynolds, president of Outward Bound.

Outward Bound"s five schools have been established in geographically diverse locations, giving each a unique personality and character that is ultimately reflected in the courses offered. The five schools are Colorado Outward Bound School, Hurricane Island Outward Bound School (located in Maine), North Carolina Outward Bound School, Pacific Crest Outward Bound School (located in Oregon), and the Voyageur Outward Bound School (located in Minnesota).

"Regardless of which course is selected students are almost certain to discover new things about themselves," explains Mr. Raynolds. "They expect more of themselves, become confident where before they were hesitant. They learn to share, to lead and to follow, and to work together as a group. In safeguarding each other, they form bonds of mutual trust. They discover that many problems can be solved only with the cooperation of all members of a group."

Traveling miles across mountains, lakes or ocean may mean aching muscles, cold feet and wet bodies, but it also brings mutual respect, shared jokes, beautiful sunrises and the pride of shared achievement.

As one Outward Bound student said: "We are better than we know. If we can be made to see it, perhaps for the rest of our lives we will be unwilling to settle for less."

For more information, students are invited to write to Outward Bound USA, 384 Field Point Road, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830 or call toll-free (800)243-8520. The 32-page catalogue gives detailed description, dates and costs for all courses given at each school. Outward Bound is a nonprofit, tax-exempt education organization.

AYH offers summer travel at low cost

World adventure 1988, American youth hostels' new trip catalog offers adventure seekers on a budget a wide selection of 64 trips in 24 different countries worldwide.

Thirteen new itineraries are included in this year's world adventure trip catalog. Trips range from nine days to six weeks in length and are for all ages--from teenagers to adults 50 years and older.

Cycling and hiking trips are geared to all levels of skill and stamina, from beginners to experts. Canoeing, horseback riding and llama trekking round our AYH's trip program for 1988.

AYH has also expended its popular "Europe on-a-shoestring" trip offerings with new international destinations. These trips are designed for the traveler with limited time--all trips are 16 days long and include three weekends. All trips are priced under $2,000 (many under $1,000), complete, including airfare from the U.S., lodging, food and land transportation on the trip.

Cycle the backroads of Pennsylvania dutch country or the American west from Alaska to the Oregon and California coasts. Discover the picturesque villages and castles of Europe with AYH. The hardy cyclist can join the "Trans-Europe Express"--over 1,000 miles from the coast of France to the Czechoslovakian border.

Take a hike with AYH. Our trips range from easy day hiking to rugged mountain backpacking. Explore back country trails in the Adirondack Mountains in upstate New York or the scenic wonders of Washington state and British Columbia, Canada. Hike Mount Blanc, Europe's highest peak, or visit the volcanoes and glaciers of Iceland.

Canoeists can paddle the waters of the great Okefenokee swamp or the remote wilderness of Minnesota's boundary waters area.

World Adventure 1988 trips are limited in size, usually nine participants plus a trained trip leader, and have flexible itineraries.

AYH trips use the inexpensive, dorm-style accommodations of hostels for their overnight lodgings. This worldwide network of over 5,000 hostels features secure lodgings and helps AYH keep trip costs low. No two hostels are alike, from a word war II battleship in Massachusetts to a castle in Germany.

The world adventure 1988 trip catalog is availabe by writing: World Adventure 1988, Pittsburgh AYH, 6300 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. 15232. Please enclose three stamps for postage.

Wellness Day a big success

By Trish Kazmerski

A celebration of Spring and Good Health took place last Thursday in the Kennedy Sport's and Recreation Center. It was the annual Wellness Day sponsored by the Student Health Advisory Committee (SHAC).

Over 250 students, faculty, and employees of JC took advantage of over $200 worth of free medical tests and information provided by the JC Blair Hospital and many other area organizations.

Some services provided were blood sugar testing, blood pressure screening, eyes, ears, and dental screening, as well as nutrition and cancer assessments.

Everyone who came said that they were glad to have the chance to check up on their health. The Health Center would like to remind the JC community that only worrying about your health when you're ill is stupid and dangerous. Periodic check-ups can keep you in good health and remember the Health Center provides all medical services.

Involvement is key to success for graduates

Opportunities for student involvement are an important part of Washington State University, according to Maureen Anderson, vice provost for Student Affairs. After a year in Pullman, Anderson said "(WSU) has wonderful old traditions that are blending into a new and exciting future."

"I think the students I've met here have a more balanced approach to what a university is about. They are interested in their academics, but they also understand that involvement outside the classroom can enhance learning," Anderson said. She said involvement on campus is important and for the most part WSU students are active.

"I think that's one of the things we're looking at. When you talk about retention studies, one of the things that has been noted over and over again in research is student involvement," Anderson said. "(Involvement) seems to have a very positive correlation with students staying on until graduation."

WSU's graduation rate over the past seven years is the highest in the state, she said. Student involvement is a major concern of her office, Anderson added. "That is something we are hyping from the time students get on campus."

Because involvement is directly related to recruitment and retention, Anderson said it is a key area she will be working on. "One of the things I have read over and over again is that the idea is not to recruit students, but to recruit graduates. We are now focusing very much on a duel approach of recruitment and retention and helping to enhance the environment for sudents."

The business department at WKVR continues to stay busy. Our most important project currently is the development of budget proposals for next year. Wendy Cook and I are currently meeting with department heads to review their requests for next year"s expenditures. We will then compile these requests into a formal budget proposal, which will be presented to Student Government in mid-April. Hopefully, this budget will allow us to continue transforming Power 92 into a quality sounding professional station.

Awareness lectures have begun

By Deb Dougherty

Sunday, March 20, Tracy Smith gave the first lecture in the Awareness Lecture Series. The speech on "Networking" toucned on setting up a network, sending thank-you notes, and informational interviews.

Smith encouraged students to keep in contact with an interviewer. Let them know how you are doing in school and ask to be kept in touch with if anything else would be of interest to you. She also staated that interviewing could be used to find out about a career and the possibilities in the field.

On Monday, Lisa Nailor-Whitman, a representative from the Women"s Health Services, spoke on "Suicied Awareness and Prevention". She talked about the symptoms of suicide, how to talk to a potential suicide victim, and various statistics about suicides.

A person who is helpless and hopeless who feels that no one can help him out is a potential suicide victim. Anyone who knows someone who committed suicide, may have the thought of the act increased. Leaving home, bad grades, drug and alcohol abuse, or a family breakup may push someone over the edge.

Some signs of suicide are depression, loss of interest in previously enjoyed activities, decline in school performance, previous suicide attempt, a preoccupation with death, or a sudden lifting of a deep depression.

If a person seemed suicidal, but then all of a sudden acted O.K., this may indicate that he has decided to go through with the act. YOu as a support person should be a detective. Decide if the person has told you anything or find out if he has a plan. If you know the person well you could try to talk to him and just listen. Keep him talking. Most important, let him know that you care and don"t know all the answers either.

Be an alert friend. 80% of suicide attempts are indicated, but only 5% wanted to kill themselves; the rest were fluxuating. Don't try to carry the responsibility of a potential suicide victim yourself, but let someone else know. You may not be home when he needs you.

The Awareness Lecture Series will continue April 7 with a speech given by Ron McLaughlin and Susan Radis on "Incidence and Cause of Acquaintance and Date Rape." The final talk will be presented by Lias Purcell Kramer on April 13. She will be speaking about "The Need for Touch". both of these lectures begin at 7:00 PM in the faculty lounge. Students and faculty are encouraged to attend.

Spring break riot on Mustang Island

In the worst spring break rioting since 1986, 4 people were stabbed and 2 police officers hurt as an estimated 3,000 vacationing students rioted on Mustang Island March 20.

No one is sure how the midnight beach riot on the island, just offshore from Corpus Christi, began, although policeman Jim Kaelin noted, "there is a tremendous amount of intoxication going on. All it takes is for someone to bump into someone else to start a riot."

Other witnesses reported the violence began when a 26-year-old man hit a 16-year-old girl with his car, which was then overturned and trashed by angry bystanders.

Though the girl subsequently was treated for minor abrasions at a local hospital, it took 100 police officers using helicopters and tear gas to break up the ensuing riot, in which a car was run into the Gulf of Mexico off a pier, a portable toilet was burned and rocks were thrown.

Police arrested 8 people.

The incident was the worst since April, 1986, when hundreds of high school and college students threw rocks and bottles at police and ripped the clothes off women at Palm Beach, Calif. Police arrested more than 500 people during a week of drinking and vandalism.

Since then, the Texas Gulf Coast, Jamaica and Daytona Beach, Fla., have been the only areas still advertising to encourage college students to visit them for spring break.

Sue Grubb selected to MAC team

Juniata College senior Sue Grubb was selected to the Middle Atlantic Conference All-Northwest team and chosen as the most valuable player for the MAC Northern Division.

A 5'7 forward from Elizabethtown, Grubb was the top rebounder in the MAC with 12.7 boards per game and ranked as high as fourth in the NCAA Division III. Her 17.7 points per game placed her sixth in the league scoring catagory.

Grubb, who topped the Indians this season in both scoring and rebounding, completed her four-year career as Juniata's second-leading scorer and rebounder with 1,141 points and 941 boards. She established new school records for blocked shots in a game with eight against Messiah and Gettysburg. Her 66 blocks this season and career total of 182 are Indian standards as well as 292 career steals.

"Sue was the anchor of our team," said coach Kathi Quinn, whose young team was 5-5 in the MAC Northwest and 6-12 overall. "Sue had a solid finish to a fine career."

Grubb was joined on the MAC All-Northwest team by Michele Swatner and Nancy Keene of Elizabethtown and Robyn Hannan and Kim Wood of Lycoming.

Grubb, an English/communications major at Juniata, is the daughter of Lavonne Grubb of Ridge Road, Elizabethtown.

Officals crack down on hazing

Officials at two campuses last week tried to crack down on fraternity drinking last week, but a West Point cadet alledged he was driven from school because he wouldn't engage in practices other campuses define as hazing.

Third-year cadet John Edwards said U.S. Military Academy officials dismissed him from school because he wouldn't participate in the "humiliating and degrading" hazing of West Point freshmen.

West Point spokesman Maj. Bruce K. Bell, while refusing to talk about Edwards specifically, said the "Fourth Class System" Edwards refused to participate in was specifically designed to teach cadets how to be leaders.

Rutgers University President Edward J. Bloustein, meanwhile, on Feb. 15 banned all fraternity and sorority parties after James C. Callahan, 18, died during a Lambda Chi Alpha hazing session.

Bloustein also said he'd try to get Lambda Chi Alpha, which reportedly forced all its pledges to "drink 'till you're sick" at a Feb. 12 hazing, kicked off the New Brunswick, N.J., campus.

At the same time, the University of Rhode Island's Interfraternity Council, responding to faculty complaints that students were showing up at Friday morning classes hung over and lethargic, voted on Feb. 13 to halt all Thursday night fraternity parties that had been a URI tradition for decades.

since they often bring communication, negotiating and management skills learned in classes.

Although she agrees some companies may ont hire students if they were required to pay them more, students who in past years would have been hired for menial jobs are now finding themselves in managerial posts. "If an employer found a student worth their while, they may not mind paying extra."

"I have a student working for me who I pay more than minimum wage," said Stan Nicolazes, the owner fo Nic's Grotto Cafe in Santa Barbara, Cal. "It's pretty hard to live on $3.35 an hour."

Kelly Ellis, the day supervisor at a Dairy Queen in Pittsburg, Kans., near Pittsburg State University, said her employees also get more than minimum wage. The retaurant, she said, already is run by a skeleton crew, and wouldn't be able to cut workers' hours or jobs.

In fact, De Tomasi thinks a higher minimum wage might be a boon for some businesses.

By offering more money, she said, companies "will get a stronger pool of candidates to draw from."

The Indians are excited after their win at home on Saturday against Lockhaven.

Indians open at home with 9-7 victory

The Juniata College baseball team opened its home schedule last Saturday with a 9-7 victory over Lock Haven University.

The two teams were forced to play just one nine-inning game instead of a doubleheader due to field conditions.

The Indians jumped out to an early 6-0 lead thanks to plenty of hot bats and a fine first four innings by freshman Mike Reed. However, things got a little hairy down the stretch for coach Bill Berrier"s team.

Lock Haven, a Division II school, rallied in the late innings, but Scott Munro and Kevin Neff held off the charge. Rookie Nick Spadea got a key double-play grounder to end a middle-innings threat as well. Munro got credit for the mound win.

The Juniata bats were stinging all afternoon. Scott Close had four hits while Amo Cianci, Jim Tomasetti, Vic Huber, Dave Reed and Neff all had big days.

The Indian offensive power has certainly not been a problem. Juniata also scored plenty of runs but could only manage a split last Thursday at Western Maryland.

Eleven unearned runs in one inning were too much for Juniata to recover from in opening game. The Green Terrors held on for an 11-8 win.

In game two, the Indians again had problems holding down the Terrors. It took two clutch strikeouts by pitcher Neff to preserve a 13-12 victory after the second slugfest in the Westminster, Maryland sun.

The Indians were 4-5 overall and 2-0 in the Middle Atlantic Conference going into a key MAC Northwest battle with Messiah yesterday.

Juniata hosts Penn State-Capitol Campus on April 6.

Women's softball just couldn't get it going

It wasn"t quite the beginning that the Juniata women"s softball team had hoped for on Saturday.

A young Indian squad couldn"t get it going against visiting Susquehanna. The Crusaders took both ends of the Middle Atlantic Conference doubleheader, 9-4 and 13-1.

The Tribe was hanging tough in the opening game, but just couldn"t put enough hits together to challenge the veteran SU squad.

In the second game, the Indians were again stymied at the plate while the Crusader bats banged out nearly a dozen hits.

The Indians are certainly not giving up on the young season. Coach Dick Scialabba feels that as his team gets more experience and confidence the runs will start to come and so will the victories.

The Tribe will not be at home again until April 13 against Messiah.

Women Ruggers play tough

The women"s rugby team played their first league game against Penn State March 26. The women played a tough game, but neither team could score.

The big mix-up of the day was when Penn State showed up with to few players. Since Juniata was ready for the game, we allowed Penn State to use three of our players. The coach from State College also refereed the match. With all of this against them, the lady Indians still stayed in the game and kept the Lions from scoring.

The lady Indians travel to Shippensburg April 9 to play a doubleheader against Bucknell and Shippensburg. Good luck to the women.

NCAA comes to its end

"March Madness," as it is known to the millions of fans of the NCAA Basketball Tournament, moves into April for its dramatic conclusion this weekend in Kansas City. The Final Four.

We Pennsylvanians had a shot at two of the four spots only to see Temple and Villanova fall in regional finals. Of course, don"t forget Pitt"s now typical early departure.

Just to add one little bit about the Panthers" demise. It"s bad enough that they lost the way they did, but to fill postgame press conferences with pop shots at Paul Evans is par for the Pitt course.

Is it too much for ask for one of the five players on the court to have the leadership ability to take another timeout or take it upon himself to foul a Vandy player before a desperation three-point heave sends the game into overtime? (Yes, that"s a long sentence, and a long shot. If you get my meaning Greek.)

Well, back to the games coming up.

First, Duke and Kansas. A rematch of an earlier meeting this year which was won by the Blue Devils.

When I looked back at the brackets today I was not surprised Kansas and Larry Brown made it to their Final Four home-state and home-court advantage. Things went well for the Jayhawks thanks to upset-minded K. State, who knocked out my pick, Purdue.

One quick question. Is Gene Keaty a mean looking guy or what? He looks like an ad for "Friday the 13th Part 100", and that"s when the Boilermakers win. Bet the trip back home was pleasant.

Anyway, Duke will beat Kansas, even though Danny Manning has become a better money player than most people expected. Everyone knew he could play, but he couldn"t seem to do it in the clutch. Until this season.

Arizona and Oklahoma should be a dandy. The Wildcats are on a mission for all of college basketball in the west.

It"s been seven years since UCLA got to the big dance, and most of the college basketball continues to show little respect for Lute Olsen"s team from Tucson.

Arizona is a solid basketball team from top to bottom. They do a lot of things very well, and have some great talent.

Oklahoma is also loaded. But, boy, does Billy Tubbs have no conscience? Let"s win as many games by as many points as possible. Run it up. Run it up.

The Sooners, as I mentioned, are very good. I just don"t know if they are on a mission as emotional and personal as Arizona"s.

Even though Arizona has pounded its way through the bracket, they still aren"t respected. They can"t wait to prove they are for real.

The Wildcats and Sooners for the National Championship on Saturday night. I say AU. But then again, what do I know anyway?

However, I can see Duke pulling it off, especially if Oklahoma upsets Arizona. Tough to call, except that there should be one low scoring and one high scoring semi-final.

In any case, it"s what so many people stay up to watch ESPN for. It"s the reason no library can find the "USA Today" sports section. It"s why the Juniata College spring roundball tournament isn"t on national television.

Basically, it"s a great time. No need to say anything more.

I would like to finish with one gripe.

Does anybody else get sick and tired of Brent Musberger? Do you wonder why he continually asks Billy Packer stupid questions? Why does he always say, "Billy, for those people just tuning in, tell them what has happened to this point. Get them caught up with what has transpired." Please, No More.

I guess they enjoy what they"re doing in the studio too. But Jim Nantz and James Brown turn over more notecards without saying anything than any TV person I"ve ever seen.

Although he gets on your nerves, at least Dick Vitale can talk your ear off about hoops and not look at a single telepromter.

Maybe CBS would do better if it used announcers that loved the game rather than the mirror.

Enough? Yes, the editor says enough.

Oh the good old days. Monday night and no stories. It"s like riding a bicycle.

Russian Icon Exhibit

Now open in Shoemaker Gallery

Juniata College will join civic, religious, and governmental organizations around the world in celebration of the 1000th anniversary of the founding of the Rusian Orthodox Church in 988 A.D.

For its part of the celebration, the college will sponsor an exhibition of religious icons from the fourteenth to the seventeenth centuries. The exhibit, "Russian Icons of the Golden Age," will coincide with officially sponsored celebrations of the Millennium within the Soviet Union.

The icon exhibit opened April 4 with a reception in Shoemaker Gallery from 8-10PM. The exhibit will reamain at the college until April 30, when it will travel to Washington, D.C. (May 9-June 10), New York City (July 5-August 8), Lafayette College (September 1-October 7), and the College of the Holy Cross (November 3-30).

In conjunction with the celebration the Sobor, or Council of the Russian Church, will convene in Moscow on June 5. The meeting will be only the fourth time the Council has met since 1918 and all diocese of the Soviet Union and the Russian Orthodox Church abroad will be represented. The council is expected to proceed with the canonization of two new saints.

The official Millennium Jubilee celebration begins June 12 in Moscow at the Danilov Monastery and will continue throughout the month in Kiev, Leningrad, Vladmir, and Novgorod. International conferences of historical and religious scholars will be held in Italy, Germany, England and the United States. Smaller conferences and lectures will be held at colleges, universities and religious centers across the United States and Europe.

Many of the celebrations will focus on the birth of Christianity in Russia when Prince Vladimir of Kiev dispatched delegates to the Byzantine capitol for the purpose of gathering information on the Orthodox Church for comparison with the other great world faiths. According to Paul A. Blaum, author of the historical text, "The Days of the Warlords", "When the ambassadors had made their various reports, the creed that pleased Vladimir the most would be installed as the state religion of Russia. The Byzantine court rose to the occasion by treating the envoys like honored guests and holding a magnificant liturgy for the Russians in the cathedral of Hagia Sophia."

According to Blaum, the words of the ambassadors' report "still exue the excitability of new-found faith: 'We went to Greece, and the Greeks (i.e. Byznatines) led us to the edifices where they worship their God,and we knew not whether we were in heaven or on earth... We only know that God dwells there among men, and their service is fairer than the ceremonies of the other nations.'". Prince Vladimir was baptized into the Orthodox faith and shortly thereafter decreed that all of his subjects would be baptized as well.

The Russian Orthodox Church was effectively cut off from the West in 1240 when the Mongols overran the country. For many reasons that separation has remained to this day. Juniata College, in presenting "Icons of the Golden Age," hopes to take a step to bridge these centuries of separation.

Regular hours for Shoemaker Gallery will be Monday through Saturday, noon to 5 p.m.; Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m.; and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. The exhibit will be open for regular viewing beginning on Tuesday, April 5.

Wordsworth posters Shown in Beeghly

"William Wordsworth and the Age of English Romanticism,R" a poster panel exhibit, will appear at the L.A. Beeghly Library of Juniata College from April 1 to April 15, 1988: The display is based upon the major travelling exhibition of Romantic art featured at the New York Public Library, the University of Indiana Art Museum at Bloomington, and the Chicago Historical Society.

The twenty-four panels are divided into five segments-The Age of Revolutions; Wordsworth and his Contemporaries; The Discovery of Nature; Unity Entire; and Memory, Imagination, and the Sublime. The posters will combine images of paintings, manuscripts, and rare books with literary texts and explanatory narratives.

The program was organized by the Wordsworth Project at Rutgers University, and The Wordsworth Trust with major funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The Beeghly Library exhibit was provided by the Pennsylvania Humanities Council, the Commonwealth's affiliate with the NEH.

For library hours and further information contact the L.A. Beeghly Library at Juiata College at 643-4310, ext. 450.

"Man of La Mancha"

Large success at JC

By Alex Jones

"Man of La Mancha", the musical adaptation of the classic novel "Don Quixote", was presented to the Juniata community Monday, March 28. The production brought the Juniata College Artist Series to a climactic ending.

Daedalus Productions presented the program to an attentive audience. Daedalus brought a large group on tour, as the production involved a cast of eighteen actors and actresses, an orchestra consisting of seven instrumentalists, and a twelve member production and direction staff.

A simple set was utilized for the musical tour. It involved a large circular floor, which was supported by four large posts which were camoflauged as stone pillars, to help represent an inquisition prison. The set also consisted of a large staircase which was mechanically lowered onto the stage when the inquisition guards came into the cell.

The plot of "Man of La Mancha" revolves around the conviction of Miguel de Cervantes, who was imprisoned by the inquisition for attempting to foreclose a mortgage on a church. Cervantes and his manservant are thrown into a cell to await trial. Here there fellow prisonmates inform them that they must first undertake their own defense in a trial among their new peers.

To save his precious belongings, Cervantes tells his story through the adventures of a ficticious knight; a knight that he has created - Don Quixote. With his manservant, portrayed flawlessly by Marshall Gitter, acting in the role of Pancho, Cervantes himself, played by John Wyle, undertook the role of Don Quixote.

Both Gitter and Wyle turned in strong performances, as did Tim Hover as the governor and Melanie Demetri as Aldonza. Wyle"s deep speaking voice created the only problem for the listening audience, as some of his lines were muddled when he spoke rapidly. Gitter and Wyle performed well against each other, though. "Man of La Mancha", the show"s first song, made this clear to a supportive audience. Demetri"s strong voice, which was evident even in the company"s warm-up, was the highlight of the show.

Roomdraw--the event that ranks up there with others like exams, 8:00 AM classes, buying a parking sticker, and paying for Juniata College parking tickets (does anyone ever really pay for those?), is finally over for yet another year. And once again there are many unhappy people at Juniata.

Every year roomdraw brings out the best and the worst in people. This is the time each year when you discover who your friends and so-called friends really are. It"s that time when you trust no one, not even your best friend and especially those people working in the dreaded Housing Office. Sometimes roomdraw actually gets more cut-throat than Storming of the Arch!

It seems that a majority of the problems stem from the system that is used; especially in dealing with multiple occupancys. It seems that you have to be on some list and if you're not, well your just plain out of luck and you'll have to waste yet another night fighting for a room in a Residence Hall. Why are these lists needed? Why can't the students get their groups together and go to roomdraw on the designated night. Then start with the group with the most points, the seniority deal, and work down. In case of a tie roll dice, or draw cards. Seems simple enough to me! It's apparent from all the complaining and unhappy students that the existing system just isn't very efficient. Could it be time for a change?

All of you students that still have yet another roomdraw or two to endure, make some suggestions instead of just complaining among yourselves. If enough people express their feelings, maybe something will change. To all of next year's seniors, I"m sorry things didn't work out like you wanted them too, so keep complaining!!!

I'm one of the lucky ones. I've survived my three roomdraws with only slight scarring and I hope I never have to deal with anything that closely resembles Juniata College's roomdraw process anytime in the future! It's everyone's worst nightmare!

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Jen Wade

Author's note: This column has absolutley nothing to do with Juniata or anything remotely connected to it, which may make it somewhat inappropriate. However, it's pretty trival and insignificant, so I guess that makes it OK.

"Holy red herring, Batman! You can't be serious!"

"Yes, Boy Wonder, I'm afraid it's true. I've run it through the Batcomupter three times. It seems our friend Robin Hood was nothing more than a two-bit, dirty, low-down crook. He's no better than the Joker or the Penguin."

"Does this mean I'll have to change my name? How does 'Batman and Cardinal' sound?"

"Easy Robin. I don't think such drastic measures are necessary. But, all the evidence against him is irrefutable."

"Golly, Batman. Think of all those people in Nottingham. Keeping the local economy afloat by pretending to run a legitimate tourist business. Phooey! They've been following in his footsteps all along, haven't they?"

"Remember what I told you, Robin. Don't be too quick to judge other people. I'm sure it was an honest mistake. It took detectives over 500 years to sort out all of the evidence."

"Gosh, I'm sorry, Batman. It's a good thing those boys from Oxford and Cambridge came along, though. Otherwise, we'd have gone on thinking he was a real life folk-hero."

"That's right, Robin. Maid Marian, too. It seems she was nothing more than a line in a song gone haywire. Some poor bloke thought his girlfriend was kind of pretty, and WHAMMO!, next thing you know, we've got Maid Marian cavorting with Robin Hood and his band in Sherwood Forest. Supposedly the real Marian was kind of sleazy."

"And, is it true that Friar Tuck was really two people?"

"Yes, Robin. I'm afraid it just gets more and more shocking as we go along. Friar Tuck was no more than a merging of two very trival literary characters. He got his taste for food and drink from the Pardoner and his good nature from the Parson."

"Are you sure it wasn't the other way around, Batman?"

"I'm sure. And, we must not forget Little John."

"I almost forgot about him. Uh, which one was he?"

"Get on the ball, Robin. Little John was the big guy with the long bow."

"Holy mind block! I remember now. Didn't he wear striped pants and leather vests?"

"Yes. It seems that in addition to being crooks, Robin Hood and his men didn't dress very well, either."

"Gee, Batman. I sure am glad we got this mess straighteded out."

"I hear the Sherriff is very relieved."

"What's our next move, Batman?"

"The Commissioner just called on the Batphone. It seems King Arthur's still on the loose. To the Batmobile, Robin!"

RA's attend conference at UPJ

By Deb Dougherty

Three future Resident Assistants (RA's) attended the Third Annual R.A. conference at the University of Pittsburgh at Johnstown. Chris Frank, Melanie Hopkins, and Annette Oberdorf went to the meeting to learn more about the position that they would be filling next year. Lisa Baer, the RD in South, also attended the convention, giving a presentation about Stress Management.

The conference was held so that old and new RA's could learn more about other programs and other schools. It gave a chance for the RA's to mingle and ask questions. Several workshops, pertaining to the different aspects of the position, were offered.

The people from Juniata who attended had a good time. One stated that she was more confident going into the position and another said that the conference gave her insight into the duties expected of her.

Lisa Baer said that the conference was a good time to get away and learn something. The RA's were less apprehensive aobut going into their jobs at the end of the weekend. Any old or new RA's are encouraged to attend the conference next year so that they too can gain personal insight and self assurance about their job.

The Juniata Concert Band will present its final performance Saturday, April 9 in Oller Hall at 8:00pm.

New Officers ready and raring to go

Juniata College's business fraternity, Phi Chi Theta is busily making plans for Mud Volleyball next weekend under new leadership.

New officer were elected and chairpersons appointed at last month's meeting.

Chris Glover will be heading the fraternity next year as president, with Mike Barnett lending a hand as vice president. Secretary for the 1988-89 year will be Sue Lockawich and Scott Swartz will be handling the money as treasurer.

Committee chairpersons were also appointed. Melinda Brandt will be in charge of the marketing committee, and Scott Kelley will head the general management committee. Chairman for the accounting and finance committee is Ken Malenke. In addition to these, Lynn Merritt is in charge of speakers and seminars and internal affairs will be handled by Jill Krouse.

The first job of the new officers is to plan mud volleyball. It will be held on April 15, starting at 1:00 pm. It will end at dark, around 7:00 pm. Sign-ups for participating in mud volleyball are being held at meals until next week. The price this year will be $1 per person. So don't hesitate--go sign up now!

Dr. Murray represents JC at PSA Conference

Dr. Andrew Murray, director of the Juniata College Baker Institute for Peace and Conflict Studies, was among 11 directors and representatives of peace studies programs from throughout the country who travelled to St. Louis, Missouri, on April 1-2 for the first meeting of the Peace Studies Association executive committee.

The Peace Studies Association (PSA) executive committee discussed issues related to the primary goals of the PSA, which are to assist emerging programs, advance the academic quality of the field,facilitate improved communication and collaboration among programs in the field, and pursue financial and institutional stability and permanence for programs in colleges and universities.

"We have seen steady growth in the field of peace studies during the decade," Murray said. "There are now approximately 170 colleges and universities that have programs at the undergraduate level and the new association is an exciting and important step toward cooperation and professional development among these institution."

The association, which is being based initially at Bethel College in North Newton, Kansas, has been joined in its first months of existance by more than forty colleges and universities. The founding members of the association include Colgate, Tufts, Hampshire, the University of California and the University of Hawaii, as well as Juniata and the oldest peace studies program at Manchester College.

Peace and Conflict Studies at Juniata is an interdisciplinary program including twenty courses taught through the auspices of eight departments. The program was started in 1973 through an endowment to the College from Drs. John and Elizabeth Baker. John Baker served for 13 years as chairman of the Juniata Board of Trustees.

JC's Men's Tennis team successfully handled St. Francis in a 6-3 win last Tuesday. With Danny Corazzi at the number one spot, Jon Seckinger #2, Rich Gottschall #3, Mark Kearns #4, and Chris Glover at #5 the team had few problems dealing with the St. Francis team.

A JC player swings hard and connects during the contest against Gettysburg last week.

Tony Nabozny's #1 hobby now a priority

When it comes to hobbies one can always recall collecting stamps or trading baseball cards. Sports such as tennis, raquetball and cycling have become popular ways that many Americans keep healthy. However, for Tony Nabozny, the equipment manager in the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center, running is his number one priority and no longer a hobby.

Tony picked up running in 1981 simply as a way to stay in shape. Today he finds himself training for his third marathon after successfully completing two previous 26 mile runs. Mixed reasons turned Tony to running but it was his will to continue in some form of athletics that has pushed him to this point.

Tryouts with the Pittsburgh Pirates and Cincinnati Reds highlight his younger years as an athlete. Keeping fit has always been a major concern for Tony and he noticed that running was his best bet. Even though he is more serious in his training now. Tony still feels running is one of the best theraputic exercises for relieving stress and tension. Tony notes that his body frame is not ideal for running but that did not stop him and shouldn't stop anyone. Tony mentions one of the keys for a novice runner is to take it slow and easy at first, then gradually move up in mileage.

Tony became addicted to running and will now run 30 to 40 miles a week when he is not training. During training months, Tony's mileage is increased to 65 to 70 miles a week. When training for marathons, Tony notes that two long runs of 20 miles will take place two weeks prior to the race. "The last few days before a race you should take it light", Tony noted, "if you're not ready by now, you won't be."

Of course, Tony's diet is very important to him, not being able to put on extra weight which would hinder his time. One month before running in a marathon, Tony sticks to vegetable and Italian food (ie. pizza and macaroni). Tony stated most of his training is based on his own programs. He runs for fun and does not go strictly by the book.

Running for fun, but also running to prove something to himself. "Finishing a marathon was a goal I set after becoming a running addict", stated Tony. "Now I have finished two and I will run in my third soon in Pittsburgh."

So next time you're picking up equipment in the gym or signing out racquetball courts, wish Tony good luck for continued success in running--a fun hobby he takes seriously.

Lady Indians win first MAC contest

The Juniata Indians won their first game on the "Softball" Diamond this past week when they split a doubleheader with Gettysburg College. JC won the first game 12-11, but fell short in the second game 10-8.

Coach Scialabba sees the team improving, noting that JC managed 17 hits in two games. "This was a good experience as well as a confidence builder," noted Scilabba. Freshman Jennifer Dippery went 3 for 3 and led the Indians to victory in game one. Kate Bradely got the win and aided her own cause in the JC 6th with a bases loaded single.

Game two saw the Indians trailing 10-6 going into the last inning. A late surge by JC fell short by 2 runs. Kate Bradely pitched another 7 innings and her tiring out showed when Gettysburg got 5 runs in the fifth.

Today the Indians host St. Francis College and travel to Wilkes Saturday. Tuesday the Indians played at Wilson College in Chambersburg.

Persons wanting to usher at commencement please come to the Athletic Director's office to sign up.

Kuttab to lecture tonight

"Peace and Human Rights on the West Bank" will be the topic for a lecture tonight to be given in the Faculty Lounge at 8:15. The presentation by Jonathan Kuttab is the final event in the World Affairs Lecture Series sponsored by the Baker Institute for Peace and Conflicts Studies at Juniata.

Kuttab is a prominent and often quoted Arab leader in the struggle to find peaceful and just solutions to the difficult problems of the West Bank area. He is a practicing attorney in Jerusalem and a member of the New York and Israeli Bar Associations.

A Christian Palestinian of the Bethlehem-Jerusalem area, he graduated from Messiah College and earned his law degree from the University of Virginia. Kuttab practiced law with a major Wall Street law firm for two years before returning home to the West Bank of the Jordan River to study Hebrew and work to protect the rights of Palestinians who were having their land taken from them.

Kuttab is a co-founder and co-director of the human rights organization Al-Hag, formerly Law in Service of Man, the West Bank affiliate of the International Commission of Jurists, Geneva. This is a legal research and human rights organization which analyzes laws, does research, publishes findings, documents human rights violations and tries to intervene in cases where it feels it can have an effect.

Comedy Laff-Off from NY — Tonight

The second event of this year's Spring Fest is The Comedy Laff-Off to be held tonight in the Ballroom of Ellis. Starting at 10:00 pm, the Laff-Off promises to be a night of humor.

Included in this night of laughter are comedians George Calfa, Dean Edelson, and Anita Wise. Their talents have allowed them to perform throughout the country at various clubs and colleges.

When not on the road, each comedian has been involved in other projects. George Calfa,a native of Brooklyn, New York, has appeared in several TV pilots, "Nightflight Comedy Cuts" on USA Cable, "No Witness News", and PBS's "Reading Rainbow." He is also an accomplished lyricist and recently signed a European recording contract for his soon to be released single "Hipper than You". His special brand of contemporary humor encompasses a diversified cross section of topics, as well as an off-beat array of characters in riotous true to life experiences.

Dean Edelson has been involved with theater, TV, and film. Some of his previous credits include; the film" On the Right Track", the TV movie "One From the Heart" and numerous theater productions. He has performed at many clubs around the US, including Catch a Rising Star and The Improv in New York City and also at many colleges.

Anita Wise also has a long list of credits. Some of her past experiences include club appearances at the Comedy Cellar, Dangerfield's, and Catch a Rising Star. She has been the opening act for Steve Landesberg, Yacov Smirnof, and a few others. She has made many TV appearances and was awarded The Funniest Person in America Award in New York.

So bring your $2.00 and your friends to the Comedy Laff-Off tonight and take time out to enjoy this Spring Fest event!

This tree, along with another birch, was planted in memory of Carolyn (Smiley) Stambaugh, who was killed Aug. 30, 1986, in an automobile accident. They were dedicated by the East RHA, the residents and the student government. We, the Volleyball team, would like to thank the student government and East for the birch trees and plaques. Carolyn was a resident of East Houses for three years. She added life and beauty to everything she did, and we are glad to know this will continue over the years as the trees grow.

CMB to sponsor meal for CROP

To be educated means far more than gathering knowledge from books, taking part in research projects, and attending lectures and seminars. At Juniata College, an important added component in the education process is preparing students to be responsible, contributing members of society beyond the workplace. In support of this added emphasis, Juniata College students will sponsor the 1988 Meal for CROP on Thursday, April 21.

CROP, an organization of the Church World Service, fights hunger throughout the world. Its programs for funding relief for hunger and self-help projects are targeted primarily to third world countries, but projects within the United States often receive funding as well. CROP also sends emergency supplies to support disaster relief around the world.

Each year, Juniata's Campus Ministry Board, which sponsors the Meal for CROP, asks Juniata students to give up their evening meal in Baker refectory. Those meals are then sold to the general public. This year, 75 percent of the funds collected will go to CROP and the other 25 percent will be donated to the Huntingdon Food Bank to help fight local hunger. This year's goal is to raise $3,900.00.

The Meal for CROP will be held from 5 to 6:30 p.m. in Baker Refectory, Ellis College Center. Tickets may be purchased at the information desk in Ellis College Center or at local churches. In addition residents may call and reserve tickets to be picked up at the door the evening of the meal. The phone number for the information desk is 643-4310, ext. 330.

There are going to be some new regulations for young women at Juniata College. They pertain to the social aspects and dorm living of the college. The regulations are as follows:

1. Young men and women may walk together on the campus after lunch until 1:15pm, from 4:15 until 6:00 pm and in the designated season, after dinner until study hour.
2. Young men and women may go together into the town on Saturday afternoon from 1:00-5:00.
3. A chaperon previously approved by the President or the Preceptress must be present at all social functions. For functions off the campus, a list of those attending must be submitted 24 hours in advance.
4. Women students are not permitted to go automobiling in the evening and not during the day except by permission and with approved chaperon.
5. Junior women may go out one night in two weeks, unchaperoned.
6. Sophomore women may go out one night in three weeks, unchaperoned.
7. Freshman women are not permitted out at all in the evenings.

Regarding Dorm Rooms:

1. Occupants of rooms shall keep them in clean and orderly condition, ready to receive visitors at any time.
2. Dancing and card playing are forbidden.
3. No candles may be used in the dormitories.

Are you worried? Well don't be. These rules are no longer in existence at JC. But if you had been a female student during the 1921-22 school year, these rules would have applied. Can you imagine not walking to classes with male friends? What about jumping in the "automobile" for that midnight Sheetz Run? And we think the alcohol policy is tough. In 1920 they couldn't even dance in their rooms!

We should be thankful that times have changed and Juniata has changed with them. There are still small colleges around the country that observe some of these basic rules but to a lesser degree. Maybe Juniata is not as bad as some of the students on this campus think it is. Let's be happy with what we have!

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

Last Saturday night a group of really terrific students danced all night long to raise money for Cystic Fibrosis. I, too, participated and as I danced, I watched the other students have fun, slowly become exhausted, and eventually peter out to a small group of 30 strong-willed human beings. I also thought while I danced, how many of these people even know what Cystic Fibrosis is? Actually, two years ago I didn't have a clue either, but since my little nephew Gordon was diagnosed with the disease I learned everything about it.

CF is a genetic disease, and anybody can carry the unfortunate gene. A child born with CF will have basically two problems: first, his lungs won't be able to rid themselves of mucous, and second, his digestive system won't have the enzymes to break down the food. Through all sorts of modern medical breakthroughs, these problems can be lessened. My nephew takes a lot of medicine, and he must have three "treatments" per day, which involve breathing a special medicine through a mask to help clear the mucous, and patting him on the back and front for 20 minutes to help loosen the mucous. Also, any time he wants to eat anything he needs to take enzyme capsules, otherwise he cannot digest the food. Sadly enough, all this effort could be useless, for CF is still a fatal disease and chances are slim that anyone with the disease will live longer that 20 years.

I love my nephew Gordon---the hardest part of dealing with his CF is that he seems like such a normal child. It's hard to believe that he is so different from other kids because he looks like all the others; healthy and energetic, affectionate and loving. At the dance on Saturday night I kept a picture of him in my pocket to keep reminding me how much he and his family suffer under this disease, and to keep me on my feet the whole 10 hours.

I thank every one of you, even those who stayed just part of the time. Hopefully, this dance will become a tradition at Juniata, where we can raise more money than the dances that are simply social events.

Sincerely,
Margaret Gonglewski

Workers over 50 are in demand

NEW YORK (UPI) — In today's competitive job market, where employers have their pick of candidates, managers have begun looking for workers with one of the world's most valued commodities: experience, an executive search firm reports.

"The wave of recent corporate restructurings has forced large numbers of discharged workers over 50 to seek new jobs," said Jim Challenger, president of Chicago-based executive search firm Challenger, Gray & Christmas.

"And, interestingly, many employers are giving preference to these seasoned workers," he said.

Challenger thinks 1988 might even be the year when the over 50 group pulls ahead of the younger set.

His company's latest quarterly research, conducted at the firm's 14 regional U.S. offices, indicates that since 1985 the difference between the median job search time of discharged managers 50 and over who found new jobs and those under 50 narrowed to around 15 days.

"Prior to 1985, there was often a one-to-two month difference between the job search time of the older worker compared to the younger worker," he said.

That year marked an upsurge in the nation's wave of corporate restructurings, a phenomenon which has forced thousands of U.S. workers of all ages and job classifications to seek new work.

Job candidates over 50 are most frequently snapped up by small-to-medium-sized companies, he said.

These firms place a premium on versatility, ingenuity and responsiveness to market conditions, attributes seasoned managers discharged by larger corporations generally possess, he said.

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

(A note from Counselor's Corner: This is the first article of two on relationship enhancement. Considering how critical relationships are to our emotional and physical development, indeed to our total well-being, Counselor's Corner will devote the last two articles of the year to this all--important issue.)

Relationships!!! No matter where we go or what we do, one thing is for sure: We are going to be involved with people and that means relationships.

The author William Saroyin said, and I paraphrase, that people is all everything is, all that it has ever been and all that it can ever be. People--you and I...relationships.

Three students in my counseling theories and techniques class gave a very interesting and stimulating presentation recently on relationship enhancement. As part of their research, they constructed and then administered to the entire class a questionnaire on relationships. In my opinion, the reponses were thought-provoking and worthy of sharing with all of you in Counselor's Corner. (For those of you who perhaps think I'm breaching confidentiality, I did ask permission of the class to share their reponses.)

For purposes of the study, relationships were broken down into primary loving relationships and secondary relationships. In the case of the former, students generally identified family members as primary and friends as secondary relationships.

The three qualities most often mentioned as contributing to a lasting relationship, both primary and secondary, were trust, honesty and communication.

When asked what advice they would give to someone seriously entering into a primary loving relationship, students responded by saying such things as be open and honest, don't rush things and, above all, communicate with each other. Many students added that in order for a relationship to grow, you must first love and respect yourself.

As so aptly stated by a student respondent, "If your partner doesn't want you for what you are, then they don't deserve to have you".

Finally, as Leo Buscaglia says, relationships just don't happen!! You have to work on them. He contends that there is no one right person, but rather we become the right person by working, sharing and growing together.

Next week we'll look at what students feel to be destructive to loving relationships. Until then work on telling the special people in your life just how special they really are. Be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

More cutting of aid How will students pay?

The Reagan administration roared into power eight years ago with a daring college funding idea:

If the federal government cut the amount of money it dedicated to higher education, state governments would take up the slack.

Now, as many state legislatures draw up their last college budget measures of the Reagan era, some of the nation's education money watchers say they aren't sure the theory worked.

While still critical of the idea, the money watchers say that, on the average, state funding of higher education has probably stayed "about the same" during the era, while federal support--especially direct grants to colleges, libraries and students--dropped.

State aid to students, at least, buys about as much college as it did in 1980, estimates Gwen Pruyne, managing editor of "The Grapevine," an Illinois State University newsletter that tracks state higher education appropriations around the country.

But students, not states, generally have had to pay for it.

"States get money from legislation or from tuition," she noted. "Many states have increased tuition."

While at the era's start an in-state student's tuition typically might have covered 10-15 percent of the cost of actually educating the student. Now in some states it must cover 20-30 percent of the cost.

Tuition nationwide, the American Council on Education estimated in January, has gone up an average of 40 percent since the beginning of the decade.

"Many states have used tuition increases or other means that force the student to bear the cost of higher education," added Brenda Erickson of the National Conference on State Legislatures, which monitors the nation's state governments.

"Many states," she reported, "are not in a position to help (state colleges) as much as they'd like to."

Erickson, however, does believe the Reagan administration has succeeded in shifting the burden of funding state colleges from the federal government to the states, and that most states "are keeping even" in their funding.

But wanting states to assume part of the federal role, argues Jerry Roschwalb of the National Association of State Colleges and Land Grant Universities, is a "myopic view" in the first place.

What happens, he asks, when a state pays for educating people who leave the state after graduation?

When it comes to "picking up the tab for national medical research done in the local medical school," he contended, "there's no reason why the people of (any one state) should be taxed to support it."

Some states, he added, have had to increase their aid to students even though they already lose money by giving the students low in-state tuition.

Still, many state colleges have learned to be more efficient during the era. They raise money by forging lucrative partnerships with local businesses, by mounting ongoing and sophisticated fundraising campaigns and even by licensing their logos.

Instute for Paralegals invites you

The Institute for Paralegal Training in Philadelphia invites you to attend its Open House on Saturday, April 23 from 12-1 p.m. You will have an opportunity to meet with members of the Institute staff, tour the building, and learn more about our program.

The Institute for Paralegal Training began in 1970 and has more than 7,000 graduates. It has been described as the "Harvard" of paralegal training by the New York Times. A college degree is essential for this and so are good marks, as well as a pleasing personality because paralegals have to work closely with clients as well as with lawyers.<P<MSCourses are given three times a year, but one of the most popular is the summer course, which can be taken right after graduation. These are four month sessions, requiring attendance on campus in Philadelphia. The programs are offered in such specialty fields as litigation, estates and trusts, corporate law, real estate, and employee benefits.

Call the Admissions Office at (215) 567-4811 to let us know if you are coming. We look forward to seeing you then! Remember, new classes start June 6 and October 3. Please contact the Admissions Office for details on financial aid options and guaranteed student loans.

Dance-A-Thon for CF Big success for Power 92

By Mike Barnett

Over 100 Juniata College students and staff danced the night away Saturday to raise money for Cystic Fibrosis.

The event, which was sponsored and broadcast live by Power 92, began at 10:00 pm in the main gym. Power 92 announcers took turns playing a wide variety of music throughout the night. Dancers were allowed one 10 minute break each hour, at which time they were treated to free pizza, donuts, chips, pretzels and drink, much of which was purchased by donations from Residence Hall Associations.

All dancers who collect more that $35 in pledge money will receive a t-shirt. Sophomore Ty Furman received the most pledges -- over $150. The ten hour Dance-a-Thon ended at 8:00 am on Sunday morning. Twenty-eight people danced all ten hours. Power 92 is expecting to raise a total of over $500 from the event. If you would like to make a donation to Cystic Fibrosis, contact Heidi Wagaman at Box 422 before next Friday.

JC Hosts the Annual Chemist's Conference

On Saturday, April 16th, Juniata College will host the 52nd annual Intercollegiate Student Chemists Conference. This annual event brings together undergraduate chemists from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, and Delaware to present research which they have accomplished during the academic year. This year 43 students will be competing in one of the following six catagories of chemistry: Analytical, Biochemistry, Inorganic, Organic I and II, and Physical. In addition to the students representing Juniata, there will be students representing sixteen other schools such as Ursinus, Franklin & Marshall, and Gettysburg. The Juniata seniors presenting topics this year are: Joel Burdick, John Cavanaugh, Geoff Christ, Sue Croyle, Christian Lietzau, Jon Monteleone, and Kim Rieger. Following the student presentations throughout the morning, there will be a luncheon culminated with a lecture by the keynote speaker, Dr. David Tirrell from the University of Massachusetts.

Pitt Theological School provides new programs

In an effort to provide a wide range of educational opportunities designed to meet the needs of both the church and a rapidly changing and complex society, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, which is affiliated with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), has joined with three city universities to provide a comprehensive and diversified system of joint degreee/dual competency programs. These special opportunities are intended to equip individuals as well as other occupational areas and to bring theological principles to bear on other professional disciplines.

Joint degree programs have been established with Carnegie-Mellon University's School of Urban and Public Affairs in the field of Public Management and Policy, with Duquesne University in the areas of Law and Church Music/Christian Education, and with the University of Pittsburgh in the disciplines of Social Work, Business Administration, Library Science, and Health Administration.

When successfully completed, the joint degree programs result in two Masters Degrees including the Master of Divinity degree awarded by Pittsburgh Theological Seminary. In most cases the degrees can be earned in a shorter period of time than in normally required for independent acquisition. Candidates for these programs must apply to and be accepted by both institutions involved in order to participate; in some cases an individual can initiate study at Pittsburgh Seminary and subsequently apply to the cooperating institution for admission to the appropriate program.<P<MSPittsburgh Seminary's joint degree programs are intended for a special group of people who have interests both in the church's ministry and in another vocational area; specialized interests within the Church, such as administrator for a church institution, librarian in a theological school of legal council for a church agency, are also vocational possibilities through these programs.

For specific information about joint degree programs contact: Director of Admissions, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, 616 N. Highland Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa. 15206 or call toll-free 1-800-451-4195.

Grand Final for band a success

By Deb Dougherty

There was a nervous anxiety as the performance time was nearing. Things did not seem to be going well. One player was missing and the piccolo was not working. With quick repairs and a final glance at the empty chair, Ibrook Tower, the band director opened the curtain. The final performance was about to begin.

This was the scene Saturday, April 9 in Oller Hall when the Juniata College band held their final performance of the year. The band was warmly received by the people who attended.

The performance went well, contrary to the opening incidents. Student director, Zllona Gillette, conducted "Chant and Juboilo" to fulfill her directing course requirements. The band played a wide variety of tunes from such composers as Jager and Sinatra. The performance was definitely a grand finale.

Rep. Lane to provide information to Vets

Regional Representative Raleigh Lane, from the Harrisburg Governor's Veterans Outreach and Assistance Center, will visit Huntingdon County on Tuesday, April 19, to provide information and assistance for veterans and their dependents. He will be available in Huntingdon at the Pennsylvania Job Service Office, 54 Penn Avenue, from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Mr. Lane stated that some former members of the Merchant Marine, who served on active oceangoing service from December 7, 1941, to August 15, 1945, can be considered veterans and are now eligible to apply for discharges and veterans benefits. In addition to oceangoing Merchant Marines during the specified period, Civil Service crewmembers aboard U.S. Army Transport Service and Naval Transportation Service vessels in oceangoing service are also included as eligible. He is prepared to brief and assist qualified individuals concerning this matter.

McD's Player of Month

Freshman outfielder Kevin Neff of Reading was selected as the McDonald's/Juniata College athlete of the month for March.

Neff, a graduate of Wyomissing High School, hit over .400 and had four home runs during the Indian baseball team's trip to Virginia that opened the season. He is the first Juniata freshman to receive the honor this year.

The Indians are currently 6-6 overall and 3-1 in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest section.

Men's V-ball Action Best Season Ever

The Men's Volleyball Club posted its best season ever by ending regular match play with decisive victories over nemisis Messiah and always tough Dickinson.

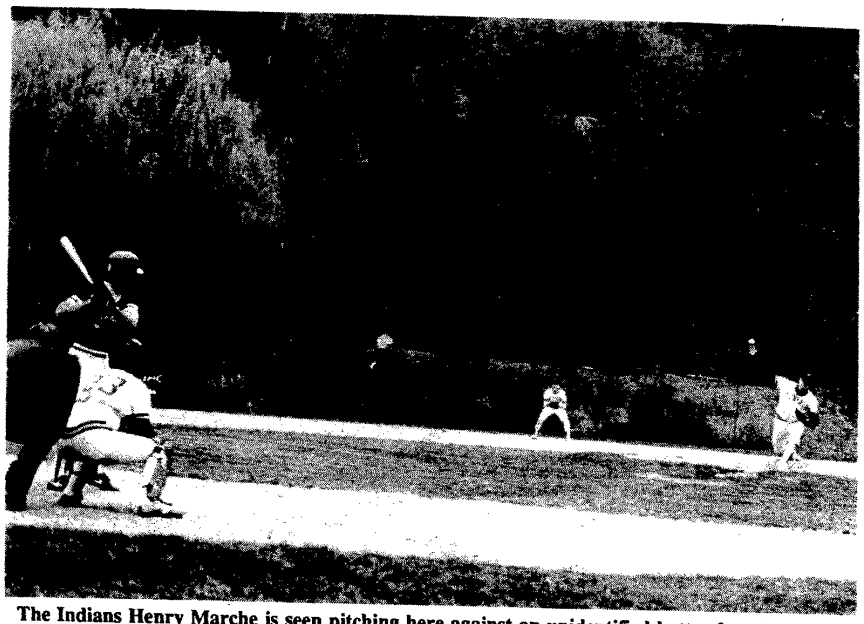
On Friday the Indian Spikers hosted arch rival Messiah hoping to avenge an earlier trouncing. Tough serving, stellar defense, and a pounding attack were too much for the visitors to handle. Game scores were 15-7. 15-5, and 15-6.

Juniata had only three service errors in three games and Mark Heinly's jump serve proved to be absoulutely baffling. Blocking by middle hitter Chris Hester put the clamp on Messiah<"s usually effective middle attack. Setter Dan Stambaugh and technical player Andy Rhinehart provided the outside blocking. Outside hitters Bob Davies and Greg Howe abused Messiah's futile blocking attempts, mixing cross-court spikes and down-the-line shots for points. Team captain Rhinehart commented, "The win over Messiah last Friday was particularly sweet, only our second over them in four years!"

Our spikers journeyed to Carlisle on Sunday to face a much improved Dickinson team. Serving once again proved to be a strategic weapon with few errors and pinpoint targeting at their weaker passers. The opening game turned into a side-out marathon requiring more than 45 minutes to complete, with JC on top 15-13. Dickinson pulled together during several long rallies in the second game, and capitalized on a few JC errors to pull off a 12-15 upset.

Back on track in the third game, setter Dan Stambaugh mixed the offensive attack, using both Hester and Pat Sterner for middle attack. Bob Davies once again took advantage of open blocks and pounded down the line for winners, closing the third game out at 15-9. The fourth game got heated, including a few controversies on the calls. Captain Rhinehart revved up the team, and Stambaugh rammed home some power dumps, ruining Dickinson's hope for a comeback, 15-6.

The Club travels to Messiah on April 16 for the year-end tournament.



The Indians Henry Marche is seen pitching here against an unidentified batter from Penn State-Capital Campus. The Indians rocked Capital campus 14-7. Kevin Neff homered, while DH Amedo Cianci went 3 for 4 as did teammate Dan Webb.

FDU-Madison had ineligible player

The Juniata College men's basketball team has been awarded two forfeit victories because a Middle Atlantic Conference opponent used an ineligible player during this past season, according to William Berrier, Juniata athletic director.

The Indians will have losses to FDU-Madison changed into wins. The Devils beat Juniata 83-80 in the regular season and 63-61 in the MAC Northern Division playoffs. FDU lost to Scranton in the MAC North title game, 66-65, but had a 20-win season before the violation was discovered.

Juniata had already established a new school record for victories with a 17-9 finish. The adjusted record now stands at 19-7 for coach Dan Helm's team.

"We had a satisfying season in any case," said Helm. "We want to get to a higher win total next year by our own play, not forfeit victories. Still, the ineligible player used by FDU was a key contributor in their two wins over us this year and, in fact, hit the two winning free throws at Madison. It's an unfortunate occurrence for everyone."

Sophomore, Daryl Dobos, watches a pitch go by in the dirt against Capital Campus. The Indians lost this past weekend to Susquehanna 8-1 and 6-3 to even up their MAC mark to 3 and 3, and 6-8 overall.

Kennedy Rec. Center serves college

The Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center's primary purpose is to serve Juniata College students, faculty, and staff. The following policies are designed to ensure that the facilities are not overcrowded, as well as to limit liability concerns.

1. Please inform the athletic staff when you are aware of individuals under the age of 18 years who are using the facility without parent/guardian supervision.

2. When you invite a guest to use the facility:

a. You should pick up a guest pass from the athletic director's office.

b. Guests are only permitted to use the facility when accompanied by their host.

c. Local guests are restricted to one visit per year.

3. Children of faculty, staff and students are not permitted to invite guests into the facility.

Your support of these policies will assist the athletic staff in its effort to assure college students, staff and personnel the freedom of facility utilization.

R-Ball Tourney big success

By Susan Headley

The JC Racquetball Club was chartered by student government January 1987. This semester we have sponsored two tournaments here at Juniata. The first was held on Saturday, March 26 with Dickinson and Messiah Colleges. Thirty-three students and faculty played in this event. Mark Heinly won Division A singles for Men and Misty Payne won the Women's division. Dickinson guys won doubles and division B singles. Messiah girls took doubles.

This past Saturday, April 9 JC students and faculty played a tournament. Mark Heinly and Klaus Jaeger made the final round for Division A. Shawn Peck won over Don Warcomski for Division B. The 15 players in this tournment were will matched and played exciting racquetball!

On Wednesday, April 20 at 7:00 pm, the last meeting to elect new officers for 1988-89 and set goals for the new year, will be held. Any new members are welcome!

Hope to see you there! If interested in playing next year please contact Susan Headley--Box 73.

"Carousel" to be presented at JC

By Stephen Monick and Andrei Costantino

"Carousel" will show at Juniata College, this weekend. The production of "Carousel" is based on Rodgers and Hammerstein's old fashioned love story. "Carousel" centers on a ne'er-do-well who dies while committing a hold-up. He then comes back to earth fifteen years later to set his family's affairs in order.

The music of Juniata"s own orchestra will delight the crowd with waltzes setting the mood. The show will feature popular tunes such as "June is Busting Out All Over","This was a Real Nice Clambake", and "Blow High, Blow Low". According to Dr. Ibrook Tower, "Students make up the entire orchestra, which includes strings, woodwinds, and keyboards." Terry Murray will play piano for the orchestra. Dr. Figg, in charge of the vocalists, says they are well tuned and he is anticipating rave reviews. Dr. Crouch is in charge of the dramatic direction within the musical.

Students have also played a large role in the production and direction of this year's musical. The producer of JC's rendition of "Carousel" is junior Karin Behe. The stage manager is sophomore Kat Houghton. The set and lighting design was designed by the play production class, under the supervision of Dr. Doris Goehring. Freshman Melanie Hartsough choreographed the dancing.

The six leads in the musical add their own flair to the characters. Senior Mollie Bagwell palys a young, innocent Julie Jordan who marries her opposite, a carefree, wild Billy Bigelow, who is portrayed by her real-life boyfriend, Roy Santa Croce. Mark Heinley plays a mature Enoch Snow who marries the spunky Carrie Pipperidge played by Marianne Blatchley. Jennifer Graham is also featured as a dominating , dependable friend, Nettie Fowler. Senior Walt Cupit closes out his Juniata stage career as Jigger, the criminal who leads Billy Bigelow to his demise.

Curtain time is 8:15. The play will run April 21,22, and 23. Admission is free for all members of the Juniata community. If you would like to enjoy a night of sheer entertainment come and see "Carousel".

Have a Happy and Safe Summer!

Student wages to change next year

The Financial Aid office has made some changes in the Work/ Study program. The changes will come into effect during the 88-89 academic year, not for summer employment.

The main change was in the wages earned by the students. Next year, instead of a fixed rate for all students, there will be an increase in wages for each respective year. Freshmen will drop to $3.35, sophomores will remain at $3.70, and juniors and seniors will rise to $4.00 and $4.30 respectively.

This new wage program has been in the making for quite a while, according to Larry Bock, Financial Aid Director. The main instigator of the change has been the increase in costs for the students. The Financial Aid office is trying to find a way to help the students defray the costs, and the college felt that this would be a good faith effort to put a small dent in expenses. Upperclassman will make more money because they have gone through more price increases and have more experience at their various jobs.

A few problems have been foreseen with the new wage table. The first is that a senior working for his first year will make more money than a sophomore returning to the same position. A second problem would be that some seniors may be discriminated against because they are making more money. An employer may choose to hire someone for less money and train him so that he could work there the next few years. These problems are not definitely going to happen, but they are matters which the Financial Aid office has thought about.

Along with the increase in wages for juniors and seniors, there is an anticipation for the work limit to increase for these two classes. This would happen to accomodate the wage increase, but the Financial Aid office must recognize the earnings limit in the individual process. This means that some students may have a higher work limit and some students may remain the same; it depends on the individuals financial aid packet.

The college depends on its student employees, but does not foresee an increase in employment because of the new wages. There are only so many jobs are available on campus. Students are encouraged, though, to take advantage of the employment available to them so that they can take advantage of the college"s attempt to help defray some costs

May Day tradition to be continued in 1988

By Trish Kazmerski

May Day has long been a tradition practiced by the Juniata College Community. It is a day where the men of Juniata recognize and honor their female counterparts.

This year's May Day will be held Sunday, May 1, at 1:00p.m. A brunch is being planned.

This year's guest speaker will be Tracy Smith. Ms. Smith is a graduate of Bucknell University, and she is currently employed as a lobbyist for a law firm in Washington, D.C.

During the festivities, an Honor Woman will be selected. Qualifications for this position are a female from campus, either faculty or student, who has done something beneficial for both the Huntingdon and Juniata College communities. A Senior Woman of the Year, as well as a Senior Man of the Year, will also be recognized. Along with these selections, two women from the other three classes will also be honored.

The nominees are as following: Seniors: Kris Kleinfelder, Amy Wertz, Kathy Nicholson, Lisa Traupman, Karen D'Angelo, and Carron Kahle.

The Senior Guys: Rich Brnich, Andy Rhinehart, Larry Hillman, Chris Hester, Jay Moreau, Joe Newhart, Vinnie Carbaugh, Greg St. Clair, and Dan Sunderland.

The Juniors: Becky Abraham, Amy Coursen, Jen Howells, JoElle Beschuer, Cricket Julius and Beth Loych.

The Sophomores: Sarah Yerger, Lynn Merritt, Annette Oberdorf, Leigh Troutwein, Tonya McClucas and Kris Shephardson.

The Freshmen: Anne-Marie Dinwoodie, Jeanette Zalder, Tina May, Donna Spencer, Nancy Simpson, and Joanna Rebert.

A reminder: Waiter sign-ups will be held April 25 and 26, along with the voting.

Editorial

As the year draws to a close, we are all faced with the end of the year blues, finals, and the fact that we have to find a job for the summer. The biggest problem facing a homebound college student, though, is culture shock.

Every college student picks up bad habits while living away from "the long arm of the parent". These habits may be as minor as cussing or as major as drinking. When we go home for short breaks, these habits are easily subdued while our parents are around and picked up again the moment we step back on campus.

Summer presents a problem, though. We will be around our parents for four months; and if we don't conform to the "proper" child, these months could drag out. So we adjust to the home life.

News becomes an everyday thing now. We read newspapers and listen to an hour and a half of world happenings so that we can talk intelligently to our father. To pacify our mothers, we bring back our cleaning abilities and remember how to cook.

Oh yea, cooking. That is one culture shock I will be glad to have. I'm beginning to have nightmares about recooked baked potatoes and stale cereal. Boy, Mom's cooking sure will taste great in just three short weeks...

To all of you who are now terrified to go home because of the shock your system may have, there are a few things you can do to lessen the blow. Make plenty of phone calls to your college friends and go out with them as often as possible. Be your "college" self around your friends from home who knows you well. They are more likely to also have anxieties from suppressing their habits and need to relieve them somehow. Most important of all, keep your habits in mind. This will prevent you from picking up new ones the following year.

Have a great summer and I'll see most of you next year. Good luck to the seniors, who will have a real culture shock. To all those not returning, I wish you well. Enjoy your time in the sun and don't let the culture shock get you down.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Jen Wade

Here it is, the last issue of the Juniatian for this school year. It's also the last Muddy Run column I will ever write--unless I become famous and am invited back as guest columnist or something. But, I can't count on that, so I'll have to make the most of this opportunity.

A few weeks ago, I wrote about the one thing that has seemed to remain constant during the four years the class of 1988 has been here at Juniata. I also touched briefly on some of the many changes that have taken place--perhaps the most upsetting being the switch the food service recently made from Coke to Pepsi.

With that in mind, I'd like to offer my Top 10 list of things I would change if I could.

10. 8:00 classes to sometime after 9.

9. Semesters back to trimesters.

8. The format of the radio station! (Sorry, I just couldn't help myself!)

7. The alcohol policy--to the way it used to be.

6. The table selection process for Madrigal dinner.

5. The amount of computing facilities on campus.

4. The amount of money it costs to cash a personal check.

3. The amount of time spent studying Plato and the Greeks.

2. My major (just kidding!)

1. The way this column is turning out.

There are, of course, other things I would change, like the softball field, and I'm sure your list would be different from mine. But, for me, these are the big ones.

Unfortunately, probably nothing will ever be done about most of them. I mean, we couldn't very well cancel 8:00 classes, could we? Then students would be deprived of doing mental gymnastics--yes, mental gymnastics--four times a week in Janet Lewis's Intro. to Logic class. And we couldn't change the table selection process for Madrigal dinner because, well, it's one of the few traditions we have left around here. And we certainly couldn't decrease the amount of time spent studying Greeks because...well, let's just say that we wouldn't have much left to study except dead monks if we weren't studying the Greeks.

I guess that's about all I have to say. There really isn't a point to this coulumn, as you've probably discovered. Most of is was just an excuse to take up space and give you something to read.

All I really wanted to say was Good Bye and Good Luck!!

Letter to the Editor

To the editor:

As a senior at Juniata, I took the opportunity to live off campus this year. One of my main reasons for doing this was to save money. On a recent residence hall visit I found eight shower heads continuously dripping hot water.

The college can not help but pass the cost of these hot water losses on to the students in the form of higher housing fees. The problem as I see it is two fold. First there are people who do not turn the showers off tightly, allowing for continuous dripping. Secondly, there are showers which may require replacement of inferior parts.

Waste is a problem all over the world. Reducing water waste here in our college community will not only save natural gas necessary to heat our hot water, it will reduce water costs for the college. Perhaps resource conservation could lead to not only money savings but also to ample supplies of resources for the future.

Sincerely,

Rules for Teachers in 1915

In response to the editorial in last week's Juniatian, this list of Rules for Teachers in 1915 was sent to the editors by Mr. Bill Martin. We thought you would be interested and amused by them. Especially the education majors!

Betsey James, Connecticut College, CT has sent the following "Rules for Teachers" from the year 1915:

1. You will not marry during the term of your contract.
2. You are not to keep company with men.
3. You must be home between the hours of 8 pm and 6 am unless attending a school function.
4. You may not loiter downtown in ice cream stores.
5. You may not travel beyond the city limits unless you have the permission of the chairman of the board.
6. You may not ride in a carriage or automobile with any man unless he is your father or brother.
7. You may not smoke cigarettes.
8. You may not dress in bright colors.
9. You may under no circumstances dye your hair.
10. You must wear at least two petticoats.
11. Your dresses must not be any shorter than two inches above the ankle.
12. To keep the school room neat and clean, you must: sweep the floor at least once daily; scrub the floor at least once a week with hot, soapy water; clean the blackboards at least once a day; and start the fire at 7 am so the room will be warm by 8am.

The school district which listed these "Rules for Teachers" is not identified.

Juniata Sophomore wins Oratorical Contest

By Michele Johnson

A sophomore Juniata student was the lucky recipient of the John M. and Thomas F. Bailey Oratorical Contest last Monday. The contest was revived last year after a 72 year absence.

John Deppen received a check for $500 and had his name placed on the antique silver trophy, which was presented by Col. Thornby's son, Thomas Bailey Thornbury. The subject of the contest was "Election '88: A Privilege or a Responsibility". John's moving speech centered around the feeling that the right to vote is a responsibility which every citizen should exercise. Martin Luther King was the focal point of his speech and served as an excellent example. John is a Peace and Conflict Studies Major from Northumberland, Pa.

The competition was not easy to beat. There were five contestants competing with John. John Foradora, a senior, also competed. He is a History/Political Science Major from Brockway, Pa. and is looking forward to attending Law School in the fall.

Ty Furman, a sophomore, was also competing for the trophy. He is a Communications Major from Sunbury, Pa.

One of the two female contestants was Lynn Merrit, a sophomore from Baltimore, MD. She is a Liberal Arts Major.

J. Nathan Poling, a Philosophy Major, also spoke about his views. He is a sophomore from Rochester, NY.

The second female speaker was Sarah C. Yerger, a sophomore from Elizabethtown, Pa. She is a Pre-law/Spanish Major.

There were three judges for the evening. Cynthia Begnal, Ph.D. is a Speech Communications professor from Pennsylvania State University. Reverend Dr. Earle W. Fike, Jr. also served as a judge. He is the Pastor of the Stone Church of the Brethren. The final judge for the evening was the Honorable Newton C. Taylor, the President-Judge of Huntingdon County.

According to Doris P. Goehring, moderator, the contest was a big success. Hopefully, this success will continue. Congratulations to all of those who participated. You are all winners!

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

(A note from Counselor's Corner: This is the second of two articles on relationship enhancement.)

What can lead to destruction of a relationship or, more appropriately prevent one from even getting off the ground? You guessed it--mistrust, dishonesty and lack of communication were the three top responses in my counseling theories and techniques class.

Let's begin by briefly examining the all-important quality of communication. We hear it all the time but do we really know what it means? The experts suggest that an intergral aspect of communication has to do with one's ability to listen. Leo Buscaglia notes that most of us have forgotten the fine art of listening (if indeed we ever learned it!) and, on those rare occasions when we actually listen, we hear what we are prepared to hear. Oftentimes, in our zeal to help others, we attempt to solve the problem before fully uncovering it.

Several students responded that spending too much time together can very well lead to the destruction of the relationship. "How can two people who love each other not want to spend all their time together?" is a question many people ask. Buscaglia answers that we don't have to spend all our available time with those we love. Move aside from time to time and give them some separate space. "Don't smother each other. No one can grow in shade" is some solicited advice from Leo.

Family therapist John Crosby suggests that a healthy relationship is characterized by an interdependency, that is, a give-and-take where each partner contributes somewhat equally. Relationships where one partner is too dependent or too independent are generally not as healthy and tenuous at best.

Counselor's Corner wishes all students the best on upcoming finals. To the graduating seniors, a hearty and sincere congratulations. To everyone, don't forget to tell those you love just how you feel. Be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

Juniata wins case study competition

A group of Juniata College business students made the most of an invitation to compete in the 1988 case study competition sponsored by The National Economics and Business Honorary Tau Pi Phi. The Juniata contingent, which was expected by the hosts to give only an average performance in their first competiiton, made an auspicious debut taking top honors in the event at Westminister College on April 8-9.

Seniors Roy Santa Croce of Morrisville, David Smith of Harrisburg and Todd Evans of Mount Laurel, NJ, teamed to take first place from a number of Ohio and Pennsylvania colleges, including Marietta, Capital, and three time defending champion, Wittenberg.

"Each team was given two case studies, one on Friday night and on Saturday morning," said Dr. James Lakso, chairperson of the Juniata Economics and Business Administration Department. Lakso accompanied the students to the competition.

"The teams compiled a written executive summary and made a presentation to a panel of judges for each case," continued Lakso. "The judges were business people from the New Castle/Erie area, and they did not know the schools they were judging."

The awards were based on combined scores and were announced at a closing banquet on Saturday evening.

"Our group did a real good job," said Lakso. "We're very proud of the outcome and hope to continue to compete in the future."

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Trish Kazmerski

I'm back! Yes, remember me? Trish? I was the freshman who wrote the first Muddy Run of the year and got killed for it. Well, since I opened the year, I figured I'd end it as well. Now I can write more than just about the weather, food and clothes. Don't get me wrong, the weather still sucks, the food still-well let's say, Fox's has at least a 25% increase in profits this year and has probably had to hire an extra stromboli maker. As for the clothes, whatever combo is clean is good enough for me. Don't get me wrong. I'm still preppy, but washing wool sweaters can be very time consuming and costly. Let's say my alligators have been in deep hibernation since October.

Yes, this has been one interesting year. I'm not the naive, young girl who came here in August, thinking that the ranch was a barn and field on Rt. 22 where biology students hung out. Yes, I know what the ranch is, how it operates, and that some biology courses do go there. I have also learned how to play rugby but still have no idea what the saying on my mug means. (Anyone with information on this, please contact me). I've partied in Thunder Alley and have lived to tell about it, and I even liked it. I have perfected the art of "scoping." (This is a major accomplishment because I used to think it had something to do with oral hygiene). I mean I can find my scope(s) up to a two mile radius. My friends welcome this ability because I can also zoom in on their scopes. It is my gift to humanity.

Another thing I have learned is how to reach the right apartment in East without spending an hour climbing tower after tower. (Believe it or not, this enlightenment just happened 2 months ago). Before I just used to say, "I'll meet you at the bridge."

These are the things I've learned. Now here are some things that are still a mystery to me. Why is Randy Dieke always smiling? Is he the ninth Osmond brother? Why do I get and A on a paper I spend two hours on and a B on a nine week research paper, both in the same class? Why do the kegs always kick as soon as I get the tap? Why do I always meet Mr. Right, the night before a major exam? Why doesn't Tote use real chocolate ice cream to make shakes instead of vanilla and syrup? Why does everyone decide to eat lunch the day you have a noon class? Why are the classes you have to attend always scheduled at 8:00 am? What is the deal with the third Sherwood guys? (Only kidding. They are the sweetest guys on campus, at least some are.) What does the cafe mean when they put the word "healthy" in front of the food, (ie, Healthy Chop Suey)? What kind of food do we normally eat? And finally, the biggest question of the year--What is Album Oriented Rock anyway? Well that's it for now. Until next year, have an awesome summer and take care!

Congratulations to the Juniatian staff on a successful year. Have a wonderful summer!

Springfest '88: What memories are made of

By Deb Dougherty

The week of Spring Fest began slow to allow students some time to study. The committee designated Sunday and Monday as study session days. Most of the campus must have jumped at this chance because all of the week's events had a good turnout.

The first official Spring Fest activity was a coffeehouse last Tuesday in Sherwood's Lounge. This event was co-sponsored by Centerboard's Coffeehouse and Spring Fest committees. John Cunningham, the lead singer for the Screaming Ducks, was the featured soloist.

Everyone who ventured over to Sherwood had a good time. Spirits were flowing as the crowd sang along with Cunningham. It was a disappointment to see the end come, but he assured the spectators that he would be back on Saturday with the rest of his band.

The Spring Fest committee was kind enough to insert another study session Wednesday, and once again, many students took advantage of the opportunity because there were over 250 people at the Laff-off Thursday evening. Three comedians from New York City were guests at Juniata for the evening. George Calfa, Dean Edelson, and Anita Wise kept the crowd rolling with laughter all night. Each comedian seemed to touch on all aspects of life from contraception to school, so everyone's taste of humor was quenched.

The festivities continued Friday afternoon with Mud Volleyball, which was sponsored by Phi Chi Theta. The finals came down to the Mudchunks against the Sucklehead, but the Mudchunks prevailed. A total of $450 was raised for the fraternity. "I think everything went well. We had a lot of participation," according to Chris Glover, President of Phi Chi Theta. Unfortunately, though, the weather was not cooperating with the event and they had to finish early around 4:30

The festivities continued Friday evening in the multi-purpose room with a dance featuring the band "Bam Bamm". Juniata's own Chris Huff got in on the action during the first set when he played the drums for the band. The students danced around and had a great time, as the weekend was just beginning.

Once again the weather was not cooperating on Saturday when Spring Fest had to be cancelled on account of inclemate weather. Only the sports teams were brave enough to stand the cold.

The only thing not cancelled for Saturday was the "Rocky Horror Picture Show", which was shown in the multi-purpose room. The true movie goers left their dorms, supplied with the various sundries needed for the picture. For any first timer, the movie (or the crowd) was quite shocking. If you enjoyed being pelted with coasters, rice and toast and enjoyed listening to the crowd fill in the words, then you definitely enjoyed this movie.

The climax of the week finally came on Sunday. Spring Fest was upon Juniata. The weatherman must have been warned about Sunday's weather because it was sunny and warm. The real festivities began at 12:30 in the afternoon with the arrival of the first band. "Rhythm Under Emotional Stress", "Bookends", and "The Screaming Ducks" kept the crowd dancing for the next six hours.

In between the first band change, students were entertained by "Wendy's" with a hamburger eating contest. The sophomores were the hungriest, as the ate their way through 11 hamburgers.

Later in the day, students enjoyed a real outdoor barbecue for dinner as they enjoyed the sun and music. The end of the day also brought with it many sunburnt and wet people. They all left, however, with an anticipation for next year.

Senior Class bids Farewell at Louie's

By Amy Wertz

Last Tuesday night the Senior class had their seventh annual Senior Dinner at Louie's Coral Lounge. The senior dinner provided an evening for the entire class to get off campus and enjoy good food and socializing with class mates. The night of April 12th marked the beginning of the last month of the senior's days at Juniata, therefore thoughts of graduation and the good old days were often topics of conversation.

One of the trademarks of the evening is the giving of "Senior Awards". These awards are given to people that the members of the senior class had voted for. This year the award for Most Likely to Succeed was given to Andy Rhinehart and Beth Hoppel. The award for Best Personality was given to Eric "Cheeser" McGee, and Mary Lou Miller. Rich Brnich and Lisa Troupman received the award for the Best Dressed. Lastly, Molly Bagwell and Roy Santa Croce were given the award for Class Couple of the year. A total of 20 categories of awards were given out to about 40 lucky seniors.

In all, everyone had a great time, good food and wonderful conversation with friends. The evening lasted until about midnight and then the buses returned back to campus full of seniors who enjoyed themselves thoroughly Juniata style.

Tammy Achenbach,RA in East,won $75 for the Best Decorated Room. Laura Naughton and Carolyn Kunda won $50 for the Best Decorated Freshman Room. Melinda Brandt presented the money. CASE promotes Alternatives and awareness on campus

By Jenny Bridwell

On March 23, 1988 CASE (the committee on alcohol study and education) participated in Wellness Day. The main purpose of CASE is to promote responsible drinking and to provide alternative and educational programming. The committee provided information, literature and free samples of non-alcoholic beverages such as wine and beer. CASE also conducted a survey which included an alcohol awareness quiz, campus attitudes and drinking habits sections and a programming interest survey. The survey has proved to be very informative and has helped CASE make studies in up-to-date programming and educational efforts.

There were 64 respondants on the awareness quiz. As it is the concern of CASE that some people are acting on presumed knowledge, not facts, the committee was disturbed to find that over 48% of respondents believed that alcoholism can be cured like most diseases. It can NOT! Once you are an alcoholic, you are always and alcoholic. Also, 67% of participants thought that it's easier to kick an alcohol problem than a heroin problem. Wrong! And although only slightly over 8% of respondants believed that you could sober up in the shower, or by drinking coffee, it still shows that myths exist. These are some of the myths that CASE is attempting to combat through information and education.

We must acknowledge how impressed the committee was when the number of correct responses was very high-but we must realize that any misinformation is potentially dangerous!

We would like to thank our faithful members, 1987-88 Chairperson John E. Deppen, and Dr. Jay Buchanan, for their efforts. We would also like to thank nurse Jane Brown, Chris and Terry Noyes, Bob Fisher and Dr. Nancy Van Kuren. Our deepest thanks to Sharon Flaherty for her dedication and support.

The Juniatian would like to thank everyone for their support this past year. Good luck seniors! Have a great summer eveyone!

Those brave players that ignored the freezing weather take the MUD plunge. What a spirited looking bunch!

An opposing player tries to avoid JC's shortstop. By the looks of this picture he was definitely out! In the action Saturday there were 28 hits and six homers. Ero had three, with Webb, Neff, and Hayduk each with one.

In this past week's action the Indians lost 19-6 to Bucknell on Wed. only to return on Saturday and sweep the doubleheader against Dickinson. Here JC's own pitcher Mike hurls the ball towards the batter.

Men's V-ball finishes a successful season

The Juniata Men's Volleyball Club finished its 1988 season Sunday afternoon in a 7-15, 9-15 loss in the championship match against Messiah, who hosted the tournament.

The road, to the championship saw the men finish first in their pool. The day started with a victory over Haverford 15-7, 15-8. The second opponent in pool play was Messiah with a split in the two games, 8-15, 15-10. A much improved Lebanon Valley club proved to be a worthy third opponent. After dropping the first to JC at 15-8, the LVC club took our Spikers to 18-16. JC thus finished pool play with five wins and one loss.

Playing in the tournament were setter Dan Stambaugh, with Andy Rhinehart at the technique spot; Bob Davies, Craig White, Greg Pike and Greg Howe provided the outside attack, with Chris Hester and Mark Heinly playing the middle.

In the quarterfinal round JC outgunned the Elizabethtown team in two straight, 15-8, 15-10.

Bloomsburg, the semifinal opponent, was an easy victim 15-5 in the opening game, but rebounded to win the second at 13-15. JC's offense took over in the third game posting an impressive win 15-4.

Captain Andy Rhinehart commented that despite the loss in the final match, the season had been quite a success. "We proved we were competitive. We have beaten every team in the league at least once."

Convocation Opens Fall Semester

Gaitens, Glosenger, Neff speak

Juniata College's 113th academic year officially began on Monday, August 29, with Opening Convocation ceremonies at 11:00 a.m. in Oller Auditorium. The ceremony served as a welcome from the faculty and administration to the more than 1100 new and returning students who began fall semester classes on Monday.

The Rev. Dr. M. Andrew Murray, Juniata College chaplain, opened the ceremony with an invocation in which he set the tone for the opening of the academic year.

Richard Gaitens, president of student government, followed with welcoming remarks to new and returning students. He spoke of the changes that have occured over the past few years such as the switch to semesters, change of presidents, the new alcohol policy, and a few others. He also spoke of changes as individuals that we have made and will make in the future. He concluded with the statement "This is a year of great change, and I am thoroughly confident that the school is in good hands... To those of you who are new, welcome and to those friends who are returning, welcome back."

Following Gaiten"s remarks Dr. Fay L. Glosenger, associate professor of education and the 1988 recipient of the Lindback Foundation Award for Distinguished Teaching, introduced and presented an address titled "Making It Happen."

In the address Glosenger challenged the audience to adopt as their cause the child care crisis facing our country today. "We know today that the roots of your intelligence, as well as the core of your personality were already formed by the time you started school. That idea is rather frightening and becomes even more frightening when you look at the demographics on today"s children and families; when you realize that at the present time the United States still has no federal policy on child care and early education."

In concluding her address, Dr. Glosenger spoke directly to the students in the auditorium. "You are the leaders of today. The task of leadership is to give our youth and all Americans a sense that we can engage in enterprises that lend meaning to life... My wish for the upcoming academic year is that we actively engage ourselves, individually and collectively, to use the potential that we possess; that we empower ourselves and work to leave our personal lives, the Juniata community, our nation, and our world better than we find them today. Together we can make it happen."

Dr. Joseph Stewart, Vice President and Dean of Academic Affairs, then introduced Dr. Robert Neff, President of Juniata College, who welcomed back the returning students and extended a special welcome to new students. "This place is much more vibrant because you are here," he said.

Dr. Neff then spoke on the state of the college. He cited several of the college"s achievements which have occured over the past years. "This year for the first time in its history," he said, "Juniata has been listed by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching as a liberl arts I school. That means we are part of 142 other liberal arts colleges in the country, the very best."

"We continue to be listed in New York Times education editor Ted Fiske's Best Buys and in Peterson's Competitive College's. Last year members of the faculty wrote four books and numerous articles. Many of them coauthored by students... Last year we began the year with an announcement of a major award, this year we begin the same way. The Gas Research Institute indicated to us last week that we would have a $500,000 grant. That's good news."

Dr. Neff went on to talk about last year's seniors and the fiscal situation of the college. In conlusion Dr. Neff challenged the students. "The state of the college is yet to be determined this year," he said. "The quality of interchange will define our life together, be it intellecutal, social or moral. In the search for what constitutes appropriate living may we all be blessed."

In closing the ceremony, students, faculty, administrators and friends of the college joined in singing the college's alma mater, lead by Dr. Joseph Figg, assistant professor of music.

JC names new Trustee

Frances Hesselbein, national executive director Girl Scouts of the U.S.A., has been named to the Juniata College Board of Trustees for a three-year term. The appointment, announced by Juniata president Robert W. Neff, brings the membership of Juniata's governing body to 38.

Frances Hesselbein holds the distinction of being the first Girl Scout chief executive to come through troop leader ranks in what has become the largest voluntary organization for girls in the world. Mrs. Hesselbein, who began her involvement in scouting as a scout leader in Johnstown, Pa., served as scout leader, camp director, and council president from 1954 to 1970. She served as executive director of Johnstown's Talus Rock Girl Scout Council from 1970 to 1974 and as executive director of the York Girl Scout Council from 1974 to 1976.

Mrs. Hesselbein, who attended the University of Pittsburgh and New York University, was recently chosen as one of the 12 outstanding not-for-profit executives by Savvy magazine. Her detailed corporate planning and management system is so successful that management expert Peter Drucker referred to the Girl Scouts as the best run organization in America. In a recent interview with Business Weekly, Drucker said, "If I had to nominate the outstanding executive in the U.S. today, it would not be a business leader. The ablest executive by a long shot is the national executive director of the Girl Scouts, Frances Hesselbein. She's fantastic."

Mrs. Hesselbein was the first female recipient of the National Professional Leadership Award, given by the United Way, and has received the Distinguished Community Service Award from Mutual of America Life Insurance Company. She is a member of the board of visitors of the Peter F. Drucker Graduate Management Center of California's Claremont Graduate School and is on the executive committee of Youth for Understanding.

Sex play comes to Juniata

On September 19 at 7pm in Alumni Hall, the Metamorphosis Performing Company will be presenting four role play scenarios related to sexual communication.

What did she mean? What does he want? Mixed messages and misunderstood actions become particularly significant when the subject is sex. This role-playing program focuses on miscommunication, attitudes, expectations and assertiveness in relationships. After each scene, the audience has the opportunity to question the characters and to discover the thoughts, feelings and hidden agendas of college men and women.

The scenarios are being sponsored by the Student Services.

The Welcome Back picnic on Sherwood lawn was a big success this past Saturday with students enjoying lobster and steak and corn on the cob. Maybe we can have lobster more often?

Editorial

Welcome back! Welcome to a new challenge. We know this will be another good year at Juniata College, but you will have a hand in that. The real measure of this year is what happens to you--how you change and develop. When I interview seniors at the end of their college career, they tell me that, on a scale of 1 to 10, they rank their personal growth during their four years at Juniata College between 9 and 10. That high! Ten's a perfect score. I hope all of you can make the same ranking at the end of your college career.

The faculty has committed itself to your development through quality teaching and advising. When asked to assess student relationships with faculty, seniors usually rank this between 9 and 10. Your formation in this community will occur by the quality of exchange between students and faculty. Don't be afraid to question. You are surrounded by people who can assist you in your intellectual quest. You are in a lifelong conversation about ideas, methods and values. You have friends here to guide you on your way.

The learning environment extends beyond the classroom. Co-curricular activities enhance your development through refining relational skills, learning how organizations function and developing the art of leadership. Your contribution as a citizen of this campus will improve the quality of life for you and for everyone. Those students who are the most satisfied take part in shaping the environment around them. This year Juniata College will be defined by your input and participation. We encourage your involvement.

Welcome back! We who are part of the staff have looked forward to your return. Life is more vibrant because you are here. As you begin this college year, know that you have friends who care about you. We have a request to make as you begin: Aim high in you aspiration and sculpt well your future.

Dr. Robert Neff

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

(A note from Counselor's Corner: This article first appeared in the "Juniatian" last year at this time. Because of its timeliness, it is presented again.)

The transition from high school to college can be a trying experience for many students. Each year, students move from the very prescriptive and structured environment of high school and living at home to the higher education arena where what one does is, in most cases, entirely the responsibility of the individual student. Parents are not there to insure that the student gets up and off to class, that homework is submitted on time, and/or that proper eating and sleeping habits are maintained.

The biggest problem the first year college students face comes under the general heading of time management. Studies show that the single most often reason stated by college freshman for not achieving at least a "C" average during the first semester is poor use of time.

Average college students take between four and five courses per semester. Students probably meet three of these courses on a Monday-Wednesday-Friday basis and the remaining two on a Tuesday-Thursday basis. With the exception of students who have afternoon labs, most students work very hard to schedule classes back to back so that they are finished each day by noon. Considering that there are no Saturday classes, the result is that there is a lot of "free time" and thus a real need to manage one's time as efficiently and effectively as possible.

Parkinson's Law states that work expands to meet the time available for its completion. For example, if one has three hours to complete an assignment chances are that it will be accomplished in that time period. On the other hand, if one has all afternoon and evening to complete the assignment, it will in all probability take that long. Students fall prey to Parkinson's law quite regularly. It is very helpful to set a time table for completing homework and then work to meet that time table.

It is interesting to note that most student-athletes perform better academically the season in which they are actively participating in their sports. The reason for this is that they realize that there is only so much time and that they must work at effectively managing their study and practice time.

The following are a few suggestions for managing time more wisely.

*Don't allow work to pile up. Utilize the principle of distributed practice and break larger assignments down into smaller, more manageable parts.

*Employ the two to one rule; that is, make an honest effort at studying two hours outside of class for every one hour in class.

*Be a list maker and have a daily "to do" list. Tend to the most important tasks first and check off the items when they are complete.

*Include some form of relaxation in your daily schedule. The rigors of college life will take their toll if exercising and socializing with friends are not included on a regular basis.

*Reward yourself-do something nice for yourself after you have completed an assignment. Chances are that you will study more diligently and regularly if your study periods are followed by something good.

Proper management of time allows students to participate more fully in the total life of the college. Social, recreational, academic and cultural opportunities are greatly expanded when time is managed judiciously.

Would you like to write to a State Prisoner?

Dear Editor:

I am a prisoner on death row at the Arizona State Prison, and I was wondering if you would do me a favor. I have been here for twelve years and have no family or friends on the outside to write to. I was wondering if you would put an ad in your campus newspaper for me for correspondence. If not in your paper, then maybe you have some type of bulletin that you could put it in. I know that you are not a pen-pal club or anything like that, but I would really appreciate it if you could help me.

Since I don't know if you have an actual newspaper, I will just make a small ad and then if you have to change it around or anything, go ahead and do what you have to.

Death Row prisoner, caucasian male, age 42, desires correspondence with either male or female college students. Wants to form a friendly relationship and more or less just exchange past experiences and ideas. Will answer all letters and exchange pictures. If interested, write to Jim Jeffers, P.O. Box B-38604, Florence, Arizona 85232.

Sincerely yours,
Jim Jeffers

lanagement Program tarts at Juniata

all semester course offerings in Jata College's Certificate in nagement Program have been ounced. The program will again offered through the college's tinuing education program.

The college has designed this gram primarily for supervisors potential supervisors in busi- s and industry throughout the ion. An achievement awarded n successful completion of the courses that comprise the prog- . This fall "Computer Applica- ns" and "Principles of Manage- nt" will be offered. Classes will et for ten consecutive weeks inning the week of September

Principles of Management will phasize the primary functions of nagers in organizations: plan- g, organizing, staffing, direct- , and controlling. The course l meet on Monday evenings m 6:30 to 9:00 pm beginning ptember 12 in room 401, Good ll. The course will be taught by mes Donaldson, associate profes- of economics and business ministration. Professor Donald- n is a graduate of Juniata College. e earned an M.A. from the Uni- rsity of Akron and an M.B.A. m Syracuse University. Profes- Donaldson has been on the niata faculty since 1979.

Computer Applications will deal ith the identification of informa- n needs, selection of hardware d software, and hands on experi- ce with applications common to siness, such as spreadsheets, rd processing, and data base nagement. The course will meet Wednesday evenings from 6:30 9 pm beginning September 14 in om P-107, Brumbaugh Science Center. The course will be taught by Dale Wampler, professor of computer science and director of the computer center. Dr. Wampler is a graduate of Bridgewater College and earned his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin. Dr. Wampler has been on the Juniata faculty since 1961.

According to Dr. James Lakso, chairman of the department of economics and business administration, "Juniata's Certificate in Management Program has existed for several years and has been an economical and efficient means of meeting the training and development needs of newly promoted supervisors. We have also assisted individuals in increasing their potential for advancement into the managerial ranks." Lakso noted that a growing number of clerical and secretarial personnel, small-business owners, and administrators of not-for-profit organizations have been taking the certificate courses in recent years.

To earn the certificate, a student must complete the six courses. The topics convered include a wide range of fundamental subjects, each of which contributes to the student's understanding of operational and strategic dimensions of organizations. In addition to the courses being offered this semester, a student must take Financial and Managerial Accounting, Elements of Economics, and Dynamics of Supervision to complete the certificate program.

Additional information is available by writing to Certificate in Management, Office of the Registrar, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652, or by calling 643-4310, extension 270.

Experience C Hockey Will lead Team

Most young teams are thought to e inexperienced. Kathi Quinn is ot sure she totally agrees with that inking as she previews her third ason as field hockey coach at niata College.

The Indians start the 1988 cam- aign with a 30-player roster that eatures just six upperclass retur- ees with nine sophomores and 15 reshman. However, they are all perienced as far as Quinn is oncerned.

"I feel we have 30 experienced layers because in the past we've ad kids that had never played efore," said Quinn. "With this am most have played at least four ears, including high school and ollege."

"Also, five have played for PIAA tate champions while another three ere on teams that made it to the tate final four. Although none of hese girls are superstars, they all ome from excellent programs and now what it takes to win. They ave had positive hockey experi- nces and I hope they can bring hem into our program."

Juniata opens the campaign at Lycoming on Sept. 7. The Tribe will start the home schedule against Wilkes College on Tuesday, Sept. 13.

Quinn's young team will look for eadership from tri-captains Mickey Hoffman and Joanne Thomas, both seniors, and junior Kathleen McGowan. Thomas, a midfielder, and McGowan, a forward, played for the Mideast team at hockey nationals last year in California while Hoffman has been the Tribe's most consistent defensive player.

The Indians return three solid sophomores, including All-Middle Atlantic Conference player Jill Schadler, a sweeper. Amy Blough, a center back, played at nationals a year ago and is back along with powerful-shooting forward Jennifer Dippery.

Junior Genny Warner also returns as a midfielder and back-up goalie. The 1988 schedule is:

Ready, set, go-alie! JC Soccer kicks off

The 1988 soccer season at Juniata could be one for the record books if everything falls into place for the Indians. Coach Klaus Jaeger enters his tenth season with probably the best shot for the Tribe to reach the .500 mark since the program began in 1979.

"This year's squad has more experience returning than we've ever had," Jaeger said. "That's a definite plus with only nine days of camp before the season opened."

Juniata begins the campaign with three road contests before the home opener on Wednesday, September 14 against Pitt-Johnstown.

A key for the Indians will be their ability to start to win the close games this fall. Last year, the Tribe was victimized by eight one-goal losses on the way to a 3-10-3 record.

However, confidence in tight games should be abundant for the Indians with key players returning in almost every position, and a fine freshman class to join the veterans.

Senior Steve Grater, last year's team MVP and top scorer with 10 goals, and classmate Brian Roselli will be co-captains for the Tribe. Roselli rejoins the team after a year of study in England.

Jaeger sees seniors Roselli and Bruce Nardy, juniors Bob Kelley and John Telenko, and sophomore Mike Kauffman as playing key roles on defense for Juniata. Junior Tim Phelps could get the nod at goalkeeper.

On offense, Grater will be joined by classmate Drew Spector, juniors Doug Kovacs and Matt Reber, and Damian Preziosi, who had a fine freshman campaign last year.

Among the incoming freshman, keeper Brian Hall, midfielder John Bradway and forward Derek Harkness could push for playing time.

"I needn't be concerned about leadership and a driving force on the team," said Jaeger of co-captains Grater and Roselli. "They will set the tone and the pace for the rest of the team.

"In general, our players know what it takes to turn a season around and change some of those eight one-goal losses into wins. It won't come easy though because we once again face a tough schedule."

Juniata begins a 16-game slate with three straight road contests before the home opener with Pitt-Johnstown. Jaeger and assistant coach Chris Noyes see encounters with Franklin and Marshall, Elizabethtown, Messiah, and Shippensburg as the stand-out matches in a very competitive schedule.

The Tribe will once again play in the seven-team Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest League. Juniata was fifth last year with a 1-4-1 mark.

Rugby River Rats Begin Fall Campaign

The Juniata River Rats will begin their fall season Saturday September 10th in the Highland Games in Ligonier, PA. The games are a Scottish festival held every year in Idewild Park. Kilts, bagpipes, and rugby balls are all part of the games which celebrate Scottish culture. The Westmoreland Mens Club, UVU Old Boys, and the Erie Mens Clubs will join the River Rats in the rugby tournament.

The Juniata River Rugby Club is headed into its third official season coming off a successful 5-4-1 spring campaign. The loss of seven starters to graduation last spring leaves the club with many holes to fill. Returning standouts such as John Colbert, Tim Garvin, Eric Lewis, and Charlie Courtney will have to provide outstanding play as the Rats face a top flight schedule including many Div.I and II rugby clubs. Other members of this year's team include Steve DuMars, Mike Grill, Jim Golden, Chris Bistline, Tom Wenger, Matt Carson, Rob Goss, Mike Buchheit, Darrin Kier, Jim Tufano, Erik Mentzer, Jeff Schneider, Beno Thomas, Frank Carey, Martin Scanlon, Jon Moul, Glenn Smith, Ryan Hart, Ed Hoffman, and Doug Henry.

This season"s schedule:
Sept. 10 Highland Games
17 IUP
24 at WVU
Oct. 1 Allegheny Rugby Union
22 Carnegie Mellon, Penn State
29 at UPJ
Nov. 5 at Bloomsburg

X-country Breaks wind

Other than the obvious, there aren't many differences between the 1988 Juniata College men's and women's cross country teams.

Third year coach Jim Payne has two squads that are at similar stages of their building process. Both are young, improving and gaining in confidence.

Both teams debut in the Lebanon Valley Invitational on Saturday, September 10. The home opener is September 17 with Messiah.

The men welcome back a strong nucleus this fall from a 2-8 campaign in 1987. The Indians lost four seniors to graduation but return six letterwinners.

Leading the returnees is sophomore Ted Breault, last year's team MVP. His classmates George Bentzel, Andy Larmore and Doug Lawson were also lettermen a year ago.

Jeff Moseman is the lone junior back on the squad while Jeff Boshart is the only senior letterwinner returning this fall.

Payne also expects contributions from sophomores Daniel Cain, Vince Morder and David Wivagg. Incoming freshmen Matthew Cain and Doug Jenkins also add depth for the Tribe.

"I hope this team will continue the progress it made over the course of last season," said payne. "<I<R"m confident our runners will remain dedicated to cutting their individual times down. The more we improve individually, the more evident that will become in our team performance."

The women's squad isn't as deep as the men's, but it has some quality experience to count on this fall.

Impressive sophomore Mary Strapple is the only returning letterwinner on the preseason roster.

Payne expects senior Stephanie Payne, who was injured much of last year, to return along with junior Karen Brubaker. Freshman Kimberly Wurth heads the incoming recruited class.

The Indians lost three letterwinners from a 2-7 squad a year ago, including team MVP Sue Gulla.

"Despite a larger men's roster, the women a:e similar to the men in where they are as runners," said Payne. "The women also have a good work ethic from last year and should provide our opponents with tough competition."

"Our overall goal in the program is to promote development of our individual athletes. The more we do to reach this goal, the more it can show on our team record and in our Middle Atlantic Conference meet performances."

The Indian men and women were 19th and 14th respectively last fall in the MAC championship race at Haverford.

Juniata Spikers are ready for 1988 season

Juniata College volleyball coach Larry Bock has had some outstanding teams over his 11 seasons, and 1988 should bring yet another to College Hill. However, Bock doesn't expect it to just happen without effort.

The Indians open the schedule with their annual trip to the U.S. Naval Academy Tournament on September 9-10.

"I think we'll struggle early, learn a lot during the course of the season and, given a lot of hard work, good health and consistently tough competition, be a very, very good team by the end of the year -- one that will be extremely tough to beat. The watchword for the year will be patience," said Bock, whose career record stands at 381-77.

Eleven letter winners return from a 53-5 campaign a year ago that saw the Indians finish fourth in the NCAA Division III during their third straight trip to the national final four. The Tribe has made the final four in five of the last seven seasons.

The Indians lost just two players from a year ago, but they were two of the most talented ever at Juniata. Senior Beth Hoppel was a three-time first team All-American while Cathy Miller, a middle blocker, earned All-American and Academic All-American honors last year. Miller was the Indian MVP in 1986 and 1987.

"We'll certainly miss Beth and Cathy, but we have the potential for more than filling their big shoes," said Bock. "With Jackie Rebert and Rhonda Bygall, we have two of the top attackers anywhere."

Rebert, a senior from Spring Grove, was a second team All-American a year ago and earned All-East and All-Middle Atlantic Conference honors as outside hitter. One of the most devastating hitters ever at Juniata, she set new Indian standards last year with 512 kills and 1,146 attacks, and she also led the team in perfect digs and passes.

A powerful middle blocker, Bygall is a junior from Brogue and Red Lion High School. She was second to Miller last season in stuffed blocks with 177, the third best total ever at Juniata.

Senior Sue Gelston of Phoenix, MD, joins Rebert and adds experience at the outside hitting spot along with juniors Tonya McClucas of New Paris, Angie Shue of York and Laurie Snow of Altoona.

Bock is also excited about newcomer Melinda Selby, a junior transfer from Seton Hill College and former standout at Cambria Heights High School. Freshman Lee Ondrejack of Johnstown will also be one of the top rookies.

In the middle two players from Altoona's Bishop Guilfoyle High school should work well with Bygall. Sophomore Amy Allshouse returns while freshman Larissa Weimer is set for her campaign.

"All our attackers are very capable hitters," said Bock. "However, the fundamental strength of this team will lie in its defense. We have effectively cornered the market on the top defensive specialists in the East. A great deal of what we do this year will be based on their abilities."

Senior captain Dana Worthington of Johnstown and Bishop McCort High School is one of the defenders Bock will be counting on in '88. Two other Johnstown products, Gina Leis and Michelle Wissinger, both sophomores, anchor the back row.

Worthington and Wissinger were one-two in service consistency last season while Leis added 37 aces. All three averaged nearly 75 percent in passing performance last fall.

Junior Kris Witchey of Baltimore, Maryland, is the heir apparent to Hoppel and will make the switch to setter from a defensive specialist role. Freshman Jennifer Tatum of Allentown should be a capable backup.

"The key to the entire season will be our ability to pass accurately enough to run our offense, " said Bock. "This team will surprise a lot of people if we take proper advantage of some very big strengths and get the ball to the right people at the right time."

"For the first time in many years we"ll have to play multiple defenses, but this should be an asset in the long run. We are going to wear out a lot of teams and hitters with our defense."

The Indians will be trying to wear out opponents that are among the toughest in the country. Once again, Bock's squad will face top notch competition in several quality tournament fields.

The Tribe will host the annual Juniata Invitational and Coca-Cola Classic, and also travel to the Illinois Benedictine, Eastern Connecticut and U.S. Navel Academy Invitational Tournaments.

"The Schedule is a tough one this year from the outset with Chapman, a top West Coast Division II team, being our first match at Navy,M" said Bock. "We always look forward to playing Navy and extending an intense rivalry."

After the regular season, the Indians hope to defend their MAC Championship for a seventh time in the conference tournament at Messiah. Juniata is seeking its eigth consecutive NCAA tournament bid.

"Top conference teams look like Messiah, Gettysburg and Elizabethtown with Susquehanna coming on," said Bock of the MAC race. "Top Eastern teams are Allegheny-who we meet in their tournament-Eastern Connecticut, Albany and Cortland. We'll see all those people."

"Nationally, Cal State-San Bernardino, Cal-San Diego, IBC and Washington University of St. Louis are right there," continued Bock. "We'll see IBC at their tournament and probably run into the other people at NCAA's."

Of course, the other people of the Division III women's volleyball world expect they'll be running into Juniata along the way, too. Just be patient.

Senior Oriented Indians to capture MAC Crown

By Mike Antenucci

Three years ago, around this same time in September, I was getting my first taste of Juniata College Football sitting in the press box high above the playing field. At this same time other members of the class of 1989 were also becoming familiar with the program, but their experience was being absorbed on the playing field.

The past years have been nothing short of successful for this years seniors. Posting 24 wins to a mere 8 defeats would seem gratifying to all, however, in their past three seasons the Indians have fallen short of the conference title (or at least a share of this title) by one game. So, while there will always be great memories of each successful season there will also always be doubts of what could have been.

For the class of 1989 this is the last chance to earn MAC bragging rights. Head coach Rob Ash stated,"The potential of this team stacks up well, but you don't win with potential." With that in mind let's start at the top of the stack where Chris "Cubby" Davis, a pre-season All-American leads an offense which returns all 11 starters from a season past. Davis, taking over QB spot last year, broke school records for attempts, completions, and passing yards (169-326;2161 yards).

Davis will be well protected when dropping back to pass by an experienced line which returns all of last seasons starters. Junior John Sigler will handle the snapping duties, with Ty Snavely, Mike Martin, Todd Ferrara, and Jan Petery filling out the rest of the "O" line. Tightend Jim Mets, a senior co-captain from Medford, New Jersey is a three starter and an All Conference pick, as well as a pre-season All-American canidate.

The sizable offensive line will be opening holes for experienced runners such as fullback Pat Danneker. Juniors Dan Crossey and Dennis DeRenzo will share the duties at halfback, both are strong runners with the ability to break open a long gain on any given play." The offensive line has really meshed together well," stated Martin, "our confidence in one another is what will make us better than what other teams may think we are." Martin also feels that there is no pressure on the Indians, because "we are not supposed to be a great team, but a team with enough talent to be good."

When the passing attack is in full gear Davis will be blessed with throwing to the likes of such talented receivers as Mike Cottle, Don Betar, Ray Shelly, along with Metz from his tightend position a host of other canidates who f the JC receiving core. Both C and Betar are experienced sen with an exceptional knack for ting the job done. It would be g to find a defensive secondary in country (Div.III) who will keep duo out of the endzone this sea

Donny Betar knows the im tance of this season but feels teams worst enemy at this poin hurting ourselves." Betar noted in order for this team to be succ ful they msut take the season game at a time and to paly ev game like it was the last."No remembers who comes in sec place," notes Betar, "we must away from that mid season set b if we're going to win conference."

While no one on the offens taking for granted that all 11 star are back, the defense is in a diffe boat, needing to replace 5 star from last years 7-3 squad. Howe co-captain Tim Kirsch, a se from Hollidaysburg, feels the has looked tough in camp and there is more experience (even w the new starters) than people think we have. Junior outside li backer, Steve Campbell feels same way. Campbell stated "ev one on the defense has eno game experience for us to be s cessful, we have good depth will be competitive."

Accompaning Campbell a Kirsch on defense will be Dave ter, Smokey Glover, Brian Hall Jeff Haines up front, while Fr Gay, Jerry Look and Mark Bre mer will work at inside lineback Randy Martin and Hans Wertz share duties on the other end, wh Bob Herzog, Todd Rossman, B Hitson, Brian Warner, and J Spahr will see action in secondary.

John O'Niell and Keith Wat will handle the kicking duties, wh Spahr or DeRenzo will earn the as Juniata's punter. If all goes planned the Indians will see the selves sitting on top of the M conference. However, if Natio recognition is a goal the Indians have to get down to business r from the start when they h Nationally ranked Washington Jefferson this Saturday.

The game adds a little bit m area flavor with Paul Aign W&J's quarterback, and long t competitor with our own Cub Davis (and the other Hollidays players). The new stadium is a ing maxium capicity, the payers waiting anxiously for game t and yes I can only want so m longer to be sitting in the press b hopefully. Game time is schedul for 1:00.

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXIX No. 2 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 September 15, 1988

Riot or just having fun? At Juniata, it's anybody's guess. Enjoy it while you can, cold weather is just around the corner.

Alcohol policy changes due to new state law

By DEBORAH DOUGHERTY

July 1, 1988, The Pennsylvania State Legislature passed a House Bill expanding the definition of furnishing alcohol. This new definition stated that anyone supplying, giving or providing alcohol to minors or anyone allowing minors to drink alcohol on their premises or property was subject to stiff penalties. Juniata College felt that in order to remain in compliance with the state law, they had to rewrite some parts of their alcohol policy.

The Student Affairs Council (SAC) began meeting last March to review their options. A letter was sent out to the students so that the council could get some feedback from the student body. It was a full committee effort to change the policy so that it would comply with state law and not divide the campus into two groups, those under 21 and those 21 and over.

The major changes that appear in the new policy are as follows: only those students who are 21 or older may drink or possess alcohol on campus. Anyone who is having a party should be a responsible host and keep in mind the new definition of furnishing applies to them as well. No kegs or similar products are allowed in students rooms, apartments, or residence hall lounges. Students must carry proper identification and show it when asked by college personnel. Anyone who does not abide by these rules will be subject to disciplinary action.

Along with changes in the alcohol policy have come changes in sanctions. For furnishing alcohol to persons under 21, on the first offense, the supplier must pay $15 per person under 21 furnished; on the second offense, $30 per person under 21 furnished; and on the third offense, the supplies will be on social probation. Under-age drinkers will also receive fines for the same offenses.

Not only has the college changed their sanctions, but the state has also. Anyone who is underage, drinking, and caught for the first time will receive a $500 fine and lose his or her license for ninety days. The second offense is a $500 fine and the suspension of his or her license for a full year; and for the third offense, the fine remains the same, but the license is suspended for two years. It is important to note that these penalties apply even if the violation did not involve operating a vehicle.

For someone who is caught furnishing alcohol to a minor for the first time by a state official, the fine will be $1,000. Any violation after the first, the fine will be $2,500.

Juniata College was complying with the state law when it changed the alcohol policy. The college is trying to keep the social atmosphere by having dances, movies, etc., but the students must participate. According to Dr. Nancy Vankuren, Dean of Students, "the only way Juniata will become a suitcase college is if the students allow it to be." Weekends are still an important part of the full college experience. With the new state law and the new alcohol policy, students must be more aware of the consequences when partaking of alcoholic beverages on or off campus.

JC Names Blewett for capital gifts

Chandler E. Blewett has been named Juniata College's director of capital gifts. The appointment was announced by Robert W. Neff, president of the college.

In the position, Mr. Blewett will be responsible for planning, implementing and maintaining the college's planned giving program. This will involve research, promotion and program development.

Mr. Blewett will also assume the responsibility for completion of the athletic facilities improvement project and will begin the planning and implementation of a capital campaign.

Mr. Blewett comes to Juniata from Rockford, Ill. where he served as the director of the Crusaders Health Foundation. As such he was responsible for total start-up and development activities including marketing,image-building, recruitment of campaign community leadership, and identification and solicitation of major corporate and individual donors.

From February to December of 1983 Mr. Blewett served the Rockford Memorial Hospital Foundation as the Associate Director of Planned Giving. Proir to that he was trust officer and staff counsel at United Bank of Illinois from 1981 through 1982, trust officer in charge of mergers and acquisitions at Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust from 1977 to 1980, and department head and trust officer at the first National Bank of Akron from 1970 to 1977.

Mr. Blewett received his J.D. degree and his B.S. degree in secondary education from the University of Akron. He attended the Trust School of the American Bankers Association of Northwestern University and the National Association of Hospital Development Institute of the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

World News Update

Fires have raged through Yellowstone National Park for several days nowm although early this week snow has helped to hinder the blazes. After the precipitation, experts look to an average snowfall and predict that some fires may smoulder through early spring. Smoke from the fires drifted as far as Massachusetts Sunday. Over 3,500 military personnel are now on hand to fight the fire.

Presidential candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis will debate on September 25 in Winston-Salem, N.C., and on October 13 in Los Angeles, CA. Both debates will be televised. Guidelines for the debates include: one moderator and a parcel of three questions; candidates may not use prepared notes; debates will last 90 minutes; and each candidate may take notes during the debate and make a closing statement.

Rioting students appear more anxious to embarrass the government before the world than to drive it from power. Toward that aim student leaders vowed Sunday to demonstrate sporadically through the Olympic games--an apparant bid for inter-news coverage of their unhappiness with the government Roh Tae Woo. Student leader Kim Chong Won Promised more "non-violent" protests even as smoke rose from a burning effigy of woo. About 1500 students converged on Seoul's Yon Sei University for the demonstration. Police formed lines against the advancing students, but avoided using tear gas.

Editorial

The summer of 1988 marked a time of many changes for the Juniata campus. A new alcohol policy has put a damper on Friday and Saturday nights. A new football stadium encouraged a strong crowd to attend the Indian"s first home game. Most importantly, two new handicaped access ramps were installed in J. Omar Good Hall and the Beeghly Library.

Above all others, these ramps show the direction that Juniata College is moving in. Access ramps will open the college to students who otherwise could not come to this school and makes it possible for injured students to continue their education at JC. The bylaws of this college have pledged not to discriminate against the handicapped for many years. By adding these ramps, the tangible discrimination against the handicapped is finally beginning to disappear.

It is easy to point out where the college needs to improve; Ellis College Center, Founder"s Hall, and a few residence halls must also be provided access ramps. There is a long way to go, but the process has been started. For this, the administration deserves our thanks and praise.

"The Juniatian" would also like to thank the students and alumni who wrote letters to the editor in support of building these ramps when the issue was raised in our paper. Each of you has helped to build these ramps.

While money is donated for new signs and new football stadiums, it is heartening to see that money can be found tp truly improve Juniata College by making it accessible to a wider variety of students.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Rush Blady

Writing one of these things is quite as hard as starting that first Freshman Comp. paper. In fact, my mere contemplation of the horrors which might befall me were I to write an infernally stupid first "Along Muddy Run" has kept me up into the wee hours of the morning, twitching in nervous recognition of the fact that my budding journalistic career may be nipped off and trod into a mud of malicious, mirthful student-laughter, were I only to say the wrong thing.

For example, a clenching beginning such as "Gee, it"s great to be back, isn"t it?" would, I think, fail to electrify audiences. This is old hat. Most of us have already figured out how great it is to be back(or be here), free from parental oppression, out of the working world, amongst people who share an appreciation of one of the finer things in life : de bauchery.

Similarly, an editorial statement effectively saying "Wow, this new alcohol policy sucks, doesn"t it?" would, while winning a few supporters among the simpler, kinder folks, totally fail to impress the rest. The fact goes without saying. You"re two weeks unhip to the rest if you haven"t figured out who circumvents the alcohol policy and when, where, how, and why they do it, freshmen excepted. And something as blazing as "How can any RA write up any of his friends and fellows in their glourious quest to get pissed?<r"would surely set the editorial presses on five, close down the paper and win me enemies among my discerning peers. I"d like to ask <l"Why does the entire campus now dress like it lives in CloisterF<r"because I"ve noticed a growing horde of tye-dye wearers who I"ll bet only rarely do or understand tie-dye related things. But to even dare fielding this question would cause me to risk alienating a sizeable number of people I know including myself, so there"s another opening sentence dead and gone. (In State Colege, I"d be dead and gone if I asked that question-someone has obviously been planting seeds of neo-60"s slouchism among the Yuppie college crowd in other gardens of bohemia besides JC lately. But that"s another story...)

Perhaps I could successfully dredge move suitable opening statements from some dark recess of my creativity with a little community prompting. In other words, I want feedback-- or in this case feed-forward. I'd like to know what other people want to know, to hear voices, to not hear. I guess that this column is really as much yours as it is mine; that this campus consists of more than just the friends and acquaintances of the senior who writes Muddy Run. Let me know, please what you"re thinking. I"d like to hear. My box number is 16.

Almost lastly, the first and hopefully only time I"ll use this column for personal stuff would be to wish good luck on Chris, who departed only this Monday for a place where the sun doesn"s shine. No, good guess, but I meant England. Good luck dude.

Parents Weekend Planned

By Rebecca Abraham

Plans are well underway for this year's Parent's Weekend, which will be held the weekend of September 30-October 2. The theme this year is "Shared Visions: Dreams of Today, Promise for Tomorrow."

As always the various athletic events will add excitement to the weekend. The women's volleyball team is sponsoring the Juniata Invitational Tournament; Field Hockey plays Carnegie-Mellon; Football takes on Widener; and Soccer hosts Kings.

In addition to the games, many special events are planned. Andy and Terry Murray will be performing on Friday night in the Ballroom. Professor Stroman is organizing a golf tournament at the Huntingdon Country Club for Saturday. Following Juniata tradition, the Artist-On-The-Hill will again be presenting their goods on Oller Lawn. This year there will be a pre-game tailgate picnic on South lawn and a post-game reception on Detwiler Plaza. Saturday evening the Joffrey II Ballet will be performing in Oller Hall as part of the Juniata College Artist Series. Following the ballet, Bookends, a Juniata favorite, will be singing at a Cabaret coffeehouse in the Ballroom. On Sunday, the Parents' Association Annual Breakfast will take place in Baker Refectory; the All Campus Worship Service in Oller Hall will follow the breakfast.

If you are interested in helping with any of the activities of Parents' Weekend, please contact Becky Abraham.

SIGI - System of Interactive Guidance and Information-can help you in the important areas of career planning and decision making.

As a freshman, you are going to be making some critical decisions over the next several months. SIGI can help you with those decisions. It can help you examine your own rewards and satisfactions associated with occupational choice.

At the sophomore level, SIGI can aid students who are considering POE changes. Interest patterns change and we find out more about our capacities intellectually. Many students will be looking at career paths quite different from those they had as freshmen.

SIGI can be of benefit to juniors and seniors as well as freshmen and sophomore. It is never too late to look at and change one's career plans. SIGI can serve to reinforce current plans and/or it can introduce options perhaps not previously considered.

Special features afforded SIGI users include occupational information. Each year the software program is updated to insure that only accurate and timely information is presented. Additionally, users can access information on hundreds of occupations (job prospects through the 1990's, salaries and special requirements for entry).

But most importantly, you can schedule SIGI very easily and at your own convenience. The program consists of five systems and take approximately two hours to complete. It comes with a printer so that you can take hard copy with you for future reference. Stop and schedule an appointment with SIGI! Just see Shirley Powell in the Career Planning and Placement Center. Remember, it's alright to be undecided regarding a career path, but it's not alright to do nothing about it.

Campus Ministry Board... "Everybody's got to eat"

Andy Murray

This week the Juniatian initiates a new regular feature from the Campus Ministry Office. The column will be called CMBeat and will cover news related to campus ministry, announce important events, discuss campus related issues and feature writers from the campus ministry staff and CMB - the Campus Ministry Board.

You may recognized CMB from some of the more visible events that it sponsors: Meal for CROP, all campus worship on special occasions, coffee houses and charity events; you may not know that there are on an average more than 15 CMB related events each week and that there are more than 500 student hours each week are spent in programs that run from formal worship to informal discussion groups.

The campus ministry staff includes the Chaplain- Andy Murray, the J. Omar Good Protestant Campus Minister - Chris Noyes, the Catholic Campus Minister - David Arseneault and the Chaplain"s assistant - Terry Noyes. The staff can usually be found in or around the Campus Ministry office which is on the second floor of Ellis Hall.

You may see a CMB member with a sweatshirt that carries the (somewhat tongue in cheek) motto of the Board "Everybody"s got to eat." The motto does pick up the threefold focus of campus ministry at Juniata. The Judeo-Christian tradition has always had food and the act of eating at the center of both its liturgical and charitable life. The most solemn act of worship for a Christian is the sharing of a simple meal of bread and wine. Emotional and spritual nourishment through the act of worship is an important emphasis of CMB and a great deal of effort is devoted to providing worship opportunities for members of the Juniata Community.

"Everybody"s got to eat" also expresses a social concern that all members of the human community have a basic right to share in the necessities of life. As long as some are hungry, cold, or in need of medical care, those who are more fortunate have the responsibility to search for effective ways to relieve human suffering. Juniata students are generally "charitable" as students go and some years have contributed over ten thousand dollars to various projects through CMB.

Eating is also a way that we build community. Sharing food is a universal activity at parties and socials not so much because we are hungry or underfed, (or because the old alcohol policy required it) but because it is commonly understood as a sign of friendship and hospitality. A focus on fellowship and community joins charity and worship as the third are of particular interest in campus ministry. It is a little bit of a joke and a little bit of a solemn truth.

Everybody"s got to eat.

MS<Speaking of which, on Tuesday, September 20 in the Faculty Lounge the first Fellowship Dinner of the year will be held at 5:00 pm-6:15 pm. The dinner will feature The Covenant Players, an exciting drama group. Please sign up at the info desk by Friday, Sept. 16.

Please feel welcome to come and join many other students in an enjoyable time of food and fellowship. After all, everybody"s got to eat.

This is the first of a weekly column written by Power 92 management members.

I hope by now everyone in the Juniata area has tuned into the new Power 92. We are "new" in the sense that we have a new format and new programming schedule. The new format consists primarily of hit and rock music. However, you can hear almost any other conceivable type of music at some point throughout the week. The program guide you received in the mail last week is your guide to what airs on Power 92.

The changes in Power 92 are the result of a campus survey that was taken last spring.

As I finish up my last semester as station manager, I want to emphasize the importance of your opinion at our station. This is your college radio station. Make suggestions of how we can improve. Better yet, get involved and make the improvements with us.

Power 92 hosted the first lounge party of the year. Over 350 people attended.

We will be selling station t-shirts within the week in the lobby of Ellis. The price will be around $5-good price for a sharp t-shirt.

Listen to Power 92 for live broadcasts of all Juniata football games (home and away).

Anyone interested in joining the staff can simply stop by the station or come to a staff meeting-every Sunday at 8:00 in the Blue Room, Ellis Hall. Until next week, keep rockin'!!

South Sets Standards: Let the good times roll

By Suzie Givler

This year, South Hall's RHA plans to make memories for everyone involved in the planned activities.

Officers for RHA 1988-89 are: President-Jeff Fetterman, Vice President-Melissa Pavlock, Secretary-Deb Maslin, and Treasurer-Sue Williams. One upperclassman and one freshman from each floor represent their classmates at the meetings.

Ideas that were tossed around at the floor meeting held last Thursday evening included a mock wedding, tuck-ins, two semi-formals(one winter, one spring), movie nights, and an Octoberfest.

The mock-wedding will be held in the spring. Names will be selected from a hat, and a ceremony and reception will be held by the residents of South Hall-all decked in their partying best and ready to celebrate.

The Octoberfest, to be held in a few weeks may include a keg(of rootbeer) as well as other German goodies.

December second marks the evening of the first semi-formal. A spring semi-formal will be held sometime after spring break.

These and many more ideas are being developed every Sunday evening at 10:00p.m. in the carpeted lounge. RHA welcomes suggestions from all members of South Hall.

High Tech comes to the Alfarata

The Juniata College yearbook staff members are leading the way in yearbook technology.

Taylor Publishing has recognized the staff for participating in an innovative method of electronic copy preparation. The Alfarata staff uses Taylor"s Vision Electronic Publishing System to create their yearbook on a personal computer.

They are among nearly 2,000 secondary schools and colleges who are gaining marketable computer skills by using Vision Series Software. This unique yearbook software allows students to produce all aspects of their yearbook on computer--write articles, design pages, compile indexes, and record income and expenses.

The Vision Series also provides staffs with more creative control over the finished product since all pages are transferred directly from the students" disks to Taylor"s mainframe Prism Pagination System.

Juniata's Response To Condom Machines

ByLance Marshall

I recently took a random survey of 22 students who were going in and out of the lunchroom. As many of us know, or don't know. Juniata College is considering whether or not to place condom dispensers in each of the residence halls. So I asked these students "how would you feel about Juniata College if they placed condom dispensers in each of the residence halls?"well here are the results:

Only one person out of the 22 surveyed believed that it was not a good idea. He felt that the school would be "promoting sex...and that it shows no good taste."

Six people were indifferent towards the subject. They "wouldn't make a fuss. "One girl thinks she'd flip because of the conservativeness of the school."But as two sophmore guys pointed out "I don't think the parents would like it."

The overwhelming majority of 15 people thought that it would be a good idea. As a freshmen guy came back "Why not?! "Some seniors made the point that "If they (the condoms) are more accessible, we (meaning guys and their sexual partners) would use them more." "It is to everyone"s advantage,"says a senior R.A. "since it will take away the embarassment a guy might have by going to a store or to the nurse."A senior girl says that "the school will not be promoting sex but protecting us from diseases. "As for abstinence, one freshmen guy says that "abstinence is not an absolute, and you shouldn"t force that way of behavior."

From the students I surveyed, it was almost unanimous that, as one senior guy put it, "we would not think negatively of the school."

Lesher gets new RD

Jennifer Kymer

Vera Stroup, a graduate of Shippensburg University, has begun her year as the new Residential Director of Lesher Hall. She is one of several new Residential Directors this year.

Vera graduated from Shippensburg in 1987 with degrees in both elementary education and library science. Her original goal upon graduation was teaching, but a former sorority sister led her to Juniata. Vera arrived on campus for an interview in June of this year and "immediately fell in love with Juniata". In addition to her position of Residential Director, Vera works with vice-president Arnold Tilden as a research assistant for Student Services and Educational Planning.

In January Vera begins working toward a masters degree in counseling at Penn State University. She plans to become involved in either high school or college counseling.

JC Welcomes New Prof

ByDawn Sanzo

Dr. I. David Reingold has taken a teaching position with the Chemistry department. He traveled from Portland, Oregon, to join the faculty at JC and is now teaching General Chemistry 103 and Advanced Synthesis 320.

Dr. Reingold attended Dartmouth College in New Hampshire and then continued on at the University of Oregon. His first teaching job lasted for one year at Haverford, a liberal arts college located outside of Philadelphia, Pa. From there he ventured to Vermont to become a part of the faculty at Middlebury College for the next seven years. For one year of the seven, he was granted a sabbatical and went to the University of Chicago. Dr. Reingold then took a new position for two years at Lewis and Clark College, located in Portland, Oregon. He is currently active in a research program and was awarded three grants and published five papers.

"The Juniatian" would like to welcome Dr. Reingold and wish him success in the future.

Changes happening in Beeghley Library

During the summer, library staff passed the halfway mark on the computerization project. About half of the book collection can now be found on the Intelligent Catalog. The 60,000 some books include almost all of those published from 1968 to the present. The bad news is that the card catalog is a bit of a mess.

Helpful hint for finding books in the library: search in the computer first. Then, try the card catalog. Freshman have been introduced to the library computers via English I tours. Transfer students, new faculty and staff are welcome to schedule a tutorial with one of the librarians.

FRESH FACE NUMBER ONE: John Mumford, Public Services

John received his library degree from Drexel, where he also acquired experience handling business reference questions. (Good news for business majors!) With a master's in history and undergraduate work in social sciences, he is no slouch when it comes to helping with all those Sociology and Psychology projects. In his spare time, John likes sports. He's particularly fond of basketball, tennis and soccer. So far, he has found Juniatians to be very friendly, but he's still looking for a good game of tennis.

FRESH FACE NUMBER TWO: Peter Kupersmith, College Librarian

Peter was formerly director of the library at the University of St. Thomas in Houston, TX. His education was acquired at The Shrine, aka the University of Texas, Austin. That's right, y'all, just ask him. Those of you who've met him are already familiar with his wry, irreverent wit. When not running the library, Peter enjoys music. Which is why he doesn't play his fiddle or mandolin too much. Stay tuned for more about the library band.

Med School Enrollment Declines

Fewer students are applying to go on to med school, the American Medical Association (AMA) said.

Medical school applications, in fact, are at a 10-year low and medical school enrollments have dropped for the sixth straight year in part, the AMA reported last week, because medicine has lost some of its glow as a career, because med school tuitions are too high and because there are simply fewer college-aged Americans around.

But although fewer white males are pursuing careers in medicine, more women and minorities are.

"Physicians are generally advising potental medical school applicants not to go on to medical school," said Dr. Martem Kernis, vice dean of the University of Illinois College of Medicine.

And potential applicants apparently are heeding their advice: almost 66,000 students were enrolled in the nation"s 127 accredited medical schools in 1987-88, a decline of 400 from the previous year and 1,701 less than 1983-84. The number of applicants dropped from 40,000 in 1978-79 to 28,000 last year.

The number of white male applicants decreased 13 percent during the past five years.

One reason for the decline is that the "Baby Boom" generation has passed through college age, leaving a smaller pool of applicants than in previous year. But that, says the AMA, is not the only reason.

"Physicians are working right now in a changing environment with all sorts of federal regulations being imposed, changing reimbursement policies, huge increases in medical malpractice liability premiums, large increases in lawsuits, changes in the tax structure, et cetera," Kernis said.

"Many physicians are arguing that these characteristics are mitigating against the practice of medicine."

Eight out of 10 medical students are in debt when they graduate, the AMA said in its Journal of the American Medical Association. Their average debt is larger than ever: $35,621 in 1987.

Many potential applicants are discouraged by assuming such a large debt, the AMA reported.

But women and minorities appear to be less discouraged than white men. The number of first-year white female students increased slightly during the past five years, according to the AMA, but the number of black female students jumped 32 percent.

And the number of Asians and Pacific Island entering U.S. medical schools has more than doubled.

"I think that"s a social phenomenon," Kernis said. "We"ve had a lot of immigration among Pacific Islanders and Vietnamese and Cambodians. They find in our society they can go to school like everyone else and fulfill whatever their career aspirations are."

East gets new RD "in a Giffy"

Mike Gifford, known to almost everyone as Giffy, has been appointed Resident Director of East Houses.

Giffy, originally from Clinton, Maryland, graduated from Juniata last year as a Secondary Education and Computer Science major. While at Juniata, he played soccer for four years and was a member of the Indoor Soccer Club. Giffy was also a R.A. on second Sherwood his senior year.

Besides his responsibilities as R.D., Giff is busy with many other activities. He is currently student teaching in Mount Union, instructing high school seniors in BASIC Programming. Giff is also a soccer coach for the Huntingdon Athletic Association. In the spring, he will be doing post graduate work at Penn State and hopes to eventually earn a Master's Degree.

Giff is enjoying his new position in East.

Indian Nights — the new soap of Juniata's Campus

By MICHAEL C. COLEMAN

The following is an Introduction to the main characters of Indian Nights. The story will continue from issue to issue of the Juniatian. Read this column weekly to follow the lives of these and other characters.

As small as it is, Juniata is a big change for freshmen. Amy Stone came from a small high school where she was popular among all 65 seniors in her graduating class. All her life she had been surrounded by the same friends, the same places, and the same routine. Suddenly she was lost, unsure of where she was supposed to be and when she should be there. She didn't know how to make friends because she never had to.

Jason Banks, R.D. of South, noticed Amy sitting alone at dinner and recalled his own first day of college, the loneliest experience of his life. He approached and asked if he could join her. "I hate seeing someone sitting alone. People might start to think you're antisocial."

"Yeah well, it seems like they already do. You're just about the first person to say anything to me. I feel like a leper."

"Tell you what. I'm having a party tonight with a few R.A.'s and some other students. It'll be a good chance for you to meet some people. Would you like to come?" Amy agreed and arrangements were made. They enjoyed a lengthy conversation and tried to enjoy their food. Amy eventually left, excited about the upcoming evening. Almost immediately after she got up, three football players sat at thetable.

"Yo man! Who's this?" one of them asked Jason.

"When did you take up cradle snatching?" joked another.

"Hey Jase, what's Lisa gonna say about this?"

Jason had already warned Amy about Tommy, Rod and Jow. She also knew all about Lisa, Jason's wife. She was well aware that they were just playing around and that as soon as she left they would get extremely crude with their jokes. Rather than hold them back, Amy left so they could let it out.

Tommy Blaire, Rod Cranston, and Joe Johnson were known across campus for being loud and crazy. Tommy was a third year starter at tight end, and Rod and Joe had been competing for first string fullback since sixth grade. The three were inseparable. Each one dated cheerleaders, who were also close friends. Tommy's girl, Missy, was a junior, as was Becky, Joe's girlfriend. Rod went out with Suzanne, the only senior on the squad. Together the six made up the Party Pack, known as the wildest groupr at Juniata. Where they went, the party always followed.

Jason listened to the gross remarks for a while, and soon saw Roscoe Atchison walk into Baker. "Hey Roscoe!" Jason yelled across the room. "Come on over!" Roscoe looked over, saw who Jason was with, and walked away.

Suzanne and Roscoe broke up two years ago, but had a serious relationship for five years before that, a relationship that included being engaged for two years. Rod got her drunk at a party and took her to his room. Rod and Roscoe were roommates that year and when Roscoe got back from the party, he found the two in bed. When he saw them, he ran to his car and drove, letting his emotions control the gas and the steering, and ignoring the brake. He went across campus, creating his own roads. Attempting to go through Cloister's arch, he totaled his car and his body. He survived, but his left arm and right eye were sacrificed. Roscoe Atchison, the greatest quarterback in Juniata history, destined for stardom, had his future stolen by a brick wall. Rod went the next day to visit him in the hospital, but Roscoe, though weak from the loss of blood, threw him across the room with his lone arm. People fear Roscoe now. He walks around, not speaking to anyone, with hatred in his eyes. Rod got over his guilt quickly with the help of a ghost. Pranks were pulled on him for three months everynight. All Roscoe would say was, "I've got one arm. How am I supposed to pull a prank like that?" After it went on for a while, Rod's friends helped him keep watch over his room, his car, even his locker. The prankster was never caught. From being penny-locked in his room to having all four tires slashed to finding his locker hit with a paint bomb, no one ever saw the culprit, and Roscoe always had an alibi. Rumors spread that it was the ghost's of Roscoe's arm.

Eventually Roscoe quit socializing all together. He did not speak to anyone so people soon forgot about him. They would see him in class and say to themselves, "Damn, that's a shame," and then go about their business. Jason was one of the few that would even attempt to strike up conversation with him. It was always to no avail.

So Roscoe walked away. Jason's buddies laughed it off while Jason just shook his head.

"Don't waste your time with him." Tracy Snow walked up to the table and invited herself to join them, an invitation he graciously accepted. "He's off in his own world," she said. "You know what his problem is, don't you? No sex!! But then, I guess that's your fault. Isn't it Rod?" Tracy was known to be a slut, but she was now in rare form. Rod was almost ready to hit her, but Tommy and Joe both gave him a look that reminded him of one of the Pack's pacts, "Don't let Tracy get to you."

Hey man!! It's time to roll. We've got a party to get ready for. It is the first one of the year, so it had better be a damn good one. Start the year off right, you know?!" Jason sensed trouble, which is nothing new with Tracy around. She was convinced that she was the sexiest, most popular girl on campus. She was popular, but it was mostly because of her reputation as a slut. She used sex as a means of hooking a guy, and when it did not work, she spread rumors about them. It did not matter what she said anymore because she lost all credibility after trying to seduce Paul Grossman, who everyone knew was engaged with a wedding planned for the day after graduation. People thought it so absurd to invision Paul cheating that she was laughed at. Now she hangs all over the football players in hopes of snagging one and regaining the popularity she once had.

Her one friend was Vicky, her roommate, who insists that Tracy is just misunderstood. Vicky was liked by a lot of people, but no one wanted to be near her when she was with Tracy. The two were inseparable. Vicky always insisted that, despite Tracey's acts, she was a good person. Vicky definitely knew something no one else did; something she never revealed.

Tune in next week for the continuation of this intriguing story.

Volleyball takes 3rd at Navy Tournament

Juniata opened the season with a fine third place showing at the U.S. Naval Academy Tournament in Annapolis.

The Indians opened the weekend with a Friday evening loss to Chapman College of California, 3-0. The Division II team scored 7-15, 3-15 and 14-16 game victories.

Juniata bounced back to win three straight matches. New York Tech went down in three games, 15-13, 15-5, and 15-11. The Indians got past Slippery Rock, 11-15, 15-4, 15-5 and 15-11. Charles Community College, a non-NCAA school, was swept 15-3, 15-4 and 15-12.

In the tourney semi-finals, the Indians faced Chapman again and made an impressive showing. Juniata served for the win, but dropped a 15-17 first game. However, the Tribe bounced back to take game two, 19-17. Chapman then went to the finals with 7-15 and 13-15 victories in games three and four respectively.

Chapman cruised past Navy 3-0 in the tournament finals.

Three Juniata players (Jackie Rebert, Melinda Selby and Kris Witchey) were selected to the All-Tournament team.

Coach Larry Bock also cited junior Rhonda Bygall for her outstanding play over the weekend. She led the team in blocks, kills and kill percentage. "She played real well for us," said Bock.

Juniata takes an official 2-2 record (the win over CCC cannot count in the NCAA record) into a match with Shippensburg at Spring Grove High School on Wednesday. The Indians travel to the Illinois Benedictine Tournament this weekend.

Running Indians fare well at LVC

By Lance Marshall

The running Indians finished twelfth this week at Lebanon Valley out of 17 teams this week. However, with two minor breaks, the team could have finished as high as seventh. The race was that close. Coach Paine of the running Indians says that he is "pleased with Saturday's performance, and that with his young team we are on the threshold of something big here at Juniata." Leading the Indians are George Bensel, Bince Mortar, Ted Braldt, Andy Laomre, and Jeff Moseman. Coach Paine says though, that everyone is working hard and that if this team is going to make it, it will be with "a lot of guts and hard work." Next week the Indians face Dickinson here at home.

J.C. Field Hockey team is off to quick 2-0 start

Deborah Dougherty

The Juniata College women"s Field Hockey Team is off to the best start it has had in years. In preseason play, the team won against IUP and tied Lock Haven

The Lady Indians put their winning record to the test when they played Lycoming College in their first MAC match. The mixture of veterans and Freshmen played well together. They were constantly cutting to the ball and backing each other up. Their efforts were well rewarded with a 1-0 decision over Lycoming. The winning goal was knocked in by Kathleen McGowan assisted by Jennifer Dippery

The Lady Hackers travelled to Western Maryland Sept. 10 for their second MAC and first Southern Conference match. The team took Western Maryland by surprise. They were continually moving and running toward the ball. Quinn used her substitutes well, trying to keep fresh players in the game. The first goal, knocked in by Kathleen McGowan and crossed by Heather Weiss, was scored late in the first half. The Lady Indians took their 1-0 lead into the halftime period.

When both teams took the field to finish out the game, the intensity had mounted. Neither club was going to let down its defenses for a moment. Both teams played hard and physical, but Western Maryland could not stop Juniata. Kathleen McGowan put in her second goal of the game. The Indians were now winning 2-0.

Western Maryland was not going to give up. They fought hard to come back and finally knocked one across the line late in the second half. The score remained 2-1, despite efforts by the opponents to even it up.

Coach Kathi Quinn felt that this was a major win for the JC squad because it was the first victory against a Southwest Conference team in at least four years. Other comments about the game were made by Mickey Hoffman, one of the captians. She felt that the team definitely had more offensive scoring power and were more aggressive in their playing than the opponents. Hoffman stated that the defense did an excellent job marking in the circle and goalie Deb Dougherty did a good job watching the ball and cutting down the shooting angles. Overall it was a big win and it should be encouraging and give the team a boost for the rest of the season.

Quinn feels that the difference between this year and last is the change in systems. The present system takes advantage of the speed and quickness of the team and allowa for more interchange between the positions. Another change has been that assistant coach Diane Buza is concentrating mainly on the training ot the two goalies, Genevieve Warner and Deborah Dougherty.

Coach Quinn is pleased with the way things are going. This year's team, led by captains Mickey Hoffman, Joanne Thomas, and Kathleen McGowan, is the fastest team she has seen in her two years coaching at JC. The team is also strong, deep, and solid at every position.

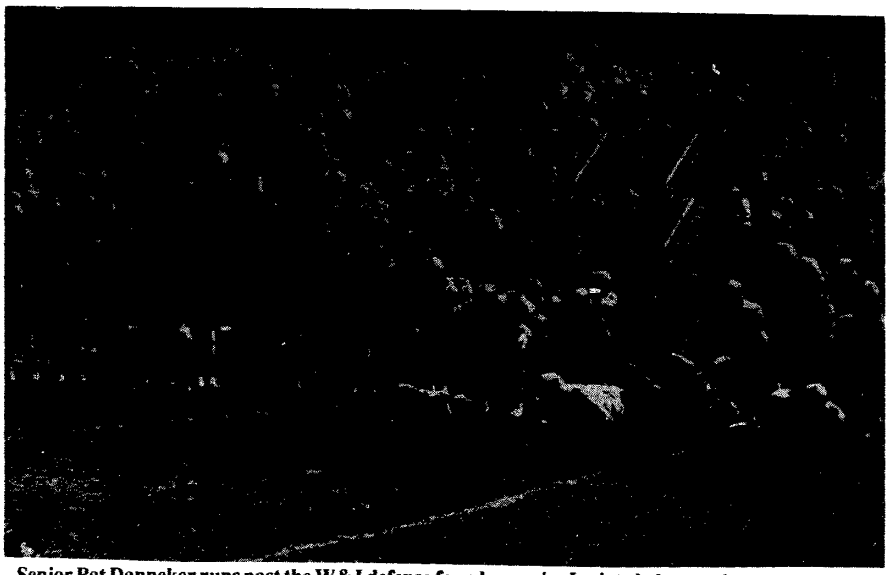
Senior Joanne Thomas said that she was really excited to be ending her years at Juniata College with good spirited, competitive, hard working girls. She said that it would help to have fans. The team will have more competitive games this year and the support would be greatly appreciated.

The next home game will be Sept.17 against York. Come on out and see the "new addition" of the Juniata College Field Hockey Team. The members are seniors Laurie Boyer, Mickey Hoffman, and Joanne Thomas; Juniors Kathleen McGowan, Kris Shepardson, and Genevieve Warner; Sophomores Deb Barley, Amy Blough, Jennifer Dippery, Deborah Dougherty, Amy Normington (manager), Jill Schedler, Nancy Simpson, and Becky Sweigart; and Freshmen JoLynn Barbour, Kim Bechtel, Barb Hoffman, Suzanne McManus, Hillary Mitchell, Stephanie Moyer, Linda Olsen, Renee Rine, Carolynne Sheedy, Jenny Swan, and Heather Weiss. Come out and cheer the team to another victory.

The JV team also won against Western Maryland 3-0. Stephanie Moyer scored two goals while Renee Rine scored the third. All of the girls played tough and added the final blow to the Western Maryland Hockey Squad.

There will be an informal meeting about a work trip to Haiti from Jan. 6 to 13. The meeting will take place Thursday September 15, at 7pm in the Cream Room in Ellis Hall.

If you cannot make the meeting, please contact Chris or Terry Noyes in the Campus Ministry Office.



Senior Pat Danneker runs past the W&J defense for a long gain. Juniata led most of the game but could not hold off a late comeback by the Presidents.

Indian Booters Defeat F&M, Tie Lycoming

By Mike Antenucci

With a loss in their opening game, the Indian Boosters bounced back this past week with a win and a tie, moving their record to 1-1-1.

In a 3-2 upset victory over Franklin and Marshall, senior co-captain Steve Grater netted a hat trick for the Indians. For the third straight game the Indians were on the road, this time travelling to Williamsport to take on Lycoming College.

The Indians had to settle for a 3-3 tie. Coach Klaus Jaeger was pleased with his teams progress and called the F&M game a "marvelous performance" by his team. Jaeger feels the victory was a tremendous boost for his team.

JC played at home for the first time yesterday when they hosted UPJ. Their next game is Saturday on College Hill against Elizabethtown. Game time is scheduled for 1 pm.

A reminder from the Kennedy Sports Center:

Indians — Presidents start MAC Play with a tie

By Mike Antenucci

In a game that was billed to be a battle between starting quarterbacks, Juniata and Washington & Jefferson played to a 13-13 tie in a defensive dominated contest. The home and season opener for the Indians was viewed by 2,600 fans from he new stadium facilities on College Hill.

What should be looked upon as a moral victory for the Indians, being such that, W&J was a strong favorite and nationally ranked, was overlooked by the JC players and their fans because the game was theirs to win.

The Indians set the defensive tone right away, stopping W&J on their first three possessions of the game. After W&J punted to the Indian"s 41 yard line senior quarterback Cubby Davis lead his offensive troops downfield to the Presidents" 5-yard line. Sophomore placekicker John O"Neill capped off a nine-play, 59-yard drive with a 27 yard field goal only four minutes into the game.

After stopping the Indians next drive, W&J"s Stephen Lockridge fumbled a John Sparh punt, which Juniata"s Pat Danneker recovered on the President"s 20-yard line. JC marched inside the ten, but on first and goal from the nine Davis threw his first of three interceptions of the day. The Indians next drive, which started on W&J"s 33-yard line was put to a halt in the same fashion as the previous drive.

On the first play of the second quarter Dennis DeRenzo broke straight through the W&J front line, made a juke in the secondary and scamperred downfield for a 51-yard touchdown score. O"Neill added the PAT and JC went into the lockeroom leading 10-0. The only other scoring oppurtunity of the half belonged to W&J, a 47-yard field-goal attempt which was wide to the right.

The Indian"s first drive of the second half was stalled when Todd Wery recorded his first interception of the game. W&J took over on their own 20 but after two big plays had first and 10 on the Indian"s 25. On the ensuing play W&J quarterback Pat Aigner was sacked by Juniata"s Jerry Look, causing a fumble which was recovered by outside linebacker Steve Campbell. This was the typical play the defense created all day.

However, nothing came of it on JC"s next possession. The only score in the third quarter was a W&J field goal of 51 yards by John Ivory, setting a school and stadium record with 1:24 remaining to play in the period. Following the kickoff Juniata marched down to the President"s 6-yard line on a drive which was aided by a pass interference call against W&J. After pounding one up the middle for two yards and two pass incompletions, JC settled for a 22-yard field goal and a 13-3 lead with 13:29 left to play in the game.

What took place in the next four minutes was a costly part of the ball game for Juniata. W&J managed a first down and was driving the ball against Indian Defense who hadn"t yielded all game. Once again they stopped the drive, this time on a Frank Gay interception, which he returned to the W&J 13 yard line. JC was unable to punch it in and a 33-yard field goal attempt was short, giving W&J yet another chance to stay in the ball game.

Juniata made one more crucial mistake, a fumble just over midfield, which allowed W&J to gain second life. After two first downs W&J marched to the Indian"s 28-yard line, where on 4th and 10 Ivory booted a 45-yard field goal to pull the Presidents within a touchdown with 6:05 remaining in the game.

On JC"s next possession Davis fumbled the ball as he was being sacked and the Presidents recovered on the Indian 26-yard line. On 3rd and 13 Aigner hit his tightend, Andy Pacek, over the middle and down to the Indian"s 1 yard line. On first and goal Mark Craig plunged in to cut the deficit to 13-12. The Question now was wether or not to go for the two-point conversion or settle for the one. W&J Coach John Luckardt figured their was enough time to ensure the tie yet still get the ball back again. It ended up being the right move, for W&J had the ball back with 1:30 remaining.

However, the Indian defense, as they had done the whole game, came up big when lineman Dave Ritter slapped at a first down pass and it fell into the arms of Jeff Haines. Haines returned the ball to the 16-yard line. But a clip on the return moved the ball back to the W&J 41.

A 24-yard pass to DeRenzo brought the Indian"s down to the 17-yard line. Two runs up the middle had the ball spotted on the 15 yard line; with 17 seconds remaining O"Neill was brought in to attempt a 28-yard field goal. His kick was wide and the game ended one play later in the 13-13 tie.

The game was nothing short of exciting and was typical for what it was billed (i.e. a defensive battle instead of an overwhelming offensive show). Nevertheless, the Indians need to put this game behind as they enter conference play this week against a tough Delaware Valley team, 29-0 victors over Gettysburg this past weekend. In a sense it could be a moral victory, but to the players, there is no Justice because it was their game to win and as of now only they know of their true potential.

So pack your bags and follow the compass point east towards Philly, because the MAC journey starts there.

Nuch"s Notes: The Indians compiled twelve first downs to W&J"s fourteen; JC rushed the ball 40 times for 129 yards; leading the way for the Indians was DeRenzo who had thirteen carries for 70 yards. The Presidents managed 152 yards on the ground on 44 attempts.

Davis was 9 for 29 for 160 yards and was sacked six times. His counterpart, Pat Aigner, was 11 for 32 for 102 yards and was sacked twice. Don Betar had three grabs for JC. Jim Metz had the longest reception for 61 yards.

John Sparh punted the ball seven times compiling 250 yards for a 35.7 yard average. Juniata was a mere 2 of 15 on third down conversions. Time of possession was basically even, 28:26 (Juniata) to 31:34 (W&J).

Blokes, rubbers & pubs discussed at UK Tea

By Pam Mertz

England and Scotland were the foreign cultures discussed in the first exploratory program held Monday, September 12 in South's Carpeted Lounge. The program was planned mainly by the exchange students from England.

They started out the program comparing the English language in England to English in the United States. Both England and the United States are supposed to speak the same language, but there are important differences. For example, a pushbike in England is a bicycle. A bloke is a guy, a pigeonhole is a mailbox, and a rubber is only an eraser. When one states, "I'd like to borrow your rubber", he wants to fix only a mistake. People in England state that they want to go to the toilets instead of the American way of saying the bathroom.

The next area covered was the education system in England. Students wear uniforms and usually start school at the age of four. In England many students attend a public school which is a private or estate school. If a student wants to go on to a university, they must take an exam which is very difficult. The exams cut down on the number of students seeking further education because of their difficulty.

The next areas discussed at the program were English politics and the different accents of England and Scotland. The system of Parliament in England was explained. Then the differing accents were compared.

The students attending the program then had a chance to take part in an English tea party. Homeade scones were eaten with the tea. In England tea is usually taken around 4:00 in the afternoon with family and friends. Some of the things eaten with tea are biscuits, cakes, cucumber sandwiches, and scones.

Slides were shown after the tea of Scotland. Scotland has its own language and differs from its nearby neighbor, England. Scotland has its own money and its own kingdom and Parliament.

After the slides, an explanation of pubs was given. Pubs are short for public houses. Most pubs in England have been there for hundreds of years. The different types of drinks served in pubs were discussed. There are lagers, beers twice as strong as the beers drank in America. There are also bitters, ales, whiskey, scotch, gin, and ciders that are very strong and sweet. The pubs function as a place to socialize rather than a place to get drunk. Pubs are important places to take the family.

To wrap up the program, England's Royal Family was briefly discussed. The Royal Family is glamorized a great deal in the U.S. A lot of people in England are anti-royal. At the end of the program, students had a chance to talk to the exchange students from the different colleges. Exchange students from England represent the colleges of Leeds, Cheltenham, and Hull.

World News

Gilbert, the century's meanest hurricane, is a painful memory after slamming the Mexican coast last weekend. Sixty people died when rescue busses overturned in Monterey, Mexico. Another 140 are feared lost. On the good side, the storm brought needed rain to the draught-torn midwest.

The remote Los Angeles house of convicted murderer Charles Manson is for sale. The real estate agent is asking $1.9 million for the 3.5-acre Benedict Canyon property and its 3,200 sq. ft. main house and 2,000 sq. ft. guest house.

The shuttle Discovery is scheduled to take a five-day flight starting Sept. 29. A $100 million NASA communications satellite will be deployed and hundreds of design changes will be checked for safety.

"U.S. News & World Report" poll reports that 53 percent of the public believes Bush will win the election in November. On the other hand, voters expect Dukakis to beat Bush in Sunday's debate.

As of Monday, Sept. 19, the U.S. Olympic team had captured four medals. The single gold medal was won by Janet Evans in the 400m freestyle. Michele Mitchell captured a silver in platform diving, while teammate Kay Lian captured a silver. There was also an additional bronze medal won.

Fires are still rampant in California, although officials say that 50 percent of the fires have been contained. So far 12,000 acres have burned. The fires are now occuring 40 miles Southwest of San Francisco in Shasta County California. Evacuations are still occuring even though the fires are contained.

Our Town cast gets cracking

The rehearsal process began last week for students involved in the fall theatre production at Juniata. Our Town, by Thorton Wilder will be presented November 2-5 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall. The Pulitzer Prize winning drama is being directed by Ryan Chadwick, Instructor of Theatre.

Set in a small New England town, the play presents a distillation of life. Our Town bypasses momentous social and cultural issues to focus on the richness of the small unnotices, everyday events which ultimately reflect the essence of life.

The large student cast includes: Scott Beatty, Rob Biter, Christie Brown, Bob Courseu, Suzanne Erb, Brenda Glove, Tracey Hagerman, Brian Hall, Doc Jones, Doug Kovach, Cindy Lang, Kara Laughlin, Katy Lynn, Jim McMonagle, Debra Maslin, Bryan Miller, Lisa Mitschang, John Olsen, Carol Redzensky, Joann Rishell, Alicia Rosenstiehl, Michelle Sam, Bill Samuels, Kevin Seachrist, and Michelle Trick; and Martin Lammon, visiting Instructor in English.

The Production Staff includes: Jef Buehler, Amy Carter, Brian Geiger, Jeff Georg, Shana Herb, Christine Krudwig, Mark Moyer, Nancy Nestor, Becky Schreckengost, Todd Stauffer, and Nadine Vreeland. Production crew positions are still available. Please contact Ms. Chadwick, ext. 463, 200 Quinter House if you are interested in working on the production.

Editorial

I have noticed in the past few weeks that students are getting excited about the Olympics. People have even rearranged their sleeping/studying schedules to watch the Games!! I know the Olympics are a big event, only happening every four years, but our own sporting events are important, too. Our athletes spend a considerable amount of time practicing, playing and keeping in shape during the off season. Sure they aren't Olympians, but they are also attending college along with being involved in sports. And they are your friends!!

The point I want to make is—Be supportive of our athletic teams. We do have a Field Hockey team, Cross Country squad and soccer team, along with Football and Volleyball. I have attended all of the home soccer matches and I saw some action from the field hockey team, not to mention the opener of the football season and the finish of a country match. I was saddened to see the lack of support for our teams. If President Neff can take time out of his busy schedule to cheer on our soccer team, I think some more of the students on campus could take a little time to attend a match or game. It's a nice break from studying, you might just get some fresh air, and most of all—you know these athletes!!! Get out there and show them you're interested!! They'll appreciate the support. Sometimes it's more upsetting to play to empty stands than it is to lose a game.

Good Luck to all the teams for this season and remember, someone on campus cares.

P.S. Basketball season starts in 21 days!!!

From the Pen of. . .

By John Deppen

I think it is pathetic that many of our representatives in the U.S. House quake in their boots when confronted with the power of the National Rifle Association. This group exerts so much influence on our government that I sometimes wonder to whom the Congress belongs- we the people or the NRA?

Recently, a piece of legislation requiring a seven-day waiting period before finalizing the sale of a handgun was defeated in the House of Representatives, thanks largely to the lobbying efforts of the NRA. This legislation was supported by police officials across the country, but did the House listen to the brave men and women who protect our neighborhoods and who have to deal with violent crime every day? No; it listened to the financial contributions of the NRA, which many congressmen use to finance their campaigns.

Is your U.S. Reprentative a pawn of the NRA? I urge you to find out and act accordingly. It is high time that the citizens of America elected a government which will stand up against the dangerous agenda of the NRA and which, more importantly, is not for sale.

International Week Schedule of Events

The Medieval Fair
York, Pa. Sunday, Sept. 25

Along with jousting, jesters, and traditional food, students will be treated to a performance of Shakespeare's "A Midsummers Night's Dream." World Affairs Lecture By Dr. Craig Baxter

Msalumni Hall Wednesday, Sept. 28 8:15

The recent death of Pakistani President Zia ul-Hag and the American Ambassador, Arnold Raphel, in an aircraft has dramatic consequences. American policy in Afghanistan and in Southern Asia relied heavily on Zia's friendship. Dr. Baxter is one of America's best known experts and authors dealing with the region, and he will access both the domestic and the international consequences of this sudden change of leadership. Sponsored by the Baker Peace Institute. See Story on pg. 3.

The American Friend-Masterpiece Cinema

Soller Hall Thurs., Sept. 29 8:15

Wim Wenders has developed a cult following for this film about people operating outside the law. An art smuggler (Dennis Hopper) and a German craftsman (Bruno Ganz) kill a man and that murder binds them in friendship. (West Germany, France-1977) Sponsored by the Arts and Lectureship Council.

World Affairs lectures begin Wed.

The Baker World Affairs Lecture Series begins Wednesday, September 28, with a lecture entitled "The U.S. and Pakistan After Zia." Juniata College's own Dr. Craig Baxter will give the lecture 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall of the Brumbaugh Science Center.

Dr. Baxter came to Juniata College after foreign service in Dhaka, Accra, Lahore, New Delhi, and Bombay. His degrees from the University of Pennsylvania are: B.S. in Economics, A.M. in Political Science, and Ph.D. in History. In 1981-82, Dr. Baxter was Juniata College's Visiting Professor of Political Science and Diplomat-in-Residence. Currently, he is a professor of Politics and History at Juniata College.

Dr. Baxter has written eight books and over 30 articles and chapters of collected works. Most of these cover the themes of Pakistan, Bangladesh, Asia, South Asia, and the Middle East. Specifically, he wrote "Zia's Pakistan: Politics and Stability in a Frontline State."

An expert in his field, Dr. Baxter is the President of the American Institute of Bangladesh Studies and Secretary of the American Institute of Pakistan studies.

The college and its friends are cordially invited to this lecture September 28. There will be no admission charge.

Curtains Up For A New Theatre Instructor

By Sharon McCullen

Ryan Chadwick is Juniata's new Instructor of Theatre. Ms. Chadwick is originally from a small town in Arkansas. She received her undergraduate degree from Hendrix College in Arkansas. Hendrix is a small private liberal arts school not unlike Juniata except in the respect that Hendrix has a very strong Arts Program, something Ryan is hoping to achieve here at Juniata. Ms. Chadwick received her Master's Degree from Louisiana State in Baton Rouge, where she than taught for a year. She is credited with creating a Fine Arts program at a high school after leavinig LSU. She built the program "from the groundd up" adding band, speech, art, and drama. Her next stop was Ohio University where she was a Teaching Associate in Fine Arts and Theatre for seven years. She was also in charge of recruitment for Ohio University's School of Theatre Graduate Program. She is presently working on her Doctorate in Comparative Arts from Ohio University. Comparative Arts is the "historical and philosophical interrelationship among the Fine Arts." It deals with all applied Fine Arts including music, painting, sculpture, architecture, and literature.

Ms. Chadwick is currently teaching English I and Acting at Juniata, besides directing the fall production of "Our Town." The cast has been chosen and rehearsal has begun. She is very pleased with the potential of the cast and the level of student involvement. She is also planning a production for the spring.

Ms. Chadwich is enjoying Juniata. She likes the small town atmosphere and has been aiming to get back to a small liberal arts school since leaving Hendrix in Arkansas. She is looking to build a "strong academic based theatre program" here at Juniata, although she realizes that it won't happen over night. The production of "Our Town" will be running November 2-5 at Oller Auditorium.

Ryan Chadwick, the new Instructor of Theatre.

New Poli-Sci Professor Tries "Not to bore people"

By Lance Marshall

One of Juniata's newest and youngest professors is Dr. Gary J. Aichele of the political science Department. This vibrant professor was born in Philadelphia and grew up in the Wynnewood suburb. Dr. Aichele received his B.A. in Government in 1973, his J.D. School of Law in '76 and finally his Ph.D. in Government in '83, all at the University of Virginia Charlottesville.

Before coming to Juniata, Dr. Aichele practiced law for one year in Charlottesville, before going back to school. Among his other work experiences, those that most notably stand out are jobs as an Administration Assistant to the Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren E. Berger, and Executive Director of a non-profit organization called, The Supreme Court Historical Society. Dr. Aichele's teaching experience includes an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Norwich University from 1984-1987.

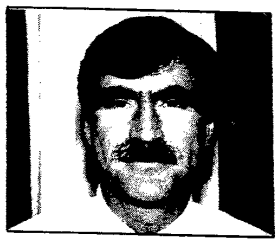
There were several reasons that Dr. Aichele decided on coming to Juniata. One was location, being close to his own family in Philadelphia and his wife's family Mrs. Wendy Anderson Aichele from Pittsburgh. Second, was the attitude he found here.

Juniata College appears interested in solving the problems and challenges that approach the school. "Thirdly, he is able to teach what he was taught and what interests him, which is public law and political philosophy.

Other than teaching, Dr. Aichele is getting involved with the Pre-Law society, and is busy finishiing a book that is scheduled to be published this winter entitled Oliver Wendall Holmes Jr. Those that take Dr. Aichele's Intro to American Government class find that his classes, although large, are quite active, which is what the young professor likes. He says "I try not to bore people. If I ever think these kids are bored, I'll quit teaching."

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan



A very interesting and timely article appeared recently in the Harrisburg Patriot-News. While the content appears most appropriate for female freshmen(nohing sexist intended), it by no means loses its relevancy for all students, males as well as females. The topic, if you have not already guessed, just happens to be the gaining of unwanted pounds, primarily by first-year female students and commonly referred to as the "Freshmen Ten"

We are all too aware that we live in a culture that prizes thinness. To be thin is in and good and, on the other hand, to be anything else is less than desirable, particularly if one is a female. (Just as an aside, isn"t it interesting that Willliam "Refrigerator" Perry was almost elevated to the status of folk hero in his first few years with the Chicago Bears until people began to realize that weighing in excess of 300 pounds just might be injurious to his health.)

It seems to me that there are more than enough stressors(academic, social, personal) to confront in the transition from high school to college. We don"t need to add another one. In fact, Judy Marshel, a registered dietician with Weight Watchers International, suggests that the "Freshmen Ten" does not have to happen to you. According to her, if you maintain a positive attitude, plan ahead, set realistic goals(where have we heard this before?), and stay with them, there is no reason to put on those unwanted pounds.

The following are some simple yet effective suggestions offered by Marshel:

Moderation is the key-no food itself will do you in, it depends on how much you eat or drink. If you so choose, an occasional beer or glass of wine is not out of the question;

Strive to eat three balanced meals per day-try not to miss breakfast if at all possible;

Be active-build exercise into your daily schedule. Remember, exercise not only burns calories but it also provides extra energy for other activities. Get a friend to exercise with you and make it a social, more enjoyable event.

That"s all for now from Counselor"s Corner. Until next time, be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

CM Beat

By Chris Noyes

Words are powerful, but if words or phrases are overused they lose their power of description and mystery of meaning. For example, the words "psyched" and "pumped-up" are so overused that they lackluster in describing an emotion. Thus, what happens is our overused words become stale syllables unable to express the longing of our souls to be understood.

As I was reflecting at the recent CMB retreat and thinking about all that was coming up this week, the song "Don't Worry, Be Happy" played through my mind. I smiled, but the work still remained. This song has a way of bringing a smile or chuckle to people. It is a catchy tune.

I pondered then on what "happy" means or what is happiness? Can "happy" express or provide a guideline for getting along with one another? Is the word "happy" even description enough to evoke a stirring in our hearts?

Being alive is the experience of pain, joy, discouragement, and hope. Dietrich Bonhoeffer, a 20th century martyred Christian theologian, stated "seek God, not happiness." What Bonhoeffer meant is that by seeking God we will begin to learn of forgiveness, unconditional love, and hope. By seeking God the Words forgiveness, love, joy, etc., come alive with the power of description.

Seeking God empowers and tears down the boundaries we erect. True happiness isn't sought, but is a by-product of our journey. We'd like to be a part of your journey. Please join us and share with us in the activities of campus ministry.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

This episode of Muddy Run explores that phenomenon known as the freshman. I'm too lazy to go look it up, but a layman's translation, something like "fresh" meaning 'new' and "man," a pre-ERA term meaning 'person,' comes close to the truth, I think. 'New person.' That pretty much defines itself. 'Freshman' has many shoddy synonyms; it's even a descriptive term itself—"He's such a freshman."

But thinking back to some really classic freshman-isms, you may find that the best of the bunch were those committed by yourself. As the saying goes, "we were all one once." Humble yourself for a minute and travel in time and space, back to those furtive days of yesteryear... back to sweaty meetings with your high school counselor, screaming matches with your parents about a dim demon called financial aid, nervous boasting to your friend that you had (or hadn't) "gotten in" — accepted at Juniata (et. al), the elite of the elite! Did you ever wonder 'why'? Posers of that dreaded question were assured, aside from the fact that "successful people got an education," that college was a place to "makee a new image for yourself." To "redefine yourself in the eyes of peers." Remember?

Redefinition!! That's what college is all about. And how does this process of redefinition begin? Well, first they put you in a thing called the Freshman Register. It's real name is "The Meat Book." The freshman unthinkingly, innocently submits a mug shot of him/her in a suitable unthinking, innocent pose. Perhaps they reason that the hammy graduation portrait, snazzed up with suitable backlightiing or "Mar Headroom" ventian blinds, will be pitied and slipped into a locked filing cabinet, thankfully forgotten. Not so, sorry kid. Bang!! Slap!! You're on the menu, '88.

Adding insult to injury, freshman is told to state a "Program of Emphasis." "Whuzzat?" asks prospective FM. This confusion invariably results in one quarter of the college population being listed as pre-meds, the other 900 as Business majors. (That slight exaggeration is known as poetic license). To boost the embarrassment quotient, here's a little line asking 'please list your activities and interests.' The hapless freshman may find himself labeled for life as: "Rock keyboardist," "I enjoy baking cookies," a "Jesus's" groupie.

Personally, I say: whatever floats your boat. But in print? Sure, hi, gladta meetcha, I'm a rock keyboardist. And finally, if the masses who state 'researching anatomy and physiology' as their HOBBIES actually do spend their hours relaxing in the operating theatre, then I think my early education has a deep, deep flaw somewhere. Perhaps fair warning should be given, along the lines of "anything you write can and will be used against you..."

Freshman, I think, pretty much define themselves, regardless. They behave with the poise of a naked man walking into a church service, they act with the cluelessness of the Tusseyites who periodically call our house asking for chicken-fillet sandwiches. And, conservative as we can be, we lambast them, at least until they're not "Fresh" anymore. My moments of freshman indiscretion are probably the things I want to forget most on earth, yet I have to smile at them

Power 92 is on the air and pumping this semester. We have been on the air consistently since the beginning of the semester. And will continue to bring the campus and community the best music in the area.

Training is going on at an astronomical rate. The training list has been full since the beginning of the semester and quality DJ's have been trained every week. If you would like to be trained and haven't been able to sign up, a new list has just been posted. If you are already trained and would like a show, just contact me at the radio station, because there are still some shows open.

The variety of music at the station is increasing daily. With the extended dance shows on Friday and Saturday nights, along with the longer specialty shows during the week, the need for new music and the replacement of the old is ever increasing. These new additions will allow WKVR DJ's to bring you "Yesterday's classic's and today's hits."

Power 92 rocks with this week's Top 30

Hot Wax

Hello. Todays first question is: What in God's name does the title Hot Wax have to do with music anyway? Is it some sort of anachronism from the 50's which correlates the burning of candles to reviewing music in the print media? (Maybe record critics were so underpaid back then that they couldn't afford electricity? I don't know). But if you, the reading public know what Hot Wax means, or can think of a better title for this column, please contact me or the Juniatian A.S.A.P. so that I can sleep nights.

Whatever it's called, it's still a column about music. ("A rose by any other name...") Today's edition of the ole' H.W. begins a series of articles on some trends which can be found (that is- "heard") in music today. Positive trends. Trends which subtley point towards the breaking down of many old (and not so old) racial, cultural, and political taboos. Trends which indicate the growing strength of music as a positive force of change and not just something to keep Casey Casem working. (Did he graduate from the Ronald Reagan School of Facial make-up or what?)

Indian Nights

Juniata's Official Soap

By Michael C. Colcman

Amy showed up at Jason's room t eight o'clock. "Amy! The party oesn't start until ten. Aren't you a it early?" "Yeah, I know. Um, this s kind of embarrassing, but I'm not eally sure about what to wear. I nean, I don't know what kind of eople will be there or what type of nusic you're going to play or anyhing," explained Amy, her face vith a pinkish tint from her embarassment. She had always been a ittle shy, so asking Jason for help vas especially difficult.

"Don't worry about it. Wear whatever you're comfortable in," aid Jason, trying to make her feel velcome at her new home.

"Don't pay any attention to him," Lisa butted in. "Hi. You must be Amy. Jason told me about you. I'm Lisa, his wife."

"He told me about you, too. He didn't say how beautiful you were, hough." Amy wasn't lying, Lisa vas gorgeous. Her orange-red hair lowed down her back to her buttocks, the color complimenting the oft lines of her lightly freckled ace. Her curvy figure moved like a ientle ocean tide as she walked.

"Well, he didn't tell me how retty or sweet you are. He forgets o mention a lot, like what you hould wear tonight. Why don't we o to your room and we can pick out omething together." Amy and Lisa vent on their fashion quest during vhich Amy's new friend gave her ome tips for making coping at uniata simpler. The pair arrived at he party an hour late because of the un they were having talking to each ther. "Lisa! Who's your friend?" sked Lee, another freshman who, ike Amy, met Lisa and Jason efore almost anyone else. Unlike my, however, Lee was a rather utgoing character. Lisa introduced he two and then left them alone. he two talked for awhile, danced a ittle, and soon decided that they hould get together again ometime.

Joe and Rod, always looking for a way to shock people, showed up with each other's girlfriends. Everyone was startled at first, but most figured it was a joke. Rather than give in and admit to be playing around, they carried it further. They remained as they came, Joe with Suzanne and Rod with Becky, throughout the night. "Joe! I have an idea. You leave with Suzanne now and I'll stay a while with Becky. People will really freak out," said Rod as they both laughed softly among themselves. So Joe and Suzanne left while Rod and Becky stayed. They danced with each other now closer than before, and it wasn't long before they started kissing.

Joe heard about the next day, but Rod convinced him that they were both quite intoxicated that night and didn't realize what they were doing. Everything was normal between the two, and it soon was the same way with Becky and Suzanne.

The weekend was gone and everythinig seemed to work out fine. Rod and Suzanne and Joe and Becky were all back together again and Amy and Lee had found each other. On Monday, Lee asked Amy to go to the movie with him on Friday. Amy accepted his invitation and looked forward to it all week, almost unable to keep her mind on her studies. She failed two quizzes that week, but it didn't matter to her. "You better watch yourself, Amy," warned Sara, her roommate. "Just because you found a boyfriend doesn't mean you're exempt from all the work. If you fail out of here it won't matter who you plan to go with because you won't be here anymore."

"You worry too much," retorted Amy. She was right, Sara often worried about the most trivial of matters, but this time she was right to worry.

"Hey Joe! You're not going to like what I say," Tommy said calmly when the two ran into each other at the library. "Rod and Becky were together, and they were doing a lot more than just holding hands."

Joe just laughed it off. He assumed that Tommy was talking about the party three nights ago. "That's old news, buddy. We straightened that out two days ago."

Tommy was still excited. "No man, this wasn't Saturday I'm talking about, it was a few minutes ago while I was up at the cliffs. They were seriously going at it."

Joe stopped laughing. Without a word, he started running toward the cliffs, Tommy close behind. On the way up there they passed Roscoe. "Where are you going, dude?" Roscoe had a slight chuckle in his voice when he said it. He obviously knew what was going on.

When Joe finally reached the cliffs, he saw rod with a bloody cloth tied around his head. "What the hell do you think you're doing messing with my girl. You're dead now."

"Wait! What are you talking about? Becky and I were just talking. We've always come up here together to talk. You know that." Rod honestly didn't seem to know why Joe would be upset.

"Rod, I saw you and Becky getting pretty close," Tommy butted in. "Now do you know what he's talking about?"

"Oh my God! I had slipped on a wet rock and cut up my face a little. She was cleaning my wounds and putting a bandage on me," explained Rod.

Still, Joe was hot. When Roscoe spoke his mind, it heated the flame more. "What? Don't you believe that he's mess around with his friend's girlfriend? He used to be my friend you know. "Roscoe brought back the memory of when Rod whole Suzanne from him, and that was all the convincing Joe needed. Before another word could be said, his fist met Rod's face. Tommy tried to keep the two lifelong friends apart, but they were too much to handle. After a few minutes of fighting, Roscoe finally helped Tommy and Becky break it up. Joe cooled down enough for them all to go back to campus, but not before the damage was done and it seemed that the two friends would hate each other forever.

English Students Coming to America

By Lisa Dempsey and Abby Segall

Coming To America fiction for Eddie Murphy, but reality for us. The Brits descend upon the small town of Huntingdon, PA four weeks ago-it seems like four years. So, what do we really think?

There are obvious differences such as the severe lack of pubs and alcohol and the total unavailability of a decent cup of tea (without the string accessory) The general concensus, however, amongst those from Hull, at least, is that we are definitely getting the best end of the deal.

You may all complain about the food in Baker—try nine months of a limp lettuce leaf and fly-covered chicken—and no Pepsi! No seconds, thirds, fourth and so on, not that that thought would ever occur to you; once is enough.

Now the people. The common American greeting of "Hi, how are you?" is taken very personally by us Brits. It is strange how even people who we are not particularly friendly with appeared to be concerned for our general welfare. We don't think we really greet each other in the same manner. Our smiles at peole we don't really know are at times more like a painful grimace.

One definitely needs to be involved in some form of sports activity in order to be fully accepted by the Juniata community. Not wishing to be left out we have all dragged our weary bodies to aerobics; place our legs in positions we did not even know existed and now have formed a volleyball team name 'the Flying Slugs.' None of us have played before-but we're game.

The main difference we have discovered concerning studying in America is that they actually work here. We are used to spending at least one lecture a week in the bar and maybe doing one piece of work every four weeks. We feel we have done more work in the last month than in the whole academic year at Hull. Also, this typing thing is getting on our nerves-we are used to handling work in on our best spiders scrawl.

Just to conclude our little resume we are having a good time and are glad we made that long trip across the Atlantic.

Dr. Baxter presents The US & Pakistan after Zia

By Ruthanne Hackman

This past Aug. 18, President Zia ul-Haq of Pakistan, an American ambassador and the Chairman of the Joints Chiefs of Staff were killed ina plane crash. The crash showed signs of sabotage-possibly a bomb. After an inquiry of the crash, the U. S. refused guessing at the actual cause of the plane crash.

The fact remains that President Zia ul-Haq died in the "aircraft accident." Zia supported Afghanistan--its rebels and its refugees, nuclear weapons--development and non-proliferation, and Islamization. Questions and fears of the stability of Pakistan and its neighbors were raised.

Dr. Baxter, JC's own Pakistan expert, presents his own vision of "The U. S. and Pakistan after Zia." Pakistan's neighbor Afghanistan has dominated U. S. public relations. As this winds down (as the Russians withdrawl from Afghanistan), other issues about this area will return to the foreground: 1) republican democracy, 2) human rights, 3) nuclear non-proliferation.

Dr. Baxter's lecture "The U. S. and Pakistan after Zia" will be presented Wednesday, Sept. 28, at 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall. There is no admission charge. Be ther because you care about world affairs.

JC's chemistry department acquires a van which will be equipped with the latest scientific equipment.

JC Chem. Profs. initialize new program

Representatives of Juniata College"s chemistry department recently took possesion of the cube van to be used as part of the Central Pennsylvania Chmestry Teacher"s Science Education Improvement Project. The van was purchased from Rog Garner Chevrolet in Huntingdon and will be equipped with the latest in scientific equipment.

Funded through a National Science Foundation grant which is expected to total approximately $500,000 over a five-year period, the primary goal of the project is to improve the quality of science education in the 16 school districts within the Huntingdon, Blair, Centre, and Fulton county region by upgrading the skills and resources available to science teachers within the distrcits. This will be accomplished through offering high school teachers research oppurtunities with Juniata faculty members, providing summer seminars and workshops, and providing students and teachers with increased access to modern scientific instrumentation.

A secondary goal of the program is to produce improved student performance and greater student interest in science careers. Evidence that this goal has been achieved would be higher test scores on standardized test, larger numbers of students pursuing science courses in high school and college, increased competitiveness for college scholarships and special science programs, and more positive attitudes towards science subjects and careers.

To meet this need on part of the school districts in the four-county region, Juniata College willl equip the van with the latest in scientific equipment. The van will travel to high schools within the region to provide teachers with the instrumentation necessary to better prepare students for college level work.

Send me a sample of their handwriting and Signature (include age) and I'll send a full personality and character analysis and tell you how you can get a $5.00 refund on the cost. Blatchey to head 'Chem on Wheels'

By Dawn Sanzo

Ronald C. Blatchley has taken a new position with the adminisatration as the Associate Director of the National Science Foundation Chemistry Teacher Education Project. Dr. Mitchell, Director of the project, applied for a grant from the National Science Foundation and was awarded $500,000 extended over a period of five years. In addition, Juniata College is also giving considerable financial support to oversee the success of the project.

Mr. Blatchley's job is to travel to various high schools to offer students hands-on experience with the new science equipment. Approximately $50,000 in various instruments plus a new van have been bought for this project. A total of 22 schools from the counties of Centre, Mifflin, Blair, and Huntingdon are involved. Mr. Blatchley does not take the place of the teacher in the high schoools. His job ends after he initially demonstrates how the equipment works.

Mr. Blatchley attended Lycoming College, Williamsport and graduated with a BA major in chemistry. He then attended the Univers ty of Pittsburgh and received Master of Arts in Teaching. Prior this job at J.C., Mr. Blatchley taug for 21 years at Mifflinburg Hig School, located in Union Count He taught chemistry and advanc chemistry. Mr. Blatchley was rea for a different and challenging j when his daughter, Marianne, w is a senior at Juniata, told him of t position that was opening at the co lege. He applied and was hire shortly after.

Mr. Blatchley is very interest in Dr. Joseph Priestley, the d coverer of oxygen. Much to delight, he had the opportunity to chemical demonstrations for public in the actual Priestley Hou

Field Hockey team still undefeated, now 5-0

By Deborah Dougherty

The Juniata College Hockey team had another exciting week on the field. They now have a 5-0 record, including three MAC victories.

Tuesday, September 13, the Lady Indians took on Wilkes College. The game was an offensive one for Juniata, who won with a score of 4-0. The first goal was knocked in by Renee Rine. Suzanne McMannus followed with another goal on a cross by Kathleen McGowan. The Indians were not yet ready to give up the ball to Wilkes. Renee Rine scored her second goal of the game, assisted by Suzanne McMannus. Not to be outdone by her freshman teammates, senior Joanne Thomas scored the final goal for Juniata on a ball passed by Kathleen McGowan. > P

The J.V. team, keeping with the winning record, defeated Wilkes 2-0. Both goals were scored by Renee Rine, the second being assisted by JoLynn Barbar.

The following Wednesday, Juniata travelled to Pittsburgh to take on Chatham College. The Lady Indians proved to be a tough team for Chatham and came away with an 11-0 victory. Three goals were scored bu Kathleen McGowan, one being assisted by Amy Blough; Jenny Swan scored two, one assisted by Hillary Mitchell; Heather Weiss, Renee Rine and Stephanie Moyer each added one to the Indian score, Rine and Moyer both being assisted by Suzanne McMannus. Defensive players Mickey Hoffman and Laurie Boyer would not be left out of the scoring binge, scoring one goal and two goals consecutively. Carolyn Sheedy assisted Boyer on one of the tallies.

The undefeated hockey team took on York the following Saturday, who was also undefeated. The weather was against the two teams, but neither let the rain dampen their spirits.

Both teams played a tough defensive game in the first half. Kathleen McGowan knocked in the first goal of the match on a free hit from Heather Weiss about ten minutes into the half. Though York tried, they did not answer this score until there were only eight minutes remaining in the first half. The score remained even going into the second half.

The rain picked up in the second half, along with the intensity to score. Both teams played hard and tried to score, but with eight minutes left in the game, the score remained 1-1. This was when Juniata took over.

Heather Weiss took a free hit and drove the ball down to Suzanne McMannus on the 25-yard line. McMannus then passed the ball across the top of the circle to Kathleen McGowan, who drove it in to score the go ahead goal.

Juniata was not finished yet, though. One minute later, the ball was once again driven across the top of the circle. The York defense tried to pass it out from the goal area, but Joanne Thomas came in from the left midfield position to dampen their efforts. The score was now 3-1 in favor of Juniata.

York took the pushback and took it down to their end of the field, but could not keep Juniata away from the ball. Heather Weiss had a breakway and passed the ball up to Jennifer Dippery who crossed the ball from the right of Kathleen McGowan. McGowan drove in her third goal of the game and finalized the score of 4-1.

Coach Kathi Quinn commented that the defense was making nice plays in the circle. She noted that the goalies did a good job and that the game was close until the end, when Juniata used their speed and passing skills to score the final three goals.

Good luck to the team as they defend their record when they take on Johns Hopkins Sunday, September 25.

Volleyball Team Finishes Fifth In Illinois Tournament

The Juniata Women's Volleyball team finished 5th this past weekend in the Illinois Benedictine Tournament. The Indians won 5 of the six games they played but the lone loss in the quarter finals to St. Ambrose College allowed the Indians to place no better than in the fifth position.

Juniata opened the tournament with a sweep of its first three opponents. Rosary College (15-10, 15-5), Augustana (15-3, 15-7) and St. Thomas College of Minesota (15-6, 15-12) were all victims of the powerful Indian attack. JC then fell to St. Ambrose College of Iowa 0-2 (11-15, 5-15) in the quarterfinals.

The Indians concluded the tournment by knocking off Friends University (Kansas) two games to one (12-15, 15-4, 15-11) and finished the tourney with a victory over St. Thomas, again sweeping the Minnesota based school (15-11, 15-11).

In between JC's two opening tournaments, the Indians defeated Shippensburg University 3-1 (16-14, 15-3, 9:15, 15-12). The Indians record now stands at 8-3. Juniata hosts Gettysburg College nest Tuesday at 6:30 p.m., then will host the first of its two tournaments in the Indian Invitational. A total of ten teams (Western Maryland, Courtland, Upsala, Susquehanna, Baldwin-Wallace, Muskingum, Ohio Northern, West Chester, Ithica and Juniata) will battle for the Tournament total. The Indian Invitational starts Sept. 30 during Parents's Weekend.

Webb and Neff are Nationally Honored

Juniata College baseball players Dan Webb amd Kevin Neff were listed among the Divison III baseball individual statistical leaders in the July 20 edition of NCAA News.

Webb, who graduated in May, was third in the nation with a .58 doubles per game. The catcher from Bloomsburg led the Indians with 15 two-baggers during a 26-game schedule.

A freshman from Reading and Wyomissing High School, Neff was sixth in the country with .38 home runs per contest after slugging nine homers in 24 games. As a pitcher, he was fifth in the nation with a 1.90 earned run average over 42-plus innings of work.

Juniata put together a late-season eight-game winning streak to finish 14-12 for veteran coach Bill Berrier. Webb was the only senior starter for Berrier"s young team.

"Dan and Kevin were obviously very important to our team"s success this season," said Berrier. "Dan was our leading hitter as a junior and finished his career with another fine season while Kevin began his career with one of the best freshman performances ever at Juniata."

Neff was a first team All-Middle Atlantic Conference selection as an outfielder. Webb received second-team All-MAC honors for the second straight season.

Indian Booters Tie UPJ; Lose To Elizabethtown

By Kristyn Huey

On Wednesday, September 14 the Indians faced The University of Pittsburgh at Johnstown on College Hill. The game ended in a tough 1-1 tie. At the half the game was scoreless but not emotionless. Pat Tempe for J.C. was presented a yellow card, along with a UPJ player. Pitt-Johnstown controlled the beginning of the second half, scoring quickly to bring the score to 1-0. Freshman Brian Hall in goal for J.C. had some good saves to keep the score at 1-0.

With about two minutes left in the game, senior Steve Grater made a cross to Bob Kelley. Kelley took a shot on goal to tie the game at 1-1. After two ten minute overtime periods the score remained the same. The Indians have a record of 1-1-2.

On Saturday, September 17, the soccer team faced a nationally ranked Elizabethtown. Although the team played tough, they lost the game by a wide margin. The team's record now stands at 1-2-2. The Indians travel to face Messiah College on Wednesday.

Indians Defeat Del Val; Gear up For LVC

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata College varsity football team broke into the win column this past weekend in Doylestown, defeating Delaware Valley College 17-15. The play was sometimes as sloppy as the weather, but in the end the Indians held on for the victory, making their record 1-0-1 and 1-0 in the MAC's.

The Aggies scored with 28 seconds remaining in the game to get within two points but a two point conversion try failed when Del Val quarterback Tim Ford slipped as he scrambled from the Indians pressure. Juniata took over for one more snap and downed the ball earning the close victory.

John O'Neill recorded the first points of the game with his first quarter 34 yard field goal. O'Neill's field goal capped off a seven play 20 yard drive with 4:13 left to play in the period. For the second week in a row the Indians found themselves in a defensive battle, in a game that reflected many misopportunities and a numerous amount of costly penalties.

After O'Neill's field goal the Indians recovered a fumble on the ensuing kickoff. Starting on the Del Val 20, the Indians were pushed backward and a holding penalty took them out of field goal range. The Aggies took over on downs only to lose another fumble two plays later. However, an O'Neill 42 yard field goal attempt was wide left and yet another opportunity had slipped by the Indians.

The start of the second quarter found Juniata driving once again. After 11 plays put the Indians on the Del Val 14 yard line a 31 yard field goal attempt sailed wide ride giving the Aggies first and ten from their own 20-yard line. Del Val marched down to the Indians 11 yard line allowing John Ford to boot a 28 yard field goal and to knot the score at three with 6:32 remaining in the half. During the 11 play 64 yard drive an Indian face masking penalty on third and six allowed the surge to continue after the Aggies were stopped short of the first down.

A 3-3 tie at half time would indicate a close game but reviewing the halftime stats shows that Juniata was dominating the game. The Indians had six more first downs than the Aggies, didn't lose the ball when the Aggies turned it over three times, and controlled the ball five minutes more than Del Val.

Delaware Valley started the second half turning a Juniata miscue into a score, something the Indians could not do in the first half of play. Taking over on the Juniata 43 yard line, the Aggies John Palmer scored ona third and seven pass from Ford. The 10-play drive resulted in only six points when a bad snap on the PAT conversion forced the holder, Bob Staman, to roll right and drive short of the endzone.

Dan Crossey gave JC great field position, returning teh ensuing kickoff to his own 42 yard line. Two plays later a screen pass to the right side of the line for Dennis DeRenzo resulted in a 50 yard touchdown for the Indians. Only 52 seconds after the Aggie's TD, Juniata tried the score at nine, then O'Neill's conversion gave the Indians a 10-9 lead.

After a defensive first half the Indians offensive was finally starting to click, doing what they are well capable of-putting points on the scoreboard. Del Val marched right back but missed a 32 yard field goal. The Indians wasted no time and seven plays later, had another score; This time, Davis connected with Mike Cottle and the Senior Wideout made two nice Jukes and picked up a key block down field for the 39-yard score. O'Neill's point after marked a 17-9 Juniata lead with 2:41 remaining in the third quarter.

Juniata stopped Del Val's next three possessions, the third concluded by a Todd Rossman interception on his own 37 yard line. There the Indians mounted a drive, actually scoring on a 25 yard scramper by Dan Crossey. However, the play was called back because of a Juniata holding penalty and for the third time in the game, a Juniata touchdown was nullified by a yellow flag.

The Indians were forced to punt with 2:11 remaining in the game. It was then that Ford led his Aggies on an 86 yard scoring surge with quick passes underneath and long scrambles getting out of bounds to stop the clock.

On the third and two Ford sprinted to the left corner of the endzone and dove across the plain of the goal line for the score, setting up the chance for the tie.

Nuch's Notes: While the Indian's were guilty of several costly penalties they did actually score five touchdowns, no doubt showing signs of progression, which is a key to any successful season. The Cubby Davis Juniata Fans are accustomed to threw for 234 yards completing 14 of 30 passes for 2 TD's. Davis was not intercepted for the first tiem since he has been started. The Indians only gave up one sack, five short of last week's total.

The Indians managed 17 first downs to Del Val's 14. JC gained 120 yards rushing on 49 attempts. Dennis DeRenzo carried the build of the load for 108 yards on 30 attempts. JC netted 354 total offensive yards on 80 plays for a 4.4 average. Del Val gained 267 yards on 70 plays, a 3.8 average yard per play.

Jim Metz had five receptions for 71 yards, DeRenzo 4 grabs also for 71 yards, and Cottle snared 4 passes for 66 yards. Dan Crossey had a super day returning 4 punts for 44 yards and a kickoff for 32 yards, several times almost breaking free for scores. Juniata controlled the ball for 37:18 to Del Val's 23:42.

Inside linebacker Frank Gay led the defensive charge with a team high16 tackles. Randy Martin (10 tackles), Jerry Cook (8 tackles), Steve Campbell (7 tackles), and Tim Kirsch (7 tackles, 2 pass breakups and an interception) were the other leadind tacklers. Smokey Glover recorded the lone Indian sack. Steve Brunner and Bob Herzog each recovered fumbles, while Kirsch, Rossman and Bryan each had an interception.

The Indian defense did a great job stringing out the Aggie's wishbone offense and after two games has allowed an average of only 14 points a game. With the way the offense is progressing, and Heaven help someone if they have a perfect day, a 14 point output will not be enough to beat Juniata. The next team to give it a shot will be Lebanon Valley College 21-7 losers to Widener university last weekend.

Club JC meets with success

By Joelle Beecher

Club JC--What is that? Many students found out on Sept. 22 when they stepped into Baker Refectory for dinner and found 29 clubs and their props ready to answer questions and get people involved.

The night turned out to be a success! After an hour and a half of exposure, approximately 330 students had signed up to join various clubs and committees. Many inquiries were also made, ranging from "What is this?" to "When can we buy a yearbook?"

The amount of people who inquired or signed to join varied from club to club. But one participant pointed out, "Even if many people don't sign up- the exposure itself is great!" In April, a second Club JC will be held to give the new club leaders exposure and recruiting help for the following year.

Thanks should go out to all of the Center Board members who coordinated and helped carry out the event as well as the clubs who participated and the patient cooperation from Food Service and maintenance. The event would not have been possible or successful without their help. Thank You!

World News

George Bush and Michael Dukakis met in a televised debate Sunday night. The topics discussed included drugs, the deficit, and foreign policy. The debate was held in the Wait Chapel Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem, North Carolina. an Associated Press panel of six veteran debate judges gave the candidates a 3-3 split, but said that Bush bested his opponent in both refutation and reasoning skills.

Although neither man made any blatant errors, the two candidates did exchange one-liners. Dukakis opened the mud-throwing by calling Bush the "Joe Isuzu" of American politics, in reference to the TV advertising character who exaggerates everything he says about the cars he's selling. Dukakis was supposed to be answering a question about environmental problems in Massachusetts. In response, Bush asked, "Is this the time to unleash our one-liners? That answer was about as clear as Boston Harbor."

Bush also won applause from the Wake Forest audience when he said "I would take all the blame for those two problems (Iran-Contra scandal, Noriega in Panama) if I could get half the credit for all the good things that have happened for world peace" during the Reagan administration. He cited examples such as the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan and the Iran-Iraq peace talks to support his point.

United States swimmer Matt Biondi tied an Olympic record by taking his seventh medal,as part of the 400-meter medley relay. The 400-meter team won the event in world record time. Biondi finished his Olympic and racing career with a bronze medal, a silver medal, and five gold medals. Kristin Ott of East Germany became the games' most successful woman athlete ever as she won six gold medals for swimming.

Each new year brings about changes for our campus. Unfortunately one of the changes this has not been for the better. It"s sad to go to dinner on a Saturday night and only see twenty other people there, the rest of the campus. Ok, maybe that's an exaggeration, but not by much. The student body, for the most part, is leaving on the weekends. Yes, Juniata College is becoming a suitcase college. When I was a freshman, that was something this school prided itself on--that students actually stayed here on the weekends. There are many probable factors for the disappearance of students, among them, lack of activities and the new alcohol policy. I do have to commend, however, both the student gov't and Centerboard for making a special effort to combat this problem. A prime example is this coming weekend. There is so much planned for this Parent's Weekend that not one person could not realistically do everything. We will definitely see more students on campus this weekend because of the number of things to do. That's great! Parent's Weekend is a special tradition that everyone should take part in. The problem then becomes what happens to the weekend after Parent's Weekend. Unfortunately, the cycle will repeat itself and students are once-again homebound. While traditions are in abundance at Juniata, maybe what we need is to begin a few new ones, so that it's not just once a month that students want to spend a weekend here, but every weekend.

101 Questions For The Thinking Student:

—Does anybody know where Smithfield is? (It's Huntingdon, south of river)

—Why do some people put their toilet paper on the spindle so it dispenses up, and some so it dispenses down?

—Who put Pizza Hut at the other end of town?

—How do you dress for a day which fluctuates in temperature between 40 degrees and 70 degrees?

—Does anyone else forget to brush their teeth on weekends?

—Who's this "Ray" guy (as in "Raystown")?

—How come you have to live in East in order to find where anyone lives there?

—How can we find time to watch the Olympics when we're reading Homer every Monday and Wednesday night?

—Why can't we call it a "major" like everybody else?

—Why are all the bars in Huntingdon downtown, when we're told not to drink and drive?

—Do tacos count as International food? Then why isn't OIP a cultural experience?

—Am I the only one who spends his time at the cliffs counting the cars on every passing train like a twelve year old?

—Who decided to hold SVS, a "required GE," at 8 a.m.?

—What happened to "West" houses?

—How come I always put this column off until Monday night, when it's due on Sunday?

—Who makes anything due on the weekend?

—Yes, I know, a lackluster effort at best, but just wait 'til next week!

Does Juniata need a new Mascot?

By CHRIS FORNEY

As a 19-year-old sophmore at Juniata College, I find myself puzzled and ashamed of the fact that the school I attend uses the blatenly degrading term 'Indians' to represent themselves: It's my opinion that using any race or nationality as a mascot is inhumane and in no way honorable. The lack of honor and respect becomes particularly evident when one considers the stereotypical way this school depicts the Native Americans. For instance, The intramural championship t-shirts show a hatchet wielding Indian performing what I assume to be some war dance. To bring this into perspective, imagine the anger which would be evoked if the shirt featured a watermelon eating black person and we were the Juniata College Negros. But let's not stop there, just think of some other common stereotypical notions we equate with other races and nationalities. Besides, haven't the Native Americans dealt with enough strife in this land without having such institutions as the Washington Redskins, Cleveland Indians and yes Juniata College promoting racism. In conclusion, the schools goal is to educate, not offend. So let's take action and find a new mascot for Juniata.

WELCOME PARENTS —

from the Juniatian Staff

Juniata gets $2.87 million

More than $2.87 million was given to Juniata College during the recently completed 1987-88 fiscal year as reported in the upcoming issue of the college's annual Report of the President. The funds make this the second largest giving year in the college's history.

The 1987-88 giving total of $2,872,197 is surpassed only by the 1986-87 giving year in which $2.9 million was raised.

Juniata's alumni accounted for over 50% of the total, according to Dr. Clayton N. Pheasant, Vice President for College Advancement. "Juniata College is in the enviable position of having an incredibly loyal group of alumni," Dr. Pheasant noted. "The percentage of alumni who make annual gifts to the college is hovering at 40%, which is twice the national average. I full expect that number to increase over the next several years. We just have that kind of loyalty from the people who graduate from Juniata," he said.

In addition to surpassing the goal of $2.75 million in total giving, the report highlighted the success of the Annual Support Fund (ASF) campaign for 1987-1988. The total of contributions to the ASF was $504,433, making the largest amount ever contributed to the fund. "Our goal of $500,000 was extremely ambitious," Dr. Pheasant said. "Surpassing that goal is another indication of the strong support the college has among all of our constituency groups. Contributions to our fund raising efforts provide program support, but they also serve to affirm and strengthen our mission of providing the highest quality liberal arts education."

The individual constituency groups contributing to Juniata include alumni, corporations, businesses, foundations, government, friends of the college, parents and memebers of the Church of the Brethren.

Contributions to the college are used to support a multitude of programs. For example, of this year's

Wellness Tips

By Nurse Jane Brown

Wellness goes beyond the conventional approach to health. It is optional physical and mental well-being, a preventive way of living that reduces-sometimes even eliminates-the need for remedies. It is a positive day-to-day approach to a healthful way of life. "Shot in the Arm" is not a remedy, but a weekly column of "Wellness Tips" and the latest information to keep you informed on pertinent health facts and issues, written by members of the Student Health Advisory Committee (SHAC) and the Health Center Staff.

To review: The Health Center staff is willing and anxious to help resolve any health-related problems, to deal with emergencies, medication management, chronic illnesses and to help you find answers to any questions which you may have concerning any present or projected needs.

Dr. Philip Shoaf is staff physician. Jane Brown is Head Nurse and SHAC advisor, and new to the staff this year is Kimberly Harbold, RN, Resident Nurse.

Health center hours are 9-5 Mon. through Fri., 6-8 Mon. through Sat. Doctor's hours are 9-10 am Tues, 7-8 pm Wed., and 2-3 pm Thursday. Kim can be reached after 5 pm by calling 643-0909 or by checking the message board and will be in the clinic designated hours. She is also available for EMERGENCIES ONLY evenings and weekends. Clients are strongly urged to see Mrs. Brown or Kim for non-emergencies during scheduled clinic hours because Kim is also a full-time student and is deserving of her study time.

Other services offered by the Health Center are birth control counseling, pregnancy testing, throat cultures, pelvic examinations including pap tests. STD counseling including AIDS, and if service outside the Health Center is needed, the staff is more than willing to help make any necessary arrangements. There is a $1.50 charge for an initial visit involving examination, treatment and/or medication. Allergy injections and Tine tests are also given for $1.00. Consultations and referrals are at no charge.

The well-equipped SHAC Wellness room, also located in the Health Center Suite is open from 9 am to 11 pm and is saturated with a wide variety of health-wellness information. The wellness room contains a self-assessment center for colds and sore throats, a self-operating blood pressure apparatus, weight center, treadmill, and a library of educational video and cassette tapes.

SHAC is a committee comprised of students interested in the allied health professions, and in working with the health center staff to assure maximum quality health care and education on campus. SHAC provides valuable educational programming, including Wellness Day. In conjunction with the health center, SHAC has been working to provide support groups for weight control, eating disorders, nutrition, fitness, CPR, and first aid classes. We would welcome any requests for programming.

SHAC and the Health Center have also been working with the administration to arrive at a decision concerning condom availability on campus.

The Health Center staff and SHAC are initially concerned with your health and wellness needs. Please feel free to stop in and give us the opportunity to help. Do it for the health of it.

From the Pen of. . .

By John E. Deppen

The Republicans have finally found a way to package their presidential canidate-they've wrapped him in the American flag.

I don't think the flag is going to be enough to protect George Bush, however. There are too many questions that America is asking that simple patriotism cannot answer: What is George going to do to improve the education system? How is George going to fight the war on drugs? What is George going to do about human rights violations, both at home and abroad? How is George going to create more (and better) jobs? What is George going to do about the tens of thousands of homeless children on our streets?

The list of questions could be lengthened. America wants to know where both the candidates stand on such crucial issues as nuclear disarmament, environmental abuse, AIDS, and child care. America wants yo know in which direction each candidate will take us, in order to make the right choice come November.

How have the candidates responded? Governor Dukakis has outlined his plans for America in clear terms, while George Bush has created a red, white and blue mirage. Governor Dukakis has called on the distinguished Senator Lloyd Bentsen to help him complete his plans, while George Bush has selected the undistinguished, hypocritical Dan Quayle to help him pull the flag over people's eyes.

As the campaign heads into its final weeks, I won't be surprised if the Republicans keep their candidate wrapped in Old Glory. It's the only thing hiding the fact that George Bush has no real answers to the questions America is asking.

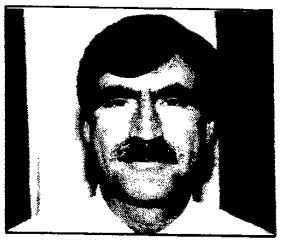
Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan



(A NOTE FROM COUNSELOR'S CORNER: THIS IS THE FIRST IN A SERIES OF ARTICLES ON VIOLENCE, SEXUAL COERCION, AGGRESSION AND DATE RAPE ON COLLEGE CAMPUSES)

Those of you who attended the presentation by "Metamorphosis" last Monday evening found it to be time extremely well spent. Audience participation was excellent, the players performed exceedingly well, and the facilitator worked hard at making certain that the key points were brought out. Kudos to Nancy Van Kuren and other Student Services people for their efforts in bringing this group to campus. One of my faculty colleagues went as far as to suggest that they be brought back in the near future.

While all four scenarios were equally powerful and contained equally important messages regarding human sexuality and communication, let's focus our attention on the last scene where date rape was the theme.

By way of introduction, experts tell us that the violence prevalent in the general population appears to be present in college dating relationships as well.

Unfortunately, date rape or acquaintance rape, as it is also known, is not that uncommon on college campuses today. One study revealed that one woman in five (freshmen and sophomores) had been forced to have sex against her will. In another recent study, researchers found that one woman in four had been a rape victim, 90% of whom were acquainted with the rapist.

At the risk of going overboard with statistics, consider that rape or attempted rape is experienced by nearly half of all women at some point in their lives.

Why does date/acquaintance rape occur? As was so dramatically and effectively pointed out in the date rape scene, the woman was presenting one message and the male was receiving another message. The mixed messages obviously contributed to the problem. Neither had a clear understanding of the other's sexual intention and expectation.

When the woman said "NO," it was misinterpreted as really meaning "YES," that the woman really was playing hard to get and that she wanted to be persuaded.

The ensuing act is date rape and is a sexual assault against the woman! Date rape is an act of violence and that violence is directed at a woman. It is NOT LOVE! Most tragically, date rape is a violation of a woman's body.

In our next article we'll discuss additional aspects of this issue. Until then, be good to yourself, assert yourself and above all, think good thoughts.

Campus Ministry Board "Become like a Child"

By Father David

"Unless you become like a child, you shall not enter the kingdom of God."(Mk. 10:15)

"But,"you say, "I'm a college student, I'm an adult. I've just spent 17 or 18 or 19 years "growing up". I'm no child."And so it is. You are not a kid anymore. You are an adult. You have adult responsibilities.

There are, however, some positive characteristics of children that adults could well imitate. Children are playful and affectionate. They have vivid imaginations and are deeply trusting and intensely loyal. They dream dreams that adults are simply too sophisticated to dream. Perhaps that is one of the problems in our world. We are all too sophisticated.

In the words of a poet:

Dreams come and go in our lives.
Far more die than come to reality.
What is it in us that allows us to let of visions that could create new and beautiful worlds?
Why do we so easily give in to barriers?
Why do we let ourselves conform and be satisfied with what is?
Reaching out to a dream can be risky.
It can involve hardships that our imaginations never knew.
Our comfortableness can so easily be disturbed.
But, what beauty can be experienced as we accept the challenge of a dream!
What a precious feeling to be supported, to have others say you can do it, we can do it together.
Nothing is beyond our reach if we reach out together.

if we reach out with all the confidence we have,
if we are willing to persevere even in difficult times and if we rejoice with every small step forward, if we dream beautiful dreams that will transform our lives, our world.
Nothing is impossible if we put aside our careful ways,
if we build our dreams with faith-

faith in ourselves,
faith in our sisters and brothers,
and above all, faith in our Lord God with whom all things are possible.

The theme of this coming Parents Weekend is "Shared Vision/Shared Hope."Vision leads to hope and without vision there is no hope. In order to dream and develop a vision which leads to hope, perhaps we need to shed our sophistication and become "like a child."

Is it possible for us to have the vision of a child and to see the goodness and worth of each human person regardless of their sex, race, social status or religion? Is it possible to dream of a world where justice really leads to peace, where conflict is resolved by compromise and not violence, where the hungry are fed because they have meaningful and worthwhile employment and are paid a just wage so that they can provide for the basic needs of their families? Is it possible for the world to be a place where people are free to express themselves without fear of punishment, retribution or execution?

If this is the world of children, of impossible dreams and impractical unsophisticate division, may we all be condemned to such an existence and may we all become more "like a Child."

This is my "Shared Vision/ Shared Hope"for all of us. Have a wonderful Parents Weekend.

Average SAT Scores Drop

Average SAT scores for the nation's 1.1 million college-bound students dropped two points to 904 (combined score) marking the first decline in eight years. Scores on the verbal section of the SAT averaged 428, while the average math score was 476, according to the College Board's annual report.

Despite the drop in the national average, however, one local college has managed to enroll a freshman class with SAT scores averaging 1063, representing a 33 point increase over the previous year's average.

"Juniata College is looking toward the future from a position of optimism and strength," according to Charles E. Kensinger, director of admissions. "In the face of a declining population of 18-year-olds, and with SAT scores remaining, essentially unchanged for several years, we've been able to enroll one of our largest and brightest classes of the decade."

The Concern of young voter turnout is addressed by NSC

Students and youth are an untapped force in American politics, largely ignored by politicians.

To activate that potential energy, over 550 student leaders nationwide are convening the National Student Conference on Voter Participation to address the issues of student concern is the 1988 elections.

The conference, which will be held in Washington, D.C. September 30-October 2, will address two main obstances to voter participation among 18-24 year olds. Low youth voter participation rates are linked to a lack of information on voter registration procedures and a lack of information on the candidates, their platforms, and the issues.

"While studies show that young people are more likely to express interest in politics and optimism about the effects of their vote," stated Laura Saunders, student government president at Borough of Manhattan Community College, "political parties and candidates spend less time and resources on outreach to young voters than to any other age group of the electorate."

"It's a Catch-22 situation. Politicians write off the student vote because they think students don't care, and students are less inclined to vote because politicians ignore them" explained Catherin Crane, director of the National Student Campaign for Voter Registration.

The student event will combat voter participation obstacles through a combination of activities over the conference weekend—keynote speeches will provide the political parties an opportunity to articulate their platforms, issue sessions on higher education, economic opportunity, foreign policy, AIDS, the environment, civil rights and arms control will allow students to gain substantive information on issues facing the country,—workshops on voter participation strategies and leadership skills led by the League of Women Voters, Project VOTE!, NAACP and others will prepare students to carry out effective voter participation dirves,—campus delegations from Florida to California and Massachusetts to Texas will meet to share their experiences from the conference and one another.

"Young voters are a sleeping giant as a political force" asserted Maureen Kirk, chair of the Oregon State Public Interest Research Group (OSPIRG) and a student at University of Oregon. There are as many 18-24 year olds as there are 65 year olds and over. To exercise our political clout as effectively as the seniors do, we must get registered, get mobilized and get out and vote."

The 1988 conference is based on the highly successful 1984 National Student Conference on Voter Registration (NSCVR) held at Harvard University. The 1984 conference was called to help stem the rapid drop in youth voter participation rates. Between 1972 and 1980, voting among 18-24 year olds declined from about 50 percent to 39 percent, the lowest percentage of any democracy. The NSCVR conference resulted in the registration of 500,000 new voters and helped to bring about the first increase in youth voter participation rates in over a decade.

"Once registered, 80 percent of all 18-24 year olds vote on election day" said Fred Azcarate, president of the United States Student Association. "It's time for the parties to take a serious look at the young voters that are now establishing voting patterns they are likely to follow for the next half-century, and it's time for students and youth to hold the parties accountable for their actions on student related issues."

The National Student Conference on Voter Participation is being sponsored by the Public Interest Research Groups (PIRGs), the United States Student Association (USSA), the National Student Campaign on Voter Registration (NSCVR), The National Student Educational Fund (NSEF), The Grass Roots Organizing Weekends Project (GROW), and the Student Empowerment Training Project (SET).

STUDENTS SPEAK OUT

By Lance Marshall

Other than changing the alcohol policy, what would you like to see Juniata College do to keep students here on campus during the weekend?

Heath Wadsworth: Freshman, Cloister:
Bigger area for dances;bring in a band.

Beno Thomas: Sophmore, Tussey:
Comedy shows; dances; trips, use Lake Raystown.

Hannah Buoni: Freshman, Tussey:
More schooi functions, like organized parties.

Betsy Holran: Sophmore, Lesher:
More dances; more social events; have something to do after the movie. More sporting events.

Doug Kenney: Senior, East:
College should have concerts come in instead of students having them. Parties are a good idea.

Money received for the annual support fund

More than $500,000 was given to the Juniata College annual Support Fund (ASF) during the 1987-88 campaign as revealed in the upcoming issue of the college's annual Report of the President. The actual amount $504,433, represents a 60% increase over previous year's giving mark.

According to Kevin McCullen, director of development at the college, much of the credit has to go to Cary and Betty Simpson, chairpersons of the ASF for 1987-88. "The Simpsons helped shape the theme and strategy of the campaign."

A tremendous amount of credit must also be given to members of the college's board of trustees who made a committment of 10% of the 1987-88 goal, according to McCullen. "Gary Pote chaired the board effort,"McCullen said, "and saw to it that the importance of the ASF campaign was understood."The total of gifts from the board represents a 600% increase over the previous year.

The group which contributed the larges percentage of the ASF total is, not surprisingly, the alumni association. Members of the association account for over 50% of the gifts made to the ASF in 1987-88 which represents a 30% increase over the previous year's total.

Corporations, businesses, and foundations account for 26% of the total gifts to the fund, over 300% increase from the previous year. Gifts from friends of the college increased by 56% and parent gifts increased by 40% over the 1986-87 figures.

According to McCullen, ASF contributions support scholarship programs, student services such as cultural and entertainment events, academic programs, the purchase of educational materials and equipment and the fund provides financial support for the enhancement of current programs.

Freshmen Vote for Officers

By Suzie Givler

On Tuesday, September 27th, thirty-one percent of the freshman class turned out at lunch and dinner to elect freshman senators and representatives for the freshman steering committee.

Seats on the student government will be fiven to the freshman senators-Kevin Fayette, Lance Marshall, and Brenda Mickey- who will deal with campus-wide issues.

Brenda Mickey, a resident of South Hall, ran for the senate because she is interested in leadership roles. Getting involved and improving the general welfare of the campus are only two of Brenda<P"s objectives this year.

The Steering Commmittee consists of five freshmen: Christopher Bush, Kelly Crawford, Grant Hunter, Heather Neff, and Wendy Wengert. The steering Committee is reponsible for class spirit and fundraisers for the class of '92.

Kelly Crawford, a political science major, was involved in student council throughout high school. Crawford ran for steering committee to get involved in campus activities and to help "get the freshman moving in the right direction."

So, as the year progresses, keep an eye out for these, our freshman representatives as they fulfill their elected duties.

class graduating in the top fifth of their high school graduating classes and 92% in the top two-fifths, the college has consistently attracted the region's top college-bound students. This year's freshman class includes eight high school valedictorians and six salutatorians.

"I think it's important to note that 88% of our students come to Juniata from our nation's public school systems," Kensinger said. "Our students come to the college from middle to upper-middle class homes where they have had instilled in them a strong work ethic and deep rooted values. They come to Juniata prepared to work hard in order to achieve some very high goals and objectives."

Of the 341 students entering the college this fall, nearly 5% are from the Huntingdon County region with the Huntingdon Area High School proving to be the second most productive high school overall with six students in the freshman class. "We've been fortunate in that students from the regions immediately adjacent to the college recognize the high academic standards that we maintain here. Our track record in placement is excellent and we take great pride in the fact that we enable students to, as our mission statement says, lead fulfilling and useful lives," noted Kensinger.

Placement statistics are well documented at the college. According to William Martin, director of career planning and placement, for the class of 1987, 97% of those registered were employed, in graduate/professional school, or pursuing other post-graduate activities within six months of graduation.

Representatives of the college also frequently refer to the fact that from 1983 to 1988 of those students applying to medical schools, 95% were accepted. Law school acceptance rates are also high. Students enrolled in economics and business administration are offered a vast array of internship options and education students begin to gain practical experience in their first year of study.

All of this, combined with recognition from such notable sources as "The Wall Street Journal," "U.S. News and World Report," "Peterson's Competitive Colleges," and "New York Times" education editor Ted Fiske's "Best Buys in College Education," paint a bright future for the college. In fact, according to Charles Kensinger, "at this point our inquiries for next year's freshman class are running 81.2% ahead of where we were at this point last year. Needless to say, we are very pleased."

Hot Wax

By Ferris

Because of a printing error, the Hot Wax article from last week will be run again this week in its entirety.

Hello. Todays first question is: What in God's name does the title Hot Wax have to do with music anyway? Is it some sort of anachronism from the 50's which correlates the burning of candles to reviewing music in the print media? (Maybe record critics were so underpaid back then that they couldn't afford electricity? I don't know.) But if you, the reading public know what Hot Wax means, or can think of a better title for this column, please contact me or the Juniatian A.S.A.P. so that I can sleep nights.

Whatever it's called, it's still a column about music. ("A rose by any other name...") Todays edition of the ol' H.W. begins a series of articles on some trends which can be found (that is--"heard") in music today. Positive trends. Trends which subtley point towards the breaking down of many old (and not so old) racial, cultural, and political taboos. Trends which indicate the growing strength of music as a positive force of change and not just something to keep Casey Casem working. (Did he graduate from the Ronald Reagan School of facial make-up, or what?)

"And what about the album reviews, you bonehead?", you respectfully inquire. They're here, don't worry. (Be happy). Anyways..."

The Red Hot Chili Peppers from L.A. play some of the funkiest funk on the planet. These people have a rhythm in their veins that makes James Brown take notice and enabled them to convince George Clinton to be the producer of their second LP, "Freaky Styley". An interesting fact about the R.H.C.P."s is that they do their funk without keybords, horn sections or matching glitter outfits. However, the more important aspect of this band is simply that they are white. Caucasian. Whatever. And that didn't used to mix-being white and funky- until recently.

Even today in the post-Beastie Boys era the Chili Peppers still take a lot of flak for looking like a combination surf hippie-hardcore punk band, while playing rough-and-ready guitar-laden funk. "Funky crime, funky crime, don't you know funk's colorblind...", sings Anthony Kiedis as he asks why the media set up "racial barriers"against his band. Besides the new album ("The Uplift Mofo Party Plan"), features another 4 songs, destined to please the listener looking for that special bass line which grooves. The rest of the album (with the exception of the mandolin dominated "Behind The Sun") leans towards faster guitars and spoken lyrics a la rap. Definite song for Juniata is "Fight like a Brave". It should be required music for half times at sporting events.

Next time: More on the race/music question, but taken from the side other N.Y.'s Living Color.

Phi Chi Theta Enthusiasm abounds

By Lynn Merritt

After an idle summer, Phi Chi Theta, Juniata's business fraternity, is back in full swing. Under new leadership, this year promises to be one of challenges, innovative learning and tons of fun. This year's new officers are Chris Glover, President, Mike Barnett, Vice President, Sue Lockawich, Secretary and Scott Swartz, Treasurer. Phi Chi Theta's new officers are full of enthusiasm and energy to make this the best year yet for Phi Chi Theta members.

Phi Chi Theta tries to prepare Juniata's business students for the challenges of the corporate world. One way Phi Chi Theta does this is by bringing in speakers who provide insight and first hand information on how to survive in the business world. They give tips and discuss the sacrifices needed to be corporate executives.

Mr. Glenn Christenson was Phi Chi Theta's first speaker of the year. Glenn Christenson is the Manager of Corporate Marketing for JoS. Bank Clothiers, a renowned tailor of corporate clothing. Mr. Christenson heads up JoS. Bank's National Dressing for Objectives program, and he is their chief presenter. He is also the company's resident dressing expert. Glenn Christenson holds an M.B.A from Loyola College in Baltimore, and he has extensive training in sales, sales training, marketing, product management, public relations and communications.

Mr. Christenson discussed the dos and don'ts of corporate dress, and he informed the members on how to build a corporate wardrobe. He discussed how first impressions are the lasting impressions, and your attire and your overall appearance makes the most lasting impression. His presentation was extremely informative, innovative and interesting, and he inspired many students.

Phi Chi Theta will be having a speaker every month until the end of the school year. The fraternity is also in charge of tutorial sessions and the famous Mud Volleyball. The fraternity accepts all business majors, so if you are interested in joining this exciting and challenging group contact one of the officers. We are always looking for new people and new ideas to make our group even better. Remember, the only club that offers knowledge, experience and unbridled fun: Phi Chi Theta!!!

French Food and Culture come to JC

By Pam Mertz

France was the area covered in the second exploratory program held on Monday night, September 19 in South Hall's carpeted lounge.

The French exchange students opened the program by showing examples of the way the French do not dress. They do not, for example, have bottles of wine hanging out of their pants pockets.

The French students stated that the people of France do like to drink and eat. They discussed the different types of wine and cheese. A comparison was made betweeen the differences in wine to the differences between Pepsi and Coke.

Wine is supposed to be married with the food at a meal. When eating fish in bitter sauce, white wine should be drank. When eating fish in red sauce, red wine should be drank. With dessert, champagne should be drank.

The types of cheese and what area they come from were also discussed. There are over 400 different types of cheese in France.

Meals in France are very long. This is because there are many courses. The meal can last hours.

Other topics covered at the program were the system of education in France, the life of French students, and television in France. some interesting points were that French students usually spend more than 40 hours a week in class, and they do not participate very much in sports because it is too expensive. Another difference from the U.S. is that French students have a specialized area in high school where they have only 30-40 students in a class, all with the same subjects.

In France it is possible to get 6 channels of television. One channel has to be paid for to receive it. There is not as much advertising in France, and there are no advertisements for cigarettes or alcohol, except in theaters. A comment was made that commercials in France are written well and people watch television just to see the commercials. In France, commercials are not allowed to compare two products. For example, they could not compare Coke to Pepsi in a commercial. The television shows in France are not as "puritan"as the shows in the United States.

A break was taken where tea was served and "la tarte qux pommes"-an apple-pie like pastry was eaten.

Slides of France and Paris were also shown during the program.

Host Family Program Needs Your Help

For more than 25 Juniata College students the 1988-89 academic year will not only be a time for classroom education, but also a time to experience American family life. Local families interested in sharing their friendship with a foreign student are invited to participate in the "Host Family Program."

"Our international students live and eat on campus, so the role of the host family is to provide friendship and introduce these young people to American family," according to Dr. William Vocke, director of international programs at Juniata. "This could include inviting the student into the home occasionally, including the student in family activities, or taking the student to athletic or cultural events. Normally, host families plan one activity each month with the exchange student," he said.

This year, Juniata will be hosting international exchange students from Europe, Asia and Latin America. According to Vocke, the students come from a variety of backgrounds and all are interested in learning more about American life.

Families from the Huntingdon area who are interested in participating in the "Host Family Program" may obtain more information by contacting Dr. William Vocke at 643-4310, extension 280.

Scuba Club Starts at JC Let's Join

By Steve Costalas

Last spring, I along with other interested students, decided to start a scuba club here at Juniata. The purpose of the club was mainly to provide instruction and certification for anyone interested in scuba diving. Although some members were previously certified, most were not. Over the summer, plans were made with the help of Brad Small and the athletic department, to allow instrucion to be given in the Binder Natorium (our pool!). Presently, we have 13 members in the club, 8 of whom are to receive instruction this fall.

The fall classes are presently underway and we plan to offer instruction once again this spring term. Classes will be held on either Friday evenings or Saturday mornings, when the pool is closed to the public. Prices are: $145.00 for instruction and PADI certification, plus the cost of basic equipment (mask, fins, and snorkel for around $130.00). The instruction for the course will be provided by Deep 6 Dive Center located just 10 miles south of Huntingdon, in Hesston. The instructors are Jim and Paula Beckenbaugh. They sell a wide variety of equipment with student discounts of 20% off regular prices to students only in the club, and are more than happy to serve Juniata College!

The present officers are Pam Lau, secretary; Alex Trotta, treasurer; Brent Flickinger, vice-president; and Steve Costalas, president. If anyone is interested in either information about scuba diving, getting certified, or possible trips in the spring to Florida, please let us know. Send us a note to JC Scuba Club Box 31 or call 643-2818 (ask for Steve or Brent).

Artist Series Presents The Joffrey Ballet

The Juniata College Artist Series has been set and will once again bring to the area the finest in cultural offerings. Each year the Artist Series brings to the Juniata campus top performers in the fields of music, dance, and theatre for the enrichment of Juniata students, faculty, friends and neighbors. The Joffrey II Repertory Dancers in Oller Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

For more than seventeen years, this vibrant young company made up of sixteen dancers and apprentices, each hand-picked by Robert Joffrey and Richard Englund, has been dazzling audiences by performing the great balletic traditions of the past, while commissioning new works. Wherever they go, Joffrey II electrifies the stage with their own Joffrey-brand of classical ballet.

On Octover 22, the National Opera Company will perform Mozart"s The Marriage of Figaro. Based on the classic comedy by Pierre-Augustin Caron de Beaumarchais, The Marriage is considered by George Bernard Shaw to be Mozart"s "consummate achievement".

On December 2 Troup America, Inc. invites the audience to become "guests" in the Pickwick home during Mr. Pickwick>R"s Stories for a Christmas Evening. Through the magic of his words, author-director Charles Jones has adapted four of Charles Dickens's tales, including A Christmas Carol, and has combined storytellying and traditional music of mid-nineteenth century to make this a special part of the tradition of Christmas.

As part of the Appalachian Festival I, William Mooney and David Holt will perform Banjo Red and The Blue Ghost on January 18. This Civil War musical has been referrred to as "...a fine evening of drama, liberally sprinkled with humor wrapped in the songs of the Civil War.<" You won't need to be a historian, a banjo fan or a drama lover to enjoy this show.

On January 19, David Holt will perform his one-man show, From Here to Kingdom Come, which takes you on a mountain music adventure from the Grand Ole Opry to the lost world of Kingdom Come, Kentucky. David Holt will be retracing the highlights of his seventeen yeer adventure while performing old time mountain music from the banjo and hammered dulcimer.

Leon Bates on Piano will be presented on February 5. As described in the publication Vienna Symphony, Leon Bates' performance of Rhapsody in Blue was "Brilliant, powerful, a virtuoso. He has Gershwin in his little fingers, in his spirit, and in his intellect." Appearing at Carnegie Hall and Alice Tully Hall as well as all over the world, Leon Bates on piano will be a performance you don<"t want to miss.

Appearing on February 6, along with Leon Bates, will be The Fresk String Quartet. After more than twenty years of performing together, The Fresk Quartet achieves the balance necessary to produce a superb ensemble with its own distinct personality. Their reception from audiences and critics alike has placed them in the top ranks among all quartets performing today.

As part of the Appalachian Festival II, the Roadside Theater will perform Red Fox/Second Hanging on March 17. This narrative drama by Don Baker and Dudley Cocke is based on true events which took place at hte turn of the century in the logging, mining and moonshine country of the isolated Virginia-Kentucky borders. Red Fox/Second Hanging is a brilliant piece of art created out of Appalachian memories of history.

The Altoona Symphony, Allegheny Chorale, and Juniata Chorale Union will present Ode to Joy - Beethhoven's Ninth on April 30.

Show time for each performace is 8:15 p.m. in Juniata College's Oller Auditorium.

Each year, the Artist Series offers a varied selection of entertainment including mlusic, dance, and theater. It is designed to provide cultural and aesthetic opportunities to both the campus and the community.

Membership giving levels include Friend membership, which includes one reserved season ticket, for a contribution of $60; Patron membership, which includes two reserved season tickets, for $150; and Benefactor membership, which includes four reserved season tickets, for $250. Contributors will be invited to attend a series of "Meet the Artists" reception and will also be recognized in each Artist Series Program.

Tickets may be ordred through the mail by writing to : Artist Series, Juniata College, Huntingdon, PA 16652 or calling 643-4310, ext. 330. Checks should be made payable to Juniata College.

JC's proud to welcome Professor Yoshie Itagaki.

Juniata Welcomes the "Frosh Profs"

Juniata College added seventeen new members tc its faculty for the 1988-89 academic year.

The new faculty members include Douglas E. Bakenhus, visiting instructor in music; Peter Beasecker, part-time visiting professor of art; William E. Duey, assistant professor of business; Yoshie Itagaki, visiting instructor in Japanese; Judith N. Katz, visiting assistant professor of English; Martin D. Lammon, visiting instructor of English; Katharine MacCornack, assistant professor of French; Walt K. Michaluk, visiting instructor in mathematics and computer science; I. David Reingold associate profes-sor of chemistry; Christine Richter, visiting instructor in German; James N. Roney, associate profes-sor of Russian; Joseph P. Senft, visiting professor in biology; Beatrice Vidal, visiting instructor in French; and Zhang Biao, visiting instructor in Chinese.

Mr. Bakenhus comes to Juniata from Bandera, Texas where he served as band director/music instructor at the high school level. He holds a M.M. degree in conducting from East Texas State University and is D.M.A. candidate in bassoon performance from the University of Michigan.

Mr. Bakenhus has performed with the Flint Symphony, the Adrian (Texas) Symphony Orchestra, and the Laredo Symphony. In addition to the bassoon, Bakenhus plays clarinet, saxophone, horn, violin and cello.

Mr. Beasecker holds master of fine arts degree from the New York State College of Ceramics at Alfred University. He has been a guest lecturer at Ohio State University, a summer instructor at the Rochester Institute of Technology, and has served residencies at Juniata and Dennison College.

Professionally, Mr. Beasecker has served as a materials consultant for the Ohio Arts Council Artist in Schools Program in Columbus, an apprentice/artist-in-residence at Moravian Pottery and Tile in Doylestown, and as a products consultant and designer for Pure and Simple Products of Glen Elen, California. Mr. Beasecker is also a member of the National Council on Education in the Ceramic Arts.

After serving the college as an assistant for internships and the Business Outreach Program, Mr. Duey moves into a full-time teaching position. He holds an MBA from the George Washington University and a M.A. in history from Shippensburg University and Indiana Central College and has teaching experience in the areas of management, leadership, ethics and professionalism.

Ms. Itagaki received her B.S. degree from Creighton University in the field of mathematics and has explored the areas of history, philosophy, chemistry, psychology, and ceramics. She plans to further her exploration of ceramics while she is in the United States.

Dr. Katz holds a Ph.D. and an M.A. in English from the Pennsylvania State University. She has served as press secretary to a U.S. congressional candidate in 1984, and as an assistant professor of English at the Pennsylvania State University's Altoona Campus.

Dr. Katz has edited the Connection, a bimonthly newsletter of the Centre County Women's Resource Center. She is an active member of the organization, most recently serving as the organization's board chairperson. Residing in the State College area, she is currently a freelance writer, editor, and newsletter editor.

Mr. Lammon, who taught at Juniata during the 1987-88 academic year as an adjunct instructor, received a M.S. degree from Ohio University where he also completed course work and exams for the Ph.D. He has taught as an adjunct lecturer/instructor at The Pennsylvania State University, the University of Connecticut, Eastern Connecticut State University, and Manchester Community College. His prose has been widely published and his poetry has appeared in such publications as Riverwind and Spoon River Quarterly.

Dr. MacCornack comes to Juniata from the University of New Hampshire where she served as a lecturer in French for the past year. She received her Ph.D. and her M.A. from Brown University where she worked as teachiing assistant. She has also served as an instructor of English at Ecole Nationale Superieure del R'Electronique et de ses Applications in Cergy, France from 1985 to 1986 and as an English assistant at Lycee Rabelais in Paris from 1984 to 1985.

Mr. Michaluk has recently completed an M.S. degree in the math/computer science from the Pennsylvania State University where he has been a teaching assistant. Prior to entering the graduate program, Michyaluk served as an assistant professor of computer science and math instructor at Keystone Junior College. Mr. Michaluk also holds an M.S. degree in physics from the University of Detroit.

Dr. Reingold received his Ph.D. from the University of Oregon in 1976 and has most recently been serving as a visiting associate professor of chemistry at Lewis and Clark College in Portland, Oregon. He has held several faculty positions at the University of Chicago, Middlebury College, and Haverford College.

Dr. Reingold has received numerous research grants, most recently a $46,000 NSF grant to study through-space interactions in organic molecules.

Ms. Richter studied at the Technical University in Berlin where she specialized in English and German literature and linguistics. She has completed additional study at Loughborough University in Great Britain. For the past year she has been working for the Education Centre in Berlin.

Professors Sneft and Carrigan-Welcome!

Coming from the University of New Hampshire where he served as an assistant professor, Dr. Roney has held academic posts at the University of Kentucky and Ohio State University, where he received his Ph.D. in Slavic literature in 1981. In addition to Russian, Roney speaks Polish and has a working knowledge of French, German, Latin, Czech, and Ancient Greek.

Dr. Roney's works have been widely published and he has been actively involved in campus and community activities in his new appointment.

A 1959 graduate of Juniata College, Dr. Senft served as an associate professor of biology at Juniata from 1972-1977. Most recently, he has been a science instructor at Germantown Academy in Fort Washington.

Dr. Senft, whose specialty is physiology (plant and animal) and biophysics, has been widely published. Among the publications in which his material has been presented are the Journal of Membrane Biology and the Journal of General Physiology.

Ms. Vidal holds a bachelor's degree in Spanish and a master's degree in English from the Sorbonne. She also received her teaching degree before coming to the United States. Ms. Vidal was an exchange student in Denver, Colorado in 1979.

Mr. Zhang comes to Juniata after teaching freshman and sophmore college English at the Dalian Foreign Language Institute. He studied English at Nanjing University and the Dalian Foreign Language Institute.

Curtain Goes up at 8:15

Indian Nights
The Saga Continues

By Michael Coleman

Friday finally arrived. As Amy prepared for her date with Lee, Sara, her roommate, asked what she had planned for the evening. "Sara, you know I'm going out with Lee tonight. He's taking me to the movie. Why? What are you up to tonight?"

"I don't know. I'll probably stay in the room tonight, unless you want it empty for later."

"No!" said Amy, shocked at what Sara had just implied. "This is our first date. I'm not going to do anything more than kiss him. At least I don't plan on it. Anyway, I don't want you to stay here alone all night. Come with us."

Sara refused at first, thinking how rude it would be, but as Amy persisted with her invitation, she finally accepted. Amy called to find out if Lee would mind, and he said he had no problems with it. Everything was set. Lee showed up to pick up his two dates, bought them dinner at the Tote, and they were off to see Dirty Dancing. As the movie progressed, Lee felt a hand gently massaging his thigh. He looked over and smiled at the culprit, Sara. Amy hadn't noticed what was going on, but throughout the movie she constantly caught him looking at Sara. She had an idea about what was going to happen, but wasn't sure until Lee walked the two to their room immediately after the movie, but then invited Sara to stick with him and go to a party with him. Amy shut the door softly as they walked off, then buried her face in the pillow. The night was restless for her. She woke up around nine o'clock Saturday morning, and seeing that her roommmate hadn't come back the night before, she was crushed. Feeling that her emotions had been abused, she went to see Jason. Lisa answered the door and observed a teary-eyed girl with her head hung low. "What's the matter honey? Come in and tell me about it." Jason wasn't there, but Amy was happy to talk to Lisa about her suffering. "I know exactly what you need," said Lisa. "You need to go shopping. I was just about to go to Altoona. Why don't we fix you up and then you can come with me." Amy was too busy feeling sorry for herself, so it took a bit of convincing, but Lisa was successful. Before long they were off on a mission to lose all their worries by way of their checkbooks.

By now, the rumors about what rod had done, stealing his best friend's girl, had spread throughout the campus. All of Joe's and Rod's friends sided with Joe. Rod was treated like a germ, not wanted around by anyone. Extremely frustrated, he headed for State College to see some of his Penn State friends. He went on his way around four o'clock that fateful Saturday afternoon. Feeling especially angry, he drove at an excessive rate, and recklessly at that. He took a sharp curve at close to 65 miles per hour, drifting towards the middle of the road. A car coming from the other direction, the one containing Lisa and a now cheered up Amy, saw the fast moving obstacle and swerved to avoid it. The car went off the road and rolled several times. Rod realized what he had done and pulled over to check on his accidental victims. He looked at the car from the side of the road and met eyes with Amy. He ran to his car and drove until he found a phone. He called an ambulance and reported the accident anonymously, and then went back on his way to Penn State. The ambulance arrived on the scene before long and rushed Lisa to the hospital, Amy riding along though relatively unhurt.

Amy walked out of the emergency room after a short examination and asked about the condition of her friend. At first she could not get any information out of the hospital officials, but eventually they leveled with her. "Mrs. Banks is in critical condition. We're trying to be optimistic, but the situation doesn't look promising." Amy found a phone and after several attempts managed to get in touch with Jason to give him the news. Jason was hysterical, but Amy was able to calm him down. He arrived at the hospital shortly after the call, but was not permitted to see his wife because of her condition. After sitting together in the waiting room, Amy convinced Jason to get something to eat in the hospital cafeteria with her. "Torturing yourself," she said, "won't make Lisa any better. When she's able to see people she'll need you to be strong." Jason agreed and the two left to find nourishment. Though the food was bland from worry, it was satisfying. They went back to check on the latest news on Lisa. When they got there, they saw her doctor walking out of the operating room. "How is she, doctor?" asked a nervous Jason.

"I'm sorry."

Dawn Williams brings new ideas to residential life

Dawn M. Williams was named assistant dean of students at Juniata College according to Dr. Robert W. Neff, president. Ms. Williams began her new position on July 1.

In her role, Ms. Williams will have responsibilities including residence life staff supervision and training, hall programming and new student orientation.

"We are very pleased to have a person like Dawn Williams in our student services area," said President Neff. "She brings a diverse set of skills to her post and we are excited about the contributions she will make to the college."

Ms. Williams is a 1985 graduate of the Bowling Green State University in Ohio. She received her master of science degree in education from Indiana University, Bloomington, in 1987. She was also the recipient of the Elizabeth A. Greenleaf Graduate Student Award.

A native of Niles, Ohio, she comes to Juniata from Kent State University in Kent, Ohio. At Kent State, she was a resident director responsible for the administration and management of a co-ed residence hall housing 250 students and the supervision of a nine-person student staff.

She was also in intern in the Kent State department of residence services from June to August 1986, when she assisted in developing and organizing resident hall director and assistant training.

Ms. Williams served in various capacities for the admissions and residence life staff at Indiana University from 1985-1987, including duties as assistant administrator for a 1,100-person student housing area during the 1986-87 school year. She also served as an instructional assistant while at Indiana.

Ms. Williams resides in Huntingdon.

New Developmental Research Assistant Named

Joan Harriger was named development research assistant at Juniata College, according to Dr. Robert W. Neff, president. Ms. Harriger began her new position on July 12.

Her duties include the development and management of a prospect research program in support of the college"s efforts to obtain financial support. She will report to the director of development and assist the senior fund raising staff.

Ms. Harriger is a 1972 graduate of Juniata, and completed study in medical technology at Altoona Hospital in 1974. She was a research technician at Hershey Medical Center before spending several years in eastern Virginia.

She began working at Haverford Community Hospital, Havertown, Pa., in 1976, and was an assistant laboratory supervisor from 1979-1981. Ms. Harriger returns to Juniata after four years as a laboratory manager at the hospital, where she was responsible for supervision and evaluation of 20 employees in addition to the cultivation and maintenance of new laboratory revenue sources.

"We are pleased to have Joan Harriger join our development team," said President Neff. "We look forward to her contributions and ideas, which will help us generate the financial resources needed to ensure that Juniata remains among our nation"s best liberal arts colleges."

Ms. Harriger has always been an active member of the Juniata alumni organization. She was a volunteer in the recently completed Century II campaign and has served as a class fund agent.

Ms Harriger, who has an avid interest in classical ballet, resides in Alexandria.

Earth faces the crisis— Greenhouse Effect

Neil Erickson

It is well known that individual initiative is the key to getting anything big done, and Bridge Publications, a West Coast publisher famous for its bestselling L. Ron hubbard books, has a unique solution for the 'greenhouse effect' and the ozone depletion crisis facing the world today.

"The idea came from reading L. Ron Hubbard's science fiction series MISSION EARTH, L. Ron Hubbard's suggests that it may be possible to produce ,spores or bacteria that would eat harmful air pollutants, the chief contributors to both the 'greenhouse effect' and ozone depletion. It's quite an ingenious idea."

Pollutants pile up in the air and from a kind of blanket creating the 'greenhouse' situation. The infrared rays pour in, but the heat cannot escape easily as the blanket gets thicker. So it gets hotter and hotter. Other pollutants, chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs), are tearing up the ozone, eating away at it. You could reverse the entire crises by creating a spore that would eat the pollutants instead, demolishing the blanket and eliminating the CFCs. This would restore the sky's natural properties.

Science fiction? Well yes it is. "That's the role of science fiction in civilization," says Welch. "As L. Ron Hubbard pointed out, ' Science fiction does NOT come after the fact of a scientific discovery or development. It is the herald of possibility. It is the plea that someone should work on the future."

Welch is currently speaking with concerned scientists to explore the new ideas for viability and implementation. As well, they are searching for avenues for research funding.

Renowned bio-chemist and microbiologist, Dr. Robert Rutman, suggests that the potentisl crisis facing human life is more serious than the AIDS threat.

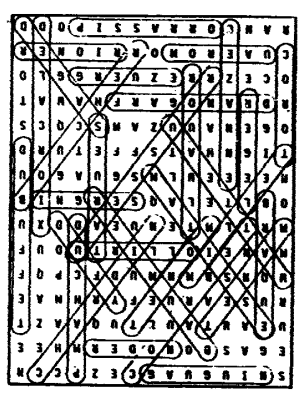
"There is $850 million for AIDS research," he points out, "and none for the ozone, 'greenhouse effect' or other serious pollution problems."

Why did Welch and Bridge Publications become involved?

"It's obviously a situation that affects everyone of us on Earth," says Welch. "Back in 1978, when the ban on aerosol cans containing CFCs was ordered, I, like many other people thought that the problem had been resolved--only to find out years later that I was pipedreaming. The spores idea definitely belongs to a future technology that will need extensive research development, but till now, there has been really nothing--no viable idea at all to handle the situation before it becomes uncontrollable."

Welch is definitely not alone in his thinking. Researchers at Utah and Michigan State Universities affirm that the use of spores is not outside the realm of possibility. They are currently working with a natural fungus whose spores detoxify DDT, the deadly chemical dioxin, and other poisons, resulting from modern industrial chemistry.

Recently, U.S. industry was also able to develop a bacteria that lives on ocean oil spills. It may not be long before an airborne pollutant-eating bacterium could be developed. The Trick is to design it so that it exclusively eats pollutants, and when done with that, eats itself, and so vanishes.



Drugs hit where it hurts — the wallet

Student drug dealers or users shouldn't be able to get federal financial aid for 10 years after they are cnvicted, the U.S. House of Representatives said last week.

In a 335-67 vote, the House approved H.R. 5210. If the U.S. Senate also approves the bill, the purging of drug dealers mand users from student aid roles will become law.

Labeled as "bad policy" by Charles Saunders of the American Council on Education, the bill would deny student aid and other federal benefits for up to 10 years for drug dealers sentenced to prison terms of a year or longer.

The billdenies student aid and other federal benefits for up to five years from anyone convicted of two drug offenses in 10 years. Students who complete a drug rehabilitation program could regain their eligibity, however.

"This amendment encourages people to get drug treatment," said co-sponsor Rep. William Hughes (D-NH). "How much is a young man or woman going to accomplish in college if they are on serious drugs?"

"Why should American taxpayers support students who in turn support a drug habit or traffic in drugs?" asked Missouri lawmaker Thomas Coleman, another supporter of the bill.

"Do the proponents of the bill mean to imply that we find even a relatively minor drug-related offense more heinous than murder, rape or other violent felonies?" replied Rep. Augustus Hawkins, noting that other kinds of criminals can qualify for student aid after serving their debt to society.

Not many students, however, actually would lose anything if the bill becomes law. Since only a few students are convicted of drug offenses each year, the idea "doesn't affect a whole lot of students," Saunders added.

Residents get involved with JC

Huntingdon-- When Elaine Fischer persuaded her husband Frank to go to the ballet 18 years ago, she didn't know if he would like it. Frank was sure he wouldn't enjoy it. Perhaps it was the vitality, beauty and artistic excellence of the talented young dancers or the melodic rhythm of the music, but to his surprise, Frank liked all of it.

"I kept wondering what I was doing at a ballet, but it turned out that I really enjoyed it," Frank said.

The Fischers, residents of Huntingdon, lived in Lancaster in the 70's. Elaine enjoyed going to Fulton Opera Theatre there. With her husband's new awareness of the arts, they both enjoyed numerous cultural events at the theater over the years. The Fischers left Lancaster and via Altoona, located themselves in Huntingdon in 1980. They returned to Altoona in 1983 where they were enthusiasts of the Altoona Artist Series. Upon their return to Huntingdon in 1986, they enjoyed programs at Juniata College.

This year the Fischers have accepted the ambitious programs endeavor of co-chairing the 1988-89 Cultural Events Campaign for Juniata College.

"These cultural events are the lifeblood of the growth of Huntingdon County. There is a great need for the Juniata College Artist Series and cultural events in our community," said the Fischers.

The Fischers believe that the cultural events program is vital for the economic growth of the community. "With such appealing programs available, it's easier to attract doctors, lawyers and other professionals to the area. Without the program there would be a void."

Frank also noted that Juniata's cultural events program is beneficial to the youth in the area. "I never knew what I was missing until I went to the ballet. This program gives young people the chance to be exposed to all varieties of culture."

Juniata has more than 60 events planned this year including nine artist series performances.

"It's unique to have something cultural in such a small community. We're very fortunate," Elaine added.

Elaine is a senior at the Pennsylvania State University, majoring in liberal arts. She is active in the Return Adult Student Organization at Penn State and recently served on the talent committee for the talent show at the Huntingdon County Fair.

Frank is regional vice president of Mellon Bank. He is actively involved in the Rotary Club, United Way, H.C.B.&I., 4-H, and Huntingdon Builders Association.

The Fischers have one daughter, Jennifer and one son, Eric.

What's hot on nation's Campuses

Campus store managers, trying to guess what the nation's students will spend some $4.5 billion on this fall, seem to expect their customers to favor especially frivolous things like condom earrings, a toy that does nothing and light-colored oversized clothes emblazoned with supergraphics.

"There's no point in stocking small or medium" sized clothing, advised Mavis Clark of the National Association of College Stores (NACS), a national trade group based in Oberlin, Ohio.

Students on scores of campuses, she added, seem to favor football-sized tops "large enough to be a nighty" this fall.

"Everyone on campus has to have" an extra-large crinkle cloth or reverse weave top at Indiana University, reported bookstore supply manager Marcelle Wilson.

Campus store managers at the University of Tulsa and Montana State University report students are buying similarly oversized crop t-shirts and boxer shorts there.

Clark noted that most schools reporting student buying trends to the NACS said clothing with stripes and bold graphics on them are selling well. Sweatpants or shorts with the school name in block letters on one leg and with the school color on the other leg have been very popular.

At Oberlin College near the NACS, Clark added, men are buying shirts and shorts in very pale, "almost nursery colors" like pink, peach or soft yellow.

No one, of course, really knows who collegians abruptly would start wearing different colors and styles, though Sue Rugg--who buys merchandise for the University of California bookstore--guesses <"Lthe oversized, non-confining clothes fit right in a "free and easy" lifestyle some students like to affect.

Rugg conjectured the colors amount to wearers saying: "We're young and we can get by with it. It looks hokey on you."

Whatever the reason, much of what students are spending their disposable money on this fall has no function at all.

Three named as Athlete of the week

The athlete of the week is a new column in The Juniatian. The selection of the Athlete (or athletes) will be based on his/her performance in the previous week's competition. Names will be suggested to The Juniatian by coaches, sports information and the Athletic Department. Since the Juniatian is laid out on Mondays and comes out on Thursday, all games in between those days are considered for the following week's paper.

Since four weeks have already passed us by, it is only fair to include three athletes who would have made this column if it was in existence at that time. Previous performances by Steve Grater (soccer), Kathleen McGowan (field hockey), and Frank Gay (football) would have earned them athlete of the week honors.

Grater, a pre-Dentistry major from Ephrata, PA, scored three goals in an early season 3-2 upset victory over Franklin & Marshall. In his next game Grater netted two goals during a 3-3 tie with Lycoming. He also scored a late second half goal to the UPJ 1-1 later in the week. Grater is the son of Thomas and Barbara Grater of Ephrata.

McGowan, a junior started on the field hockey team, has scored hat tricks in two games, two goals in another, and also has a goal game to her credit. The pre-Dentistry major led the Indians to a 5-1 record, the best start for a Juniata field hockey team in a long time. Kathleen is the daughter of John and Josephine McGowan of Bellmawr, New Jersey.

Gay, a senior Marketing major, posted 16 tackles in a recent 17-15 victory over Delaware Valley. Gay led the Indians in tackles last season and is this year's leading tackler after two games. He is the son of Frank and Joann Gay of Central Cambria.

Indians come up short against Messiah, JHU

By Deborah Doughtery

The hockey team had a hard time defending their winning season this past week. According to coach Kathi Quinn, the two losses were disappointing, but the lady Indians were playing tougher teams.

The first loss of the season was handed to JC by Messiah College. The only score of the game was put in by JoLynn Barbour. Juniata was granted a penalty corner and Joanne Thomas hit the ball out to Jill Schadler, who passed the ball to the lower left of the circle. Barbour then proceeded to knock the ball across the line for the goal. The final score was 3-1. The JV played a tough defensive game, but came up short with a 1-0 loss.

According to Quinn, Messiah was an exceptionally good team. Juniata lost to a team that was better, but still beatable.

September 25, Juniata travelled south to take on Johns Hopkins on their own turf field. Quinn noted that Johns Hopkins had a definite home field advantage with the turf surface and the Baltimore officials. The Indians played a defensive game, but couldn't keep all of the balls out of the cage. The final score was 3-1. Jill Schadler put in the only goal on a penalty corner shot. Schadler took the intitial shot on goal and followed her shot. The ball deflected off of the goalie's pads and Schadler pushed the ball in.

Overall in the season, the team is doing well according to Quinn. She said that many of the players are getting to play. She stated that the team was young and the emphasis this year was to put experience and do the best that the team could.

The team is doing well and boasts a 5-2-1 record thus far. They will defend this record Saturday when they take on Carnegie-Mellon. Come on out and cheer the team on to another victory.

Contest Rules

The Pigskin Prophets are tough and they challenge the college community to try and beat their picks. All you have to do is circle one team for each game from the chart or write in your winners on a post card. Send to Mike Antennucci PO Box 7 or drop it off at The Juniatian (slide it under the door) before Saturday 12:00 noon. Every Thursday the person who picks the most games right will be listed in the paper. If the top winner beats one of our top forecasters, that person will win a medium pizza from OIP. Don't forget to guess the score of the indicated tie breaker game (as indicated by the asterisk) in case of a tie.

Soccer Action

By Kristyn Huey

On Wednesday, September 21, the soccer team faced the nationally ranked Meshiah College team. Messiah socred three goals in the first half, while JC scored none. The team played tough during the second half allowing Messiah no more goals and scoring one. The team lost 1-3.

On Saturday, September 24, the soccer team matched up in a non-conference game against York College. Senior, Drew Spector scored within the first five minutes of the game. The team held off York until the second half. Some questionable officiating brought the team two yellow cards and thier spirits down. York scored to tie the game. After the first of two 10 minute overtime periods York was ahead and it stayed that way through the second period. The soccer team now has a record of 1-5-2. On Wednesday the team travels to face Dickinson College.

Juniata's Joanne Thomas, one of the three seniors on the field hockey team, during JC's first set back this season; a 3-1 loss to Messiah.

When it comes to sports: The Greek Speaks

Now that the Olymics have become professional sports, and Divison I college sports are more corrupt than Ed Meese, it seems like the only pure sports are to be found in Division III.

Its disheartening to see Carl Lewis pullup to the Olympic stadium in his limo, and to see Chris Evert in the Olympics after she has won millions of dollars on the pro tennis circuit. Sure, there are still a few who carry on the Olympic tradition like swimmers Janet Evans and Matt Biondi, but the majority of athletes accept some type of monetary award. For instance, Florence Griffith Joyner will take nothing less than 25,000 dollars for a single speaking engagement.

The athletes can't be blamed for taking the money; if the money is there, why not take it? Furthermore, if they didn't take the money, many wouldn't have the funds to compete with athletes whose respective nations pay for their training. Regardless of whether taking the money is right or wrong, the Olympics just aren't the same when big bucks are involved.

Similarly, college athletics have been taken over by the almighty dollar. Texas A&M's football program has been the latest culprit in the illegal recruiting wars. There is so much pressure to win that coaches will do anything to obtain a blue clipper, including paying him. Even with all the stupid laws the NCAA has passed they stil can't control the high finance of big time college sports.

Division II Sports are relatively free from recruiting problems, but academics aren't of great interest. If you can play, you can stay. Granted, everyone in Division III isn't Academic All-American material, but you can be sure there are a good number of student-starters on the fields and courts.

Division III isn't all books and brains, however. Its full of great athletes. Many are skeptical when it comes to college football on a small college level, but I"d challenge anyone to find a better game than the one I saw in Annville this Saturday between Juniata and Lebanon Valley. Those athletes were on the field because they wanted to be, not for the money. No one who was there is going to be in the NFL, but still they played like it was their last game. Of course, the game was more exciting than Coach Ash would have liked but from a fan's standpoint it was great.

If its amateur sports you're looking for, I can guarantee you that's what you'll get in Division III. If you're sick of the Olympics and don't want to see the corrupt world of big time college sports, Widener at Juniata would be a good bet on Saturday.

Indians hang on to beat LVC Widener next stop on MAC ladder

By Mike Antennucci

It wasn't exactly pretty, but it still goes down as a win. The 38-34 victory over Lebanon Valley was Juniata's second in a row and second in the Middle Atlantic Conference; the Indians are now in a three way tie for first place.

Lebanon Valley scored during their first possession of the game on a 38 yard run by Ken Wilson. The Lebanon Valley lead was short lived, however, as Juniata's Dennis DeRenzo scored five minutes later to even the score at seven.

The Indians Mike Cottle caught his first of three thouchdown passes with 2:27 left to play in the first quarter. The touchdown, aided by John O'Neill's extra point, put the Indians ahead 14-7, a lead they would never relinquish.

Juniata continued to hammer away at the Flying Dutchmen in the second quarter while running off a string of 31 unanswered points. An O'Neill 37 yard field goal-the longest kick in the sophmore's short career at Juniata-opened the second period scoring.

DeRenzo scampered for another TD run and Cottle caught his second score of the day. At the half Junata was in complete control, 31-7. The Cottle touchdown was set up when co-captian Tim Kirsh intercepted a Rob Rief pass deep in LVC territory. Four plays later Cubby Davis found Cottle for six.

What took place after halftime can be remembered by the Indians as The Nightmare in Annville. The Dutchman rallied to within 10 points in the third quarter and again came back after the Indians extended their lead back to 17. With 9:59 remaining in the game Juniata was out of cruise control and into a 38-34 war with the heavy underdog.

LVC scored on its first six possessions of the second half (5 touchdowns and a field goal), while the Indians only managed one score. Mike Cottle's third TD reception turned out to be the margin between victory and defeat for Juniata.

The Dutchmen scored on a 33 yard touchdown reception on a Rob Reif to Ken Wilson pass. After an onside kick Charles Schwartz broke through the middle of the JC line for 23 yards and another LVC score. The Dutchmen closed the gap to 31-21 before Cottle's 3 yard pass from Davis put the Indians back in front by 17, 38-21.

Brad Rinehimer closed out the third quarter scoring with a 37 yard field goal pulling LVC within two touchdowns. A DeRenzo fumble set up the next LVC score, a Schwartz 1 yard plunge. The six play 27 yard drive left the Dutchmen seven points short with 11:16 left to play.

Juniata dodged a LVC touchdown threat after a Cubby Davis screen pass was intercepted on his own 17 yard line. However, the Dutchmen did get three points on a Rinehimer field goal of 21 yards closing Juniata's lead to 38-34.

Once again the Indian offense stalled and LVC took over on their own 41 yard line with seven minutes left in the game. Tim Kirsh's second interception of the day halted the drive. After another Juniata punt the Indians smothered the Duthcmen on fourth and three from Juniata's 23 yard line.

Taking over with 1:57 left the Indians ran five plays before having to punt with :37 seconds remaining. LVC's next play resulted in a Todd Rossman interception and a Juniata 38-34 victory.

Nuch's Notes:

Mike Cottle's 12 receptions for 158 yards and three touchdowns earned him MAC offensive player of the week... Cubby Davis was 23 for 33 for 284 yards, was intercepted twice and sacked twice... Dennis DeRenzo was the leading rusher, carrying the ball 26 times for 114 yards, making him the first back at Juniata to rush for back to back 100 yard games since Greg Townsend did it in 1985. John O'Neill connected on all of his extra points and kicked one field goal.

The Juniata offense compiled 25 first downs... on 77 plays gained 425 for a 5.5 yard per play average. LVC had 15 first downs for 322 yard on 75 plays. The Indians fumbled the ball five times and lost it four times. John Spahr punted 5 times with a 34.4 yard average. Time of possission was practically even with JC controlling the ball for 30:24 to LVC's 29:31. The Indians were 6 of 14 on third down conversions, LVC was 5 of 20.

Frank Gay led the team in tackles for the second week in a row with 15 (7 solos). Steve Campbell was second with 9 tackles, Jerry Look had 8. Bryan Womer had 3 pass breakups, and Tim Kirsh had 2 pass breakups plus an interception.

This weekend the Indians play host to Widener University during Parents' Weekend 1988.The 18th meeting between the Pioneers and the Indians will be a key game in deciding the MAC Champion for 1988.

Widener leads the series 13-4 and won last year's game 27-16. The Indians won 24-9 in 1986 and 17-15 in 1985. Rob Ash is 2-5 against Widener teams during his coaching tenure at Juniata.

Widener head coach Bill Manlove has a 20 year career record of 157-41. He has the top winning percentage of any Division III coach and is second among active coaches in all divisions, behind Joe Paterno. His 150th career win came against Juniata last year.

Last week Widener lost to nationally-ranked Moravion 19-12. The Indians travel to Bethlehem October 8th to face the Greyhounds, the Pioneers will trael to Lycoming.

Parents and students enjoy the football game this past Saturday in the beautiful sunshine. The new stadium looks good!

Is there a teacher shortage? Report says no—experts say yes

There may not be a teacher shortage after all, a report released last week claimed

Few other education observers--school district officials, campus deans of education or students who are teaching majors -- said they believed the report, however.<P

But, based on a survey of 75 school districts and more than 1,000 education majors looking for jobs, the Washington, D.C.-based National Center for Education Information (NCEI), found a waiting list for many of the teaching jobs available this year.

"There is no teacher shortage," concluded NCEI president C. Emily Feistritzer.

Various surveys have forecast dire shortages of teachers in elementary, junior high and high schools, and even worse shortages of college teachers.

Few other than NCEI believe the situation is changing.

NCEI's forecasts were "more robust' than the data suggested, said Jewell Gould, the American Federation of Teachers" research director.

"NCEI ignored reports from the Labor Department that 35-to-40 percent of the teaching force will be eligible for retirement by the end of the century," Gould charged. "And half of those who start teaching now will drop out of the profession in five years."

"She ignored the children who can't get into special education programs or who may lose the programs they have because the district can't find special ed teachers or therapists," Gould said.

Math and science teachers also are badly needed, said Gould.

NCEI is a "reverse Chicken Little" in the eyes of Marilyn Rogers of the National Education Association (NEA). "They are alone in saying ' no shortage.'"

"To meet the need for teachers, about 25 percent of all the students in college are needed in teacher education, currently we have only 8 percent."

Rogers cited a NEA survey of 191 school districts that found teacher shortages in several disciplines. Of the surveyed districts, 45 percent had a shortage of teacher applicants.

School districts faced with shortages use "warm body techniques" to fill vacancies, Rogers said. They award emergency teaching certificates, assign teachers to courses outside their certification area, use teacer aides and increase class sizes.

Another method is to eliminate course offerings.

"If there is no chemistry teacher, the district doesn't offer the course. There's no vacancy that way, but the kids are shortchanged," Rogers said.

Rogers joined Gould in questioning NCEI's methods.

"She used people who responded to (NCEI's job bank) ads, people who don't have a teaching job. How representative of the teaching profession are they?"

At the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education, which reported that education programs in the 14 western states will not produce enough teachers to meet the needs of the region through the 1990s, Charles Lenth had kinder words for the NCEI study.

Parents' weekend is a time for the students' parents to experience how their children live at college. The parents are invited to attend classes, meals, and special events with their kids throughout the weekend. I must commend the Parents' Weekend Commmittee for the fine job that they did. Tell me seriously, though, does the college give a true impression to the parents of what the school is really like when only the students are present?

One week before "The Big Event", I watched the Blue Army give the entire campus a royal cleaning. Windows were washed and floors were polished. All of the grass ws mowed at the same time and light bulbs which had been burned out since who knows when were replaced. Good grief, they even cleaned the chandeliers in the dining hall an ' put REAL salt and pepper shakers on the tables.

Yes, even the food changed. I know all of the parents had left by Sunday evening when I went to get my salad and the lettuce was brown. While the parents were here, we had a wonderful salad bar and great main dishes. It all disappeared Sunday evening, though.

I don't mean to knock Juniata because I am very happy here. I was quite disappointed, however, to see the big production which was put on for the parents. The school should be happy with the way it presents itself every day to the students and there really is no need for them to "gussy up" the school for the parents. My parents don't mind seeing how I really live.

Parent's Weekend was a real success, but I feel that many parents may have been slightly disillusioned. The kids are here already; we don't need to sell the school again.

From the Pen of. . .

By John E. Deppen

This is my third year at Juniata College, and if one thing has become obvious to me, it is the fact that reality does not often touch us here. We live in an isolated world where all our material needs are met and our greatest worries are studying for exams and planning our weekend activities. If we want a dose of reality, we have to import it in the form of a guest lecturer or read about it in a newspaper.

A few days ago I came across a devastating piece of reality in an article in USA Today. On Sunday, September 25th, transit authorities in Washington, D.C. installed permanent barriers to keep homeless people from sleeping in subway entrances after the trains stop at night. Said Mitch Snyder of the Community for Creative Non-Violence, "It's absolutely revolting...to drive a fair number of people away from those cracks and corners where they found a little bit of warmth."

How can the United States hold its head up in the world when actions such as this occur? It is tragic enough that in this land of plenty, there are thousands of homeless people on our streets on any given night. What sort of madness are we perpetrating when we start to deny these people a source of shelter? When the homeless shelters are overflowing and there is nowhere left to turn, where are these people supposed to sleep?

I know it is almost impossible for us to understand the plight of the homeless, especially since food and shelter are things we do not have to worry about. That does not mean, however, that we have no responsibilities as far as our dispossessed brothers and sisters are concerned. Yes, we can donate food and money to our favorite charities, but that is not enough. We must speak out against oppression of the homeless, and we must speak out in favor of a compassionate and sensible policy that will ensure that every American has a decent place to lay their head at night.

It may be that my fellow students do not feel threatened by the specter of homelessness since the world in which they live (the world of Juniata College) provides them with everything they need. If they would take a look at one statistic, however, they might change their minds. The fastest growing group among the homeless are children under eighteen. My friends, with life being as unpredictable as it is, if we don't start caring now, if we don't start providing long term solutions to a problem that we currently slap band-aids on, it could be our children who will be on the streets with no place to go.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

This article is in response to the article in last week's Juniatian concerning the use of the Indian as Juniata's mascot. There is no way that Juniata College is degrading native Americans by using the term Indians as its nickname, if anything, we are honoring the first people on this continent.

To see how ridiculous a claim it is to say we shouldn't use Indians because we are being racists, let's think about these teams:

-Pittsburgh Steelers-I guess we're making fun of steel workers, so ban this name.

-New Orleans Saints-How about those with certain religious beliefs, ban this name also.

New England Patriots-All those people who fought for our country in the Revolutionary War are being discriminated against here, so ban this name.

How about the Philadelphia Eagles? Aren't we making fun of an endangered species? We'd better get rid of that name, too, and don't forget the Chicago Bears, Cincinnati Bengals, Miami Dolphins, Pitt Panthers, Penn State Nittany Lions, or any other of the hundreds of pro, college, and high school teams with animal nicknames. The Human Society might frown on the use of those names, claiming they pick on poor, defenseless animals. Get real, I guess that means every athlete team in the world should be called the no-names, then we won't offend anyone.

Dear Editors

Congratulations to the staff of the Juniatian on the 12 page issue of this past week!

More importantly, I congratulate the staff for the breadth of coverage in the September 22 and September 29 issues of the Juniatian. You covered not only sports and social events but also provided vignettes of new faculty and the international dimension of the campus. I found both issues of the newspaper encompassing a much larger arena of news reporting. Perhaps you might wish to look at including student and faculty research projects as well.

Thanks for initiatives that you have taken in this year.

Robert W. Neff

Shame! Shame! Shame! How obvious it is that Juniata needs to stress foreign language awareness and understanding in its new emphasis on International Studies! This need is made even more obvious in the September 29, 1988 edition of "The Juniatian," in the photograph of Zhang Biao, Chinese male, who is identified as Yoshie Itagaki, Japanese female.

Please bear with us, Zhang and Yoshie. Juniata may yet join the international movement in understanding the words of John Donne:

No man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main. If a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe is the less, as well as if a promontory were, as well as if a manor of thy friend's or of thine own were. Any man's death dimishes me, because I am involved in mankind; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee.

THE DAY AFTER: WHAT YOUR MUSCLES ARE SORE ABOUT

You did something that you probably wish you hadn't. You played a pick-up game of volleyball or finally began that running or aerobics program you promised yourself you would do.

Whatever it was, you did too much too soon. Now it is the day after, and you've got an athletic hangover. Your muscles ache and brushing your teeth is a major accomplishment. Nobody really knows where it hurts. According to J. W. Yates, an exercise physiologist at the University of Louisville, even trained athletes aren't exempt from muscular agony, especially if they are trying something new.

Since muscle soreness usually doesn't show up until a day or two later, physiologists have been exercising their brains to come up with an explanation. The most popular theory is that when you over do it, you make microscopic rips in your muscles. Over the next day the damaged tissue becomes swollen and sore--a different kind of breakdown caused by grueling endurance. It also appears that the soreness comes from only one half of an exercise. In most activities your muscles alternate between getting longer and getting shorter-a continual expansion and contraction. Scientist believe that it's the lengthening phase that seems to do the most damage. That means you get sore from the "lying back down" part of a situp or lowering the barbell during a bench press.

Luckily, the damaged muscles usually heal themselves within a few days. You can't really make them heal faster, but there are a few things you can do to make them feel better while you wait. A heating pad, a warm bath or soaks, or a whirlpool will temporarily ease the pain. By increasing the blood flow, heat mey help wash out the debris from the tiny muscle tears, which decreases the swelling. Creams and balms simply stimulate the nerves in your skin and make it feel hot; it's a sensory illusion that won't really do anything for sore muscles.

Another way to increase the blood flow to your muscles is to get back out on the road for a light workout. After a few days, you can start pushing a little harder. Don't go too fast; you can get plenty of gain in your muscles without having to feel pain the day after.

After a lunchroom discussion about the quality of social life on this campus, I began to think about what goes into making a "good time." While at college, I, like many others, denounced my school for its lack of social life. In an effort to get to the root of this seemingly widespread depravation I offer some of my reflections.

The change in the alcohol policy can easily be blamed for a lack of weekend excitement, and it is true that the change has caused a distirbance in our social life. Lack of appealing programming is another frequent cry. Though many work hard at providing a wide variety of good experiences, new and creative ideas can always be used. But, I refuse to believe that our community has become so dependent on alcohol that we can't have fun without it. Likewise, the entertainment opportunities are available and certainly there is enough creativity among us to enjoy all that is offered and then some.

As I thought about some of my best times, one thought continued to surface; it's not what I did but the people I did it with. Certainly a good party could easily have been a drag if my friends hadn't been there to share it. And a boring night in could have been a blast with the right people.

Perhaps, I have concluded, part of the problem is misplaced energy. If we focus our energy on best enjoying the people with whom we share our lives, our campus will once again be a place of great excitement. As a residence director I enjoy life in the halls; they buzz with life all week long. Practical jokes, shared styudy breaks, intimate sharing, weighty discussions all add to the rich life which we enjoy, but when weekends come people tend to silence this life in search of 'something to do.'

I offer no answers of what you can do this weekend. I do, however, ask that you recognize that fun is often sparked by people not events.

Chorale Union begins rehearsals

Rehearsals will begin for the 1988-89 season of the Juniata College Choral Union on October 3 at 7:00 pm in the Ellis College Center Ballroom. According to Dr. Joseph W. Figg, assistant professor of music and director of the group, no auditions are necessary, and all interested persons are cordially invited to participate.

The Choral Union is an organization dedicated to the performance of quality major choral works. The Union is open to all members of the Juniata faculty, student body, and the communities surrounding the college campus.

"This year promises to be one of the most exciting yet," according to Figg. The group will perform two of the greatest masterpieces of all time. On December 12, the Choral Union, accompanied by the Juniata College-Community Orchestra, will perform The Christmas Story, by Heinrich Schultz, the great German composer of the Baroque Era. On April 29-30, the Union will join with the Allegheny Chorale and the Altoona Symphony for two performances of the Ninth (choral) symphony of Beethoven.

For more information, please contact Dr. Joseph Figg at 643-4310, ext. 471.

Parents' Weekend is a success

By Becky Abraham

Now that Parents' weekend is over, i'd like to take this opportunity to give credit where credit is due. The weekend would not have been as successful as it was without the gard work of my committee. Special thanks go to the subcommittee chairs: Julie Dodson, Jeff Mrz - Registration; Amy Piatt - coffeehouse; Alina Bridenbaugh, Michelle Scott - Artist-on-the-Hill; Hannah bouni, Sandy Corliss Jenny Serfass - Tailgate picnic; Courtney Macek, Stacy Wessel - Post-game reception; Beth Angerole, Heidi Loych - Publicity. You all did such a great job! Thanks also to the people who pitched in and helped when we needed it: Joyce Anatone, Joelle Beecher, Rush Blady, Mike Buchheit, Sharon Cladman, Jackie Calaborjias, Kris Carenza, Amy Carter, Kim Conner, Peggy Dixon, Melinda Donawick, Doug Heary, Jen Howells, Grant Hunter, Christina Huth, Ji Ji Kuge, Sharon Neargoof, Donna Parfitt, Mike Schmuff, Jeff Schneider, Jen Searer, Tina Smith, Nadine Vreeland, Amy Weaver, and Jenny Serfass's parents.

I'd also like to thank John Gerrity,Jeff Dietrich, and the food service staff for their help and cooperation; Jerry Harrington and the crew who were stuck in oller all day Saturday setting up for the ballet; Linda Price and Lisa Baer; Amy Ludwig, who made the beautiful painting in Baker's window, and last but not least, Bill Huston, for all his encouragement and support.

"Her findings may be accurate today, but what about the future?" Lenth asked.

Today is a problem in some places.

At the University of Nebraska-Omaha, a student to instructor ratio of 35-1 in the business school last week prompted Chancellor Del Weber to ask the state legislature for help in hiring 15 new faculty members.

"We're going to be in jeoprady with our accreditation unless we bring that (ratio) down," said Weber.

Business school faculty members taught an average of 709 credit hours in 1987-88 to keep up with expanding enrollment, one-third more hours than those taught by their colleagues in the College of Education.

Students in the overcrowded school have trouble registering for business courses because classes close quickly.

Texas A&M and the California State University system have reported faculty shortages in recent years.

Hey now students, don't forget to register and vote. You can obtain an absentee ballot up to 30 days before the election from your local government. So do it now! Have a grateful day. A message from the Junior Class

Student Wellness and Health Care - Join SHAC

By TRISH KAZMERSKI

The Student Health Advisory Committee, also known as SHAC, is a vital organization responding to the medical needs of the Juniata community. SHAC is composed of students in the allied health fields and those interested in working with the Juniata College Health Center staff. They are involved in the programming and policy of Student Wellness and Health Care Promotion on campus.

Reflecting a desire to promote good health and prevent sickness and injury, SHAC, along with the Health Center, provides many useful services, many of which are free, for all full-time students, resident or non-resident.

Their main service is the establishment of the "Wellness Room." This is a wellness resource center located in the Health Center suite, on the first floor of Lesher Hall. The room provides a wealth of informational health and wellness pamphlets and articles, self-examination devices such as thermometers, blood pressure measurement, scales, a jogging ramp, and a cassette player for listening to health-related tapes.

Their second major service is the establishment of an annual Wellness Day. This is a day when all members of the Juniata staff, students, and employees are free to utilize the services of local businesses and health facilities. Services always include cholesterol screening, height and weight measurement, blood testing, and many other responsible for maintaining good health.

SHAC is also responsible for many of the health-related lectures on campus. Last year they sponsored several educational programs dealing with AIDS. Concluding the lectures was a talk by Dr. David Schooley, Medical Director of the South Central District of PA Department of Health, who discussed maintaining their service to keep an effective relationship with health professionals and agencies and to make the college community as disease free as possible.

SHAC also sponsors PTOPS, Person to Person Support. This is for individuals who have a problem such as an eating disorder, or who wish to start an exercise and fitness routine. If you have a health related problem of any kind, the members of SHAC will start a support group for you. Many people have done this in the past, and it has a very high success rate.

Other services of SHAC are a fruit-cup sale at all home football games, and the maintenance of the juice machine at Kennedy.

SHAC is advised by Mrs. Jane Brown, RN. Co-chairpersons Doug Spotts and Rich Weyman. The vice chairperson is Annette Oberdorf. Secretaries are Heloi Stark and Nicole Hudak, while Julie Thaler serves as treasurer. Anyone wishing to join is welcomed and can do so by stopping in the Health Room during regular business hours.

GUTENABEND DEUTSCHLAND— Germany comes to Juniata

By Ferris and Lisa Dempsey

The International students of West Germany displayed a lively insight into the geograpy, history, politics and educational systems of their country on Monday, June 26th in South's carpeted lounge. As those who attended the highly entertaining evening have discovered, West Germany is not all sauerkraut, leather pants, yodelling, and women who look like they came off the label of a bottle of 'St. Pauli Girl'.

As the Germans would say, "Zur Sache" (to the meat of the subject): Beer. Many of you will be surprised to find out that in West Germany the legal drinking age is sixteen years old. Imagine being a "legal" veteran of alcohol consumption by the time you reach twenty-one. According to our German exchange students of Muenster and Maborg University, a typical day in the life of a party-animal (cough,cough) excuse me, student goes something like this:

Wake up at 11:00 am with at least five or six hours of sleep under your belt. Naturally you are hungover, but you still make your way to the cafe and check out the poor-fools who actually do make it to class. Hang out with your friends for a few hours until it is time to eat. Then at 6:00pm it is about the right hour to go out for the evening. When the 'kniepe' closes at about 1:00am, the discoteques are just filling and you can dance until about five or six in the morning!

Now, onto the dry but academically beneficial and socially redeeming topics (i.e. they have nothing to do with beer.)

Looking into education we were told that in Germany, higher education is government funded. However, the students are either partially or totally financed and they must repay their loans after a period of five or six years. In Germany, many students commute to the University on bicycles as most educational establishments tend to be situated in large population centers. The average age of a student entering University is about 19 or 20 years old.

For all of the geography, illiterate Juniatian readers, Germany is located in ...Europe. Germany is about 1/20 the size of the U.S.A. (about the size of Oregon). It is divided into ten states and has a population of about 60 million. Like America, Germany has its minority populations. There are about 3 million Turks and southern Europeans who reside in West Germany.

The various aspects of West Germany were seen and tasted on Monday evening. Several cakes and pastries were enjoyed by all. There was in fact a case of beer, of course, purely for display purposes only. (Okay, Chris, Leigh, Annette, and Terry).

There were several slide shows throughout the evening introducing many of us for the first time to several regions throughout the country. I cannot pass by the display without commending the expertly executed visual presentations by the German nationals.

Muenster and Marborg are the two towns with which Juniata has exchange programs. If anyone is interested in discovering anything further about Germany or the exchange programs, feel free to contact the members of the International club. Until then, "Aufweidersen."

Bravo to The Joffrey II for a superb performance

By Lynn Merritt

Simply BREATHTAKING!! The dancers were so totally immersed in the music that you could feel the emotion of the music in their moves. The vitality of the dancers brought the music alive for the audience. The moves were precise; the performance energetic. The choreography accented and highlighted the mood and tempo of the music, and the dancers executed the moves well. The dancers moved across the stage with such grace and precision. The Joffrey II Dancers dazzled the audience and electrified the stage with their own brand and style of classical ballet.

The sixteen dancers and apprentices, ranging in age from 16 to 22, are hand-picked by Richard Englund, director of the company, and they come from all parts of the United States. These extremely talented young performers are recruited from a variety of settings: Joffrey II master classes in tour cities; regional ballet festivals; the Joffrey Workshop held each summer, or by personal recommendations from dance professionals. Most Joffrey II dancers perform with Joffrey II for approximately two years. At season's end, in any given year, five to six dancers from Joffrey II will move up to the main company. Currently, 75% of the Joffrey Ballet members are Joffrey II alumni.

My favorite was Visitations, an extremely romantic piece. Philip Gardner stole this scene with his dramatic portrayal of a love torn young man. He cut through his moves with such precision that the audience could feel his anguish and his pain. Gardner's flamboyant green costume accented his physical strength. He performed the difficult leaps and jumps with such beauty and charm that they seemed effortless. The other dancers (Mara Wilkins, Adirana Jacinto, Amanda Smith, and Nicole Duffy) in the scene accentuated Gardner. Their flesh-toned costumes insured that Gardner would be the audience's main focus. Philip Gardner's performance spanned classical elegance and dramatic intensity, and he brought a great deal of freshness and vitality to the overall performance In one word, this performance was dazzling.

The Joffrey II Dancers are truly a delight to watch. They exhibit such grace and charm, that their every move titilated the audience's imagination. Each piece was so different and interesting. The youthfulness of the dancers showed through with their spontaneity and effervescence. This performance was much, much more than execution of prepared steps; it was deep, imaginative expression in every sense of the words. The dancers became the music, and that was quite evident in their performance. The Joffrey II Dancers are a stunning group of young performers. Their performance was simply superb. Hats off, rightly go to the Juniata College Artist Series for bringing this most talented dance troupe!!

Those of you who did not attend the Joffrey II ballet performance did yourself a great disservice. I strongly urge you to attend future performances in the Artist Series. The Artist Series offers a wonderful opportunity to see artistic performances at an extremely low price. By attending these functions you will be well on your way to becoming a more culturally enriched individual. The next Artist Series performance is Mozart:The Marriage of Figaro, on Saturday, October 22. See you there!!

Stargazers come to Juniata

Area residents in having a closer encounter with the planet Mars than would be possible with the naked eye are encouraged to join other stargazers at Juniata College's Paul E. Hickes Observatory on Wednesday evenings beginning at 9:00 pm.

The observatory, located behind the Brumbaugh Science Center, will be open and staffed on clear evenings. For the first time in two years, the sun, earth, and Mars are aligned, allowing for some spectacular viewing of the Martian planet. Saturn may also be viewed at this time along the fall constellations.

The observatory features a five inch Brashear refractor telescope, which was mounted last spring. There is also an eight inch Schmidt-Cassegrain telescope which has the capabilty of being mounted outside the observatory.

The observatory will remain open as long as there is continued interest on any given Wednesday evening. The public is encouraged to visit the observatory to witness nature's magnificence in all its splendor. There is no charge for the experience.

Nieto speaks at the Modern Historians Conf.

Juniata College professor Jose C. Nieto will deliver a paper at the Sixteenth Century Conference of Modern Historians in St. Louis, Missouri on October 28, 1988.

A crowd of more than 1,000 historians is expected to attend the three day conference at the Mariott in St. Louis.

Nieto will read a paper on the poem of St. John of the Cross, "Dark Night." This 16th century Spanish mystic interpeted his own poem, says Nieto, as a poetic expression of mystical love between Christ and the soul. This is also the way in which it always has been interpreted by scholars. Nieto's paper, by analysis of the poetic structure and themes of the poem in light of Renaissance poetry, and using a critical analytical comparitive literary approach, sees this poem as an expression of human love beween female and male; the female being the main character of the poem. Nieto's paper is entitled: "St. John of the Cross, Poets of Profane Love", creating thus a more complex interpetation of both poet and poem rather than the religious one until now accepted.

His new book, expected to be published next year deals in depth with studies in comparative literature regarding this topic.

Dr. Nieto holds the Mary S. Lieger Chair of Religion and History.

College costs continue to go up, up and away

Students nationwide were granted or borrowed $24.5 billion to go to college last year, a record for the decade.

The College Board, in a report issued last week, said there were 45 percent more aid dollars available to students in 1987-88 than in 1980-81.

Unfortunately, student costs rose much faster during the same period, the report -- called "Trends in Student Aid: 1980 to 1988"-- noted.

Students at two-year public colleges last year paid 60 percent more for their classes than their predecessors of 1980. Private college students' costs rose 103 percent during the same period.

The federal government supplied about 75 percent of the aid dollars students used in 1987-88. Colleges themselves contributed 19 percent, while states kicked in six percent of the total.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

By Rush Blady

I woke up this morning and was desperately, desperately depressed to find that it wasn't Mountain Day. This depression was resultant from a misunderstanding between myself, some study habits, and a very tough History of the Language exam lurking out there in Monday's chilly dawn with "my name on it", as it were. As I grappled in mortal combat with this test, I cursed Mountain Day withmy rapidly-failing breath, accusing it of deliberately lulling me into a false sense of security so that it might enjoy a bloodbath, of being inleague with the people who prepare GSATS, etc.,etc.,etc. Mountain Day, like some people I know, gets a strangely sadistic pleasure out of watching the unprepared go down in a butchery of mind-numbing exam questions.

Traditions have a funny effect on life at JC. Parents's weekend, for example, forces you to clean up your room. I once found vital notes and textbooks which had been missing since the second week of the term during a frantic cleaning on P-Day minus 1. It also gives you the chance to share with your Parents food which, you hope, will make them decide to take you out to eat. This usually works, and helps avoid the embarrasment of "showin' off the folks" before an appreciative crowd of friends twice in one day. And you thought nothing good could come of parents cornering you in your natural habitat.

The reverse of this is also true. Fall Break give us the opportunity to go home and miss college really bad. Schoolsick? Ditto with Easter, plus you get to go to church extra times. (Sorry God.) Christmas break gets you a little money from relatives whom you've always promised you'll "save it for college", and Spring Break lets you wonder just where the hell all that money went in two months.

Getting a little shakier, what's been happining to Storming lately? I think we had about 50 guys taped up my freshman year before the big Arch-fest. Admittedly we had some taped up after the charge too, in the hospital, but who dares shirk from such traditions? LEGENDS are made of this stuff! Ask not what your college can do for you... And what will we do if there is truth to the rumor that the Homecoming Parade will be done sans-floats this year? I needed that thing to ride on so I could sleep off my preplanned hangover. And how will Cloister stick out, if everyone else has to walk too, and show how cheap they are? Hey folks, somewhere I think the ol' college tradition is getting shafted. Only Madrigal Dinner, All Class Night, and Mud Volleyball have survived relatively unscathed.

Of course, Mountain Day can be a joy and a surprise if treated carefully. But that ruins all the fun. I just hope that its worth is recognized and recorded, so that upon its' noble death it may be remembered along with that other late great of Juniatism, Raft Regatta. And lets not forget the greatest tradition of them all to go bust: weekends. The last half may have gone down with the raft but the last beer went legal this year. Oh well, life must go on.

STUDENTS SPEAK OUT

Do you think what they did to Ben Johnson was Fair? Compiled by Lance Marshall.

DOUG SPOTTS, SENIOR, EAST

Yea, I think it's fair. I'd like to see them compete fairly on an equal basis.

SHAWHAN FOX, JUNIOR, SHERWOOD

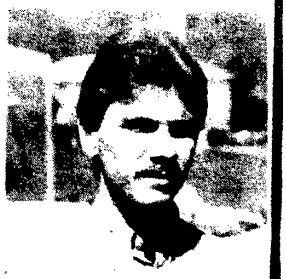
I think it was fair because he had millions of dollars in endorsements on the race, so in a sense he cheated. He probably could have won without the steroids. This is similar to Lawrence Taylor of the New York Giants.

TATYANNA SCHUM, FRESH., SHERWOOD

Yea, I think it's perfectly fair, especially in the Olympics. Steroids should be more controlled, and they should even be tested after they win.

ROB LANDS, FRESH., NORTH

Yes, it was fair. He knew the rules. If he can't win on his own, he shouldn't try winning with drugs.



ADAM KEVRA, FRESH. CLOISTER

I do consider it fair. It has been in the rules for a long time. As for the loss of endorsements that's up to the sponsors. If he breached his contract, it's his loss.

The Rolling Who?

By Vic Huber

When you think of the greatest disappointments in sports history, what comes to mind? The 1978 Red Sox, the 1972 Olympic Basketball loss to the Soviets, Ben Johnson's steroid use in 1988? None of these can match the disappointment of the 1987 Rolling Rondos which was arguably the greatest disappointment in recent sports history. The failure of the Rolling Rondos, World Champions in 1986, to repeat as Juniata College intramural champions in 1987 was indeed a huge shock. The big question now is, can the Rondos roll again?

It started a few years ago as a dream, a dream to be the best softball team in the world. They had everything: speed, power, pitching and the knowledge of captain coach general manager Ronald T. Hersh,Getter Known as Rondo. How could they go wrong? The answer was they couldn't. Led by Hersh, the 1986 team rolled over every opponent, including an impressive win over the women's Varsity Softball team, on their way to an undefeated championship season.

Everyone thought the Rondos would repeat easily in 1987, but an injury riddled season brought great disappointment to the followers of the Rondos. After an opening season loss, the Rondos fought back only to lose the championship game as three injured starters watched from the bench.

The 1988 Rondos have made an early bid to match their 1986 performance. This past Sunday, Hersh flirted with perfection as he led his Rolling Rondos to a 10-0 victory over the South Rebels. For four and one-third innings Hersh threw perfect ball, allowing no one to reach base, until a flyball dropped in front of centerfielder Nick Spedes. The game lasted only five innings as Spedes made up for his blunder in the bottom of the fifth inning. He hit his third home run of the season to put the ten-run rule into effect.

The Rodos are now two and zero on the young season as they look for a repeat of the 1986 season, calling the signals for pitcher Hersh are catcher Amedeo Cianci and Eddie "Wacko" Havder. The infield consists of Kurt Wenrich, George Zanic, Jim Tomassetti and Dave Reed. While the outfield is roamed by Kevin Neff, Scott Close, Vic Huber, Nick Spedes and Jim Harry Hahn.

Let's hope these players can live up to the great tradition started by such legendary Rondos as Tom Kelly, Steve Mecker and Frank Brimer.

Spikers lose in semis to Cortland State

The Juniata women's volleyball team hosted the nine team Indian Invitational this weekend. The Indians made it into the semi-finals but fell short to Cortland State.

In the first round of pool play Juniata defeated Western Maryland 15-12, 15-5 and Baldwin Wallace College 15-4,15-9. Advancing into the second round of pool play against Susquehanna and West Chester, the Indians continued to win matches in straight games by defeating Susquehanna 15-4, 15-13 and West Chester 15-8, 15-5.

Juniata advanced into the semis with Cortland State, Ohio Northern, and Muskingum. Juniata, after leading two games to one, dropped a five game match to Cortland 15-7, 13-15, 15-2, 10-15, and 9-15. Ohio Northern outlasted Corland State in the finals to win the tounament.

Indians blank CMU, record now at 7-2

by Deborah Dougherty

The 1988 Juniata College Hockey Team is rewriting the record books. Thus far in the season, the squad has tied or broken several school records. The team has 33 goals on the season so far, breaking the old record of 23 set in 1976. The team has also scored in the past nine games, breaking the record for the most consecutive games scored in, set in 1975 with a total of 8 games. Tied records have been for consecutive shutouts at two and most shutouts at five. Kathleen McGowan tied the twelve-year-old record of individual goals in a season, which is eleven.

The Hockey Team set Franklin and Marshall back in line when they broke the oldest hockey record held. The win marked the first time in thirteen meetings between the two teams that Juniata has come out the victors. Juniata came up with a 1-0 score against the Presidents, the only goal being put in by Jennifer Dippery.

The JV also won their match against F&M. Hillary Mitchell, Stephanie Moyer, and Rence Rine were the scorers for the Indians. Moyer's goal was assisted by Rine.

Coach Kathi Quinn said that the game was very important and crucial to win. This game marked the end of a two-game losing streak for the team and counted as an MAC Southwest Conference win. The latter will keep alive the chances for the hockey team entering the playoffs.

The second consecutive shutout for the Lady Indians was against Carnegie Mellon University. According to Quinn, the team looked sharp. The CMU goalie had many outstanding saves, which kept the score within reason. The Juniata goalies did not see much action. The final outcome was 8-0. Scorers for JC were Kathleen McGowan and Joanne Thomas, with two goals each. Renee Rine, Stephanie Moyer, Suzanne McMannus, and Linda Olsen each added one goal to the Indian drive. Jill Schadler had two assists for the day and McGowan, Rine, and Heather Weiss each tallied for one assist.

The next home game for the hockey squad is October 13 against Gettysburg College. Come on out and cheer the record-breaking team onto another victory.

X—C team beats Lock Haven

By Lance Marshall

George Benzell runs the race of his life as the running Indians win their first race of the year. The win came over Parents' Weekend against Division II Lock Haven by a score of 24-31. Juniata ran very well and has never beat Lock Haven before. The top five finishers for Juniata were in order George Benzel, Andy Laomre, Vince Mortar, Jeff Bossart, and Jeff Mosman.

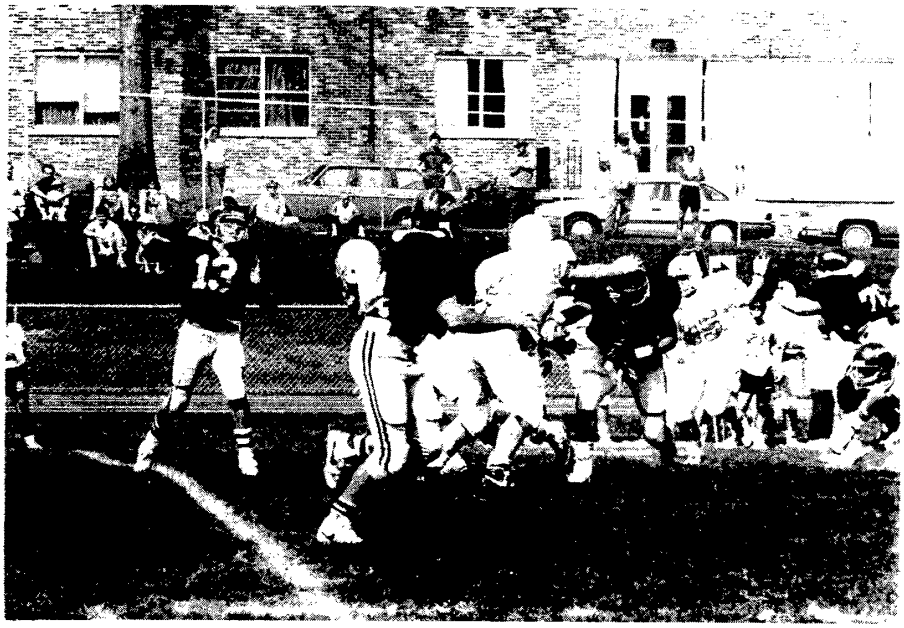
George's efforts in this race can't be told of enough. Not only did he lead Juniata by winning the race he, but almost died doing it. George's lead coming into the stadium was 2:40 over the next closest racer. However it took him 2 minutes to complete the final 200 yards within the stadium, for George had become completely dehydrated and was running with a 106.5 fever. George Benzel, upon completing the race immediately collapsed and was taken to a nearby hospital for treatment. Fortunately, he was released the next day and should be able to run this Saturday at the Dickinson Invitational.

This is a remarkable young team we have here at Juniata. The coach is getting so much out of them it is ridiculous. On the team, we have only two kids who ran x-country in high school, an they have already defeated a Division II school. We look for a bright future ahead, guys.

50 signed

The United Nations charter was signed in San Francisco on June 26, 1945 by 50 nations.

Junior Bob Kelly takes possession of the ball during soccer action this past weekend with Kings.



Cubby Davis looks towards Dennis DeRenzo on a screen pass. The two connected for a 76 yard score in the 2nd half but it was not enough to beat Widener.

Indians fall to Widener

Moravian a must win

By Mike Antenucci

The big play is a very familiar term on College Hill when one thinks about Juniata football. The Indians always potent offense is known for turning in a couple of these plays on game day and this weekend was no exception. However, Widener University managed to turn out a few big plays of their own, therefore capturing the victory over Juniata 29-19.

The Middle Atlantic Conference early season showdown saw Widener in a must-win situation to keep alive their title hopes. After Moravian mauled Wilkes and Lycoming trounced Lebanon Valley, the Indians find themseles in a tie for second place with Widener. Juniata will be in the same shoes Widener was in this past weekend when Coach Rob Ash leads his troops into Bethlehem to take on the nationally ranked Greyhounds of Moravian.

After a scoreless first period, Juniata broke the ice seconds into the next quarter when Don Betar connected with Mike Cottle on a reverse option pass of 19 yards. John O'Niell kicked the PAT for the Indians, capping off the only score of the half.

Five minutes into the second half, the Pioneers marched 64 yards on five plays, giving the Indians a taste of their own medicine, scoring on a 20-yard halfback option pass from Alan Robison to Dan Santhouse. The PAT marked the score at 7-7 with 10:01 remaining in the third period. The Indians recaptured the lead minutes later when Keith Watson broke his own school record kicking a 50-yard field goal. Watson's previous long of 49 yards was set at Widener two years ago in a rain storm.

Juniata stopped Widener on their next possession on three straight plays. After the punt, Cubby Davis found Don Betar 49 yards downfield giving the Indians first and goal on the Pioneer seven yard line. The Indians couldn't punch the ball in the endzone and had to settle for a 24-yard John O'Niell field goal. This gave the Indians a 13-7 lead with 3:21 in left to play in the third.

To start the fourth quarter, Widener had great field possession with a first and ten at midfield. Three plays later, Dan Stoffere connected with Joe Sweeley from 24 yards out to tie the score at 13-13. With the extra point conversion, Widener took their first lead of the day 14-13 with 13:53 remaining to play.

The Indians would strike back within a miniute's time. Two plays after the kickoff, Dennia DeRenzo caught a screen pass from Davis, then ran 72 yards for the score. DeRenzo's nifty running put the Indians out front 19-14. Juniata's attempt at a two-point conversion failed and the Indians lead stood at five points with just under 13 minutes left in the game.

On their next possession, the Indians were forced to punt from their own endzone. An interference penalty against the Indians during a fair catch call brought the ball to the Juniata 30-yard line. Five plays later, Stoffere found Mike Downs in the endzone for a 24-yard score. The Pioneers hooked up with the same connection, Downs from Stoffere, to add a two point conversion and raise the lead to 22-19 in their favor.

Juniata couldn't muster anything on their next possession and were forced to punt once again. Two big passing plays resulted in the next Widener score. A 34-yard pass to Downs brought the ball into Juniata territory and a 25-yard pass to Jeff Hoover put the ball into the endzone as the pioneers aerial attack notched its fourth touchdown of the day. After the PAT the Pioneers led 29-19 with 5:14 left to play.

The Indians marched down to the Widener 25 but a Davis pass on first and ten was intercepted, sealing the victory for Widener.

Nuch's notes-The Juniata offense managed 21 first downs, 14 via the air, but outscored by Widener in that category by one as the Pioneers picked up 22 first downs. The Indians rushed the ball 33 times but only netted 45 yards, to Widener's 32 rushes for 93 yards. Both teams had potent aerial attacks. Cubby Davis was 24 for 44 throwing for 335 yards and one touchdown. He was intercepted twice and sacked three times. His favorite target was Mike Cottle who had 10 grabs for 121 yards and a touchdown. Dennis DeRenzo was second with 9 receptions for 113 yards and a touchdown. For Widener, two quarterbacks and a halfback pass equaled a 20 for 38 passing attack which compiled 332 yards and four touchdowns.

The Indians were penalized six times for 40 yards, punted seven times for an average of 33.7 yards a punt, and controlled the clock for 34:19 to Widener's 25:41. Juniata was only 6 of 21 on third down conversions, the Pioneers were 4 of 13. John O'Niell was one for two and Keith Watson 1 for 1 on field goal attempts. Bill Hesketh returned five kickoffs for 94 yards.

Frank Gay led the way on defense with 10 tackles, giving him 51.5 total tackles this season. Brian Hall and Steve Campbell combined for JC's two sacks, while Byran Worner and Todd Rossman registered the two Juniata Interceptions.

This week the Indians will meet Moravian for the 34th time since the series began in 1932. Juniata leads the series 19-13-1, but is 1-4 against Moravian under Coach Ash. The lone Indian win came in 1986 by a one point margin 14-13. Last season the Greyhounds held off a late Indian rally to win 27-14. Juniata is 8-7 in games played in Bethlehem.

Last week Moravian pounded conference foe Wilkes College 44-6. The Greyhounds rushed for 344 yards and had a season high six interceptions. Senior Defensive Back John Patrignani had three giving him eight on the season. In other games of interest this wek, undefeated Lycoming will visit Widener.

As usual— The Greek speaks

By George Zanic

No one asked me, but:

You've probably seen Juniata's football team raise their hands and put up four fingers at the conclusion of the third quarter, telling the opposition "we're going to win it in the fourth." Juniata has been outscored 45 to 12 in the fourth quarter this year.

Every NFL season, the Juniata students from Pittsburgh and Philadelphia argue about who is better, the Steelers or the Eagles. You know what?--they both stink!

When American boxer Ray Jones lost the Olympic gold to the Korean boxer Park Si-Hun, after seemingly defeating him by a huge margin, the American showed a great deal of class. It was probably the greatest disappointment of his life, and he stood on the medal platform and graciously accepted his silver medal. It must have been a difficult task to stand there when he knew he had just destroyed the man receiving the gold medal.

Maybe Jones should have started a riot like the Koreans do when they lose a bout.

Rich Bloom, Rob Ash's look alike, has led the Juniata Junior Varsity to a two and zero record in his first shot in the coaching ranks.

The Olympics have done more to promote hatred than goodwill. I think the Koreans have surpassed the Soviets as the most hated nation by American sports fans.

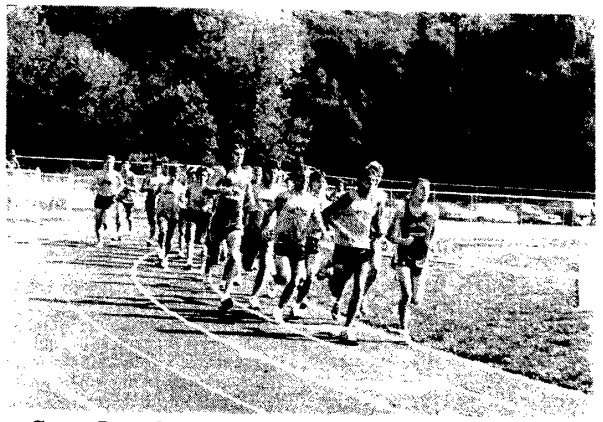
Heisman Trophy Candidate Major Harris will lead undefeated West Virginia over Georgia in the Sugar Bowl on January 2, 1989.

Green Bay and Tampa Bay played this past Sunday in the "Battle of the Bays." If it is was played in front of East Houses I would have shut my drapes.

The next thing you know, they're going to tell us Spuds McKenzie is on Steroids!

When Juniata defeats Moravian this Saturday, there will be a log jam atop the best Division III conference in the nation, the MAC.

With a little patience and consistency, Larry Bock's 1988 squad could be his best ever.



George Bentzel, our Athlete of the Week, leads the pack in the start of Saturday's cross country meet.

Athlete of the week

George Bentzel has been selected as The Juniatians Athlete of the Week for his performance this past weekend in the cross country meet with Lock Haven University. Bentzel was the first to cross the finish line with a time of 31:21 over the 5.2 mile course.

The sophomore from West Chester, PA was on pace to setting a new course record before the heat took over. Overexertion caused Bentzel to collapse at the finish line, but not before he won the race and sparked Juniata to victory.

The 1987 graduate of Henderson High School is the son of Joe and Pat Bentzel. George is a Pre-med major and made dean's list last spring.

Soccer Action

By Kristyn Huey

On Wednesday, September 28, the soccer team faced Dickinson College and lost 5-0.

On Saturday, October 1, they face Kings College and were beaten 3-0. With 5 minutes left in the first half Kings scored. After the half JC seemed to be playing better with two attempts on goal. The momentum declined, however, as two yellow cards were presented. Kings scored twice in the second half to bring the score to 3-0. The soccer team now has an overall record of 1-6-2 and a conference record of 0-4-1. The team hosts Wilkes College on Wednesday and St. Francis College on Saturday.

Juniata readies for "That's Entertainment"

By Anne-Marie Dinwoodie and Donna Spencer

Homecoming is just around the corner! This year's theme is "That's Entertainment." Spirit Week begins on Wed., Oct. 19, and will continue through Sun., Oct. 23.

The classes will compete in three events this year: the lip sync, skits and the floatless floats. The lip sync competition will be held at 5:30 p.m. on Oct. 19 and 20 and at 5:00 p.m. on Oct. 21. Seniors and freshmen will compete on the 19th, sophomores and juniors on the 20th. The winners of each night will compete on the 21st.

The skits will be performed on the 21st at the pep rally, which begins after the volleyball game. Also during the pep rally, the nominees for Homecoming Court and their escorts will be presented, along with the coaches and captains of all fall varsity sports.

Any of Juniata's clubs or RHA's are invited to participate in the floatless float competion along with the classes. The competion will be part of the annual parade, which starts at 11 a.m. on Oct. 22, winds through the streets of Huntingdon, and ends in front of Ellis Hall. The floatless floats involve; banners, costumes, and anything else pertaining to the weekend's theme.

The annual coffeehouse is sponsored by the Campus Ministry board. It is a showcase for campus talent; everyone is encouraged to participate in and/or attend! The coffeehouse takes place in Totem Inn on Oct. 21 at 10 p.m., following the pep rally.

The newest feature of Juniata's Homecoming Weekend is the First Annual 5-Mile Run on Sat., Oct. 22 at 9 a.m. Anyone from the surrounding area is welcome to run; students, faculty, and administration of Juniata run free. The run starts and finishes on Juniata's new track.

The halftime activities include a special dedication ceremony for the new track and stadium, a performance by Juniata's band, and the recognition of the 1988 Homecoming Court. The nominees are: Amy Cotton, Christine Fryzlewicz, Courtney Macek, Jennifer Serfass (freshmen); Anne-Marie Dinwoodie, Kathy Hoover, Kathie Snow, Donna Spencer (sophomores); Susan London, Jennifer Searer, Kristin Shepardson, Susan Smith (juniors); Rebecca Abraham, Joelle Beecher, Jennifer Howells, Stephanie Lantz, Dana Worthington(seniors).

The weekend concludes with a dance and reception featuring "The Big Band Sound" at 10 p.m. on Oct. 22 in Ellis Ballroom. The annual Alumni Soccer Game is at 10:30 a.m. on Oct. 23.

We want to thank the members of the Homecoming Committee for their hard work and effort and to wish the sports teams, the classes and the nominees the best of luck during the Homecoming Weekend.

ROOM DECORATING CONTEST!!!

1. Contact your RA/RD for an application.
2. Applications must be returned to RA/RD by Oct. 19, 88.
3. Hall points awarded to the Res. Hall with most applications
4. Prizes: A. $25 best room each hall. B. $50 best freshman room on campus. C. $50 best room on campus.

Alcohol Prevention Week

Wednesday, October 19, 1988
"Why Me? Why Not?"

John O' Connell is a successful State College entrepreneur. Among his many ventures he has owned the "Rathskeller," the most popular college hangout at Penn State. John is also a recovering alcoholic, now studying rehabilitation counseling and willing to share the spellbinding story of his flight with alcohol. John currently works with all scholarship student-athletes at Penn State.

7:00pm - Alumni Hall

Thursday, October 20, 1988
"The Dangers of Driving Drunk"

Chief Dan Varner of the Huntingdon Police Department will address the legal issues of driving under the influence and the effects of a small amount of alcohol in the bloodstream.

7:00pm - Sherwood Carpeted Lounge
"Eddy Talks"

A video tape produced by BACCHUS depicting a college student, Eddy Thompson, who is the life of the party, the class clown, the funny guy. The problem is that Eddy is abusing alcohol.

7:00pm - Cloister Ranch
"The Rehabilitation Process for Chemically Dependent Persons"

Rob Olinits, Treatment Coordinator at New Beginnings, Cove Forge Chemical Dependency Treatment Program, Williamsburg, PA, will present an overview of what a drug and alcohol rehabilitation program is all about, with particular emphasis on the college-age population.

7:00pm--East Houses
"Employee Assistance Program"

Teresa Welch-Coudriet, Outpatient Drug and Alcohol Specialist at J.C. Blair Hospital, Huntingdon, will discuss EAP, which is a cost-effective, risk-reduction system which allows organizations of any size help employees with alcohol/drug-related or other problems to be restored to a productive life. EAPs are expanding rapidly in the 1980s and are sanctioned by both management and unions.

7:00pm--South Carpeted Lounge.

$ available for new programs

The International Education Advisory Committee has a small International Educational Fund available. This fund has been provided by the Administrative Group as a way of stimulating the internationalization of the campus. The committee will gladly receive requests from groups on campus to further your goal:

-groups inviting students back from abroad or international students to speak to them. We could help with the refreshments.
-movies
-internationally-related trips
-departmental internationally-related activities
-coffee houses
-etc.

In other words, be creative and let's try to get maximum impact on the campus from the International Education Fund. Please submit your requests to Buff Vocke in the International Programs Office. The deadline for requests for this semester is October 14. Second semester requests will be due by February 1st. If you want to insure use of the fund, the earlier the request is received, the better. We are not necessarily reserving funds for the second semester

Editorial

When's Mountain Day? I think I'm just about sick and tired of hearing that phrase, as is my roommate and Co-Chairperson of the Mt. Day committee. For some reason everyone thinks Mt. Day should have been last week. Where is it written (in stone or otherwise) that Mt. Day has to be during the first week of October? There is not a "set date" and there never will be! There are a couple of possible dates as I understand it, but there is not a date that Mt. Day has to be on.

The whole concept of Mt. Day is to give the students, staff, and administration a day off to enjoy the outdoors, and have it be a SUPRISE!! That means no one is to know when Mt. Day is until that very day! Sure it<"s fun to guess, in fact it seems to be more of a contest every year. In fact my apartment has two Sheetz dogs and $10,00 of Monopoly money riding on the date. (And I<"m still in the running!)

Well now the student body is getting irate and very nasty! You sure couldn't pay me enough to be Chairperson of this committee! People are out for blood when Mt. Day doesn' arrive on the "Day It Should"! Hang in there Jean, it's almost over and then you'll have friends again. By the way, the committee has nothing to do with picking the date, they just plan the events for the day. President Neff, I commend you for putting up with all the complaining. I know I'll be very grateful for the day off, regardless of when it is! Everyone else, be happy we still have this tradition and it hasn't gone the way of Raft Regatta and other such traditions. I know you all are upset it wasn't last week, but will the fact that it wasn't have that great an impact on your life? I doubt it.

If Mountain Day has come and gone, I'm sure it was a great time. Thanks committee for a wonderful day. If it has't arrived yet I know I'll have a good time playing football, eating, and spending time with my friends. Isn't that what it's all about?

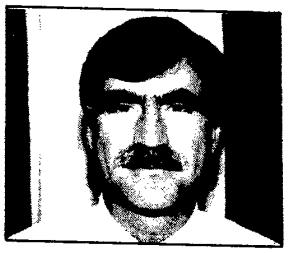
Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan



(A note from Counselor's Corner: This is the second in a series of articles about violence and date rape on college campuses. Available in the Counseling Center is an excellent tape on the subject and all students are encouraged to check it out as a possible educational program for your club or organization. Students wishing to use it for a course project or class presentation are more than welcome to do so).

Why does date rape occur? As we discussed in the last article, mixed messages can be one of many reasons. Misinterpretation of sexual intentions and expectations can increase the potential for acquaintance rape to take place. Many males report that certain non-verbal behaviors such as provocative dress and suggestive mannerisms often times communicate a "YES" message when in fact that is not the message intended by the female.

Other possible reasons for the occurance of date rape have their underpinnings in psychological and sociological theories as to the way men and women are "supposed" to act. Men have traditioinally been the aggressors and the competitors by nature while women have learned through the socialization process to be passive and accepting. In many cases, for some men in our society violence has been seen as an acceptable way to deal with the issues. As a result, many males resort to force as a normal way to getting what they want.

Psychologist and sociologists are quick to remind us that people generally treat others the way that they themselves were treated. More specifically, a significant relationship has been established between having experienced violence at an early age and then engaging in violent behavior as an adult. This theory on learned violence can go a long way in contributing to date or acquaintance rape.

There are obviously many additional explanations as to why rape occurs, but let's move on to how to come to grips with it.

Educating, or should we say "re-educating", individuals is certainly an excellent way to begin. Consider the following:

* Women have the right to dress as they choose;
* Being treated with respect at all times is the absolute right of everyone;
* Saying NO doesn't mean YES;
* Rejection of the traditional view that women are passive and accepting;
* Re-evaluation of violence as an acceptable means of getting what one wants.

Enjoy you mid-semester break and be good to yourself. Take time to tell those close to you just how you feel.

From the Pen of. . .

By John Deppen

By the year 2000, almost all the survivors of the Holocaust will be gone. There will be no witnesses left, no one remaining who experienced the indescribable agony of the worst period in human history. There is obvious sadness in this fact, but there is something else inherent in this unavoidable reality: extreme danger.

There is a school of thought that says the Holocaust never happened. This is shocking and infuriating to most of us, but there is a number of misguided scholars who subscribe to this idea. Austin J. App, former associate professor of English at LaSalle College, Philadelphia, has written "The Six Million Swindle: blackmailing the German people for hard Marks with fabricated corpses." Northwestern Professor Arthur Butz has called the Holocaust "the hoax of the century" and has written a book with that title. If these writers and their works remained obscure and unnoticed, they could be ignored. They are not obscure, however. A copy of Professor Butz' book can be found in our own Beeghly Library.

Who is going to speak up for the memories of the victims when all the witnesses are gone? Who is going to stand up against the ignorant among us who say that Anne Frank's The Diary of a Young Girl is a forgery and that the chimneys at Auschwitz were the chimneys of bakeries? Who is going to, in the words of survivor Elie Wiesel, "protest agianst the indecent attempts to kill the vicitms again?"

On Wednesday, October 5th, President Reagan laid the cornerstone for the Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington D.C. I believe that it is everyone's responsibility to ensure that when the last witness is gone, there will be a monument to the victims and the survivors which is impervious to the outrageous attempts to desecrate their memories. We must not fail in this effort, for if we allow ignorance to prevail, we will be betraying the millions who died. The day we forget about the Holocaust, or even worse, believe that it never happened, will be the day heaven weeps.

Dear Editor:

I am writing in support of the recent editorial concerning the Juniata College Indian mascot. I feel that the racist implications of such a mascot should be realized. As students of a reputable, liberal arts college, it is our responsibility to address social issues. Regardless of its relative importance, we should take this opportunity to utilize our collective powers and to uphold the Church of the Brethren ideals upon which this college was founded.

Could this possibly be the much needed catalyst to turn our campus's apathy into empathy?

Ferris reviews Vivid by Living Colour— Great Dane Music

By Ferris

Ok, People. No one has yet to let the Juniatian or me know what "Hot Wax" actually means. I'll make my plea again; Please! Tell me, or at least suggest a new name that has something to do with music. I thank whoever sent me the "Burning Space-Carrots from Record Hell" idea, but it just doesn't capture the spirt of the article. On to the meat of this weeks gibberish.

The Meat: I asked a few people what they thought of the band Living Colour after they heard their music. "They probably look like Bon Jovi. They have permed long blonde hair, leather pants, hairy chests and wear leopard-skin vests" (An actual response). Then I showed them the album cover. "Oh my God", "Oh my goodness", and "I don't fin' believe it" were the usual responses.

Most people still find it hard to believe that such high-quality hard rock could come from a band which doesn't fit the above description. Despite obvious examples to the contrary, Chuck Berry and Robert Cray, we tend to perceive the guitar as a white man's instrument - his musical emminent domain. Blacks in the music world are typecast into things like playing sax for Bruce Springsteen and Sting, rapping, being lost without a beatbox, singing soul and dancing around a stage in perfect time. The reason we have developed these ideas, is that the record companies and media have been pushing them on us for two decades. Radio stations and club owners fell into the trap and would rarely promote black musicians who didn't fit into their "assigned" musical roles. This was NOT cool.

Enter Vernon Reid. A few years back he founded the Black Rock Coalition (BRC). The BRC helps to promote rock musicians who - by fate of birth - happen to be black. Shortly thereafter he hooked up with three other musicians and formed Living Colour. And Living Colour has come out with their first album, Vivid. And Vivid is well worth your while. It was mostly produced by Ed Stasium (who did the Talking Heads and Ramones) but Mick Jagger gets due credit for producing two songs. Listening to the album, I got the feeling that these guys could play Van Halen's "Panama" blindfolded and it would still sound incredible. Singer Cory Glover is a man to be watched (or a voice to be heard): he's got a range of styles which goes from Sammy Hagar to Terence Trent D'Arby. The formidable guitar comes from Vernon Reid himself, and is consistently excellent. The music styles on Vivid are borrowed from Jazz, funk, and Classic Rock, the last being the strongest influence. If your're looking for soulful romantic ballads, I'm afraid this album may not be for you. But, if you're looking for something else, something to get you dancing, jamming to air instruments of your choice, and otherwise moving your body, here are some recommendations from the album:

"Cult of Personality" - possibly the best tune on the album. Kicks major ass.

"Open Letter (To a Landlord)" - social commentary song #1. Deals with life in the housing projects, without being preachy. Cool song.

"Broken Hearts" - comes the closest to being the albums slow song, 'Slowest' sung would be the best description. Jagger plays harmonica on it. Great to dance to.

"Glamour Boys" - One produced by Jagger. Clypso meets 3-chord guitar riffs. Fun and QUITE danceable.

In the last song ("Which Way to America?"), Vernon Reid and Living Colour ask, "Where is my picket fence? My long tall glass of lemonade? Where is my VCR, my stereo, my T.V. show?" If they keep putting out albums of similar quality to Vivid, I don't think they'll be needing to ask such questions anymore.

Next time at bat: "World Music" and stuff like that.

Spanish evening — Food, wine and fun!

By Pam Donachy

Another interesting evening was had by all those that attended the Spanish evening in South's carpeted lounge on Monday, October 3rd.

The evening was put together by only three people: Gemma Romani, Sophie Sorenson, and Holly Moreels. They did very well to make the evening a success.

Gemma started off the evening by talking about the different languages spoken in Spain-it's not just Spanish, there are lots of different dialects. We were then told a short history of Spain and how their education system works. Life at the University is much more casual-Gemma had not done an assignment until she came to Juniata! It is also very cheap.

They then spoke of a typical day which make many of us, I'm sure, wish we lived in Spain. During the week-end they wake up about midday, lunch at 3-4pm (which is the big meal of the day), have dinner at 10-11pm, and then the fun starts! They go out to a bar, then a pub, and then a nightclub, and then...a beach party! But Gemma assured us that she still finds time to work. The drinking age is 16 years. Are we living in the wrong country?

They then told us about the Spanish political system. Elections take place every four years and a socialist government has been in power for the last eight years. Students are not so politically active as they used to be when there was a dictatorship.

They then talked about the many festivities they have during the year and explained that Christmas is very different in Spain: they don't have a Santa Claus, but the three Wise Men and the 'Big Day' is January 6th. On New Year's Eve they have a tradition where at midnight, with each tick of the clock, one eats a grape and it is supposed to give you good luck. So remember for this year!!

We were then treated to a slide show and were given Barcelona 92 Olympic stickers to keep.

The evening finished with Sangria (yes, Sangria you should have come it was lovely) and some typical Spanish food, which was absolutely delicious. It certainly was a very enjoyable evening and do you know where I want to go for my vacation next year? Yes, Spain!

Rugby River Rats receive first bid to ARV

The Juniata River Rugby Club went to Pittsburgh this past weekend to play in the Allegheny Rugby Union Tournament. The winners of the tournament represent the Union in national collegiate and mens club championships. The Rats faced I.U.P. in the first round and lost 10-8 in the final seconds of the game. However, the club came back to beat Dunkirk, N.Y. Mens Club 16-7 in the consolation game.

The rugby rats from Juniata River came out strong against I.U.P. and took a 4-0 lead on a try by Steve DuMars. After I.U.P. leveled the score with a try of their own, Mike Grill took a super pass from Charlie Courtney and took it 70 yards to give the Rats an 8-4 lead. The Juniata River scrum was pushing I.U.P. pack around the field and it looked like an upset was in the making at halftime.

When play resumed in the second half both teams moved up and down the field, but could not put together a score until I.U.P. scored with a minute and half remaining. Their conversion kick hit the cross bar and skipped over giving I.U.P. a 10-8 victory.

In the consolation game the Rats overcame a 7-4 halftime deficit to win 16-7. Strong play from Mike Buchheit, Jeff Schneider,and Erick Lewis in the rucks and mauls provided excellent support for the Juniata backline. Mike Grill, John Colbert, and John Swanson scored tries and Tim Garvin kicked 2 out of three conversions. The victory concluded a very successful day for the club after receiving their first bid to the ARU Tournament. The Rats play at home on Homecoming against Carnegie Mellon and Penn State in a roundrobin tournament.

Program Director

The new Power 92
has been designed by you.
From our survey last year
We found what you wanted to hear.
Now it's the fall
and Power 92 must survey faculty and all;
We want your criticisms good and bad
So that we can be the best JC has had.
When you see a staff member at dinner or lunch,
go over and talk to them a whole bunch;
You see, it's important for us to know;
what you feel about our shows.
So get involved with the fall survey from Power 92, because it's really just for you!

Indians win Classic

The women's volleyball team captured their first tournament of the season by winning the 12 team Juniata Coca-Cola Classic this past weekend. The Indians managed to win 12 straight games in five matches and placed three out of the seven players chosen on the All-Tournament team.

For Head Coach Larry Bock the tournament brought him his 400th career coaching victory. His overall record now stand at 401-81 over 12 seasons. The Indians record this season now stands at 20-4. They played Tuesday against Messiah and will travel this weekend to the Eastern Connecticut Tournament.

The Indians easily advanced in pool play defeating Greensboro College of North Carolina 15-2, 15-6, the University of Rochester 15-7, 15-6 and Penn State-Behrend campus 15-1, 15-11. Juniata was the top seed in the semi-finals and rightfully so as they swept undefeated Eastern Mennonite in three games 15-5, 15-4, 15-3.

In the finals Juniata played Rochester again. The second time around was no different from the first as the Tribe cruised to a 15-6, 15-4, and 15-9 tournament victory. Jackie Rebert, Melinda Selby and Kris Witchey were all named to the all tournament team. Bridgewater of Virginia won the consolation bracket while Westminster College finished sixth.

Cottle named A.O.W.

This week's Juniatian Athlete of the Week is awarded to senior Mike Cottle. For the third week Cottle had a 10 plus reception game, breaking a school record in that category.

On the season Cottle has 38 grabs for 7.6 average receptions a game. In the course of his career Cottle has 183 receptions which is the best in the school's history as is his 31 touchdown reception total. He has 2,274 receiving yards which puts him in the second position 436 yards behind Dave Murphy. Cottle is sixth on the All-Purpose list with 2,395 yards, 9 yards behind Carmen DeFrancesco. He is also second in scoring with 186 points, 121 behind our own Bill Berrier.

Cottle, a business major, is the son of Donald and Bonnie Cottle of R.D. #1 Everett.

Indians edge past Moravian 20-16 —face 4-1 Lycoming next

We all know that saying "Good things come to those who wait", well this past weekend the Juniata Football team finally tasted the rewards that come with that patience. Entering the Moravian game in a do-or-die situation the Indians now find themselves more alive than ever, and ready for a showdown at Lycoming. The 20-16 thriller over the Greyhounds puts Juniata amidst a four way tie in the always competitive Middle Atlantic Conference. Lycoming, Widener, Moravian and Juniata each have one conference loss.

After tying W&J, then squeaking out wins over Del Val and Lebanon Valley and losing to Widener at home some of the Juniata faithful may have started to question whether this year's squad was as good as they were made out to be. The Moravian game proved to all that it was only a matter of time before the real Indians stood up and displayed their brand of football.

The crisp, concise passing of senior quaterback Cubby Davis matched with an all too familiar stellar performances by Mike Cottle combined three times on the Indians go ahead and winning scoring drive.

The drive itself indicated that Juniata can bounce back, that they do work just as hard in the fourth quarter. And most of all showed that one key ingredient to successful football which seemed to be absent since the W&J game: playing and pulling together as a team.

This was evident in the final drive when unfamiliar names like John Jones and Steve Swope caught first down passes from Davis. It was also evident in the offensive line which gave Davis the time he needed to throw the ball. Then the defense bared down twice within the last five minutes of play, keeping Moravian out of the end zone after they had penetrated deep into Juniata territory on both possessions. However, the most obvious evidence of togetherness was portrayed on the Juniata sidelines. The smell of victory was in the air and everyone on the bench was up and pulling for one another to help capture that aroma.

Moravian opened the scoring on a Tim Cunniff 30 yard field goal five and a half minutes into the first quarter. The Greyhounds started the drive on Juniata's 47 yard line and marched 34 yards in six plays before Cunniff split the uprights supplying the Hounds with a 3-0 lead.

The Indians first score came just forty seconds into the second period. After their first four possessions resulted in punts the Tribe mounted a 42 yard eight play scoring drive. On fourth and two from the Greyhounds ten Juniata opted to go for a first down instead of kicking a field goal. The end result was six points after Davis connected with Dennis DeRenzo in the right flat. John O'Neill added the first of his five points in the game by converting the extra point.

The only other scoring attempt for the Indians was a 45 yard field goal try by O'Neill which fell just short. The Indians had a slight scare on the last play of the half when Moravian QB Bob Light connected with Mike Howey on a desperation pass. Howey fell short of the end zone by a yard.

O'Neill redeemed himself to start the second half scoring with a 29 yarder which gave the Indians a 10-3 lead five minutes into the third quarter. Moravian came right back and marched 78 yards only to get three points. Two defensive pass interference penalties and a 25 yard run by Rick Krouse set up the Cunniff 22 yard field goal.

On the ensuing kickoff Juniata's Bill Hesketh fumbles the ball and Moravian recovered it on the Indian's 33 yard line. Fortunately the Indian defense kept Moravian out of the end zone but ended up yielding three more points. Cunniff's 20 yard field goal brought the Greyhounds within one point 10-9 with 14 seconds left in the third quarter.

Juniata added another field goal before Light scampered 64 yards for a Moravian score to capture a 16-13 lead. Then Davis and Cottle went to work, eating up six minutes and 76 yards in 14 plays for the winning score. Moravian handled the ball two more times reaching the Juniata 33 and 26 yard lines only to fall short both times.

Nuch's notes: Everytime Moravian and Juniata play both teams end up losing in the end. This year was no different as Frank Gay and Dennis DeRenzo both were shaken up. As of now Gay's condition is questionable. The defense did the job however, posting two goal line stands in the third quarter and stopping Moravian on two consecutive series late in the fourth quarter.

The Indians compiled 19 first downs to Moravians 12. Juniata had 334 yards of total offense on 81 plays while Moravian had 345 yards in 70 plays. JC was penalized 7 times for 67 yards and punted eight times for a 28.9 average. Juniata controlled the ball for 30:39 to Moravians 29:21.

Dennis DeRenzo rushed for 61 yards on 18 carries. Davis threw 47 times completing 24 passes for 200 yards and was intercepted once. In the first half JC held Moravian to four yards rushing. Frank Gay led the way with 12 tackles and a sack with Dave Ritter, Jerry Look and Jeff Haines each had six tackles.

This week when the Indians travel to Williamsport to play Lycoming it will mark the 32nd meeting between JC and the Warriors. Juniata leads the series 18-13 and won last year 10-7. The last Lycoming win was in Huntingdon in 1986 when the Warriors trounced Juniata 63-27. Juniata is 9-7 at Williamsport but has lost the last six in a row, with the last win at Lyco coming in 1974 by a 28-0 score. Lycoming lost to Widener this past weekend 17-5 and now stands at 4-1 and 2-1 in the conference.

Greek singing hometown blues

By George Zanic

Being born and raised in Pittsburgh, there were always a few rules which I had to follow if I wished to live in the same house as my father. I could cheer for two football teams on Saturday afternoon, Pitt and whoever played Penn State. The Pirates were the only team in the National League that mattered, and the most important rule-Steelers were a religion.

By the time I was five years old, I understood, and even liked each of these rules. Consequently, I had a very happy childhood. Pitt usually beat Penn State and ended the season in the top ten, the Pirates dominated the National League's East Division, and the Steelers were busy collecting four Superbowl rings.

Upon coming to Juniata for my Freshman year, however, I was exposed to a great culture shock. I found out that not everyone thought Joe Paterno was "the hypocrite of Happy Valley," as my father liked to refer to him. There were some Juniata students who actually cheered for the Phillies, a team I had learned to hate over the years, and horror of all horrors, not everyone liked the Steelers.

Things quickly went downhill in Pittsburgh after I entered college. Pitt's program went sour, the Pirates were perennial cellar dwellers and the Steelers weren't making the playoffs. I found myself at the pinnacle of frustration trying to defend the teams that I had grown to love, when I knew everyone who was cutting them down for their ineptness was absolutely right.

I did know, however, that I had four years at Juniata and maybe one of my teams would win a championship by the time I was a senior, then I'd show all those people who doubted Pittsburgh. Well, my hopes all died this weekend.

I had to sit and watch the Dodgers play the Mets in the National League Playoffs. Trying to choose one of those teams to root for is like trying to choose between a firing squad and electric chair. I know the Pirates are only one or two years away from another championship, but I won't be around Huntingdon to rub it in anyone's face.

As if baseball wasn't enough, Pitt fumbled away a chance to upset nationally ranked Notre Dame, as Penn State was pounding Cincinnati. Without question,however, my worst nightmare came true on Saturday afternoon. The Steelers looked like a high school team in an embarassing loss to Phoenix. Pittsburgh could be the worst team in the NFL. I tried to make up some excuses, but there weren't any.

As I sit here on Monday morning, I've come to realize the Steelers won't win the Superbowl, Pitt won't win the National Championship, and I'll have to wait another year for the Pirates to try to better the Mets. It's a good thing Juniata beat Moravian this weekend or I'd be a total basket case.

Well, if I learned anything in my time at Juniata, it might be that all sports aren't centered in Pittsburgh. For instance, I now find myself watching the Penn State highlight show on Sunday mornings, I think Mike Schmidt is a great player, and I think Randall Cunningham is the best quarterback in the NFL. But do me favor, don't tell my dad about these things, he still has to pay for one more semester.

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXIX No. 7 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | October 27, 1988

PRESIDENT ROBERT NEFF AND HOMECOMING QUEEN STEPHANIE LANTZ

3,500 seat Stadium dedicated in honor of Seahawks Coach Knox

Juniata College dedicated its 3,500-seat stadium on Saturday in the name of 1954 graduate Chuck Knox, head coach of the Seattle Seahawks of the National Football League. The facility, which will be known as Knox Stadium, was dedicated prior to Juniata's Homecoming football game with Albright College.

In his dedicatory remarks, Juniata College President Robert W. Neff said, "The Juniata athlete of today shares a zest for competition with the athlete of a bygone era. The Juniata athlete has always kept the balance between academics and athletics in proper perspective. The Juniata athlete is always a student first and an athlete second."

Standing on the edge of the rain soaked field, the president dedicated the facility "on behalf of our many alumni and friends, without whose unselfish commitment this facility would not be possible."

With that President Neff turned the program over to Juniata Board of Trustee chairman Charles C. Ellis. Chairman Ellis stated proudly, "On behalf of the trustees, the administration, the faculty and staff, and Juniata's countless benefactors, I am pleased to present to future generations, Knox Stadium. A 32 foot sign with the facility's new name painted a brilliant write on a blue and gold background was uncovered from atop the press box as hundreds of blue and gold balloons were released from behind the new sign.

The attention of the crowd was then drawn back to the field as Juniata faculty member Joseph Figg belted out a powerful rendition of the National Anthem as a huge 12x14 foot sign was unfurled on the ten yard line. The sign, depicting a rendition of the stadium and the image of Coach Knox in the foreground, was held by the Juniata College cheerleading corps through the conclusion of the National Anthem. The Juniata band immediately began what has become the Juniata fight song, "Stand Up and Cheer," at which time the entire Juniata football team crashed through the sign on their way to the sideline.

During half time activities President Neff and Chairman Ellis recognized the leadership of the stadium and track project, of which Chuck Knox was the honorary chair. In recognizing Knox's leadership President Neff said, "This campaign has been successful because of teamwork. And, as has been the case throughout his illustrious career, Chuck Knox has been leading the team... Chuck Knox is a man who has not forgotten his roots, which run deep in the history of Juniata College," the president continued. "He is someone who can always be called upon to rally the team and lead us to victory."

Representing Coach Knox, who was in Los Angeles preparing for Seattle's intra-conference game with the Rams on Sunday, was his daughter Colleen. In her remarks she expressed her father's deep affection for Juniata College and for all of Central Pennsylvania. "Throughout my childhood," she said, "my father talked of Juniata

Lantz named Queen on Saturday

Stephanie Lantz was crowned Juniata College's Homecoming Queen by College President Robert W. Neff during half time ceremonies at Juniata's Homecoming football game on Saturday.

A senior social work major, Ms. Lantz is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gemmings Lantz of Altoona.

The Queen's court was also announced during the ceremony. The 1988 Homecoming Court includes: senior representative Dana Worthington of Johnstown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Worthington; junior representative Susan Smith of Bridgeton, NJ, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Smith; sophomore representative Kathy Snow of Altoona, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Snow; and freshman representative Courtney Macek of Hollidaysburg, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Macek.

Marylou Miller of Wexford, the 1987 Homecoming Queen assisted President Neff with the crowning. Two local children, Scott Ash, son of Rob and Margaret Ash, and Kevie Stroup, daughter of Harry Stroup and Dr. Fay Glosenger, carried the Queen's crown and bouquet.

Two whales remain trapped by ice in the waters off Barrow, Alaska. A third whale, missing since last Friday, is presumed dead. The National Guard has used a seven-ton block of concrete to hammer against the ice. Eskimos, using equipment donated by a firm from Oregon, have been keeping breathing holes open for the whales. The Eskimos have cut 60 breathing holes in a 1.5 mile path towards open water. The Soviet Union has offered an ice-breaker to the rescue team which was to be in place yesterday. So far the rescue has cost in excess of $300,000.

The latest USA Today polls show that the country is preparing for another Republican landslide victory in the presidential election. Monday, USA Today picked the Republican nominee, Vice-President George Bush, to win 32 states and 337 electoral college votes. The same poll showed that Democrat Michael Dukakis was leading in only seven states. Eleven states remain a toss up, including Pennsylvania. Dukakis has yet to establish an edge in any of the 39 most western or southern states with the exception of tiny Hawaii.

Editorial

Editorials have a habit of being very negative, and as a society we are prone to looking at the half empty glass of water rather than the half full glass. Well, I'm going to change that around this week.

I wish to congratulate anyone who had anything to do with Homecoming '88: "That's Entertainment". The only person I must criticize, however, is Mother Nature. Unfortunately, she could not find it in her heart to cooperate with us this past weekend, but despite that little inconvience, things went extremely well.

It's touching to talk with alumni and get a feel for their love of Juniata; it's a kind of love that carries down through generations. An example of their love was the new Knox Stadium. Many people gave unselfishly of themselves so that we, and many future generations can benefit from their generosity. Each of these persons cares very deeply about our institution. Even through the cold and rain, many people my grandmother's age perservered just to recognize the latest advancement at Juniata. That's what Homecoming is all about, to come together with people of all ages to share a common bond.

Homecoming was an all-around success. I think each person that was involved either as a part of the program or just as a spectator experienced the positive feelings about our institution. We got a chance to reflect on the past, as well as think about what is to come in the future. I have a feeling many more good things are going to come from this institution. Congratulations to each and every person who had a hand in creating such a memorable occasion, you are Juniata College.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I am writing to you in reference to the date on which Mountain Day was held this year.

As you already know Mountain Day was held the 12 of October despite the fact that myself, along with thirty-six other Juniata Biology Majors; including twelve seniors and seven foreign exchange students, were on an educational field trip to the Duke University Marine Lab in North Carolina.

Mountain Day is a cherished tradition which is exclusive of Juniata College. The students who were on this field trip obviously were denied this experience. Therefore, the seniors and foreign exchange students will never be able to enjoy this special activity which is supposed to be one of the high points of the year.

Although the field trip to the marine lab was enjoyable, it was not a vacation. The students were out working in the field from early in the morning until dinner and heard lectures and studied in the laboratory on campus after dinner until late in the evening. Furthermore, many students also had to study for midterms they took while there were down there and for ones they had to take when they got back.

Myself, along with the other thirty-six students feel that scheduling Mountain Day while we were on the field trip was extremely unfair. A memorandum was even sent to Bill Huston before we left--which was obviously ignored. There is no excuse for denying the students who went on the field trip from participating in Mountain Day, because there were ample opportunities to schedule Mountain Day last week, or today, or even when we get back from fall break.

I know that what is done is done, but I sincerely hope that in the future those who plan Mountain Day take more consideration to those students who will be unable to attend due to reasons out of their control.

Yours Truly,
Lori A. Kieffer

America was back in space again as the space shuttle Discovery was launched last Thursday morning. After nearly three years of grief and horror, sending up rocket ships was once again an adventure. We all know the story to well of why a lay-off ever had to happen in the first place.

As a space mission, last week's launching was less ambitious than many earlier ones. But as a psychic landmark, it ranked with the nation's first adventures into orbit. The planning board were all seasoned fliers. There would be no space scientists on this flight, nor politicians or teachers. The shuttle itself had been essentially redesigned. New improvements included thicker O-rings and an escape chute for the astronauts.

The four day flight was above all a test for the shuttle itself. Discovery's main task was to release a NASA communications satellite-something ordinary rockets have been able to do for 25 years. The question remains "What do we do now?" You would think that after this three year hold in the American space program, we would give ourselves time to think about why we want to be up there anyway. Instead, the U.S. space program continues with no long-range goal, no firm leadership, and no mission. Do we really want to send men up in space efficiently? NASA pledged to us that the shuttle program could deliver all the nation's military, commercial, and scientific needs. The Challenger disaster exposed that folly, particularly the needless risk to human lives. Nevertheless, NASA continues its commitment to the program; it has 30 more scheduled shuttle flights in the next 4 years. NASA intends to keep its fleet busy in the 1990's ferrying people to build its space station. Yet that big project is similar to the shuttle's sad fate, trying to do to much, too inefficiently, with costs spiraling upwards everyday (now $25 billion).

NASA has long assumed that it needed people on board to win public enthusiasm and support. This in a sense is true. Russsia will soon send up a shuttle itself, however, the first one will be unmanned. If that proves to be reliable, a crew of two will be sent up. The Soviets prefer to run things automatically from the ground, giving the cosmonaut little chance for human error. "The cosmonaut is basically up for the ride," says one western expert. Heaven forbid we do anything similar to the Russians, but we haven't learned any lessons from the Challenger? Must we send people into space when our robots can do better? Could we not expand our knowledge just by sending up telescopes,and galaxy probes while also saving money?

If we want to keep sending people into space, then we need a destination. It used to be the moon, but now what do we do? Mars beckons. The Russians want to make it a co-op adventure. It would cost a fortune, but could it generate support like the Apollo programs? The nation needs to decide whether or not it is worth it, and then plan accordingly, otherwise, this half-hearted commitment to everything and nothing guarantees us only one direction-going around in one big circle.

Wellness Tips

Just a few years ago, people in other parts of the world still thought of AIDS as someone else's problem. Today- no country is immune to this universal fear. According to article in American Health (June '88), AIDS awareness is high but data shows that people are not taking the necessary steps to control the disease- like changing their sexual behavior. It is understood that the disease poses a special risk to homosexuals, hemophiliacs, intravenous drug users and those who are promiscuous- while those who experiment with new sex partners have a heightened risk. Changing sexual behavior is the single most important step in stopping AIDS.

Dr. James W. Curran, chief of the Center for Disease Control AIDS activities agrees that right now the risk to most heterosexual Americans is low, but he warns against complacency. One reason is that it takes five or more years before most people infected with the HIV become ill, and no one knows how many asymptomatic carriers are out there- or who they are. While heterosexual AIDS transmission is still confined to partners of people in high-risk groups, there are no guarantees that it won't break out into the larger population. Usually it takes repeated exposure-not just a one-night stand- for HIV to be transmitted, but many factors can change the risk. Infected people may become more infectious as time goes on.

Studies have shown that the fears expressed by many people may be problematic in themselves. Myths about AIDS can take attention away from the real risk. The effects of these fears may lead people to be unwilling to help those with the disease. We must educate to overcome the ignorance which puts so many at risk, and the fear which prevents us from compassionately treating already infected persons.

If sexual activity with different partners continues, protection by using latex condoms (the so-called natural kind are too porous) with a spermicide containing non-oxynal-9 (which kills the AIDS virus) has been proven most effective. None of these precautions are foolproof; only abstinence is (or a monogamous relationship with someone you know isn't infected). If you are not ready for celibacy or monogamy, it's your responsibility to cut the risks.

CMB takes a group to Haiti

"It's leaking again," says the disheveled 13 year old, who is obviously annoyed by the discovery. It is not the beckoning arrival of flowers pushing through the waking earth that hearkens the approach of spring, nor is it the chirping robins; Spring means the beginning of the annual battle of basement versus water and cracking walls and plaster chips.

The family begins to call the familiar names of contractors, plumbers and friends. Water pumps, plaster, brooms, buckets and labor needed once more. A different year. Same problem. No progress from last year-just temporary adjustments.

To the dismay of the family, they bought a home which was knowingly built on land which is constantly settling. This settling land causes the cracks in the foundations of the many homes in the sub-divisions. The family can't move. Who will buy the house? The family spent their savings to buy their dream-house. Good intentioned people know their plight and send gifts of cash, but only enough to get through another year.

This description is fictional, yet truthful. It gives light to how we combat injustice. We apply band-aids to infected sores. The root problem remains untreated. When we combat injustice we need to combat structural injustice (that which is built in the system or the causal problem that is hidden).

In terms of the fictional story, combatting the structures would be providing the family with a safe dwelling and also working for stronger building codes that guard against the using of unsafe or poor land for the sake of profit. This is a start of working for justice.

The Campus Ministry Office is taking a group of 14 students to the Caribbean nation of Haiti from January 6-14. In Haiti, the group will encounter issues of structural injustice (i.e. history of corrupt governing, poor land-use, ineffective school systems, etc...). The group will be involved in putting a roof on a much needed medical clinic as part of a long-term developmental project. We will be working closely with the Haitian people and being confronted by third-world poverty and culture.

Our hope for the project is that it will serve to raise issues of economic and political justice in ways that are new and that will encourage them (and us) to grow in our perspective of the world community. This is one way of responding to what the Lord requires of doing justice, loving kindness, and walking humbly with God.

Counselor's Corner

What section of the daily newspaper do many readers turn to first? You guessed it--the funnies! One could speculate the reasoning behind this is that people generally prefer the lighter side that the funnies provide before going on to the more serious news.

The positive effect that humor has on a person, both physically and mentally, is no laughing matter. A sense of humor, an appreciation for the value of laughter, can go a long way in helping us cope with the everyday stressors in our lives.

Joel Goodman, founder and director of the Humor Project in Saratoga Springs, NY and a pioneer in the exploration of the practical, personal and professional uses of humor, says that the study of humor is fun but not just for fun. He also points out the important difference between a childish attitude and a childlike outlook. "Viewing life in a childlike manner can be a very mature, adult coping skill," says Goodman.

Consider what the research by Goodman and others says about laughter and humor: As a tension reliever, humor is just about the best strategy available. We can't very well feel stressed when we are laughing; Physically, laughter causes increased heart rate and breathing as well as increased circulation of blood; Laughter helps in the release of morphine-like endorphins which help in controlling pain and inflammation; The positive emotions that result from humor/laughter are helpful to our immune system; Perceptions and attitudes are often changed by injecting some humor into an otherwise tense situation.

Commandment #11, if there were such a thing, might be something like this "Thou shall not take thyself too seriously." We need to learn to laugh at ourselves and to forget some of the things we think are so awful. Lighten up and find a way to laugh each day. Be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

by Trish Kazmerski

It seems that the latest fad on the Juniata campus is social, political, and economic awareness. I agree that some are worthwhile arguments, but others are utterly ridiculous. I have been chosen to brief you on some of the more worthwhile and comic social and economic problems we face today.

Through the empty rafters of the Ranch I can hear the cries of the unemployed, the homeless, the hungry. Why are they out of work and starving. Because due to the new alcohol policy, two leading American beverage companies, Anheiser-Bush and Stroh's, have had to shut their doors due to a losing battle against foreign competition. At one time, the workers happily pumped gallons of good brew through the plant, packaging it up and shipping it to Huntingdon, Pa. Now the taps lay dry, but sometimes on a warm, starlit night, a ghostly gurgling sound within the pipes to match the ghostly peels of laughter and good times which once flowed through the rooms of Cloister.

Besides the beverage industry, the steel industry has also been hit hard. Carney Keg's incorporated have had to lay off 750 people due to the lack of kegs needed by both Cloister and East Apartments, both located on the Juniata Campus, Huntingdon, Pa. A once flourishing operation, dealing between 30-60 kegs a week, it has now been reduced to one keg a month by energetic RHA presidents throwing Oktoberfests, filled with (get this) rootbeer, and for rebels who chance stiff penalties for an hour or two of fun.

Besides unemployment, another social factor is the elderly. Two well-known businessmen, Bartles and Jaymes, have had to move into a shelter for the last years of their lives. These men wanted to make a positive contribution in their golden age of retirement. What did we do as flag carrying Americans? Sit by and watch them lose their wine cooler empire. I might be throwing sour grapes (pun-intended), but are these the role models we want our grandparents to look up to? How can we tell them one thing, while the reality is so much different. Old people have enough problems of their own.

Finally a plea to the moral majority. Why did't you stop your bitchen' about rock-n-roll and kids selling out to the devil. A quick word to the liberals who claim the Reagan administration and Col. North sold out their country. The Juniata administrators are guilty of selling out also, as we the students are. Did you know that clubs that sponsor alcohol-free dances receive $300.00 profit regardless of the number of people that turn out? If this isn't sugar to wash down the medicine, I don't know what is.

There are many more heart-wretching stories I can tell you about, such as the psychological pressure of talking to your scope stone sober since there are no more social parties, but I have to go and play in a Pictionary tournament. So until next time...

"Keep you eyes open and your nose clean or you might find yourself knee deep Along Muddy Run."

The above is a fiction story, any resemblance to people, places, or things, living or dead is strictly intentional.

He has said on many occasions that the coaching ethic he developed in his first coaching position 35 years ago at Juniata has been a part of him throughout his career and continues today... In a telephone conversation with Coach Knox prior to his departure from Seattle for Sunday's game he spoke of his alma mater. "I'm very honored that the stadium is being named for me," he said. "I'm very proud of Juniata College and its accomplishments. I am very appreciative of the leadership group that spearheaded the campaign to raise a million dollars for this project. The new stadium is a great addition to the campus."

In speaking of his collegiate days Coach Knox said, "I liked the intimacy that existed on a college campus like Juniata's. The relationship between students and faculty and the interaction with the other students was very special. The quality of education that I received at Juniata has helped me throughout my career."

In concluding her remarks, Colleen Knox revealed to the audience something she has heard her father often say. "I've heard my father say that it's always a great weekend when the Seahawks win," she said, "but it's even better when Seattle and Juniata win."

Our department, and other departments within Power 92, give students a chance to apply what they have learned in their Business, Communication, and Physics courses while also adopting knowledge of the music industry and broadcasting technology.

Since the start of 1988, Power 92 has installed a state of the art Stereo broadcast board which is the major source of the quality sound you hear. We have entered the digital era with the acquisition of an excellent CD player. The recent purchase of a Remote Broadcast Unit, gives Power 92 the capability to broadcast many miles away from Ellis Hall. This unit gives us the freedom of broadcasting home football games and other special events on campus and in the community. The Engineering Dept. is responsible for the installation and quality of these achievements and it is an asset to JC to have one of the fastest growing and professional radio stations in the area.

Credit must be given to junior Al Schroff for his leadership and knowledge as Chief Engineer. Even though he does get shocked occasionally! With my help as Assistant Chief, we have developed a staff and with their help, made a more than substantial contribution to the entire operation of Power 92. Other members of our staff include Trish Kazmerski, Chris Bush (no known relation to George), Eric Morrison, Rob Moreau (ceiling phantom), Tracy Shafer, and Dan Cain. Our most valuable member, however, is college technician Bill Blazina, whose guiding experience and patience has carried our staff through the many great accomplishments. Remember the Engineers of Power 92 when you hear JC football games, ABC News, and a wide music variety in stereo that no other station could touch.

Best Regards,
Brian Baker, Asst. Chief Engineer

The long awaited Mountain Day A huge success for all!

By Jean Drumheiser

Another long awaited Mountain Day has come and gone. All in all, this year's Mountain Day has been a success. The food was delicious (can we have this on a regular basis?), the games were fun, and everybody had a good time.

Congratulations to the seniors, both men and women, on winning the Tug of War(fairly I might add). Congrats to the winners of the football games too.

Although the day was a success, I don't think anyone was as glad to see it arrive as I was. If I had a dime for every comment or question about Mountain Day, my tuition would be paid (or I could buy the Colonial!). The rumors were incredible. Did you know that somebody saw Bill Huston stick his arm out the window at 5:00 AM and say"Not today, it's too cold." It also had to be tomorrow because the cleaning lady said so. My favorite one was that somebody drove out to Greenwood Furnace and saw it was set up. Too bad Mountain Day was at Trough Creek this year!

Along with the rumors I was bombarded with complaints. Some people talked about not showing up at the park. Others declared their own Mountain Day. One person even complained to President Neff about it not being when it was "supposed" to be.

Traditionally, Mountain Day is an unexpected day off and a chance for us to appreciate the outdoors. It would be a shame to see a tradition filled with excitement in anticipation change into a time of frustration and anger.

In closing, I have a few words of advice for the next Mt. Day chairs: Don't let ANYBODY know you are the chairperson, make yourself scarce until Mt. Day, and finally, but most importantly, have fun at a packed Colonial when you know it's NOT MOUNTAIN DAY TOMORROW!

Hornets new duds, mix of style-n-bright color

By Lance Marshall

Meet the Charlotte Hornets, a new NBA franchise, the first team in the league to sport designer uniforms on the hard wood. The uniforms will look like this: long, pleated shorts with wide waistbands like boxers', and jerseys with daring V-necks all done up in white and teal with cunning hints of purple, Caroling blue and Kelly green. For those of you that don't know, teal looks like a baby blue. These new duds are the creation of Seventh Avenue's Alexander Julian, five time winner of the Coty Award. Like any of you know what that is. Anyway, this guy says that these new Hornet uniforms are "more functional than traditional basketball clothes, not to mention hipper and stylish." Like this guy knows anything about basketball.

Reactions to the new uniforms? Well owner George Schinn thinks that they are "pretty" and the General Manager calls them "striking and bold." However these are Hornets talking. Reactions around the league are a little different. San Antonio coach Larry Brown says rather sarcastically "I'm sure they are tasteful" his own team ready to do an overhaul on the black and gray. Denver Nuggets coach, Doug Moe is more to the point by saying "I really don't give a s what they wear." I think they are kind of puking looking to look at also.

You know the saying "clothes make the man", well it is not true in this case. Starters on this year's new expansion team include such old timers as Kelly Tripucka and Kurt Rambis. The team will debut these classics tomorrow October 14 at Madison Square Garden against the New Jersey Nets.

Juniata welcomes Kim Harbold, Student Nurse

By Trish Kazmerski

A warm Juniata welcome goes out to Miss Kim Harbold. Kim hails from Willsburg, Pennsylvania and is the new Resident Nurse at the Health Center.

Kim is a R.N. graduate from the Geisinger School of Nursing located in Danville, PA. For the past four years she has been working in the Intersive Care Unit at Hershey Medical Center. There she assisted with operations dealing with heart and other organ transplants. She has also assisted with two operations dealing with the artificial heart. During her last year, she was working in a more challenging branch of surgery, that which deals with children. She says that children are more difficult to work with because their entire system is smaller, and in surgery, require stricter boundaries and limits. She elaborated that as an example, when an adult has a by-pass it is mainly a routine operation. They do the by-pass and that's all. With a child their heart is sometimes put together backwards, requiring additional surgery and then the by-pass. She liked both the challenge and reward of this medical branch. Aside from her career as a nurse, she is also certified in Critical Care, Basic Life Support, and Advanced Cardiac Life Support, and has been on the trauma unit for "Life-Flight", the air rescue chopper stationed at Geisinger Medical Center.

Having so many accomplishments, and an already laid career, one asks then why is she here at Juniata? The answer is simple. She is completing her undergraduate work in nursing in order to get a Bachelor's Degree. She also is taking courses which would make her eligible to attain a position in Health Administration. She feels that there is only so much independence in the nursing profession, and in administration, she would be able to teach and implement new ideas in that field.

She feels that there is much gratification in the medical field and that's what keeps her going. However, there are rough and emotional times, especially when dealing with the family of the patient, but these times are forgotten when her performance saves a life. An interesting turn of events happened a few weeks ago. Kim was attending a JC football game when the mayor of Huntingdon, Mike Scliabba, recognized her in the crowd. Mr. Scliabba had been a heart patient at Hershey Medical Center, and Kim was one of the nurses on the post-op caring team. It's a small world isn't it?

Kim is enjoying her stay at Juniata and reminds students that she is available Monday-Saturday from 6-8:00 pm. She is also available at anytime for medical emergencies, but please remember she too is a student and does need studying time. She is also willing to implement educational programs and talk one-on-one with students about personal health problems or questions. Anyone wishing to talk with Kim can find her in the health suite apartment on first Lesher.

Black enrolement drops at white colleges, Is anyone concerned

Many black students drop out of predominantly white colleges because racial prejudice and discrimination leave them lonely and isolated, Oberlin University researchers say.

"Selective, predominantly white institutions are very similar in nature," said Patrick Penn, dean of Oberlin's student support services, at a Sept. 20 conference of National Council of Educational Opportunity Associations in Washington D.C.

"They are basically white systems, and white systems are discriminatory to non-members."

Although Oberlin's overall graduation rate is 70 percent, 20 points above the national average, only about 55 percent of the black students at the liberal arts school earn their degrees.

Inadequate financial aid packages, insensitive, sometimes hostile white student populations and poor academic support programs cause many blacks to leave white colleges before receiving their degree, Penn reported.

His findings come at a time when efforts to expand opportunities for minorties are losing momentum, according to "One Third Of a Nation," a report issued in May by the American Council on Education and the Education Commission of the States.

In response to the study and to the escalating racial tensions on scores of campuses during the last two academic years, many schools redoubled their efforts to recruit more black students for this fall.

Some reports indicate the efforts are working.

Minority admissions at the University of Texas, for example, reached an all-time high this fall. The University of Colorado reports a 33 percent increase in minority enrollment.

But the number of black students at the University of North Dakota dropped by almost half this fall. Metropolitan State College in Denver has not increased its 15.3 percent minority enrollment for four years, despite attempts to do so. The University of Illinois has been more successful in raising minority enrollment, but the percentage of blacks and other minorities attending the school is still much smaller than the state's percentage of minorities.

Black students at Oberlin told Penn, whose study is called "Black Student Persistence to Graduation at Oberlin College," they felt their white classmates focused too much on their color and regard black programs as "separatist" activities that encourage isolation, Penn said.

Penn concluded that improved "retention can be gained only through programs affecting students after they are enrolled at Oberlin," such as academic support.

Black students often cite financial problems for leaving school, but the effects of financial aid packaging on retention are inconclusive, Penn said.

The researchers recommended changing financial aid packaging, developing programs to increase sensitivity about racial prejudice and stereotyping, and upgrading student support services as ways to keep black students on mostly white campuses.

Nuprin says college students are big winners— stop worring!

Worrying is the negative national pastime. Everybody does it and very few find it is a postive experience. You don't think clearly or perform well when you worry. Your main focus is the worry, the fear of "What might happen if...," which overwhelms you, makes you feel depressed, reduces your energy, and prevents you from getting your work done.

College students are big worriers. That worry leads to stress and college students are very big on stress. In fact, the Nuprin Pain Report, the first study on pain in America, documented that more people 18-24 are likely to suffer stress and pain than any older age group.

Most of what we worry about is out of our control. You can't control other people's responses, a grade a prof will give us, whether someone will agree with us, what they think of us, the weather, traffic, roommates, money, how we look, grades, the future. The more we worry about things we can't control, the worse everything gets.

Remember this rule of thumb: You can't control other people or external situations. But you can control how well you prepare for and respond to them. In other words, you control your information attitude and actions.

Worrying is made up of two words: What if. "What if...they say no, ...I don't get the money, ...the professor asssigns, ..the traffic..." The key to beating the worries is to change the what if's to "if... then's." "If they say no... then I will..." "If I don't get the money then I will..." Always change the worry to anticipation. Concentrating your energy on what you can change, rather than dwelling on things you can't control increases your confidence and prepares you for any situation.

This strategy was used by President John F. Kennedy. Before his press conferences, Kennedy and his aides anticipated any possible question or situation that might arise and developed answers for them. Whether a reporter asked about the Viet Nam War, the economy or civil rights, Kennedy was prepared.

Likewise, in a job interview, instead of worrying whether or not the potential employer will ask about your grades, anticipate that he or she will. Then mentally list wins, accomplishments and qualifications that your course grades might not reflect.

Get into the habit of anticipating prior to any pressure situation, whether it's an exam, an interview, a date or a tennis serve. Make a "worry list," then change each worry (what if) to an anticipation (if...then). Leaving your worries behind by focusing on what you can control enables you to concentrate your energy and perform at peak levels.

As usual— The Greek speaks

Greek keeps on rolling; and we don't mean Jimmy

By George Zanic

Now that the Steelers are realistically out of the AFC Central race, what could a Steeler fan do for excitement on a Sunday afternoon? How about a little wager on an NFL game? Of course with Juniata being a fine Brethren institution, no one here would ever think of gambling, therefore this article does not apply to Juniata students who are pure and innocent.

On a certain campus in central PA, however, there are hundreds of dollars wagered on college and professional football every weekend. Whether it be a five dollar bet on the Juniata-Albright game or a 200 dollar bet with the local bookie, gambling on football has become commonplace, not only on campus but throughout the country. With the exception of games gambled on in Nevada, betting on football is illegal no matter what dollar amount is wagered, but I can't seem to figure out why.

Gambling can be found in many legal forms in PA; Take the racetrack, the Pennsylvania Daily Number or the countless number of weekly bingo games which take place at your local Catholic church, for instance. So why should it be illegal to wager a few dollars on sports when you can blow your money on any of these ventures?

Betting on a football game can prove to be not only exciting, but very profitable. Take an example from this past Saturday's college football game between Miami and Cincinnati. Miami is one of the top teams in the nation while Cincinnati is a perennial also ran. A gambler could turn this lopsided game into a very interesting one. Miami was favored by 45 points, thus if you bet on Miami they would have to win by more that 45. By giving or taking points, the teams become even and the game becomes much more enjoyable for the fan. Miami did end up winning this game by more than 45 points, and as a result won me, I mean a friend of mine, a few bucks.

Of course you could get that type of excitment and cash at the racetrack, but from the middle-of-nowhere it takes about two hours to get to the track. I don't even enjoy driving a total of four hours just to lose my money, when I could sit on my couch and lose it. You also could get that type of excitment from the Daily Number, isn"t it great watching those little balls pop out of the machine every night? Wow, that's my kind of excitment! Then you have bingo. I just have trouble stomaching a 90 year old lady taking my money as she yells "Bingo!" in my face. No thanks, I'll take my chances on football.

Another plus legalizing gambling would be putting the bookies out of business. If the Government ran the sports books, they could put the money to a useful cause just as the daily number proceeds go to Senior Citizens.

Legalizing gambling on football isn't really going to hurt anyone, all it would do is regulate something that everyone does anyway. There is one problem with betting on football, however, the fans from Philadelphia can sometimes get worse than old ladies playing bingo.

The Indian field hockey team wrapped up it's best season in school history with a 8-0 victory over W&J this past Saturday. Senior Mickey Hoffman (13) will be only one of four players whom coach Quinn will lose to graduation.

Hockey wraps up season

By Deb Dougherty

The Juniata College hockey team finished its season with a record of 12-3-1. The team was ranked tenth in the NCAA Division III standings for their region. The team also finished third in the MAC southwestern conference.

The Lady Indians had many key victories at the end of their season. They defeated Dickinson 3-1 in a tough fought match. The scorers for the game were Jennifer Dippery, Suzanne McMannus, and Kathleen McGowan. Amy Blough, McGowan, and Dippery also tallied one assist each against the Carlisle team.

The Dickinson game marked a personal goal for Kathleen McGowan. She broke the twelve year old Juniata record of individual goals in a season, which was eleven. The record now stands at sixteen. Good luck to her next year as she reaches for the next record to be broken, the most career goals by an individual.

The greatest defeat handed down by Juniata was to Gettysburg. The Lady Indians needed to beat the first place MAC team to qualify for the MAC play-offs. Juniata had not beaten Gettysburg since 1982 and was looking forward to the tough match-up.

The Lady stickers took Gettysburg by suprise from the very start. Juniata was passing well and cutting to the ball. Gettysburg was forced to play a defensive game, unlike past years. With a hard drive to the goal, Juniata put in the first goal of the game. Joanne Thomas crossed the ball to Suzanne McMannus, who tapped it in.

Gettysburg tried hard during the second period to even the score, but was stopped many times by the Juniata defense. Gettysburg finally put in the ball across the line during a scramble in front of the cage. Regular play ended and the game went into a ten minute over-time period.

Both teams took the field determined to come out on top. The ball stayed between the twenty-five yard lines until Juniata finally broke down the Gettysburg defense. Heather Weiss crossed the ball to Kathleen McGowan who drove in the winning goal. Juniata fought hard to keep their lead for the final three minutes of the game. The victory for the Lady Indians caused a three way tie for first in the soutwest division fo the MAC. The other two teams were Johns Hopkins and Gettysburg. To break this tie, Juniata had to play Gettysburg once again.

Juniata travelled to Gettysburg for the play-off game. The Lady Indians held off the scoring drives of Gettysburg for most of the game. With nine minutes left in the game, the host team was granted a penalty corner. They moved ahead when the well-placed drive just made it into the corner of the cage. Juniata made a valiant effort to score, but could not get the ball across the line. The game ended with a score of 1-0 and Juniata moved to third in the MAC rankings.

Coach Kathi Quinn said that the girls did a good job. She appreciated the support that seniors Laurie Boyer, Mickey Hoffman, and Joanne Thomas gave to the program. Through three losing years, they stuck with the team and had the desire and faith to stay to see a winning season.

The team put in a lot of time, according to Quinn, and deserve as much recognition as they can get. They were dissappointed that they did not make the MAC play-offs, but next year's squad has made that one of their goals.

Quinn would like to thank the college community for their support and extends a special thanks to Diane Buza, her assistant coach, who had as much to do with the winning season as the players or herself.

As one of the hockey players said,"We were a unit." Quinn said that this meant "it took all of us working together. This was important to our success this year."

Congratulations to the team on a record breaking season. Good Luck to the seniors as they leave Juniata and to the underclassmen as they work to repeat this year's winning season.

Indians cruise past Albright Susquehanna next MAC foe

By Mike Antenucci

One has to wonder and even feel bad for Albright College and their football team; does everybody schedule the Lions on their Homecoming Weekend? Well, for the fifth straight time (in five tries), Albright fell to Juniata on the Indians Homecoming Weekend 30-7. After playing three straight games against what coach Rob Ash calls "Murderer's Row", (Moravian, Widener, and Lycoming), the Indians were in need of a break.

Juniata vented out some frustrations on the Lions, running off a string of 23 unanswered points after the score was tied at seven for most of the second quarter. Dennis DeRenzo started the scoring for the Indians on a one-yard run three minutes into the second quarter. The five-play, 80-yard drive started after Albright failed to converge on a 35-yard field goal attempt. The drive was aided by a DeRenzo 28-yard run and a 39-yard pass completion from Cubby Davis to Don Betar.

On the ensuing series, Albright was stopped short of picking up a first down, however, a Rich Vagnozzi punt of 77 yards rolled dead at the Juniata three-yard line and put the Indians in a hole. After DeRenzo punted, Albright had a first and ten on the JC 34-yard line but was unable to muster even a yard on a stubborn Juniata defense. Vagnozzi was forced to punt again and misfortune struck the Indians when a JC player was hit with the ball which Albright recovered on the Juniata 13-yard line. One play later Scott Hunsicker connected with Jim Maransky to even the score.

The Indians bounced right back, however, once again starting from their own three yard line, and marched 97 yards on twelve plays. Derenzo capped the drive on a three-yard plunge. DeRenzo and Mike Cottle each had seven and three plays respectively during the drive, the other two plays were incompletions.

Juniata opened the second half with the ball on their own 39-yard line. Nine plays later, Davis found tight end Jim Metz in the endzone for an eleven-yard touchdown score. Keith Watson's second extra point of the game gave the Indians a 19-7 lead.

Following an Albright punt, the Indians mounted their next scoring drive. With 3:21 left to play in the third quarter, Watson nailed a 27-yarder to cap a nine play, 69-yard march to give the tribe a commanding 23-7 edge. Only minutes later, Tim Kirsh intercepted a Hunsicker pass and returned the ball to the Albright 43-yard line. On first down, Davis connected with Donald Betar from eighteen yards out for the final score of the day. Watson added the PAT to raise the margin to 30-7.

Nuch's Notes: Cubby Davis is now second in career pass completions and yardage, with 335 completions on 1647 attempts for 4,400 yards. He has thrown 40 TD passes-10 behind Don Weiss and 16 behind Mike Culver. The Indians amassed 24 first downs while holding Albright to 13. Juniata averaged 5.7 yards a play to Albright's 2.6. Davis, for the second time in his career, went the distance without giving up the "oski"-so only a few will note this great stat, Cub! The Indians were also 7 for 15 on third down conversions.

DeRenzo led the offensive guard game with 133 net yards on 23 carries. He also had 43 yards receiving on two catches. Mike Cottle led the way with eight receptions for 101 yards. Jason Miller saw his first ever college varsity minutes but failed on his only two pass attempts of the day.

The defensive surge was led by senior inside linebacker Frank Gay, who recorded a team high twelve tackles. Gay now has 88 tackles in seven games and needs only 11 more to match his total of 99 last season. Todd Rossman and Bob Herzog had nine and eight tackles respectively and each had a pass break-up. Bryan Worner had three break-ups while Tim Kirsh had two and the game's only interception. Jerry Look recovered a fumble for the Indians.

This weekend the Indians host Susquehanna University, 16-10 losers to Widener this past weekend. This will be the 50th meeting between these two schools, which is ironic because Rob Ash is in search of his 50th career victory. Juniata leads the series 27-19-3, but has dropped the last two decisions to the Crusaders, losing last year 14-13. The last JC win was in 1985, 30-24.

Ash-coached teams are 3-5 vs. Susquehanna, but 2-1 at home. Juniata is 12-5-1 against SU in games at Huntingdon. The Crusaders trailed Widener 14-0 early but bounced back to trail only 14-10 at the half. SU also failed to score when they had the ball inside the Widener 20 on two occasions. SU stalled the Widener ground game, allowing only 93 yards via the rush and a mere 54 yards through the air. Game time is slated for 1:30.

Spikers notch three win

By Mike Antenucci

The women's volleyball team captured three straight matches in a week's time, recording victories over MAC foe Elizabethtown and Division II schools IUP and Gannon University.

Last Wednesday the Blue Jays of E-town entered Huntingdon with 16 straight match losses to the Indians. At first glance it seemed as though that streak might come to an end. E-town won the first game 15-8 and the fourth game 15-9. Juniata managed to win games two and three (15-12, 15-13) to set the stage for game five. Melinda Selby (22 kills), Larissa Weimer (7 stuffed blocks), Jackie Rebert (14 perfect passes, three ace serves) and the rest of the Tribe pulled together to win game five (15-7) and the match. Maybe this year's MAC playoffs won't be as easy for the Indians.

Homecoming weekend would be no easy chore for JC. The Indians had back to back matches with two Division II schools. On Friday IUP was in town and made a quick ex as Juniata cruised to a three gam match victory 15-3, 15-9, 15-T Once again Rebert and Selby led th way while senior captain Dan Worthington was the top passer

A capacity crowd was on han for the Indians match with Ganno University-the top ranked Divisio II team in the East. The Tribe, in on of this season's best all-aroun efforts, knocked off Gannon 17-15 15-7, 15-9. Rebert and Selb recorded 20 and 14 kills respective ly, while junior Rhonda Byga returned to the line-up to add 1 kills and 8 stuffed blocks.

Juniata's overall record nov moves to 29-5 and to 4-0 in th MAC. The Indians played Tuesda at Dickinson, will play tonight a Lebanon Valley and travel t Allegheny Saturday for a tri-matc with the Lost School, Grove Cit and Robert Morris. The MAC's are scheduled for November fourt and fifth.

Rebert; Juniatian AOW

This week's Juniatian Athlete of the Week is awarded to senior volleyball player Jackie Rebert. Rebert led the Indians to three straight match victories while recording team high performances in at least one category for each match.

The York County business administration major was the leading passer and server in the Indian's victory over Elizabethtown and marked a team high 16 kills in a win over IUP and 20 kills in the victory over Gannon. She was also the leading passer in the Gannon match.

Rebert is the daughter of Dale and Carole Rebert RD 4, Spring Grove.

Soccer Action

The men's soccer team recorded their most successful week of the season with a win and a tie in consecutive games. A 2-1 victory over Lebanon Valley last week ended a 10 game losing streak. Brian Roselli scored the game's first goal on an assist from John Telenko. After LVC tied the score, senior Steve Grater notched his team high seventh goal of the season off a corner from Matt Reber to cap the victory.

The Tribe played Albright on Homecoming Saturday and matched the Lions in a 1-1 tie. This left the Indians at 0-4-2 in the conference and 2-9-3 overall. Juniata completed their home season yesterday against Shippensburg University and will finish out the 1988 campaign in Loretto, PA against St. Francis on Saturday. The Tribe will try to avenge an early season 4-1 loss to the Red Flash.

Eriko Yasui illustrates for an attentive crowd the landscape and layout of Japan. As part of the Japanese night, the two Japenese visitors explained such things as the university system, cultural differences, and the basic landscape differences to Juniata Students. They illustrated the reason why Japan is a most "unique" culture. See page 4 for story.

ELECTION 88: Pros and Cons

By Michele Johnson

With the 1988 Presidential election two weeks away, the American public seems to be questioning what this election is all about. Many Americans are unhappy with the direction which this campaign has taken. The candidates have been criticized for not discussing the issues, and for the low tone of their campaign in general. People's complaints fall into several specific categories.

NEGATIVISM

What do you get when you put George Bush and Michael Dukakis together? A total turn-off, says Randy Ratliff, one of the person questioned as part of a survey conducted by USA Today in their October 10, 1988 issue. "I'm disappointed in terms of the name calling and one-liners and this type of thing," he said. "I think everybody has avoided any significant discussion...regarding domestic and international issues. It seems to be a personality contest."

"People are unhappy about the negative quality of the campaign, have formed a dismal view of both candidates, find the entire proceedings distasteful and don't feel like they're getting good information," said Gordon S. Black of Gordon S. Black Corp., who conducted several polls for USA Today.

PACKAGED POLITICS

Another criticism of the 1988 Presidential campaign is that neither of the candidates are sincere. Referred to as "packaged politics," the campaigns present their candidates to the public only when Bush and Dukakis have been adequately "prepped" by their "handlers."

One leading critic said recently in an interview, "Both people are letting themselves get over-packaged. I really feel we're adopting the plastic values of the packagers. Who wants someone who doesn't sweat, who doesn't get nervous?" The critics blame television and feel that it is television executive's responsibility to reshape the campaign. ABC's Sam Donaldson doesn't agree. "The modern-day, 'keep the candidate away from the press so they can only televise a speech' (technique) started with Reagan in 1980," he says. He doesn't resent packaging-choosing campaign stops by picking settings that will look good on TV and reinforce the theme of the day. "I'd do that too if I was campaigning," Donaldson says. This new strategy of "packaged politics" seems to be beneficial for the candidates, but unfortunately it may not benefit society. Such a strategy imposes an unfortunate distance between the electorate and the candidates. Even media leaders are concerned-"It's a very effective strategy for controlling your message," says Bob Furnad, executive producer of CNN's political coverage, but it's "a negative" for the media. "We're frustrated by it," Furnad continues, "and I think viewers are too. I got a very harsh letter from a viewer asking why we don't ask Bush about Iran-Contra. I responded that we can't get him".

ISSUES

A persistent refusal to confront the real issues has also been prevelant throughout this campaign. The candidates seem to prefer the petty and the negative to the serous and profound. Concentrating on topics (such as prison furloughs and General Noriega), the candidates avoid discussing answers to the more pressing questions they will face if elected. Even some of the apparent "issues" aren't all they're cracked up to be; the substantive proposals of the candidates frequently turn out to be packaging.

Modern presidential campaigns always have a large "issues staff" ready to create position papers on every conceivable topic for distribution to eager reporters. But often these pronouncements, written by third-election aides, have little to do with the candidate's future actions, as was reported in the October 17 issues of "Newsweek." The follow-

Editorial

As I sit here once again not knowing what to write about, I start thinking about this past weekend. On Sunday a few of my friends and I decided we wanted to go to a Haunted House. We found out there was one at the Lincoln Caverns and decided to check it out. It turned out to be a lot of fun and even educational! We were taken on a tour of the caverns, which were decorated for Halloween, and told how the caverns were discovered and excavated, and how the formations were made. It was even scary! People jumped out from behind formation screaming and there were even live bats to add to the decoration.

The point I"m trying to make is that there are many things to do in Huntingdon that don"t necessarily take place on this campus. I often hear students complaining that there isn"t anything to do here on the weekends. Why does there have to be things to do HERE all the time? Go out into the community and find things to do. There are movie theaters in town, a bowling alley, and other places like these. I know they cost money, but so do events on campus. The funny thing is, we all do these kinds of things when we go home for a weekend. Why can"t we do them while we're still here? Just use your imagination and you"ll be suprised at what you can find to do off campus. I know we were suprised. I had a great time Sunday doing something unrelated to campus. It was a change of pace and atmosphere, and I was still with my friends, the people I care about.

I am now convinced that some of the people complaining that there is nothing to do on this campus just aren't using their imaginations. Listen to the radio, read the newspapers, this community has lots to offer. We should take advantage of some of these activities. You just might learn something about the area and the people . I know I did.

From the Pen of. . .

It was truly wonderful to watch the heroic efforts that were made to save three whales trapped under the ice off the Alaskan coast. It was highly encouraging to see such a wide variety of groups (the National Guard, the Soviets, members of the oil industry, the environmentalist group Greenpeace, Eskimo hunters and others) coming together in a concerted effort to save these mighty mammals.

Isn't it sickening to think that in other parts of the world, the whales are still being hunted down and slaughtered, despite a ban on commercial whaling by the International Whaling Commission? One of the major culprits in this matter is Iceland, which says it is killing whales for "scientific reasons." The IWC has asked Iceland to halt its program because it does not meet scientific standards, but Iceland has gone ahead anyway.

Greenpeace recently discovered 196 tons of frozen whalemeat fron Iceland in a shipment bound for Japan. This is similar to the 140 tons of Icelandic whalemeat Greeenpeace discovered last year, which was falsely labeled "seafood." What kind of science is this?

Japan is another nation which has exploited the "research" loophole in IWC regulations. Earlier this year, Japan slaughtered several hundred whales near Antarctica. According to Greenpeace, Japan's factory-ship fleet is geting ready to go back and take more.

You may be asking, what can be done? Greenpeace is urging an Icelandic fish boycott, for starters. By convincing major consumers to stop buuing Icelandic fish, they hope to exert enough economic pressure on Iceland to stop killing whales.

What can be done on an individual level? Write a letter (or send a post card) to the chief executives at Pillsbusy and Jerrico-they are the parent companies of Burger King and Long John Silver's, which are two of Iceland's largest U.S. customers. Urge them to drop Icelandic fish produce from their menurs.

We must act now to let other countris know the cost of resuming whaling. Norway just went back to the whale-killing grounds a few weeks ago, so it is critical we act today. I we join toghether in a concerted effort, we can stop the slaughter of these magnificent creatures. (If you would like further information on Greenpeace, write to them at P.O. Box 3720, Washington, D.C., 20007.)

Deppen defends Dukakis

I am glad to have this opportunity to state the positions of Governor Michael Dukakis on issues which Mr. Testan and I have agreed are probably most important to the student body. There has been such a gross distortion of the Governor's positions by the Bush/Quayle campaign that I must make an effort to clear away the fog and show where the Governor really stands. (Note: much of the following material is being reprinted with the permission of NETWORK-A Catholic Social Justice Lobby and Church Women United.)

On abortion: Governor Dukakis believes that the responsibility for the decision whether or not to have an abortion should lie with the woman. He believes that a woman should be free to make that decision on the basis of her own moral and religious beliefs.

On gun control: Governor Dukakis strongly supports a citizen's right to keep and bear arms. He believes that our nation's gun laws should help law enforcement officials fight crime and keep guns out of the hands of criminals. He will not interfere with private ownership of weapons by responsible citizens.

On education: Governor Dukakis supports an increase in the domestic budget for education. He also supports the STARS (Student Tuition and Repayment System) program, which will provide all students with an option of repaying their college, vocational or graduate school loans

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

At the meeting of the Academi Affairs Committee of the Board o Trustees on Friday, Oct. 15, Kel Smith brought up a matter that I like to pursue. I hope her comment were reported in the issue that probably going to press as I writ but in case they were not, Kelli pre sented the concern that the campu atmosphere seems to be one o frustration and overwork to th extent that she is concerned that it i interfering with academic progres and social life. The new alcoho policy, too, is taking its toll. Kelli purpose was to find out how t address these concerns mos effectively.

The directive of the trustee com mittee was to ask for a report at the next meeting (spring, '89); Dea Stewart will ask the Academi Standards Committee of the faculty to study the matter of workload an scheduling. (Profs. Drews, Pfrog ner, Bowser,and B. Heller, D Stewrt, Ms. Shrum,and student rep resentatives Jeannette Zalder an Sharon Rose are on the committee. I think this committee will be abl to deal with questions of schedul ing, clarifying course requirements and finding ways to educate stu dents and faculty about the prob lems and any solutions they ma recommend, and we should giv them any suggestions or concern we have. However, I think the cor cern is more broadly based than th committee alone can handle. As faculty member--one of those wh generates the workload (and als feeling very much "overloaded myself as do most of my co leagues)--I am concerned to kno what students are thinking.

I've also thought of the role o social life. I believe that a college function is to provide education, n to provide a four-year vacatio however, education doesn't occu in a vacuum. Therefore, attention t life outside the classroom is als

Wellness Tips

A child is choking on a piece of candy. Quick - what do you do? Your friend chokes on a piece of steak as you dine in Baker. How can you help? These individuals cannot speak and need help immediately.

Answer: The Heimlich Maneuver. This simple procedure is a LIFE SAVER.

1. Get behind the choking victim.
2. Wrap your arms around the person's waist and cup your hand together in a fist.
3. Place your thumb side of the fist against the person's abdomen, above the navel and below the rib cage.
4. Thrust your fist into the person's abdomen with a quick, upward movement. Continue until the food or foreign object is expelled.

If you need to do the Heimlich on yourself, use your fist and press upward on your abdomen, or press your abdomen over the back of a chair.

For children over the age of one, use the same procedure. For infants alternate back blows with chest thrusts. To do a chest thrust, place two fingers parallel to sternum and press upward.

through a payroll withholding schedule proportionate to future earnings.

On jobs and employment: Governor Dukakis supports the development of an Education and Training Choices Program. He supports an increase in the minimum wage to $4.55 over the next three years (the Bush/Quayle ticket opposes any increase in the minumum wage). Governor Dukakis supports the Minimum Health Care Benefits plan, catastrophic health care, and expanded Medicare and Medicaid coverage. He also supports the creation of a National Day Care Partnership between labor, business, and government to develop a plan to provide affordable child care for all families.

On the deficit: Governor Dukakis supports reducing the federal deficit by controlling spending and collecting as much as possible in taxes owed the federal government through a one-time, limited federal tax amnesty and creation of a National Revenue Enforcement and Protection Program. Governor Dukakis opposes raising federal taxes except as a last resort and believes that taxes should be imposed on an ability to pay basis.

On US-Soviet relations: Governor Dukakis supports a mutual verifiable strategic arms agreement aimed at eliminating 50% of all strategic warheads. He supports compliance with the SALT II Treaty and strict interpretation of the ABM (Anti-Ballstic Missile) Treaty as long as the Soviet Union does the same. Governor Dukakis supports a comprehensive test ban treaty and limiting testing and deployment of anti-satellite weapons (the Bush/Quayle ticket opposes a comprehensive test ban treaty).

George Bush and Dan Quayle have gone out of their way to misrepresent and distort (dare I say lie about?) Governor Dukakis' record and his positions on the issues. I have presented the Governor's positions clearly so that you can make an informed choice in this election. I believe that once you take a close look at the two presidential candidates, the choice will be clear. The man best able to lead America and to make America a better nation is Governor Michael Dukakis.

CMB builds community

By Father David

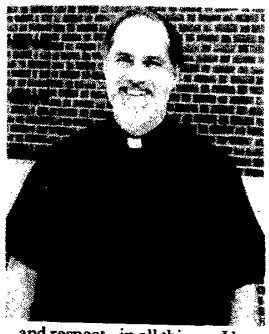
No matter who you are or where you go to school, all of us experience both the impulse to be with others and an impulse of alienation, sometimes even at the same time. We experience the need for attention and affection, a need to be appreciated and respected. On our own campus, there are lonely voices crying out for intimacy.

As a college community, there are many ways to promote a healthy solidarity with others. In our collaborative effort and common dedication to the pursuit of truth, organizations abound, interest groups develop and close friendships are formed. But, is this enough to satisfy our yearning for intimacy? Not always. After all, there is more to life than studying and going to meetings. As a campus minister, I sense a genuine hunger for community and intimacy. Why else are there complaints about lack of weekend activities and the changed alcohol policy.

One of the most important aspects of campus ministry and Christianity has always been the development of community. Community means simply that people are unified by a concern for the welfare of each other, interacting in a way which promotes the common good. Campus ministry seeks to add a dimension of faith to this development. "All the baptized, empowered by the Spirit, share responsibility for forming the Church into a genuine community of worship and service. Guided by the Holy Spirit, the Church is called, with all its limitations and sinfulness, to wend its way through history as the visible sign of the unity of the whole human family and as a instrument of reconciliation for all" (Dogmatic Constitutuion on the Church, 1964, #48)

Campus ministry must strive, as the Church on campus, to do just that. And that is where you come in.

If you expect your needs for attention , affection, appreciation and respect to be met, you must be a person who shows attention, affection, appreciation and respect - in all things. I have often found that people who complain the loudest are most at fault. Forming and building community, including the community of faith is our responsibility. We are the Church; we are the people empowered by the Spirit to create an environment condusive to hearing the lonely voices crying out for intimacy and overcoming the alientation around us. In doing that, we create community, the kind of community that benefits all of us because it promotes affection, appreciation and respect for others and is a healthy place to learn and grow.



Views about the Mascot

A few weeks ago, a student responded to an article I had written on why I believe Juniata College needs to adopt a new mascot. The anonymous author's opinion that I'm somewhat off base and absurd on this matter has been echoed by many of the students whom I've spoken to since then.

However, I remain disappointed and somewhat surprised that so many people fail to realize or even care that using the term "Indian" to refer to a native american is unacceptable. Plain and simply, it's a slang term just like nigger, Jew, Arab, and whiteboy.

In the response article, my fellow student seemed to want to suggest that I probably find virtually every mascot offensive. They then rose the example of the New England Patriots.

Personally, I find it appropriate that the United States has a franchise named after those who fought in the Revolutionary War. Quite simply, we are honoring them by recognizing the general characteristic of patriotism (which I assume they all possessed).

In attempting to honor the Juniata tribe, the college chose not to recognize a trait or characteristic, but rather assigned them a slang term and stereotypical image. To parallel this, suppose the Patriots were hte New England White Boys. After all, most of those who fought were white.

In conclusion, if I'm so far off base, then why did the students of Stanford and Syracuse University recognize the degrading nature of hte term "Indian", and disassociate it with their school? Subtle as it may seen, the Indian mascot perveys a sense of insensitivity towards minorities, and may be one reason so few minorities attend J.C. It's my hope that we "get real". Realize the year is 1988 and not 1963, and change our mascot!

-Chris Forney

I would like to comment on one of the disgusting, stereotypical representations of the Native American that can be found on this campus. I am referring to various bumper stickers that depict a man with a feathered headband and some sort of paint on his face, which is accompanied by the phrase, "Scalp 'em Indians". It's a shame that the student body does not really understand how this is a blatantly derrogative representation of our Native Americans. This reduces the Native American to some sort of barbarian. Is this really the nature of the Native American? Of course not. The issue of changing the name of the mascot is certainly relevant. The use of such a stereotype by an academic institution is a paradox. I would encourage the student body to consider this issue intelligently.

important (and should also contribute to developing one's intellectual background--but that's another letter). Are there ways faculty can be helpful? I'm not willing to come to a lounge party, and I doubt if students are interested in having me there, but there are other means--and there may be different means for different people--of getting together in ways that would kill the proverbial two birds with one stone. "Something to do around here" and better faculty/student communication are the birds; what stones can we find to throw at them? My sense is that "everyone" reads the Juniatian--could Juniatian reporters undertake a series of articles on different views? Perhaps these articles could also address the problem of where within our organization to go with ideas--Student Government? somewhere in Student Services? some other faculty committee? all of the above? I'm sure other people have good ideas; I'd like to hear them and see some of them put into action.

Sincerely,
Ruth Reed, Prof. Chemistry

Group for writers now on Campus

By Christopher Tull

A writer's group has formed on campus that allows students a forum for their creative output, allowing student writers of poetry, short stories, personal essays, and other forms of creative output to share and discuss their work with others in an informal, relaxed atmosphere. Writers know how invaluable this type of group can be in helping to refine your work and share it with others of similiar interests.

The group was formed through the efforts of Martin Lammon, visiting instructor of English, and Juniata student Janine Hyde. The group meets every other Wednesday evening and all are invited to attend. Gratitude is extended to Professor Hofeit for allowing the group to meet at his home, and for information regarding meeting times and any other questions you may have please contct Janine Hyde box 1468 or Martin Lammon 101 Quinter House, ext. 460.

Yoshie and Eriko present a program on the Most Unique Culture — Japan

By Pam Mertz

If one ever wanted to learn about a culture very different from the United States', then the Japanese culture would be one to experience. Students had the opportunity to learn about Japan on Japan Night held on October 24 in South's carpeted lounge.

The program opened by allowing students to try two different kinds of tea served in Japan, a green tea and a brown tea, and "Okonomiyaki." This was a fried food like an omelette. There were also rice crackers and Japanese candy available. The two Japanese exchange students, who were dressed in kimonos, served the food and presented the program.

Japan, "the land of the rising sun," consists of four main islands: Hokkaido, Honshu, Kyushu, and Shikoku. In Japanese, Japan is pronounced "Nihon" or "Nippon." Japan consists of 75% mountains and 380,000 sq. km of land. There are approximately 120,000,000 people living in Japan.

Differences among the Northern and Southern islands of Japan were discussed. The differences between two major cities, Osaka and Tokyo, were also discussed. For example, the people of Osaka are generally more traditional than the people of Tokyo. There are also language differences.

Travel is very efficient in Japan if one uses the trains. They are always very punctual. However, the streets in Japan are not as good as those in the United States. They are very narrow streets. Some of them can fit only cars going one way, but they are considered two-way streets.

In Japan the numbers four and nine are considered bad. The number four is usually associated with death. The number nine symbolizes pain. It is considred good, however, to take an odd number of things such as pieces of cake or flowers when visiting.

In Japan, kindergarten, elementary school, and junior high are considered compulsory grades as in the United States. Then 94%-96% of the students go on to high school. In high school, students have to work very hard to be able to later pass exams to get into a university.

At a university, one can relax a little because grades do not matter as much as the name of the university. The name is very important when seeking a job. However, a lot of pressure is put on a student to pass the exams to enter a university. Some students end up committing suicide after studying hard many years and then failing the exams.

There are two types of further education in Japan. One can go to a technical college to become, for example, a beautician or attend a special university to study a specific area such as medicine or dentistry.

There are national and private universities in Japan. National universities are much more expensive than private universities. Students have to pay for the education received at a university, but scholarships are available. However, expenses can be very high. For example, at a very good private university, to study medicine the first year could cost as much as $30,000-$40,000. Costs for subsequent years are a little less expensive, about $10,000 a year.

The Emperor of Japan, Emperor Hirohito, was discussed. He is seriously ill, and this is upsetting to many of the people because he has ruled since 1926. Some people even think of the emperor as a god. However, the emperor in Japan is a symbol of state and has no real power.

The current era in Japan is the Shoa. After the emperor dies he will be known as the Shoa Emperor as the emperors take the name of the era. The son of the current emperor will probably take over when he dies as the throne is inherited.

Slides were shown of Japan, and many questions were asked throughout the program. An interesting point made was that the Japanese know English and if you ask "Where is the Post Office?", they will be able to direct you to it. However, they do not know the word "McDonald's" as the restaurant has a different name in Japanese.

Power 92 92.3 FM WKVR

yesterday's classics... today's hits!!

By Laura Naughton

As the year goes on Power 92 keeps getting better and better. It's already November and many changes and improvements have been made at the station. Our Music Department has a done a fantastic job with the format change. They have also recently re-organize all of the record shelves and made the dee jays' jobs much easier. Joel Ranck, the Chief Announcer, has been training and placing new dee jays in shows and providing current dee jays with a much more than adequate sub-list. A new program guide has just been written and typed by our Program Director, Ann Telejian. With this new guide, we expect our station to be much more consistent in its format than it has been previously. Our promotions Department just concluded a very successful T-shirt/sweatshirt sale.

Thanks to Shaun Peck and his Business Department, WKVR has a new tape recoreder,and what a recoreder. D.J.'s now have the ability to tape requests and play them back over the air. The News Department can utilize this equipment for future Speakouts and the All New Power Profiles. Power Profiles will come out once a week and will provide J.C. with information and quotes from a prominent person on campus. Also, be sure to tune-in to Power 92 on Tuesday, November 8th at 2:30 pm. At this time, President Neff will be giving a live, remote broadcast from his office. This remote broadcast will be made possible by the Engineering Department which has done an exceptional job at keeping the station updated and running smoothly. Haven't you heard all of the football games this year on Power 92? Just wait, there's more to come!

President Neff will be interviewed on Power 92:

—Tuesday, Nov. 8
—at 2:30 pm
—from his office!

If anyone has suggestions for questions, call or come by the station!

Ho-Ho-Ho & Cheerio Madrigal time is here

By Kim Rapp

Picture this: Gentlemen, dressed in their best overcoats and top hats, escorting elegantly dressed ladies to their town's brightly lit and lavishly decorated hall. Here they feast on a traditional beef dinner and Yorkshire pudding while holiday music plays in the background. By candlelight the ladies and gents sing holiday favorites, and rejoice in the feelings of peace and contentment they share with one another just at that moment...

Sound nice? Well, this is not a fairytale. It is not another time, nor is it another place. This is December 9, 1988, at Juniata College. Yes, ladies and gentlemen, once again the magic of the holiday spirit will be captured at our annual Madrigal Dinner held in Ellis Hall.

This year we will be celebrating the Madrigal with an "Olde English" Theme. Carols will be sung by the Madrigal choir before our beef dinner is served. (This year, by the way, dinner will be served in Baker Refectory, Totem Inn, and the ballroom!) After dinner there will be an abundance of entertainment, including one of our favorites-Andy and Terry Murray leading us all in the season's songs.

This year's Madrigal promises to be our most wonderful ever at Juniata, and we don't want anyone to miss the festivities! We will be using a new system to assign tables, so please watch for information pertaining to when and HOW tickets for Madrigal will be distributed this year.

Cheerio!

Feel like clowing around?

On Sat. Nov 12, Juniata will host a clown ministry workshop. Kim Mitchell, (a JC alumnus), will teach all unexperienced clowns and vets about make-up, miming and worship/visitation settings.

Cost for make-up is only 50¢!

STUDENTS SPEAK OUT

Q.- Have the way presidential campaigns been run this year affected your views of the Presidential candidates?

John Deppen, a Jr. North-The campaign in general has degenerated in the past 3 or 4 weeks. There is a lot of negative campaigning and I think the American people are fed up with it. I think that Bush initiated the negative ads and I still think Dukakis is the man for the job.

Karen Glasgow, a soph. Lesher-No, there hasn't been too much mudslinging this year. You have to vote for the lesser of the two evils because neither candidate has proven that he is all that good.

Chris Petucci, a fresh. South-They haven't affected me that much. The Republican party is so much more organized than the Democrats. There has been a lot of negative campaigning on the part of Dukakis and his running mate, but this hasn't bothered me much.

Heloi Stark, a Jr. Lesher-Yes they have. People are trying to persuade me to vote for Dukakis and it has only made me a stronger Bush supporter. As for the mudslinging, this does bother me because it is so trivial and meaningless. Neither one has all that much important to say.

Steve Costalas, a Sr. Pink Palace-Sure it has affected me. I'm well aware of the two candidates and what they'll do for America. There has been, however, a lot of mudslinging maybe too much.

Get some direction in your life- come to Career Fair

CAREER FAIR ALERT!!! This year's Career Fair is coming to Juniata on November 9. It will be held in Baker Refectory from 11:30 to 2:00. The idea of this fair is to provide students the opportunity to talk with professionals about their careers in an informal atmosphere. A professional will be sitting at each table with a sign letting the students know what his or her career happens to be. A map will be posted outside in the lobby indicating where different professions will be located. Most of these professionals are graduates of Juniata and are here to inform us about their professions, not sell their jobs.

Each student should be getting a list of possible questions to ask through the mail.

Anyone interested in being a host or hostess can sign up in the Career Planning and Placement Office this week.

The following is a list of the confirmed professionals that will be participating in the Career Fair.

ELECTION

ing is a selective guide to the challenges "Newsweek" sees awaiting the 41st president:

DRUGS

Bush calls for a "war on drugs," while Dukakis calls for a real "war on drugs,". In fact, each candidate promises a continuation of failed policies. Drugs are cheaper and easier to get than they were in 1981. Dukakis blames the Reagan Administration. His answer is to double the number of narcotic agents, but he forgets to note that a 50% increase in the number of agents in recent years has had little effect. He also promises to cut off aid to governments that don't cooperate in the war on drugs; but when a Dukakis aide was asked what countries receiving U.S. aid would be cut off, the aide responded that he was "unable to answer" that question. Bush's ideas, unfortunately, are not much better. He promsies to institute the death penalty for drug "kingpins," which might make voters feel better, but would probably not be much of a deterrent. The Reagan Administration cut aid to treatment and education programs, which are swamped with applicants. Treatment is expensive, an average of $4,000 per person treated, and is often unsuccessful: Dukakis's program in Massachusetts, however, has been quite successful, a fact that has even been acknowledged by the Reagan Administration. Dukakis's program gives aid to anyone who wants help. Dukakis says he would like to implement the same type of program at the national level, and Bush has talked about treatment and education, too. But because both Bush and Dukakis have extreme promises about controlling the supply of drugs, it is unlikely that either will be in a position to make much of a dent in demand.

HEALTH CARE

Health insurance for the nation's uninsured has also become a major campaign issue. Under Reagan, House Democrats have quietly expanded Medicaid. Bush agrees with the Democrats, saying that he wants to extend Medicaid to pregnant women and children in families making under $21,480 for a family of four. He says his plan would cost $600 million, but health care experts argue it would cost considerably more. Dukakis wants employers to pay for health care. He'd require businesses to offer health plans to their employees as an employment benefit. Critics argue that this would probably force businesses to hire fewer workers, to cut wages, and to pass on the cost to consumers.

Yet another issue associated with health care is child care. Dukakis endorses the "ABC Bill," which would establish a large government-funded network of day-care centers. Bush wants to give $1,000 in cash to working families with incomes of under $20,000 to subsidize the cost of private child care. Neither candidate wants to face the real costs of a type of program required to provide adequate child care to those who need it.

EDUCATION

Dukakis plans to extend scholarships and loan forgiveness to those intending to enter teaching. Bush wants to target $100,000 in special grants to schools noted for their academic rigor to teach disadvantaged youths. At best, these plans will have only a minor impact on elementary and secondary public education. Higher education is where the national government has traditionally had the greatest impact. The Reagan Administration helped cut student aid, making it harder for middle-and lower-income students to afford a college education. Bush's plan is a "College Savings Bond," which would resemble a U.S. Savings Bond, except that the interest earned would be tax free when applied to college tuition. Unfortunately, the tax break on such a bond would not even be sufficient to cover a semester of college costs. Dukakis would like the government to provide loans to students that would be repaid over the student's career. Although the program would supposedly be self-financing, and repaid through a payroll deduction plan, many of the details of administration remain to be spelled out by Dukakis.

POVERTY

Geoge Bush would have the nation combat the growing problem of poverty and homelessness with the help of volunteers, principally teenagers and young adults. More promising, however, is his support for "early intervention" in the lives of underclass children. Included are child nutrition programs, preschool education, and counseling for teen parents. Though his <"Lthousand parents of light" reference remains obscure at best, those essentially private and individual interventions seem a major part of his program for social betterment.

Dukakis's answer to the related problem of homelessness is to use "public-private partnership" to subsidize mixed-income projects built in small clusters. He also proposed allowing IRA savings to be used as a down payment on first homes. Typical of his proposed solutions, this program would require new federal programs.

The problem with the candidates' plans are revealing: Bush's plans, though plausible in theory, are unlikely to prove adequate in practice, and taxpayers seem unprepared to accept the inevitable costs of Dukakis's approach.

ENVIRONMENT

The Bush campaign has used this issue to its advantage, focusing national attention on the length of time it has taken Dukakis to clean up Boston Harbor. In fact, however, Dukakis has a solid environmental record in Massachusetts. He has supported tough energy-efficiency standards for appliances, and has emphasized the use of renewable resources of energy such as solar power. Bush stresses energy production, opposes spending federal money on conservation. He supports the continued use of nuclear power "with the highest safety standards". Dukakis wants construction of such plants to cease until the adequacy of current safety standards can be verified. Both candidates endorse the increased use of natural gas.

These are the basic and most important issues which the candidates have addressed. Although the American public has been given such information, the people are not convinced. In a nationwide "CNN-USA Today" poll, only 13% of the people were satisfied with the quality of the candidates; 37% were dissatisfied. The fact remains, however, that one of the candidates will become the next President of the United States on November 8.

Juniata River Rugby Rats break even against UPJ

The Juniata River Rugby Club played away this weekend against the University of Pittsburgh at Johnstown. The game began hard hitting and evenly matched, and continued in that fashion until midway through the first half when our wing-forward was removed from the game. Doug Henry was taken off the field by the referee, who did not allow a substitute for Henry. From there, the game continued to be hard hitting, with a slight disadvantage for the Rats with one less man.

By half-time UPJ had scored once and missed the conversion, making the score 4-0. Steve DuMars, captain, gave the team an uplifting speech at half-time and they were ready to go out and take the lead. The second half was much like the first, exemplified by hard hits, and an even matchup, but the UPJ team made their way into the try zone two more times and convert one time for a second half score of 10-0 and a total of 14-0.

The River Rats were able to make their first points of the day in the second game after several substitutions were made, one of which was Jim Golden. He gave the Rats an irreversible lead of 4-0 after a missed conversion. Late in the second half the Rats scored on a beautiful 40 yard run by John Swanson. The conversion was made by Tim Garvin, which made the score 10-0. The Rats came out victorious with 10-0 prevailing as the final score.

This Saturday the Juniata River Rugby Rats will be travelling to Bloomsburg for their final game of the 1988 fall season. So let's cheer on those Rats!

Blood drive successful as JC answers need

On the 27th of October, the Bloodmobile extracted well over 130 pints of healthy American blood. The day turned out to be very satisfying for both the participating students and the American Red Cross Blood Services.

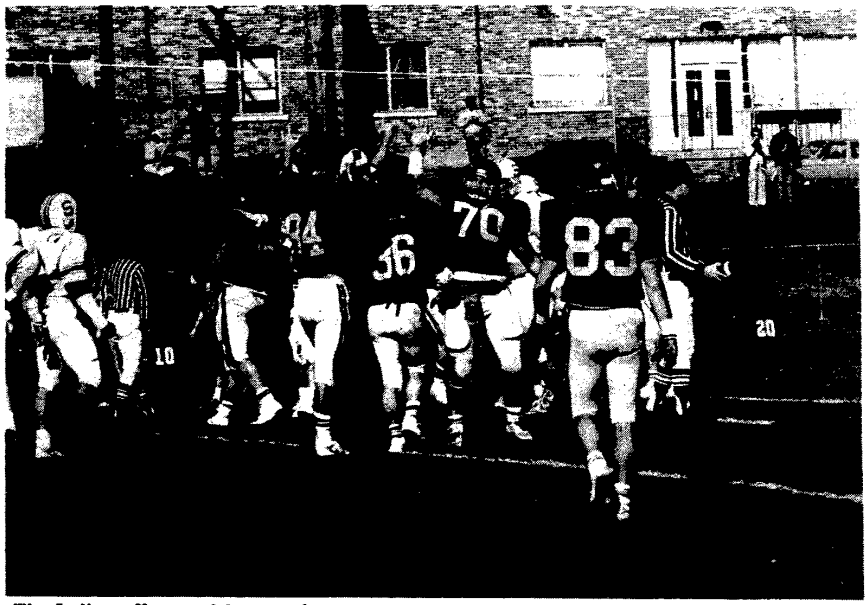
The largely volunteer organization was very pleased at the turnout. The quota set was 100 pints for the college and that was easily surpassed due to the generosity of the students.

The Bloodmobile has a very serious responsibility in meeting the demands of blood from the Johnstown area. Per week, this requirement is 450 pints and usually per month the group can expect to have collected up to 3,000 pints of blood.

Juniata College is visted 3 times a year by the Red Cross. They rely heavily upon volunteers both from the community of Huntingdon and the college, as well as their own body of voluntary workers. Only a small staff of professional nurses are paid a salary, all other participants do so at the expense of their own time.

If the Bloodmobile encounters difficulties; i.e. in a lack of response from potential blood donors in the areas they visit, then it can result in surgeries being cancelled, particularly during these winter months when the demands for blood increase. Lective surgery decreases in the summer and the demand in this area is considerably low.

The relaxed, informal atmosphere of the visiting Bloodmobile made even the first-time donors at ease. So if anyone else still has trepidations concerning volunteering their blood, I can assure you it is a very painless experience.



The Indian offense celebrates after scoring in the second half. Leading the celebration is #70 "Fatty"Martin.

Spikers conclude season, MAC playoffs await

By Mike Antenucci

The Women's volleyball team concluded its regular season this past week by winning three matches and dropping another. Victories over Lebanon Valley, Robert Morris, and Grove City put the Indians at 33-6 entering this weekend's MAC playoffs.

Juniata swept past Lebanon Valley in three straight games 16-14, 16-14, 15-13. Rhonda Bygall recorded 21 kills, Melinda Selby added 13 along with Laurie Snow, who also had 15 perfect passes. Angie Shue had 13 perfect passes and Larissa Weimer led the defensive charge with nine stuffed blocks.

The Indians continued to roll with a victory over Robert Morris 15-5, 15-7. Jackie Rebert had five service aces and six perfect passes. Weimer had another nine blocks and Selby added four kills.

Grove City went down quickly also, 15-2, 15-5 to the Indian attack. Selby had nine kills, Bygall seven blocks and Rebert seven perfect passes. Juniata wasn't so lucky against Allegheny. The Indians fell to defeat 10-15, 15-13, 13-15 in a tight match with their Division III foe. Rebert had 15 kills and 10 digs, Selby added another 11 kills and Gina Leis notched 13 perfect passes. Rhonda Bygall and Laurie Snow had 18 and 13 stuffed blocks respectively.

JC travels to Messiah College, the site of the MAC playoffs, this weekend to try and win their eighth straight conference title.

Indians fall to Red Flash

The Juniata men's soccer team wrapped up its 1988 season at St. Francis this past Saturday. The Indians fell short to the Red Flash 2-1 and finished the season at 2-11-3 and 0-4-2 in the MAC.

Seniors on this year's Indian squad were Steve Grater (co-captian), Jim Kauffman, Bruce Nardy, Tim Park, Brian Roselli (co-captain), and Drew Spector. Grater finished as the team's leading scorer with eight goals.

Defensive coordinator Brad Small and his assistant Steve Lach look on as coach Small yells instructs from the sideline.

DeRenzo's efforts earn him Juniatian AOW

Sophomore halfback Dennis DeRenzo of Reading is this week's Juniatian Athlete of the Week. DeRenzo, a graduate of Exeter High School, rushed for 179 yards on 35 carries and scored one touchdown in a 21-20 loss this past weekend to Susquehanna.

He also had 2 receptions for 37 yards. His rushing totals were the best since Dale Sparks ran 37 times for 181 yards against Lycoming in 1969. It was the fourth-most carries and sixth-highest rushing yards in a game by a Juniata back. These numbers have allowed DeRenzo to establish a new Juniata record for all-purpose yardage in a season with 1,043 yards, breaking the old mark of 1,069 set by Dave Murphy in 1984.

Popsicle

The first popsicle was called an "epsicle," after its creator, Frank Epperson of San Francisco, reports the Kids' World Almanac. One cold night in 1905, Epperson accidently left a mixing stick in a glass of lemonade on his windowsill. The following morning, the lemonade was found frozen into the first "ice lollipop."

Sophomore tailback Dennis DeRenzo is persued by a Susquehanna defender in last Saturday's game. DeRenzo rushed for 179 yards on 35 carries.

SU slips past Indians
Wilkes last MAC tilt

By Mike Antenucci

I thought it was the re-birth of Tom Dempsy at first glance, but it was only Randy Helt, the 6'2, 248 pound place kicker for Susquehanna University. His efforts in the fourth quarter were the deciding factors in a 21-20 crusader victory. As Juniata dropped to 4-3-1 and 4-3 in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Helt's 46 yard field goal with seven seconds left to play in the game aided his other field goals of 36 and 37 yards to mark Susquehanna's third straight win over the tribe. The one point victory overshadows an outstanding effort by Juniata's Dennis DeRenzo who rushed for 179 yards on 35 carries.

The Indians missed out on their first scoring opportunity when John O'Neill booted a 37 yard field goal wide right. SU took advantage of the Indian miscue and scored four plays later when David Battisti connected with Joe Witt on a 57 yard touchdown pass. Helt missed his long extra point attempt of the game as SU led 6-0 with 6:18 left to play in the first quarter.

The tribe bounced back early in the second quarter to take a 7-6 advantage when Cubby Davis hit Mike Cottle from seven yards out. O'Neill's conversion gave the Indians the lead with 10:57 left to play in the half.

The Indians fumbled on their next posession and SU took advantage of the JC error driving 66 yards on seven plays. The Crusaders attempt for a two point conversion failed, as SU took a 12-7 lead into the locker room.

JC had a great field possession on their second series of the third quarter and cashed in on a Dennis DeRenzo three yard run. The tribe decided to go for two and converted, but illegal motion against the Indians nullified the score. On the second try they failed and Juniata held a 13-12 lead with 8:54 left in the third period.

Just two minutes into the fourth quarter, Helt kicked his first of three field goals to give the edge to SU 15-13. The Indians struck right back on their ensuing possession, marching 80 yards on 11 plays to take a 20-15 lead with 7:25 left in the game.

Susquehanna kicked a field goal with four minutes left to cut the margin to 20-18 before Helt booted the game winning 46 yarder.

Nuch's Notes: Juniata amassed 27 first downs and held Susquehanna to 15. The Indinas netted 422 total yards, 267 via the ground. The tribe controlled the clock for 32:24 to SU's 27:36. Dan Crossey was the second leading rusher, gaining 54 yards on six carries.

Cubby Davis was 12 of 26 for 155 yards. He threw two TD's and two interceptions and was sacked once. Mike Cottle was the leading receiver with the six catches for 48 yards, while Don Betar had two grabs for 46 yards. Dennis DeRenzo surpassed Dave Murphy to become the leader in single season all-purpose yards.

Smokey Glover and Frank Gay led the defensive surge, each recording 11 tackles. Glover also added a pass sack, Gay had three pass break ups. Dave Ritter and Steve Campbell also recorded sacks and Bob Herzog picked off career inteception number eight.

Wilkes was on the very short end of a 61-0 blowout this weekend at the hands of Widener. This will be the 24th meeting between the Colonels and the Indians, Juniata leads the series 13-9-1. Ash coached teams are 5-2-1 vs. Wilkes and 2-1-1 on the road.

Last year Wilkes was ranked 10th in the country and tied for first place in the MAC when they visited Huntingdon. The tribe soared to a 35-14 halftime lead and continued to ambush the Colonels 57-22. The Indians will conclude MAC play this week and wrap-up the season at home against Upsala on November 12th.

DeRenzo is not hte only member to re-arrange the record books. Here's how the others stand: Mike Cottle continues to tack on to his career reception total (201) and touchdowns total (33) via the air- both these marks rank on top. With two games remaining he has a chance to catch Dave Murphy in receiving yards, trailing the ex-steeler by 240 yards.

Cubby Davis is second in pass completions, pass attempts and passing yyards. He is third in TD passes and total offense and will more than likely end his career in the same positions. Don Betar is thirdin receptions with 102 and will stay in that spot being 54 behind Murphy. He will also remain in the third spot in receiving yards, but can surpass Jeff Barnes in TD receptions. They are tied at fourth with 17 each.

Jim Metz has 76 receptions, three behind seventh place and has five TD receptions, one behind two in the 10th place slot. He has 1,240 receiving yards (6th place), 41 behind Barry Drexler.

Dan Crossey has rushed for 1,371 yards on 333 attempts (9th place) and trails the next person by 48 yards. Tim Kirsh has 10 career interceptions, Bob Herzog has eight. Frank Gay leads the defense with 95 tackles.

As usual— The Greek speaks
Hey Joe! Take some credit

By George Zanic

No one asked me, but:

-Juniata's mens basketball team opens up the season in the Muhlenberg Tournament against fellow MAC power Kings College. Look for the same two teams to meet again in late February for the MAC championship game.

-Mario Lemieux is negotiating his contract with the Pittsburgh Penguins, if he wants the Civic Arena, they better give it to him.

-It amazes me when "fans" say Joe Paterno and Chuck Noll should be fired from their respective head coaching positions. These men are two of the greatest achievers in the history of thier profession. Just remember, the coaches can't make tackles, complete passes, or prevent injuries.

-Does anyone remember last November? All the "experts" were telling us Tommy Lasorda should be relieved of his duties as manager of the Dodgers. Lasorda sure did get smart over the winter.

-After the game with West Virginia, the Penn State equipment manager had to buy new athletic supporters because of the abundance of them left on the turf in Morgantown. Comliments of Major Harris, the Penn State defenders were faked out of thier jocks on several occasions.

-I'm glad to see UCLA lost to Washington St. this past weekend. Now the national championship won't be determined in the Rose Bowl, which has become a perennial bore.

-Juniata's football team has the two best receivers in the MAC, the leading rusher in the MAC, the best tight end in the MAC, probably the best quarterback in the MAC, and a defense that has done a great job for most of the year. So why is Juniata 4-3-1 you ask? I don't know, but I do know it's not from a lack of talent.

-All of a sudden, articles about Juniata's sports programs are turning up all over the state, even in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. There is only one person responsible, the Sports Information Director. Joe Scialbba has done a great job, and he doesn't get a lot of credit. He does Division I work with a Division III salary and budget.

-I have to apologize, I don't have my weekly cut on Philadelphia, so you'll have to wait until next week.

-What the heck, Penguins 4, Flyers 2.

X-country teams falter
MAC's close out season

The Men's and Women's cross country teams finished out the regular season this past weekend, each suffering losses to Messiah College.

In a 41-20 defeat, Mary Strapple was the first Juniata runner to cross the finish line in ninth place with a time of 22:00. Cricket Julius was three spots back in 12th place for JC.

The men didn't fair any better losing 40-15. Ted Breult placed fifth for the Indians, crossing the finish stripe in 28:29. George Bentzel was the next Indian in, finishing in 10th place.

Both the Men and Women will compete in the MAC's this weekend.

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXIX No. 9 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 November 10, 1988

A new program is coming to the Juniata College campus. Seven seniors have taken the responsibility as the committee of the "Special Friends Network". This program's purpose is to provide a fuller social life for the disabled citizens of Huntingdon County. The college students will voluntarily become involved in the community as special friends who provides a fun, caring and consistent relationship with the disabled in the community.

The disabled that are currently involved in the program range in age from 10 months to 28 years old. These people have been determined to be either physically and/or mentally disabled. The students that volunteer to be special friends do not need any kind of experience interacting with the disabled.

The special friend will be expected to meet with their "friend" at least twice a month, unless there are unforseeable circumstances. The committee has meetings periodically, so we will keep up on who is participating and who isn't. If the special friends spend money during an activity with their disabled friend they will be fully reimbursed, as long as an activity sheet and receipts are submitted to the designated committee member. Special friends spend money during an activity with their disabled friend out to diner, to a movie or just swimming in the Sports and Rec. Center. Some have just played games with them such as cards or frisbee; some even make brownies and cookies.

If this kind of program interests you we are eager to hear about possible volunteers. Please contact Stephanie Lantz 643-1544, Box 97, or Linda Lloyd 643-4139, Box 103. (Photo by Amy Nicklas)

KVASIR staff prepares fall 1988 publication

By Christopher Tull

You may have seen posters requesting student submissions of their literary work to KVASIR and wondered what is KVASIR and how the heck do you say the name? Well, the K is silent and it is a literary publication of works submitted by Juniata students. The name KVASIR originates from greek mythology, KVASIR being the god of poetry.

Submissions include poetry, short stories, sketches, and photography, and the staff has been culminating these works into a publication Juniata can be proud of.

The staff, led by chief editor Amanda Efron, and secretary/treasurer Janine Hyde, is supported by a group of co-editors who consider and discuss each submission. The co-editors include: Rob Biter, Mike Coleman, Heidi Lutz, Cindy Maclary, David Maxwell, Kris Newman, Edith Ellen Reuwer, Bill Samuels, Shelly Sanner, Kevin Seachrist, Sheila St. Amour, and Christopher Tull.

The winter '88 issue is in its final stages and works submitted hereafter will be slated for the spring issue. I strongly urge everyone to buy a copy of KVASIR when it goes on sale approximately the third week in December and also encourage those interested to submit your own work for publication. Jack Troy featured in national magazine

Jack Troy, an assistant professor of art at Juniata College and one of the foremost experts on wood-fired ceramics, has single-handedly placed this small, rural Pennsylvania town of Huntingdon on the maps of potters around the world. Troy was recently featured in a seven-page article in Ceramics Monthly (October, 1988) ;in which he discussed his twenty-six year relationship with clay.

"I was a sophomore phys. ed major at West Chester State Teachers College in my home state of Pennsylvania," Troy said in the opening paragraphs of the article. "One rainy February morning, in a class of a hundred or so young men, I suddenly stopped tap dancing to 'The Darktown Strutters' Ball' and asked myself, 'What are you doing with your life?' I can still hear Mr. Davis calling over the music, 'Troy! Troy!' as I went out of the gym's back door, heading for the registrar's office across the street. In a little while I would be an English major, on my way to writing this article."

Troy's decision proved to be a providential one, as it ultimately led to his first encounter with the medium through which he would make his lasting mark. "A few years later, I met Jim Kietzman, an artist and colleague in the high school where I taught English, and another phase of life kicked in like a metaphysical booster rocket."

"I often stopped by the art rooms on my way home, and several times watched Jim throwing pots for his family's use. I was quite content to be a passive observer until one day my amazement got the better of me, and I became Jim's student. For the first time, I really saw clay home in on the wheel's axis, then will itself to become another thing entirely. All this right between Jim's hands! I wanted to find out what it felt like to experience that at close range."

Thus began Jack Troy's relationship with clay. In the article, entitled "Potter: Excerpts From a Life," Troy recalls walking down a Manhattan street and happening to look up, "there on the window sill was one of my bottles, completed by the addition of a yellow rose. It stopped me in my tracks...," he said.

"I taught English for five years in high school, took summer workshops twice at Alfred University and continued to pursue my interest in ceramics through the late '60s. In 1967, Juniata College hired me to direct its freshman composition program and to teach American literature. Huntingdon proved to be an ideal town for a potter: 12 miles from a silicon carbide factory, seven from the sand and silica plant, seven from a grog processor who regularly had on hand several hundred pallets of high quality firebrick, and three miles from a fireclay plant. Currently, about 15 sawmills within 20 miles of Huntingdon provide fuel for the anagamas, which we fire about six times per year.

"I built my first gas kiln shortly after arriving in town, and began teaching ceramics at the college in addition to English classes. By 1972, our studio had expanded in size, and I chose to teach ceramics part time, ceasing my duties in the English department. During the next four years, I developed my potting skills, designed and helped build our house, and worked on becoming a studio teacher instead of a lecturer. Teaching, potting, and writing have continued to occupy me ever since."

Troy's fascination with the wood-firing process of the anagama kiln began in 1987, he states in the article. "Ten years ago I found a French wood-fired jug in a flea market just a few miles from the gym where I tapped my last dance. I had just written a book on salt glazing (Salt Glazed Ceramics, 1977, Watson-Guptill and Pittman, currently out of print), and the longer I looked at the jug the more I read from its surface some of the stormy

Editorial

Who would ever suspect a small, private college located in the mountains of central Pennsylvania as being unsafe? It's time that someone, namely the Administration, begins recognizing this increasingly dangerous problem. A once passive campus has become paralyzed with fear after rumours of attempted assaults on students have travelled through the grapevine.

It's no longer safe to walk anywhere on campus alone after 5:30 when it gets dark. How many people are in their rooms for the night after 5:30? Very few people are and it is unreasonable anyway to think that we should have to be. But that wouldn't solve the problem because our dorms aren't safe anymore. Anyone can walk in anytime without arousing suspicion, except in Lesher. Unfortunately, Lesher is not quite big enough to house all female students.

The only prevention suggested by the administration thus far is to use the "buddy system". It's not always possible to find someone else who is going to the same place you are at the same time. This is not the solution to the problem.

At least a beginning would be to install an adequate amount of lights around campus. The amount of lights around campus does not begin to light the walkways. A few thousand dollars invested in some street lights would be a much less costly price to pay than for some student to have to pay with their life.

Perhaps another solution would be an escort service. Most college campuses provide for an escort home for anyone that requests one. Either students or security could be available on a nightly basis for students. That, too, is a small price to pay.

Safety is something most people don't think about until something happens which threatens their safety. This is a call to the administration to address this issue and do something about it before a student gets hurt, because then it will be too late.

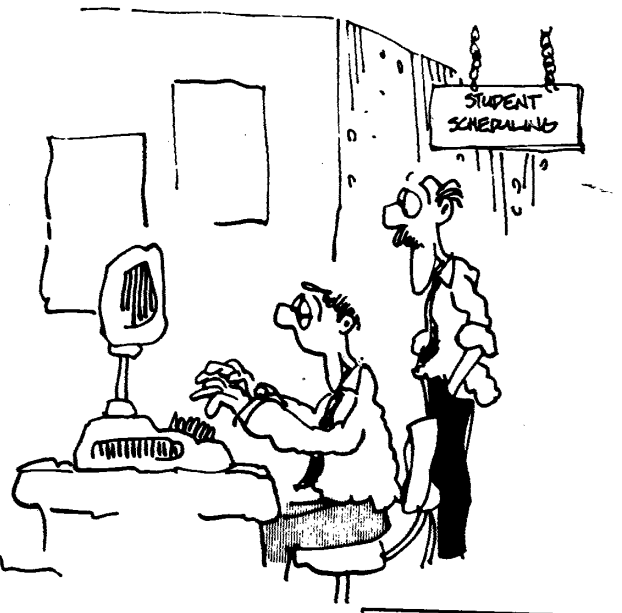
"The computer apologizes but seems to think that since it was manmade a mistake of this magnitude was inevitable."



Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

"There are very few things in our lives that we can't fix." How do you react to this statement or, if you will, this point of view? It repeatedly surfaces in counseling sessions and it represents a counseling philosophy that has been advocated for many years at Juniata by yours truly.

When we stop and think about it, most of the problems we confront in our personal, academic, and social endeavors are exacerbated by our perceptions, that is, how we interpret or internalize particular situations, persons, and/or events. In the words of Epictetus, a first century Stoic philosopher, "Men (and women, too) are disturbed not by things, but by the views which they take of them." The issue, it seems to me, is to work on our perceptions. Easier said than done, right?

How do we change or alter our perceptions? Albert Ellis, the developer of rational emotive therapy (RET), brings an interesting perspective to this question by means of his ABC model. Ellis suggests that it really isn't the situation, event, or person(A) that causes the anxiety or stress(C), but rather the way we choose to interpret(B) the potential stressor.

The stress or anxiety associated with test-taking or other evaluative situations is a prime example of Ellis' model. It's not the exam itself(A) as much as what we tell ourselves about it(B) that leads to the increased anxiety(C).

It is critical to keep in mind that most of the emotional stress we experience is self-induced, that is, we bring it on ourselves. It is self-imposed by faulty thinking and, according to Ellis and other cognitive therapists, our irrational beliefs (point B in his model). We can learn to dispute these irrational thoughts through a number of cognitive behavioral techniques. We will examine a number of them next time.

Be good to yourself and change those negative thoughts into positive thoughts. And remember, meaningful relationships don't just happen. Tell the people who are important to you how you feel about them.

"Mono" is an acute disease which occurs world wide. It is generally characterized by high fevers, a very sore throat, enlarged lymph nodes, and sometimes abdominal tenderness. The causetive agent of the disease is thought to be the Epstein-Barr virus.

Many persons may have "mono" with nonspecific vague feelings of tiredness, scratchy throat, or discmfort but do not seek medical attention and in many cases do not even realize they have the disease. Conversly, one with more severe symptoms may not have "mono" at all.

The disease is diagnosed by the health professional's evaluation of the signs and symptomms, and confirmation by laboratory testing. These tests include a CBC (complete blood count), a mono spat, and a test of liver enzymes. (SGOT,SGPT) some spleen and liver enlargement and tenderness often accompany "mono", thus accounting for the abdominal tenderness.

Contrary to popular belief, "mono" is not considered to be highly contagious. It is spread by secretions of the resperatory sysytem - thus named "The kissing disease." Incubation period is 4-7 weeks.

Most cases occur in early spring and fall and can often be found in student populations, especially those where common living areas are shared.

The majority of "mono" sufferers have mild to moderate symptoms which last 1-4 weeks and recovery is uneventful. But complications can occur if proper rest and diet are ignored. There is no specific or effective treatment other than relief of symptoms, and no preventive measures exist. Antibiotics are useless unless a secondary infection is present.

If you have fever, unusual tiredness, swollen glands, watery eyes, sore throat or abdominal tenderness, see a health professional so that conclusive documentation may be obtained.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I would like to share an experience I had last weekend that restored my faith in the American people.

It all started on Friday night when I received a phone call from my dad. He informed me that my ailing grandmother had taken a turn for the worst and wasn't expected to make it through the night. I awoke the nextg morning waiting the fateful phone call that would alter my next few days worth of plans. It never came. After a few hopeless hours of trying to study, I decided to call and find out what was happening. My mon, who was staying in the hospital with my granny, said that she made it through the night but it was only a matter of time. Deciding that I couldn't live with myself if I didn't try to see her one last time, I decided to make the three and a half hour journey to Hazelton.

I should have known the trip was doomed to disaster, when I locked my keys in my car while trying to get gas at Sheetz. They wouldn't give me a coathanger but called the police. The police took 45 min. to get there and then used a coathanger anyway. Its now 4:30. Visiting hours end at 8:00.

I made the trip in 2 and a half hours. My granny, whom I was the closest to of all my grandparents, looked awful. Her kidneys shut down and she was filling up with fluids fast. All that could be dne was to guess what would be the ailment that would cause her death (diabetes, cancer, weak heart or shut down kidneys).

I left Hazelton that same evening. I could hardly see the road due tothe tears in my eyes. They were so bad I didn't notice that I had put my car in

Thank you Juniata! The results are in from our recent survey and Power 92 is Juniata's favorite radio station!

Listenership increased from 34% of the campus in the spring of 1988 to 54% this fall. That makes Power 92 the most listened to station among Juniata College students. Management attributes the large increase to several factors.

First, Power 92 is playing a wider variety of Top 40 and classic rock to appeal to more listeners. Also, the increased usage of ABC News service is attracting more listeners. Specific survey result requests should be addressed to the station manager. 54% of the campus listens to Power 92! Thank you Juniata!

Rugby Club ends season on winning play

The Juniata River Rugby Club finished up its fall campaign in a dramatic fashion with a last minute victory over Bloomsburg University Saturday. With the score tied at 4-4, John Swanson dropped a pop kick over the Bloomsburg back line and smothered their fullback as he tried to retrieve the ball. The subsequent loose ball was picked up by freshman Frank Carey who"s pass set up Charlie Courtney's dive into the try zone for the winning score. It was especially satisfying fo Courtney since he was playing in front of his family and friends. The game was tightly contested throughout with each team unable to move the ball effectively. Tom Wenger scored his first try twenty minutes into the game to tie the score at 4-4. No further scoring took place until Courtney's heroics in the final moments.

The victory marked Juniata River's second win of the season as they ended up with a 2-7 record. With over half the team being freshmen and sophomores, the club did not fair too badly against competition such as Penn State, West Virginia, IUP, and the Erie and Westmoreland Mens Clubs. The team will begin its spring campaign with its tour of Florida over spring break between March 4th-13th.

Special regrets go to team members Mike Buchheit and Doug Henry who have lost close friends in the past two weekends. Finally, a big get well card from the club goes out to Matt Carson who is suffering from kidney stones and pneumonia at home in the hospital.

Omar Good Prof Presents paper in Germany

Dr. Donald F. Durnbaugh, the 1988-89 J. Omar Good visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity at Juniata College, recently presented a paper at the Herzog August research library in Wolfenbuttel, West Germany.

Dr. Durnbaugh was one of two American scholars invited to a working conference on the theme of Radical Pietism, held from October 21 to 24. Twelve experts on Radical Pietism from the German Federal Republic, Switzerland, and the USA discussed the difinition, origins and outworkings of the movement, which originated in the late 17th century and flourished in the 18th century.

The title f Professor Durnbaugh's paper was+ "Radical Pietism and the Foundation of German-American Communitarian Settlements." The paper dealth with the beginnings of such groups as the Ephrata Community, Harmony Society, Separatists of Zoar, and the Amana colonies of Iowa. This and other conference papers are scheduled to be reproduced in a special issue of the journal "Pietismus und Neuzeit", published in Gottingen, Germany.

Dr. Durnbaugh also met with officials in Schwarzenau, Germany to negotiate final details about the creation of a visitors center, serving both local and foreigh visitors. Schwarzenau was the birth place in 1708 of the Church of the Brethren. Members of the denomination founded Juniata College in 1876.

events that shaped its identity. I wanted to incorporate some of those qualities in my own work, if I could."

That jug and I crossed paths at just the right moment, and my current work in anagama-fired porcelain and stoneware goes back to that encounter.... Geology, the source of all glaze, is uniquely present in these firings as air-borne minerals in wood ash combine in largely fortuitous ways, fusing in various patterns on the work. The key role played by chance elements in this process interests me far more than simply using reliable materials to execute 'an idea.'

"Every time I unload a kiln I find evidence to contradict Robert Arneson's grumbles assertion at a Super Mud conference years ago: 'There's magic in materials." It is precisely that magic which I court in my work, and fire is the vehicle by which it arrives."

In discussing the process, or the lack thereof, which he brings to his work, Troy intimated the genesis of the finished piece. "I don't begin with an idea and then make a clay one. In fact, I can hoestly say that, as far as I can tell, there is no intellectual basis for my work; It originates in hunches and notions, rather than ideas. Having never learned to draw, I don't sketch designs for pieces, but rather work toward finding a 'rightness' in each piece. In my mind, is an attic crammed with images of pots from many cultures, which I refer to with great zest. Image composting, rather than originating, is probably a good way to describe what I do..."

Troy admits that his work may not appeal to the tastes of each individual and shares an interesting anecdote to illustrate the point. "A few years ago a politely exasperated gallery owner in Washington, D.C., looked at a group of my wood-fired pots and said, 'We can't sell these; they're not... well, they're not today!' I thought about that on the way home, concluding that nothing gets to be yesterday sooner than today. I accept any sincere reaction to the pieces as being what the pots have coming to them. When they cool down, they're on their own. We each have our own places to be. The growing international support for wood-fires work suggests it can hold its own in today's glitz-ridden marketplace."

Troy, who is currently on leave from the college while writing a new book, resides with his wife, Marta Daniels Troy, in Huntingdon. The publication in which the Troy article appeared is circulated to over 35,000 subscribers each month.

Indians cruise past Wilkes, 52-12 Host Upsala in season finale

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata football team played Wilkes this past Saturday and finally had an offensive explosion which had been missing since the 38 points they scored in a victory over Leabon Valley. A 5-12 domination of the colonels even had big Jeff Haines get into the act with a 68 yard intereception return.

The tribe controlled the tempo from the start getting a 28 yard field goal on their first possession of the game. John O'Neill's efforts just four minutes into the first quarter capped an 11 play 44 yard drive. Wilkes then took their only lead of the game when Jim Rettinges returned a punt 60 yards for a touchdown. The point after faded as Wilkes held a 6-3 lead with 3:57 remaining in the first quarter.

Within a minutes time the Indians would regain the lead when Cubby Davis connected with Mike Cottle for a nine-yard score. O'Neill added the extra point and the rout was on. On th elast play of the first quarter Dennis scored his first f three touchdowns of the day, scampering 46 yards to give Juniata a 16-6 lead. Just under three minutes after his first score, Derenzo caught a screen pass from Davis and ran 69 yards for another Indian score. With O'Neill's conversion the tribe was in front 23-6. Wilkes scored their second, and last touchdown of the game with 8:59 remaining in the 2nd quarter. Craig Stevens' four yard reception from Sean MCagley pulled Wilkes with 11 points, but a two point conversion failed and the Colonels would get closer as Juniata went on to score 2 unanswered points.

Don Betar's 11 yard touchdown reception finished out the first half scoring, giving the tribe a 30-12 half-time lead. Juniata opened half number two in the same fashion. Just minutes into period three the Davis-Cottle connection struck again, this time from four yards out. The Indian lead was increased to 37-12.

Halfway through the third quarter Davis connected with DeRenzo on a 31 yard touchdown pass to give DeRenzo his third scord of the day and Davis hsi fifth touchdown completion. Davis tied his own school record for touchdown passes in a single game. The last time he matched that feat was last season against Upsala, the Indians' opponent this weekend.

The tribe capped off the day's scoring with 3:58 remaining in the third quarter when Haines provided the final margin victory with his dazzling world class speed interception return. The remainder of the game allowed for playing time and varsity experience for the underclassmen and second string players.

Nuch Notes: The last time Juniata scored over 50 points ever against Wilkes lasts year (Nov. 7) when the tribe crushed the 10th ranked colonels 57-22. Juniata compiled 22 first downs to Wilkes' 11 and combined for 482 yards of total offense while holding Wilkes to just 140. The Indians were 7 of 16 on third-down conversions and 2 of 3 on fourth down tries. JC controlled the clock for 34:33 to Wilkes' 25:27. The tribe recorded three sacks and three interceptions and suffered only one sack and gave up no interceptions.

DeRenzo rushed for 124 yards on 17 carries and also caught three passes fo 98 yards. Dan Corssey rushed 9 times for 41 and John Metz led all receivers with six catches for 66 yards. Mike Cottle was 19 to 28 for 276 yards and Jason Miller recorded his first college pass completion on two attempts for 13 yards.

John Spach needed to punt only twice averaging 35.5 yards a kick. Juniata held the Colonels leading rusher to only 32 yards with Tim Kush leading the way with 9 tackles. Dave Ritter had 7 tackles and 2 pass sacks, Randy Martin had a pass sack and pass break-up. Eric Little added the third Juniata interception. All total JC had 7 pass break-ups. The Indians host Upsala in the season finale. This will be the last time JC will play Upsala, the Indians picked up St. Francis to fill the void of week number 10. Upsala was trounced by Widener last week 45-12 and now stands at 0-9. Game time is scheduled for 1:30.

NCAA bound once again

By Mike Antenucci

The women's volleyball team won their eighth straight Middle Atlantic Conference title this past weekend at the host school of Messiah College. The Indians swept six matches winning 13 of the 14 games they played.

Juniata cruised in first round play defeating Moravian College 15-6, 15-1 and Delaware Valley College 15-11, 15-0. The Indians completed pool play by sweeping past Dickinson College 15-12, 15-6 adn then beating Western Maryland 6-15, 15-6, and 15-4.

Advancing into semi-final action Juniata handled Gettysburg in two straight games 15-6, 15-5 to set up the rematch with Western Maryland. This time the Tribe did the job in straight games, taking home the crown and an automatic bid to the NCAA National tournament with a 15-6, 15-7, 15-4 victory.

The Indians play their first round game tonight against Smith College, a team Juniata has already faced and beaten. The Indians region is hosted by Cortland State (SUNY). The winner of the Juniata-Smith match will face Allegheny College, the team Juniata lost to in its final regular season match. The survivor of the Juniata bracket will face either Rochester, Cortland, or Albany in the National quarterfinals on Saturday.

The Tribe takes a 39-6 record into the tournament as not a heavy favorite to go the distance as they have been in the past. But as we all know that is when things usually happen, when they are not supposed to. My Prediction: I can see the girls crowding the training room for at least another week, but that's OK, it gives me more time to bother Rhonda about giving up that Notre Dame sweatshirt!

Jaeger retires as coach

By Lance Marshall

After 10 years of coaching varsity soccer at Juniata College, Klaus Jaeger has retired from varsity coaching. After 10 years as head coach, Klaus has decided to give the job up to someone a little bit younger.

It was Klaus who was responsible for starting a varsity soccer program here at Juniata. After coaching the club soccer team for two years, there was obviously enough interest to start a varsity team. In 1979, Juniata saw it's first varsity soccer game. Juniata suffered a humiliating 15-0 loss, but since then the team has steadily improved. In 1981 Klaus recorded his first win over Lycoming. A corner kick by graduate Brian Bulloch was all that was needed to beat Lycoming in a 1-0 win. Brian became a 2nd team All-Star that year. Since then, Juniata has had 3 players make it to a MAC all-star team. The most recent player to be named to the all-star team was Steve Grater who was named to last year's squad.

New programs have always had difficulties in the beginning, but after 10 years, Klaus has turned Juniata into a competitor in the MAC division. It has been an uphill climb, but the team has always managed to rise and face the challenge. The team and Klaus are also grateful for the support given to soccer from the administration and community. More and more spectators are coming to home games and Juniata has now had its own contingent of fans at away games.

Klaus will continue the alumni soccer game played on Sunday mornings during Homecoming weekend. This year, 23 players returned and watched the varsity team "win" a 6-4 contest. This budding tradition at Juniata will be continued and supported by Klaus.

As for next year, the administration still has not yet decided on who will be the coach.

As usual— The Greek speaks

Juniata's head football coach Rob Ash left the field after a 51-12 victory over Wilkes last Saturday, I'm sure he felt a great sense of accomplishment as his seniorslet the attack in destroying the Colonels. Ash, however, should have hung his head in shame after what he did to senior Scott Rubel this weekend. Ash didn't add Rubel's name to the traveling squad for what would have been the final road game of his career. While his teammates were enjoying a great victory, Rubel sat in his dorm room and listened to the game on the radio and wondered what he had done to deserve this humiliation.

Rubel, a senior offensive lineman from Perkasie, has never thrown a pass, carried the ball, nor was he ever a hero in his four years at Juniata. Nevertheless, he gave four years of his life to Rob Ash and the Indian football program. Attending practices, watching films, lifting and running, he gave 100% in an effort to make Juniata a winner. It is apparent, however, that Ash only cares about wins and losses not the players who give so much to the cause. Well, congratulations coach, you go another win on Saturday. Due to financial considerations, only a limited number of players may travel to games in which an overnight stay is required. In the past, however, every senior has made every trip, and it was assumed that it was team policy to take all seniors. Whether the player was a vital contributor or a third team center, it was an honor to make the traveling squad. I think every senior who has played four years should be entitled to that honor, regardless of his status on the team.

Ash's first responsibility at Juniata is to win football games. It is for this reason that he should only put the players on the field who, in his opinion, will win football games. This article has nothing to do with laying time; all Scott Rubel wanted was to be with him teammates of four years as they enjoyed their final road victory. Nor is this article designed to condemn Ash's play calling or coaching ability. As head coach, those are his decisions and should not be second guessed. I will, however, second guess his decision to keep Scott Rubel in Huntindgon this weekend.

According the to information supp;lied by the Wilkes-Barre Holiday Inn, Juniata paid $42.50 for double rooms and $47.50 for triple rooms. Several players stayed in double rooms. If my math is correct, Rubel could have been added to a double room for a mere five dollars. I think that is a small price to pay for the commitment Scott has given to Juniata over the past four years. This is Division III football. The players are given nothing but the thrill of playing as their rewards. Scott Rubel played for four years at Juniata, and as a reward, he was treated like an outcast. I think Scott is entitled to an apology, but I really don't think an apology would be enough to counter the paid he went through while sitting in his dorm room listening to a football game on Saturday afternoon.

Cottle and Rebert A.O.M.

Mike Cottle of Everett and Jackie Rebert of Spring Grove have been selected the McDonald's/Juniata College "Athletes of the Month" for October.

Cottle, a senior split end and All-American candidate for coach Rob Ash, had 38 catches for 421 yards and three touchdowns last month. He is ranked first in the Middle Atlantic Conference in receptions and ranks fifth in that category for the entire NCAA Division III, according to the latest figures from the NCAA office.

A senior outside hitter and All-American candidate, Rebert had an outstanding month for the women's volleyball team and coach Larry Bock. She played "perhaps the best game of her career," according to Bock, while recording 20 kills in 3-0 shutout of Division II Gannon University on Homecoming weekend.

John Eastman from McDonald's of Huntingdon will present both Cottle and Rebert with plaques honoring their accomplishments.

Cottle, a graduate of Bedford High School, is the son of Don and Bonnie Cottle of RD#1, Everett. His program of emphasis at Juniata is elementary education.

Rebert is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dale and Carole Rebert of RD#4, Spring Grove. Her program of emphasis is in business administration.

low gear instead of drive. I drove that way for 80 miles averaging 70 mph. Shortly after I noticed my mistake I was run off the road into a dtich by a non-alert truck driver. After regaining my composure, I headed for the next exit to asses my damages.

My car was dead adn i was in the middle of nowhere.

i managed, after three tries, to get a police officer to give me assistance. It was 11:30 and everything except a truck stop was closed. I went to a truck stop and a man by the name of Bob Hess said that when he got off at 12:00 midnight he would see if he could help. It was now 11:45 pm. We went to my car and he decided that I had better not try to drive it any further. He suggested I get a room at the Holiday Inn and find help in the morning. He drove me six miles to the Holiday Inn and they were booked. They were also the only hotel for 26miles. Bob then offered to put me up at his place for the night with his girlfriend Brenda. Brenda made me a delicious, hot meal and I went to bed. In the morning she made us both breakfast and we went to get my car fixed. They drove me six miles to a gas station and then another fourt miles to show the attendant where the car was and then back to the garage. The mechanic decided that it would cost 800 to 1400 dollars to fix. Bob and Brenda waited. After several phone calls and about three hours later I had a friend from Penn State come pick me up and Bob and Brenda saw me on my way.

What those two people did for an entire stranger that night was something very few people would do. They didn't have very much, and they both had planty of problems of their own, but they opened their hearts and their home to help a person in need. What I have learned from all this as I hope everyone who reads it will learn as well is; even if one is not a religious person, sometimes one should trust God to watch over him as he does good things for others. We hear daily of how bad things happen when we try to lend a hand but here is a case that ended well, I may owe my life to Bob and Brends and you can bet, the next time I see someone in need of help I'll remember them and help unselfishly.

Thank you.

Vol. XXXIX No. 10 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 November 17, 1988

This year's Women's Volleyball team is on their way to The Final Four once again. Juniata's volleyball team has appeared in the Final Four in five of the last seven seasons. They were national runner-up in 1981, the first year of the tournament. Listen to the live broadcasts of the Final Four on Power 92. For more details see the Volleyball story in the sports section. Good Luck to the girls!

Are JC students living on the cutting edge?

By Terry Noyes

This past weekend eleven students and myself went to Pittsburgh for a mini-conference. As we sat in the luxurious ballroom of the Hilton Hotel trying to shake off a very short night's sleep, we were called to attention by the gripping words of the speaker.

This man had lost his brother in the Vietam War and he spoke on the "glory" of the 60's. He is a college professor and has been perplexed by the great interest, almost longing many students display for this era. The interest in the "Big" questions of justice, truth, wealth, etc. were at a crucial concern to many young adults during the 60's. These students seemed to be living on the cutting edge, and many today long for this passion.

Yet, he reminded us, the trauma of this generation seems to have been forgotten. A great price was payed to bring about such overwhelming concern for these issues. The country watched as teenagers were sent home from Vietnam in body bags and as rioting turned our social stability inside out.

He noted also the great assimilation that has occured to the majority of the people involved in this movement. Those who once condemned the accumulation of wealth are now working hard within the system to get a piece of the good life for themselves and their families. And though the world still suffers from great crimes of injustive the cry for justice has weakened as the problems have gained distance.

He concluded not by causing us to feel guilty but by offering a sincere warning. As students, it is not difficult to work with ideals, to live and long to live on the cutting edge of the bigger issues, poverty, truth, justice. Yet the assimilation process is all to threatening. It's of major importance to realize this and guard against it.

Becoming united with and strengthened by others who you feel are actually making a difference in this world is crucial. Their insights and support is invaluable.

Lastly, a Christian theologian Francis Shafer said of the sixties generation, "They asked all the right questions." Leaving us to ask, "Then what was wrong with their answers?" I believe that a movement based on human power alone will eventually reach the same fate as that of the 60's. To look to the God of Creation who himself is concerned with the "big" issues can give you the strength to remain 'on the cutting edge'.

Experts predict that the dollar will slide to a post-war low against the Japanese yen sometime in the next week. Traders and economists say the dollar is experiencing a down trend after a modest nine-month rally. Some experts say this dip in the economy is due to a public doubt that George Bush has a specific plan to cut the federal deficit.

According to the USA Today reasons for sex varies with age. Getting physical is the primary motive for young men to have sex and also for women over 35. Younger women usually have sex to express love, but studies show that as they get older physical pleasure is important. For men, physical drive dominates until about 35, but love takes over later. Seems a little backwards. When women want love men want to be phycical. Then when men finally want love women are ready for physical pleasure!

Marla Hanson to visit JC

On Wednesday night December 7th at 8:15 pm in Oller Hall, the lecture committee will present speaker Marla Hanson, who has a rare but true story to tell Juniata.

Marla Hanson, a New York City model and actress will be discussing her traumatic incident of being attacked by her landlord, who violently slashed her face. She will also be presenting her horrible courtroom experiences, in which she was blamed for the crime committed against her.

Due to her attack and courtroom trauma, Marla travels extensively across the United States lecturing as an advocate for Victims Rights, as well as getting involved in the judical system to help draft legislation to address the needs of crime victims.

Juniata should take complete advantage of having such a brave and interesting speaker on campus. Admission will be free for students and $2.00 for general admission.

Come listen to Marla Hanson describe how she struggled through an experience we all could never conceive of having.

Editorial

As I walked around campus this past week, I heard many remarks about the editorial which was printed in the last issue. Some people offered solutions to the problem, and some of these were quite good. I feel that one big point was not raised by anyone, though; that is the problem of eliminating the rumors.

The staff at Juniata boast about its open relationship with the students. This 'open door policy' goes all the way up the administrative line to President Neff. If students have a problem with the system here, they are encouraged to take the appropriate measures to remedy the situation. The only way the administration will know about a problem is if they are told about it.

We all know how rumors fly around a college campus, especially a small one such as Juniata. Sometimes it is hard enough as a student to figure out what is true and false, much less an administrative person walking past students on the path. Unless the news comes"straight from the horse's mouth," the administration does not know what to believe.

If you have had a bad experience on campus, such as a confrontation with a town person, tell someone in the administration yourself. Do not figure that they should know about it. A problem is best solved when approached directly, not from the back door.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

As a member of the Student Government, I feel compelled to respond to last weeks' editorial about the safety of the students here at Juniata. The administration is well aware of the many rumors that have been flying aroung campus, however, there has been only one incident involving two girls in North Hall that they have been able to substantiate. The administration has been investigating these rumors, but until further evidence can be found, the rumors will remain just that--rumors.

The administration, however, is not insensitive to the needs of it's students. They are in the process of providing more lights for the campus. The lights, in any event, will not replace good common sense. This includes locking your door, telling someone if you are going to be long, and using the buddy system. If you are unable to use the buddy system and you feel the need for an escort, security can walk you to your destination. The phone number for security before 3 a.m. is 643-4310. After 3 a.m. the number to call is 643-5583.

Randy Deike has assured the Student Concerns Committee that if there is enough of a demand for a student escort service then one will be provided. The administration feels, nevertheless, that once the rumors start to quiet down, the need for an escort service will diminish. The administration reminds its students to call security immediately if an unfamiliar or suspicious person is spotted on campus. In addition, students are reminded to notify authority if they are harrased in any way. It will be much easier for the administration to act accordingly if they have the facts. Above all, the administration encourages all students to use good common sense.

Sincerely,
Lance Marshall

Dear Editor,

In response to the Editorial in the November 10th issue of the Juniatian:

Yes, there have been many rumors spreading around Juniata concerning the safety of the students. Who would ever suspect that students at a small, private college would only report one of these assaults to the administration? If all of these assaults are not merely rumors, then why has only one of these incidents been officially reported?! The administration cannot be expected to take action based on rumors.

In response to the lighting on campus, more lights were installed last year and students are encouraged to bring such concerns (like dark areas) to Student Government meetings.

I do agree that we tend to take our safety for granted until something happens. But to expect administration to provide escort services which increases expenses, is very unreasonable given the circumstances. What would be the basis? One incident, in how many years? Don't assaults occur occasionally in your hometown? Generally, I think that the attack on the administration in last week's editorial was merely based on rumors and misconceptions without appropriate investigation.

Dear Editor,

In the wake of the Presidential election, with the issues and controversies put aside, I would like to make one final observation. My observation is not critical of anyone's personal convictions about American politics, but rather it's an observation critical of the apathy that runs rampant among young voters.

It is a well established fact that young voters consistently have the lowest voter turnout. To me this is amazing. Is it not true that we, the young voter, have the most to gain or loose, as the case may be, from the presidential election? The man filling the Oval Office will occupy that spot for four years and the implication of what this person does can last a long time. So would it not be sensible that the people who have the most to gain would be the part of the population that would vote the most? However, it does not work this way. In covering the campus election results for Power 92 I found much political apathy and ignorance among campus residents. All but a few people gave responses about who they would vote for. When asked if they had actually cast a ballot very few had done so The reasons they gave for not voting were "I'm not registered.", "My absentee ballot never came.", "I don't care." Even though I was somewhat disappointed that these people did not count or that involving themselves in politics would be a waste of their time. This really gets me down, The one person I surveyed asked me what my pupose was in the survey and went on to say that there were not any good politicians. Not caring for the present state of conditions is not an excuse for not voting, as a matter of fact that the contrary is the case.

A vote is not necessarily an endorsement of a candidate, it can also be seen as a vote for change or to keep the status quo. Being dissatisfied does not dictate apathy, but rather it should create activity. Change should not be something that is expected to be done by others, but rather it should be seen as a self-motivating element.

I would like to share a bit of wisdom from Daniel Berrigan as the Thanksgiving holiday approaches:

Sometime in your life,
hope that you might see one
starved man,
the look on his face
when the bread finally arrives.
Hope that you might have baked it or bought it or even needed it for yourself.
For that look on his face, for your hands meeting his across a piece of bread, you might be willing to lose a lot,
or suffer a lot,
or die a little,
even.

If those of us who are blessed with bounty would resolve to share that bounty with just "one sarved man," we would be on the road to the creation of a more just society.

Join the Great American Smoke-out on Thursday, November 17. Millions of smokers across the country will take a break and try not to smoke for 24 hours. How about you? If you don't smoke, adopt a smoker for the day and promise to help that friend get through the day without a cigarette!

60% of adult smokers get hooked on cigaretts before age 14. Smokers who kcik the habit do not extinguish their risk of lung cancer with their last smoke. It takes at least 10 to 15 smoke-free years before a former long-term smoker's risk of lung cancer approaches that of a person who has never smoked, according to the American Lung Association. Nobody can predict in advance which smoker or former smoker will get lung cancer, It usually takes 20 years before the disease appears. The best way to avoid lung cancer is never to start smoking.

Smoking is also a main factor leading to heart disease and diseases of the blood vessels. When you smoke a cigarette, the nicotine makes the heart beat faster. The heart is forced to work harder and the carbon monoxide from the tobacco smoke cuts down the amount of oxygen carried in the blood to the heart.

Women who use the pill and smoke are at greater risk of a heart attack, and lung cancer has now surpassed breast cancer as the leading cancer killer of women. Babies born to smoking mothers generally are smaller in size and weigh less than babies born to nonsmoking women.

Between 500 and 5,000 nonsmokers die each year from lung cancer caused by second-hand or passive smoke. Workers who smoke have an absenteeism rate 30 to 40% higher, and have a 5% greater chance of hospitalization than their non-smoking colleagues.

No cigarettes are safe! Scientific research has provided no evidence that smoking low tar and nicotine cigarettes will reduce disease. So join SHAC, the Health Center, and the entire JC community in supporting the Great American Smokeout Thursday, November 17 by "Taking a Breather"

In the last article we discussed how our perceptions of situations, persons, and/or events around us can contribute to an increased level of anxiety or stress and thus prevent us from achieving success. More specifically, a person's perception of an upcoming exam, as an example, can lead to success or failure. One student may think of the exam in a positive way and view it as an opportunity to excel and to prove him/herself, as well as the professor, that he/she can successfully meet the challenge that the situation presents. That same exam to yet another student may be perceived as a threat and a situation in which there is very little chance to succeed. The approach we take is effected by our perception.

The difference between the two is what stress management expert Jerrold S. Greenberg and others refer to as selective awareness. Greenberg says we are all free to choose what to think but that all too often many of us attend to the negative aspects and not the positive. In our example of the test-taking situation, attending to the positive aspects can mean the difference between goal attainment and failure. The issue, then, is to focus on the positive and minimize or de-emphasize the negative.

Greenberg, among others, suggests it is important to realize that there are both good and bad aspects of any situation. Sticking with our test-taking example, exams and other evaluative situations are an inevitable part of the college experience. They are, as most students and faculty would admit, a necessary evil. Since we can't eliminate exams, we must learn to minimize or de-emphasize their impact on us by altering our perceptions of them, hopefully by becoming more selectively aware of their post-iive components.

In his book, Comprehensive Stress Management, Greenberg recommends an exercise whereby we list some typically distressing situations. A presentation to a group of people and having a relationship break up are two that he lists. We could also include our example of exams as a distressing situation. He then asks the individual to be selectively aware and to write down a positive feature of each situation.

Remember, we choose to focus on the good or bad in a situation or person, and, as Greenberg points out, focusing on the good is less stressful.

Be good to yourself, think good thoughts and focus on the positive.

A FEW QUIT TIPS

Hide all ashtrays, matches, etc.

Lay in a supply of sugarless gum, carrot sticks, etc.

Drink lots of liquids, but pass up coffee & alcohol.

Tell everyone you're quitting for the day.

When the urge to smoke hits, take a deep breath, hold it for 10 seconds, & release it slowly.

Exercise to relieve the tension.

Try the "buddy system," and ask a friend to quit too.

Election 1988 is history, as they say. Some people are very happy with the results, some are very discouraged and some are diligently looking for something in the procedures or in the results that is capable of sustaining interest in the political process.

For me, that "something" is what happened to the two preachers in the campaign. Pat Robertson spent a lot of money, had a tightly constructed organization and started with 40 million New Despensationalists and a proven television audience larger than the combined readership of the Washington Post, the New York Times, Time, Newsweek and the Los Angeles Times on his side - at least theoretically, (or theocratically).

He also appeared to be on the politically expedient side of the hot issues: abortion, school prayer, so called tough foreign policy and reduced social spending. He also did much worse than anyone expected. Afte one credible showing in the early primaries his campaign hit the skids in a ferocious descent that left all but the incurably faithful scrambling for the life lines. He has gone back to his T.V. show and will probably stay there in the '92 campaign.

Jessie Jackson's campaign treasure chest was almost laughably small. It was often hard to tell if he was running an organization or an improvisation, (to put it in Jacksonese), and he was exactly on the wrong side of what the experts declared to be the right issues. He also did much better than anyone expected. He won a few primaries, put some visible white into the famous rainbow and went to Atlanta with both moral and political power. It is probably the one safe prediction in U.S. politics that if Jackson survives the next four years he will be back and running.

What's my spin? Perhaps a significant number of people are beginning to tire of "where's mine" politics. Whether it is Bush lip-syncing "no new taxes" or Dukakis volunteering to be "on our side" we have been subjected to constant state of the art pandering to our self interest that has grown wearisome. Perhaps the idea of genuinely caring for each other and even making some real sacrifices to see a better nation is beginning to actually sound good to some people. The candidate managers, focus group leaders and hot button pushers who brought us this last campaign have a troubling cynical view of the American electorate. Maybe the rainbow is an early sign that their power will soon be washed up. Now that could be interesting.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Rush Blady

I just flew in from Hawaii, and boy are my arms tired. Sorry for that harmless bit of uselessness, but I had to make some joke about my four-issue vacation from the world of newspaper editorializing. I hope you enjoyed Trish in the meantime.

I met a prospective freshman today whom I think I soured to the merits of this college. It wasn't my fault entirely--I couldn't switch quickly enough into a "Hi glad to know you" mode from my "lost deep in thought" mode. She'll recover I hope--but then I'm probably over-emphasizing my own ability to get people down anyway.

It's a saddening thing when a person who normally bubbles over with exuberance and happiness and energy gets down. It puts the rest of us, the people who rely on them, in an even glummer mood. Think about it--you ever notice how anxious you are to cheer up a person who normally smiles, but isn't smiling right now?

Along about week 10, things around here start to deteriorate: namely friendships, relationships and sanities. That extra bit of strength it requires to be rational in an argument just won't come. People react in different ways to this phenomenon--my science major friends start to get all snappy and in need of a little ego-flapping, so I stay away. We "liberal arts" types (a patronizing label somebody at WKVR slapped us with) react by getting melancholy and introverted, I guess. Of course, I'm generalizing (this column's only a couple inches of type, remember), but I think the point is a well-documented one: the arguments start getting a little sharper, the parties start getting a little fiercer, the mornings start getting a little gritier, once we pass October 31.

Now, if that prospective freshman were to read this, she'd probably give up and run screaming from the Appalachians to seek refuge in the city, where at least there'd be things to do. But then she wouldn't be getting the whole picture. The College tends to force-feed prospectives lots of rhetoric on the "intimacy" of Juniata, the "wealth of tradition" we have here, that are the selling themes of the college. Well, as much as I like to complain that I was duped and shanghaied into coming here, Admissions has a point. Juniata is a little closer to a communitity than some places I've seen--certainly closer than Penn State, where your picture goes up under the "WANTED" banner in the post office if you say "hi" to passers on the sidewalk. This closeness is what makes the malaise of November so all-affecting. But doing away with November at Juniata would only make us more out of step with the real world. So how to cure it?

Remember Mountain Day? Remember learning that next time, you should remember gloves? Ever wonder why the gods chose to bless us with snow then, and rain on Homecoming weekend, but fair weather now? Remember your best party so far? Remember your own best moments--those were some of mine. Think ahead to Madrigal, and relative peace and harmony and all things holy on campus, at least for one night. Think of every good time you've had here so far, to weigh against the bad.

Is this argument too hokey? I guess if you never had any fun here at all, you wouldn't have any good to weigh against the bad. But I hope that that's not the case. Life is, I suppose, a see-sawish kind of thing here at Juniata: you can hardly ever get the damn thing to balance in the middle. Somebody's always handing back a crummy test, or snaking on your girl/boyfriend, or otherwise messing up your balance. But if you never had these things to burn you out, how good would the good times be, anyway?

Did I manage to cheer anybody up? Don't ask me to explain anything deeper than happiness, 'cause Bush got elected. 'Bye til next time.

(Last in a series of album reviews which somehow relate to happenings and trends larger than the individual album itself, but for which the album is quite representative.)

It all started innocently enough. In 1980, Peter Gabriel put out his third solo album. The last song on this album, Biko, used African rhythms and beats while Gabriel crooned in the choruses in his best tribal African. Six years later Youssou D' showed up to help out on "In Your Eyes". He and his band opened for Gabriel in both of his subsequent world tours. People didn't file out of the arenas to snag some beers during the opening. Most stayed. Many danced and seemed to enjoy the music. (I must admit that I base this on the two shows I saw in Philly, but I imagine it was similar everywhere) (Anyway...) Since 1985 we in America have been exposed to "foreign" music through things like Live Aid and Sun City; we've heard and loved Paul Simon's Afro-beat "Graceland" and jammed to Sting in Spanish. This what we tend to consider "international" music--a hip new trend brought to us courtesy of Warner Brothers, EMI and Capitol. For the most part, however, this music is really only the tip of the iceberg--an iceberg which has been around for years without being noticed by either the radio or record industries. This is changing..

After all, there is a "world" of music out there, right? Africa, Asia, and South America are filled with many musicians and thousands of musical styles just waiting to be noticed. And if you happen to buy this album (which I'm reviewing two sentences from now) and someone asks you what kind of music it is and why the vocals are in some strange language, tell them its "World Music". Say that you "support the world international music community" or something. They may even think that you're learning something at college.

Mory Kante's latest effort (Akwaba Beach; *) has reached the U.S. (finally). She and her 11 member ensemble have come up with something really engaging and moving (in the sense of what it gets your feet doing on the dance floor). The album is sung primarily in Kante's African dialect, but there are several verses in French and a few smatterings of English thrown in at random--but effective--intervals. I have no idea what she's singing about and I wish I could tell you. But that's just fine. Music need no translator. It is universal.

The songs would bring a welcome change to your current typical American disco/dance party sound. The beats are fresh and fun. The four types of drums used (Bugarabu, Djenbe', Congas, and regular) give the music a very 'tropical' sound. (Makes me think of palms, beaches and blue oceans, at least.) Mory Kante uses saxophones, trombones, guitars, basses and keyboards to give her African music a modern edge, one which I believe is sharp enough to cut through the current techno-pop, uni-beat glut and make its way to you, the listening and dancing publis. I recommend the entire album, but especially "Ye<r" Ke' Ye' Ke'", "Inch' Allah" and "Tana".

Until next time (After Break), happy listening.

By Joyce Agatone

Look out Juniata! He has arrived! The new station mascot has been chosen and named!

I think you all have noticed the posters up around Ellis promoting the contest to name WKVR's new mascot, the rabbit. Well, the board members got together this week and looked at all the names that were submitted. We tried to decided on the most appropriate name that would fit the "Power 92 Rabbit". It was hard, but we feel that his name will convey the "Cool" image that our bunny projects. Congratulations to senior Chris Glover, his winning entry (Tuner) was selected. Chris won $25 and a Power 92 t-shirt. Thanks Chris! We thank everyone who submitted names, they were all great ideas!

Thanks! And stay tuned in to the most listened to station among J.C. students --POWER 92!!

Alumni reach out to aid JC students

In taking on the task of co-chairing the 1988-89 Juniata College Annual Support Fund (ASF) Bob and Karen Orr decided to first find our if their love of Juniata is shared by other graduates. What they discovered did not surprise them.

"Our conversations with alumni during homecoming weekend underscored the deep feeling and emotional attachment that graduates have toward Juniata," said Mr. Orr, who along with his wife, is a member of the class of 1976. "A graduate from the '80s said, 'I fell in love with Juniata on my first visit.' Someone from the '70s said, 'It really feels like home,' while a graduate of the '60s commented, 'I haven't been back for 20 years, but it seems like I never left.' These comments are consistent with other comments we heard throughout the weekend," he said.

"A new generation of students is following in our footsteps," Mrs. Orr said. "They still enjoy events such as Mountain Day, Madrigal Dinner, All Class Night, and homecoming. They need our support and that is why we have agreed to take on the role as co-chairs of the ASF." Their goal for this year's fund is $600,000 and a 40% alumni participation rate.

Mr. Orr is vice president of marketing and development for the J. B. Kunz Company of Huntingdon. He is responsible for the direction of corporate marketing, sales, and product development activities. He has been with the company since 1976, following completion of his bachelor of science degree in business administration at Juniata.

Mr. Orr is past president of the Board of Directors of the Huntingdon County United Way. He is a member of the Board of Huntingdon County Business and Industry, the Huntingdon Lions club, and the Home Nursing Agency of Huntingdon county. Mr. Orr is co-president of the Huntingdon Area Alumni Club of Juniata College.

Mrs. Orr serves as president elect of the J. C. Blair Memorial Hospital Auxiliary, vice president of the Alfarata Elementary School PTG, and cub scout den leader of pack 248. She is president of the Women's League of Juniata College, and co-president of the Huntingdon Area Alumni Club of Juniata College. Mrs. Orr is also a member of Juniata's Alumni Council.

Bob and Karen Orr are members of St. James Lutheran Church of Huntingdon. They are the parents of two children, Jonathan, age seven, and Meredith, age three.

"The comments we heard during homecoming weekend echo the sentiment felt by the vast majority of Juniata graduates," Mr. Orr said. "The goal we have set is an ambitious one, but the sense of unity and commitment which is shared among everyone associated with the college makes it achievable. We look forward to getting started."

ASF contributions support scholarship programs, student services such as cultural and entertainment events, academic programs, the purchase of educational materials and equipment, and provide financial support for the enhancement of current programs. Funds are raised primarily from Juniata alumni and friends of the college.

Annie Oakley

Phoebe Anne Oakley Mozee (1860-1926) was a rifle and shotgun markswoman and the star attraction of Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show from 1885 to 1902.

I think I can— You know, I did!

Have you ever felt that you can't possibly read four chapters, study for that philosopy test, write that paper, make dinner and call your girlfriend all in one night? Then instead of doing all the things you know you should, do you just turn on the stereo and avoid them all? Yes? You're among the majority.

Procrastination occurs when you think you have too much to do or when you imagine something is going to be too difficult or distasteful.

The "can'ts" (I can't do all that...) overwhelm us so that we do nothing but procrastinate.

If you are like most college students today, you feel increasingly overwhelmed. In fact, the Nuprin Pain Report, the first national study on pain in America, documented that more people 18-24 suffer from stress and pain than any older age group.

A skier with the can'ts looks down a steep, icy slope and is paralyzed. "I can't ski this," he thinks.

The trick for the skier is to find a "can do" -- a first turn he can make. Once he successfully completes the first turn he can look to the next and the next. Each time he successfully makes a turn he gains a sense of accomplishment and builds confidence in himself and his skiing ability.

The solution for the can'ts sounds pretty simple,and it is. Big projects are made up of small, doable steps.

I developed the can'ts right after signing the contract for my first book: 65,000 words. I couldn't get started. I kept putting it off, overwhelmed by the size of the task, just like I used to do in college when I had a big paper to write.

Luckily I remembered my own advice: to look for a can do. I can write the outline -- did it. I can write bullets for each chapter -- did it. I can write an introduction -- did it.

Ten months later the book was finished.

Overcome procrastination by remembering to turn the can'ts into can dos. Ask yourself, "What can I do now?" And be sure that the direction you're moving in leads to your ultimate goal.

Can do thinking and the positive actions that follow increase your confidence and comosure and maximize your effectiveness. Pretty soon you're on a roll.

Legal interest

The legal or conventional rate of interest applies to money obligations when no interest rate is contracted for, reports The World Almanac. The rate is usually somewhat below the general interest rate.

Luxembourg

Luxembourg was founded about 963 and was ruled by Burgundy, Spain, Austria and France from 1448 to 1815. The country left the Germanic Confederation in 1866.

STUDENTS SPEAK OUT

What do you think the next four years will bring with President-elect Bush in office?

Chuck Myer, Freshman North--

I think the next four years will bring continued prosperity and a strong defense. Relations with the Soviet Union will be improved. More conservative judges will be appointed to the bench and a better trade balance.

Christopher Tull, Sophomore South--

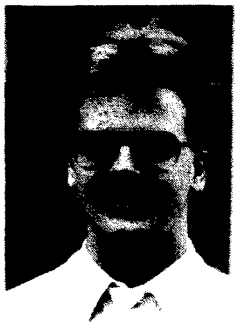
I see continued growth for the American economy. Inflation will be kept under control. Education spending will remain the same while defense spending will increase. However, people under the poverty line will remain there. Overall, Bush will have a positive effect and benefit for the country.

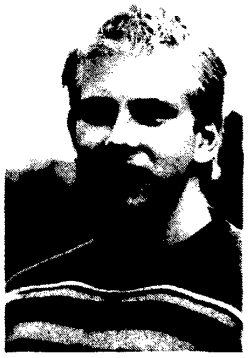
Penny Highliter, Sophomore Lesher--

It will be a good four years. It will probably be the same as the Reagan years. He will probably continue the Republican policies on defense and education and stuff like that. I hope he'll do something about prayer in schools.

Jeff Fetterman, Sophomore South--

The next four years will be like the last eight years. He did pretty much the same as Ronnie did because he just seemed to follow him. I don't think he has any original ideas.





Mark Kulp, Freshman South--

Economic prosperity will continue. There will be a definite break up with the democratic party. It will probably be the same as the last eight years.

Budding composers are recognized by BMI

The 37th annual BMI Awards to Student Composers competition will award $15,000 to young composers, BMI President and CEO Frances W. Preston announced today. She added that the deadline for entering the 1988-89 competition, which is co-sponsored by the BMI Foundation will be Friday, February 10, 1989.

BMI established the awards program in 1951 in cooperation with music educators and composers. The contest is designed to encourage young composers in the creation of concert music and, through cash prizes, to aid in continuing their musical education. The prizes, which vary from $500 to $2,500, are awarded at the discretion of the final judging panel. To date, 333 students, ranging in age 8 to 25 have received BMI awards.

The 1988-89 competition is open to students who are citizens or permanent residents of the Western Hemisphere including North, Central, and South American and Caribbean Island nations, and who are enrolled in accredited secondary schools, colleges, or conservatories or are engaged in private study with recognized and established teachers anywhere in the world. Contestant must be under 26 years of age on December 31, 1988. There are no limitations as to instrumentation, stylistic consideration or length of work submitted. Students may enter no more than one composition, which need not have been composed during the year of entry. Compositions, which are entered under pseudonyms, are considered by a preliminary panel of judges before going to a final panel. Last year's Preliminary Judges were Lois Karchin, David Leisner, and Jalalu Kalvert Nelson with Ulysses Kay as Consultant. The final judges were Jane Brockman, Ainslee Cox, Corey Field, David Felder, Frank Lewin, Karen Larsson-Pone, and Harvey Sollberger, with Ulysses Kay as Presiding Judge. William Schuman and Milaton Babbitat are chairman emeritus and chairman, respectively, of the judging panel. Two recent additions to the current advisory board of the program are composers Lalo Schifrin and Joseph Schwantner.

In the 1987-88 competition, 12 young composers from 13 to 25 were presented awards at a luncheon reception at Tavern on the Green in New York City on May 20, 1988.

Seven previous winners of BMI Awards to Student Composers have won the coveted Pulitzer Prize in Music. They are William Bolcom, George Crumb, Mario Davidovsky, John Harbison, Donald Martino, Joseph Schwantner and Charles Wuorinen.

Broadcast Music, Inc., is the largest music licensing organization in the world, representing over 82,000 writers and publishers. More than 50 percent of the music played on American radio stations in the past year is licensed by BMI. It also has reciprocal agreements with 39 foreign performing rights licensing organizations around the world, making its music available there and representing foreign music in this country. Each year BMI sponsors a variety of workshops and seminars designed to encourage participation in all areas of music.

BMI Foundation, Inc., was established in 1984 to support individuals interested in furthering their musical education and to assist organizations involved in the performance of and training in music. Theodora Zavin, BMI's Senior Vice President and Special Counsel, is president of the BMI Foundation.

Official rules and entry blanks for the 1988-89 competition are available from Barbara A. Petersen, Director, BMI Awards to Student Composers, 320 West 57th Street, New York, NY 10019. For further information, call Barbara Petersen (212)586-2000

By Trish Kazmerski

(The nature of this article,and the material which it contains can be hazardous to your health. Parents and professors are urged not to read, unless supervised by a college student)

The Huntingdon area welcomes back the JC students every year with open arms (especially the people at Quality and a certain bar on Penn Street.) The townspeople offer us hospitality everywhere we go (as long as we are giving them money.) The countryside greets us with vibrant splotches of color, (there's no need for sarcasm here), and the sun always warms us on autumn afternoons (and they all lived happily ever after).

Juniata College welcomes us back with a scrumptious diet of fish and pasta, lovely labs worth 1 credit but take eight hours to complete, and that fun disease mononucleosis

Yes, it's that time of the year again, when too much partying and kissing in the beginning of the year catches up with us and yells, "Surprise!", with grogginess and swollen glands (not those glands!). Last year I found out that getting mono was the initiation for freshmen at Juniata. Well this article, believe it or not, is not about mono, but it is about a disease we all should be concerned with as students. It's highly contagious and controversial subject that is just begging to come out of the closet. (I hope Geraldo Rivera isn't around, I don't want a broken nose.) So to those who have mono, good luck, and I hope you feel better, but read this and take precautions so you won't get this disease. This formidable adversary of all college students, the disease which both parents and profs fear, i s . . . h e r e I go...BLOWING-OFF-ITIS!!

There, it is said. I am free. I suffer from this hideous disease that cripples G.P.A.'s and causes nervous breakdowns among its victims. However, I am not alone. We are all guilty of this phenomena of nature. 4 out of 5 dentists recommend (opps wrong stats), doctors tend to agree that this tendency is inborn in all humans, but peaks at the beginning of a college career. Surveys show that freshmen are the most severely disabled. This is because they are free to do what they want for the first time in their lives. Doctors contend that this high level of susceptibility decreases with maturity and parental threats of removing tuition payments if the next semester's G.P.A. has not sky rocketed.

BLOW-OFF-ITIS has many faces and is hard to classify, but since I am a very organized person (don't laugh, I'm totally serious), I have been able to correctly identify this disease and its symptoms by classes. Now I will tell you the stages of this mongral of the masses.

Freshmen identification is easy. The prime sample is my good friend and neighbor. She is BLOW-OFF-ITIS personified. She walks around all day complaining about everything she has to do, but will she sit down and do it? Is Juniata a suitcase campus? Oh yeah, a pretty bad analogy, let me think of another one,...um...is the Pope Polish? I have to admit though, the freshmen are original when it comes to blowing off. I have seen frosh having carpet pulling races, playing Dungeons and Dragons, and having meaningful discussions on everything from politics to Pink Floyd. However, their main key of identification is they are constantly making schedules that they do not keep. On the count of three upperclassmen, "the key to success is time-management!"

Now being a sophomore, I have found that "mellowing out" is the sophomore thing to do. This means after a couple hours of pure, unalduterated studying, everyone crashes in a room Toting (get it?) anything and everything edible. Edible here is defined as anything with minimal bacterial growth (how's that for a micro. student) and does not smell worse than Thunder Alley (usually giving a wide variety of food.) Light is not welcomed at these gathering. Candles and Phil Collins are used for atmosphere. Usually the group is single sexed, but occassionally it is co-ed, which makes our discussions a little more interesting. We talk about our experiences and our fantasies, and sing a couple of rousing tunes from both Sesame Street and the Electric Company. My hall sometimes tries to and figure out ways of getting even with the Slew Crew for always ragging on 2nd Lesher. Hell knows no fury greater than a woman's scorn! (By the way Al and Doc, ever see the movie "Faces of Death"?) Other good topics are ghost stories and whether or not Pluto is a dog. Now you may think these are trivial matters, but some of these discussions have turned nasty.

Now moving to the juniors, we have sub-categories of classification due to something known as the "legal age factor". Those who are 21 are probably at that bar on Penn Street blowing off the night and other things, while those who are under 21 are watching old Julie Andrew movies while eating milk and cookies. (yeah, right!) Now saying goodbye, until we meet again to the juniors, we come to the final, critical stage of BLOW-OFF-ITIS.

The seniors are those who have survied the worst part of this dis-

Men hoopers ready for challenge open season with tournament

By Amo Clancl

In the dull winter moments around Juniata College, there will only be one place to find some exciting action. This place is on the hardwood of the Kennedy Sports & Rec. Center. On November 18 the Juniata Men's basketball team opens their season versus King's College in the Scotty Wood Tournament at Mulhenburg College. Last year the Tribe had a rather successful campaign in which they won the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest division and finished only two games shy of a National tournament bid. While big things are expected of the Indians, they will have to replace Wayne Paul, last year's leading scorer. Paul averaged 17.7 points a game and had three 30 plus performances a year ago. His 1,402 career points puts him fourth on the Junitata career scoring chart.

The starting lineup for the Indians could possibly show many different combinations due to the depth on the Indian roster. The most probable opening day lineup should look like this: Shawn Habakus and Joe DeBlase in the backcourt, Duane Dise at shooting forward, teamed up with Jay Nicholson at power forward. The center spot will belong to Bob Dombrowski. Habakus, a junior tri-captian from Mohnton (Governor Mifflin HS), will be the quarterback for the Indian offense. Habakus will be expected to control the tempo with his ballhandling capabilities, but can also provide consistent scoring from the outside. A two year starter at point guard, the 6"0 Habakus was eigth in the MAC in three-point field goals last year and led the Indians with 130 assists while averaging 7.8 points a game.

DeBlase, a 6"3 senior out of North Star High School, will provide the Indian backcourt with a potent scorer. DeBlase, who plays with reckless abandon, has the potential to turn a game around both offensively and defensively.

Dise, a 6"3 senior shooting forward from Dallastown averaged 10 points per game last season. He was third on the team in rebounding (4.1). Dise can provide scoring both inside and out along with being a dangerous threat from three point range. The versatile Dise is extremely aggressive on defense and has a legitimate chance to become a 1,00 point scorer in his career.

Nicholson of Churhill High School, who's slam dunks wound up the fans, scored 9.4 points per game and averaged 6.6 rebounds. With a year of experience, Nicholson has the potential to be a dominant force in the middle for the Indians.

Dombrowski of Mountain Top and Bishop Hoban HS led Juniata with 7.2 rebounds per game which ranked 5th in the MAC. Dombrowksi, who likes to mix it up inside, is also an effective inside scorer from anywhere up to 15 feet out. He could very well be the key link for the Indians to have a successful season.

While the Indians display a very talented starting five, their greatest asset could be in bench strength. In the backcourt, junior Mike Welker (tri-captian) will relieve Habakus. Welker was third on the team with 19 three pointers and hit a team high 53% from three point range. He also displays great ballhandling ability. Other backcourt help will come from 6"1 Donnie Wagner. Wagner, who can play both guard spots, comes to Juniata from Division II St. Francis College. He is a great leaper and is expected to get a lot of playing time. Freshman Craig Copeland, Franklin Webb, and Dave Welker will also add depth to the guard spots, along with newcomers John Fuschio, Tom Richards, and Kevin Small.

In the frontcourt, the Indians are probably deeper than anyone in the MAC. Off the bench we can expect to see a lot of Mike Antenucci and Dan Lizun. Antenucci, a 6"5 senior power forward from Jackson Memorial in Jackson NJ, will be expected to add rebounding , defense, and scoring punch to the Indian frontline. Antenucci likes to play with great emotion and intensity while being in the best shape of his career after vigorous weight training in the off season.

Lizun, a 6"7 center/forward from Emmaus HS, has great leaping ability and led the team with 31 blocked shots last year as a freshman. Lizun, a role player, can also add scoring to his outstanding defensive play.

Perhaps the most pleasant surprise for the Indian basketball team is the return of 6"2 guard Les Squire. The motivational force behind this club, Squire, took the the year off last season to concentrate on academics. Les, a former MVP, can do it all. He brings scoring, rebounding ,defense, and most of all leadership back to the Indians.

Rounding out the frontcourt will be Leland Hughes, B. Franklin Shue, Mike Greenly, and Bob Shaheen.

The 1988-1989 Juniata Men's Basketball team seems to have all of the right ingredients to make some very big headlines around campus. The goals of this team have been set high, but they are very much attainable. We as fans can only wait and see what the outcome of this exciting bunch has to offer, but something tells me that by the time Santa Claus come to town, we will all realize that we haven't been dealt a bag of coal in our Men's Basketball team.

Swimming at Varsity level

By Mike Antenucci

A new varsity sport comes to College Hill this winter season after several years at the club level. Binder Natitorium will be the sight of five home meets for the first year Juniata College Swim team. Scott Preston, who worked with the team at club level, will continue his duties as head coach for the Indians.

Although the men's turnout was not strong Preston feels the four swimmers he has will all be competitive and have the talent to do well against the league competition. After hanging up his soccer spikes, senior Steve Grater continues to show why he is one of the finer athletes in the school. After leading his team in scoring and being nominated for the MAC all-star team, Grater looks to challenge for the MAC title and NCAA berth in the 100 meter breaststroke. In high school he was 12th in the PIAA swimming championships. Preston feels that Grater is smooth in all his strokes and therefore will see action in many events.

Senior Rich Gaitens returns after a long layoff from the sport but can contend in the 100m breast as well as the 50m freestyle. Freshman Brad Newman is a terrific prospect in the backstroke. Preston feels that Newman could be a top notch swimmer in the 100m back but needs more time to develop and get used to the tougher competition. However, he should fare well in the 200m back and could qualify for the MAC's. Unfortunately, he has been hampered with mononucleosis and is recovering slowly. Freshman Shawn Stafford rounds out the men's roster. Preston notes that Gettysburg is the team to beat in the men's league and states the goal for his team is to place a couple of swimmers in the finals of the MAC's.

The women will be able to boast a stronger roster, entering 12 swimmers in each meet. Preston feels that he has legitimate all-conference canidates in a few of his swimmers, noting freshman Kathy Collins as a top prospect and possible National qualifier. The teams strengths will be in the free style events, where Collins 50m high school time is only .4 seconds off last year's MAC championship mark.

Kris Newman and Kim Cass show considerable potential and should be consistant point scorers, while Mary Strapple should lead the distance corps, along with teamates Sue Humphrey and Pam Ezdebski. Betsy Derr will compete in the middle distance races. "We have some holes in a few events, but we should be most successful in the back stroke and individual medly where Mindy Winter will swim both", stated Preston. Newman will also swim back stroke while Humphrey and Cass will swim in the individual medly.

Other swimmers on the team include Lisa Playford, Karen Glasgow, Renee Malkin, and Nicole Hudak. Both teams opened the season last weekend at the F&M relays and swam yesterday at Gettysburg. While the teams look to be competitive and achieve individual goals the overall inexperience might show, especially for the women who have five freshmen and four sophomores. However, for competing in its first year the team is making strides in the right direction.

Ruggers finish season

By Joanna Rebert

Juniata College's Women's Rugby Club was off to a promising start for it's first ever fall season with an organizational meeting in September. We were met with many new enthusthastic rookies along with a number of anxious veteran players. We were especially pleased to find that our new advisor, Katherine MacCormack is an experienced rugger herself and was willing to give us the coaching that our previously ad-hoc group needed.

The games began her at J.C. on Oct. 2nd against Penn State. The match was met with the usual rugby rain and we appreciate those who braved weather ot come cheer us on. (A special round of applause for Mrs. Reed who was suddenly made the victim of a fierce tackle by Sharon Miller). Although our lady ruggers were unable to score against Penn State, it was felt to be a fair match considering the experience of the opposing team.

Our second game was at Shippensburg, who is noted for being pretty though competition. Our JC girls played both Ships A and B teams but was unable to score in either game.

The next two weekends proved to be quite frustrating as we encountered two forfeits by the Slippery Rock team. (Nothing like a Sunday drive in the country - right girls?)

The season's final match was again with Penn State (at PSU) on Nov. 6th (and was again met with rain). The JC scrum played very well and the wing was able to gain some yardage but it was not enough to complete a try. Andrea Anfitcatro proved to be a valuable winger, making several admirable runs and JC was certainly hurting when she was taken out of the game due to injury.

The team was also busy this season with the sale of club T-shirts and the organization of an awsome lounge party on Nov. 12th. Three cheers for all who have supported us: RUGBY! RUGBY! RUGBY! Also a sincere thanks to Katherine for all her encouragement and guidance.

The Women's Rugby Club is looking for a successful spring season including more matches and possibly a tournament. Although larger than last year, our team is still small and we are eager for more players. All interested girls should look for signs for an organizatinal meeting the end of January '89 or contact Joanna Rebert 201 South, Box 384 or Colleen Law 405 East, Box 341.

Grapplers short on experience but not on talent

By Mike Antennucci

Coach Bill Berrier has every reason to be optimistic about his 1988-89 wrestling squad. For the first time in several years the Indians will be able to put a wrestler at every weight class for Berrier, who enters his 29th year as mentor for the grapplers. The team will be based on youth and enthusiasm, and success will be determined by the leadership of the upper classman.

Lee Abromowitz and John Swanson return as the lone seniors on this year's team. Tim Crowely still hadn't made a commitment to whether or not he would wrestle. "I feel it is important for our older guys to help the newcomers along. We have a lot of talent with our younger people but they won't be used to this level of wrestling" stated Berrier. John Telenko returns as the only wrestler to turn in a winning record for the Indians last season.

"We should be strongest in the middle weights and will be competetive around the leauge", noted the coach, "But a main concern right now is a heavy weight where there are several possibilities but not on true commitment as of yet." D.J. Korelwitz, Steve Manderbach and Jim Weaver are some of the key returnees for Berrier.

Several freshmen should be consistent point scorers for Berrier and will be the key to this years and the future of the wrestling program. The wrestling season opens at the Lebanon Valley Invitational on December 2nd-3rd. The first home match is scheduled for January 21st when the Indians host California, PA and Washington and Jefferson.

Indians crush Upsala 42-6
15 seniors wrap up careers

By Mike Antenucci

The Indians concluded their 1988 season this past Saturday with a 42-6 trashing of Upsala College in rather a fun fair fashion. After being under pressure most of the season the Tribe was able to enter the last two games of the season in relaxing fashion as they outscored their opponents 93-18. Juniata finishes the season with an overall record of 6-3-1 and a conference mark of 5-3. The Tribe notched their fourth winning season in a row as they finished fourth in the conference and remain the only team to beat league leading Moravian.

The Indians were on the board early and often Saturday as Senior outside linebacker Randy Martin started things off when he sacked Upsala's quarterback in his own endzone for a safety at 11:59 of the first quarter. Dennis DeRenzo scored his first of two touchdowns on the ensuing drive capping a five play, 54 yard march.

John O'Neill opened the second period with a 32-yard field goal to give the Indians a 12-0 lead with 13:00 left in the half. Juniata scored again on their next possession when Cubby Davis connected with Dan Crossey for a eight yard score. The touchdown pass by Davis was his first of four in the game and his sixth of nine in two games. DeRenzo finished out the first half scoring on a two-yard pass from Davis with eight seconds left to play.

The Indians continued to roll in the start of the second half when Mike Cottle snared a 34-yard pass from Davis. O'Neill added another field goal and ex-tight end turned linebacker turned tight end, Randy Martin, caught a 40-yard pass from Davis to put the Indians at the 42 point total. Upsala finally got on the board with 3:09 left in the game on a nine yard Chris Hamler run. The two-point conversion try failed.

For the Tribe it was a season of "what could have beens" and "only if's" only because preseason aspirations were so high. The first game of the year was sort of an indication of how things would fall for the Indians this season as they missed out on beating a top rated division III team in Washington and Jefferson after leading the entire game. Having to settle for a 13-13 tie, Juniata was on the verge of going 0-0-2 to start the season after Delaware Valley Quarterback Tim Ford lead a late rally for the Aggies.

Fortunately, the Tribe escaped with a 15-13 win and would win the following week in similar fashion against a heavy underdog in Lebanon Valley. After holding a commanding 31-7 lead, the Tribe managed to hold onto a 38-24 victory; what a shocker that would have been. The following week brought to College Hill the always awaited match-up with Widener. The Tribe, in another game in which they lead, were overwhelmed in the fourth quarter and fell to the Pioneers 29-19.

Juniata kept their MAC hopes alive, however, as they defeated Moravian the following week 20-16, on the road. All hopes basically faded the next weekend, though, when the Warriors of Lycoming put the clamps on the Indians offense better than any team all year to win 20-10. The Indians then recorded thir first home win of the season over Albright 30-7 on Homecoming weekend but were mathimatically eliminated the following week, losing to Susquehanna in the closing seconds on a 43-yard field goal. Last week the Indians destroyed Wilkes and continued that punishment into Upsala.

While the overall goal wasn't achieved, there were plenty of highlights provided by the Tribe this fall. Anybody who went to one game saw the finest running back the school has ever produced in Dennis DeRenzo, who became the first bac ever to rush for over 1000 yards in a single season at Juniata. Cubby Davis, Mike Cottle, and Don Betar continued to climb up the ladder in the record books as Cottle established himself atop that ladder in several categories.

The Indians will graduate 15 seniors this spring, 12 of whom were starters. Seven spots will be left open on offense and five on the opposite side of the ball, where Frank Gay leaves after recording a team high 113 tackles. Other seniors graduating will be Dave Ritter, Jeff Haines, Randy Martin, and Tim Kirsh. On offense the Indians will lose Davis, Cottle, Betar, Jim Metz, Pat Danneker, Mike Martin, and Ty Snavely. Other seniors include Hans Wertz, Scott Rubel and Paul Albitz.

It should be interesting to see who fills in the open spots next season. I'm sure this year's seniors will miss the game but have nothing to be ashamed of the 30-11-1 mark they posted during the course of thir four years with the program. I'm sure next season everyone will miss reading about the superstars from the class of '89 and laybe even miss the all too informative Nuch's Notes. Oh, well, we can't take care of business around here forever-with the exception of another four months!

Several Tribesmen, including No. 39 Pat Danneker, congratulate RB Dennis DeRenzo, No.34, after another outstanding play against Upsala last week. The Indians rolled to a 42-6 victory as DeRenzo became the first Juniata player to rush for over 1000 yards in a season.

Heading west once again

The Indians will head to California this weekend for the national semi-finals, meeting top-seeded host UC--San Diego on Friday night at 11 p.m. EST. A victory would put Juniata in the championship game on Saturday against either Wisconsin--White Water or Illinois Benedictine.

The third straight trip to the Final Four comes after an impressive performance by coach Larry Bock's team over the weekend in the Eastern Regional at Cortland, New York.

Juniata took three matches to win the regional title. The third victory came on Saturday evening against host Cortland State in the Regional Final. The Tribe lost the first game 13-15 , but bounced back to take the match 15-1, 15-3, and 15-11.

Junior Melinda Selby led the way with 20 kills for Juniata. Captain Dana Worthington had three ace serves while freshman Larissa Weimer had nine stuffed blocks. Jackie Rebert was the leading passer.

The Indians opened the tournament with a first round match on Thursday against Smith College (Mass.). The Tribe swept to a 3-0 win, 15-8, 15-8, and 15-8.

Weimer played perhaps the best match of her career with seven stuffed blocks, nine kills and a .460 hitting percentage. Selby had 18 kills and Rebert added 16.

The momentum from the opeing win over Smith carried over into a second round confrontation with regional top-seed Allegheny, who beat Juniata 2-1 in October.

This time it was all Indians, as the Tribe rolled to a 15-11, 15-3 and 15-7 victory. Rebert dominant with 16 kills, 19 perfect passes and tough serves.

Selby had eight blocks with Rebert getting four. Middle blockers Rhonda Bygall and Weimer had five and four blocks, respectively.

Juniata will take a 42-6 record and ten-match winning streak to the Final Four this weekend. The team will fly to California on Wednesday.

Lady cagers have new look open season in tourny

By Mike Antenucci

Does the saying "to get a little you have to give a litte" mean anything to women's basketball coach Cathi Quinn? It most certainly does, as this season she trades last years experience for an ingredient which she has lacked her first two seasons as head coach--depth. With the loss of Sue Grubb, the All-MAC North Player of the Year, Quinn must replace the second leading scorer and rebounder in the school's history. The twelve player roster consists of five sophomores and seven freshmen, so one might consider this a rebuilding year for Quinn and the Indians.

Although the team lacks experience it is not short on talent. The fact that this group will be together for another three years will be a scary thought to the rest of the teams in the league. Returning starter Pam Wyrick of Mohnton averaged 10.3 points and 7.0 rebounds a game last season and looks to be the top player for the Indians this year. Classmate Colleen McGinn of Pennsville, NJ will return as the second leading scorer on this year's squad after averaging 9.1 points and 6.5 rebounds during last year's campaign.

<MMSAndrea Smeigh of Altoona will be called upon to run the Indian offense after dealing out 43 assists last season from her point guard position. The other two returning players for coach Quinn are Heidi McCarthy of Annadale, VA and Kelly Woodworth from Waynesboro VA. Both were slowed last season due to mononucleosis (McCarthy) and knee injury(Woodworth) but will be called upon by Quinn this season to contribute immediately.

The newcomers will add talent to both the inside and outside game for the Indians. Gretta Gross (5"8) of Manchester, Cathy Packer (5"7) of Harrisburg and Amy Scialabba (5"8) of Huntingdon bring some needed height to Juniata's front line. The void at shooting guard will be filled with ample talent in Sherry DeAgostino and Stephanie Haines.

DeAgostino was the first player off the bench last season for the high shcool national champions Altoona Area, while Haines set school scoring records at Conemaugh Township HS. Depth will aslo be added at the point guard position by Dana Patet of Hollidaysburg and Jennifer Kraft of New Milford, CN.

Quinn feels that the team's lack of experience is a concern but notes that the girls' attitude is tremendous and that is always a big plus. The smaller team will look to run more than last season's team

They have completed the majority of the 120 credits needed for the prized B.S., and with their small number of classes to go, fully recognize the importance of studying. Marla Hanson was an up-and-coming New York City model when she was brutally attacked by two men, who slashed her face. She will tell her story on December 7 at 8:15 pm in Alumni Hall.

Model Marla Hanson defends victims

The Juniata College Joint Lectureship Committee of Center Board and Student Government will present Marla Hanson on December 7 at 8:15 in Oller Auditorium. An up-and-coming New York City model, Hanson's career was brutally interrupted when her face was slashed by two men hired by her landlord. The razor slashing followed a dispute over an $850 security deposit. The incident and subsequent trial, which occured in 1986, drew national attention and prompted the victim to launch a crusade as an advocate for victims rights.

Following the incident, Hanson's plastic surgeon, Dr. Ronald Levandusky, reported in the New York Times "that the gashes on her face--one across her right cheek from mouth to ear, another on her forehead and others above and below her left eye--were among the worst he had seen in years of practice."

"They were a bit worse than cuts suffered by someone going through a windshield," he said in the Times article. "All of them are at least one-half inch and most are one inch deep. If they heal well, they could be improved...but basically scars like this are permanent." The account went on to quote Dr. Levandusky as saying, "After I finished suturing her up...I said to myself, 'How could men push a woman like this down and carve her face.'"

To many Marla Hanson became a hero following the often emotional month-long trial in which her landlord was found guilty of first-degree assault. In a New York Times account of her testimony, Hanson explained the brutal incident which occured outside a West Side Manhattan bar. "'Their hands went straight for my face--they pushed me down', she said, demonstrating before the jury how she was shoved into a crouch against a wall and her face held in position by one man while another stood over her with the razor.

"'I felt a stinging,' she said, speaking rapidly, the words appearing to spill out. 'I thought maybe they were spraying something in my eyes or my face. The taller man started moving his hands back and forth,' she said. 'For a minute, a minute-and-a-half,' it continued, she said. 'It seemed like forever'.

"Only when she was able to bring her hands to her face," the Times account went on, "did she see the blood and realize what had happened.

"'I started to scream, or I felt like I was screaming,' she said. 'I ran toward the light and back into the bar.' In the bar, Miss Hanson said she was given towels to hold to her bleeding face. 'They told me to sit down, take a few deep breaths and not look in the mirror,' she said. Her wounds, treated later at Metropolitan Hospital, required nearly 150 stitches," the account said.

What prompted Hanson to take her story on the road, however, was not the notorious attack which left visible scars on the face of the then 25-year-old actress. What prompted her advocacy for victim's rights was the courtroom assault which followed the attack.

The ordeal of several trials in which it frequently seemed that she was being blamed for the crime committed against her instilled in her a profound interest in judicial reform and she is currently involved in drafting legislation to address the needs of crime victims.

"A victim's rights aren't defined, therefore, they aren't protected," Hanson said in a recent interview at Sinclair Community College in Dayton. "The accused are immediately read their Miranda Rights and offered free counsel while the victim, being just a witness for the prosecution is offered neither."

She added that because the prosecution has the burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, the defense tries to put the victim on trial. "If you're going to have that, then it should be equal treatment for both people...There is no balance right now--everything goes to the defendant."

The program is open to the public. There will be a $2.00 general admission charge for the 8:15 program.

Xmas stories in Oller

It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas and Friday evening's Artist Series event at Juniata College will be no exception. Oller Hall will come alive with the sights and sounds of a festive Christmas celebration at 8:15 pm on Dec. 2 when Troupe America, Inc. presents "Mr. Pickwick's Stories for a Christmas Evening."

Ten actors, singers and dancers combine storytelling and traditional music of the mid-nineteenth century to warm the hearts of the audience. This delightful evening of song and story is dominated by Dickens' "A Christmas Carol", "Cricket on the Hearth" and "The Pickwick Papers". Also included is Clement Moore's "'Twas the Nite Before Christmas".

The audience is a part of the action, becoming "guests" in the Pickwick home for the family Christmas party. "This festive celebration was jolly good fun...blended good cheer and good wishes...enthusiasm was contagious. The audience joined in...we felt welcome...the stage was alive with color...One could see the production many times and still not see it all...the show was a great success," according to the "Lethbridge Herald".

Underwritten by Bill Fegan and Bill Fegan Attractions, this performance is part of the series honoring Esther M. Doyle, professor of English, emerita.

Tickets may be purchased at the information desk in Ellis College Center prior to the event, or at the door the night of the performance for $8.00 (adults) and $3.00 (children). The Juniata College Artist Series is intended to provide cultural and aesthetic opportunities to both the campus and its larger regional constituency. In addition to the season subscribers, the Series is supported in part by the Edith B. Wertz Endowment for Cultural Events, the Henry Endowment for the Performing Arts, Bill Fegan, The Pennsylvania Council on the Arts, and the Middle Atlantic Arts Foundation.

Coming back from Thanksgiving break, I find myself having a lot to be thankful for. Before break, I had so many papers, exams and odds and ends to do, I thought it would never end. I think everyone felt the same way I did. Now I realize it wasn't so bad, it could have been worse and I survived. In fact, all over this planet, much worse was happening while I was complaining about the Deviant Behavior term paper I had to write about four times over. (and it still wasn't right!).

Everwhere in the world ther are people who are starving, dying from disease, living under the rule of a dictator of much worse. Just stopping and thinking about this for a minute made me realize how lucky I am that I am free to choose to come to Juniata and study what I am interested in. If everyone would stop for a minute just like I did, maybe we would all appreciate the privileges and opportunities we have, and think twice about constantly complaining about the stupid little things in life. We eat every day. Granted, it's not home cooking, but it's food, more than some people get to eat in a week. We sleep in a warm bed every night. Sure it's not always as comfortable as we want it to be, but it's better than the street. And we choose to be here. We arn't here because some leader of the country said we had to attend Juniata. We're all here, with the advantage of having the chance of receiving an education from a fine institution while making friends and enjoying life. So don't complain the next time a big paper is due. Remember, you choose to be here and paper writing and test taking comes with the package deal.

So even though Thanksgiving is over, Christmas is just around the corner and this is another time of the year that we can count our blessings and thank those who have helped us get where we are today. I know that if it weren't for Dad and Mom and all their hard work, I wouldn't be where I am today, writing this editorial, making friends, learning valuable skills, enjoying life and making plans to continue my education in the future. Everyone should thank those who have helped them get this far in life and be thankful that there are people who do love you and care about you. Thanks Dad and Mom, I love you.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

When I arrived in Huntingdon several months ago with the new freshman class, I entered the Juniata College community with a sense of enthusiasm and expectation. Knowing something of the College's reputation as a respected undergraduate liberal arts college, I looked forward to participating in lively and energetic conversation stimulated by what Matthew Arnold once characterized as "the best that has been thought and said." Knowing that everyone at Juniata had made personal sacrifices for the opportunity--some would say privilege--of being here, I was confident that my decision to become part of a community that cherished the"life of the mind" had been the right one.

As my first semester at Juniata comes to a close, I must confess that my initial enthusiasm has given way to a sense of concern. I have listened to the collective voices that are Juniata College, and I have not been reassured by either the quality or character of our daily conversations. There have been moments of inmspiration, from the talk we heard at Convocation to special addresses presented more recently. But rather significantly, the voices raised in the discussion of large ideas and truly important issues have often been voices other than our own--the voice of a Wall, or Thomasma, or O'Grady--or most notably, of Thornton Wilder.

As has been observed by others, communities are defined by the scope and substance of their discourse. Every community has a certain obligation to explain to itself and to others why it is as it is; each of us shares a fundamental responsibility to explain who we are, and why we do what we do. Ultimately, there must exist a rough consistency between who we say we are, and who we really are.

Bartlett Giamatti, a recent president of Yale University, noted not long ago that colleges teach most by their example, and by the strength of their commitment to certain fundamental ideals. Challenging colleges and universities to confront the empty "silence" increasingly characteristic of campuses across the country, Giamatti concluded that a college is "a model for ethical and moral behavior or it is not, but however it acts, people--within and without--draw lessons."

What "lessons" are we to draw from the quality of our collective "talk" and work here at Juniata? Surely, there is nothing wrong with our creed--veritas liberat--but if we are actually to live our creed, we must be prepared to engage one another, and to challenge one another in serious discussion about serious matters. Such talk should certainly characterize our teaching and learning, but it must also spill over into the time we spend together beyond the lecture hall and laboratory. Recalling T.S. Eliot's comment about verse, there are really only good colleges, bad colleges, and chaos. I remain hopeful that as we pursue the truth wherever it may lead, we will find ourselves engaged in the kind of conversation that empowers and liberates each of us to live fuller, better lives.

Sincerely,
Gary Aichele

Dear Editor,

Last Thursday I went to watch the championship IM volleyball match. I was appalled when I heard a member of the winning team call a member of the opposing team a bitch and a loudmouth wench. She did nothing to deserve this treatment. To top it all off he is a senior and an RA.

Granted, I am only a sophomore but it is my impression that an RA is supposed to set an example for the rest of the campus. A member of his team went up to apologize to her but the immature RA didn"t make an attempt at all. I can't believe that during an IM game - it was only a game even if it was the championship - there should be an excuse for this. I can't believe that he showed no ounce of sportsmanship before, during, or after the game.

I am glad that the opposing team didn't stoop to the level that the RA reached or take the game as seriously as some of his team members did. They are a much better team for it. Furthermore; I believe that the RA - you know who you are - owes an apology not only to the player but to the other members of her team.

Thank you,
A mature speaker

Dear Editor,

From the onset, I want everyone to know that I do not blame the Madrigal Committee for what happened with sign-ups, but I feel a need to express my feelings about the way they occurred. I feel that having to sit outside from 4:30 pm to 6 am is absolutely insane, especially when there was such a high probability for rain.

I am a senior and unfortunately I am not going to Madrigal for the first time in my four years at Juniata. There was no way I, nor anyone at my table, was going to sit outside for thirteen and a half hours. We had planned to go outside at around 10 pm, but when someone told me that they got there at 7:30 and were number 92, we decided it just wasn't worth it.

It is a shame that such a fun tradition has turned into a contest. All it takes is one person to start it, and then everyone else panics. Something needs to be done before next year, when people will start sitting out at 6 am, the day before sign-ups.

Some other people have expressed the same beliefs I have, and I know some people who also decided not to go for the same reason. There have been many suggestions made as to how to change the present system, one of which was already suggested by the Madrigal Committee. Another is not to let people sit out until a certain time. This is how it was done my freshman year, and there were no problems.

A third possibility is to do it on a priority system, allowing seniors to choose first. I am not sure that this is the best way, but it is one alternative. A final possibiliy is that of a campus wide lottery system. I am not saying that any one of these possibilities is the answer, but something definitely needs to be done.

I am very disappointed about not going to Madrigal my senior year, but we are going to go out to dinner elsewhere. I hope that everyone

For a minute there last week, I thought I was back in 1969. The tent city outside of Ellis Hall had me briefly convinced that Juniata College had turned into an activist campus, and that an army of angry radicals had finally taken it into their heads to right the wrongs of this place by blockading East Houses from the rest of campus until somebody, somewhere damn well did something. I imagined students storming the Security Office, staging sit-ins to protest the mistreatment of lab animals, and demonstrating in favor of condom dispensers not only in bathrooms and washrooms, but in phone booths, by water fountains, in the Library, the Post Office and in each study carol in the Science Center. But mine was a fleeting vision: The cause of this patient camp-out in the rain was due to Madrigal sign-ups rahter than divestment in South Africa: Tickets, not pickets. My moment of faith in humankind returned to normal; that is, "what do I get out of it?"

But rather than harp yet again on the awful apathy of the average Juniatite in the face of even a little self-sacrifice, I must say I found it undeniably pleasant to sit there for awhile and just slouch out. More than that; I think many people actually had fun in spite of the rain and the cold: Umbrellas, stories and Holiday Cheer were shared, creating an atmosphere of near-festivity, and on a weeknight yet! It restored my faith in this college's ability not to take itself too seriously--what with all the studying going on Monday to Friday, and the mass exodus for home every weekend, we need to be reminded that we're in college every once in awhile, and need to act like it. In my opinion, things have been way too responsible around here. The days of College pranks, youthful exuberance and plain old fun are waning too fast. Things like Madrigal sign-ups don't come around often enough, we need to take some initiative of our own. I'm not talking radical action, or even the sit-ins I was just joking about. I am talking about creating a little excitement on campus, going out and making some fun, enjoying youth while its around. Because if you spend your college years engrossed in resume-making, worrying about your adult life, don't you think you're going to spend your adult years wondering about your youth?

Take a walk in a "Winter Wonderland"

By Susie Givler

South Hall's RHA is gearing up for its premiere event of the year--South's Semi-formal. On December 3rd, 1988 from 8:30 pm to 2:00 am be prepared to take a walk in a winter wonderland. Plan to attend with that special someone for $5.00, or pay $3.00 and find your special someone in the wonderland. Tickets are on sale until December 3rd in 123 South or call 643-9891. Tickets will also be sold at the door if you decide to join the Christmas spirit, but they're going fast so get them now!

A reception will be held in the carpeted lounge from 8:30-10:00 pm to give everyone a chance to get in the spirit, take a look at everyone in their Christmas best, and partake of holiday food and drink. Everyone will have a chance to mingle, jingle, and look for Kris Kringle until the dancing gets underway at 10:00 pm. Remember, it's not over till it's over so come and help South celebrate the holidays at the winter wonderland--South Semi-formal.

STUDENTS SPEAK OUT

Do you feel safe walking on campus after dark?

Ann Yezerski, Fr., South— I still feel safe. I always travel in groups anyway. I've also taken a self-defense course, so I feel safe.

Laurel Stepheneson, Soph., Lesher— I feel relatively safe, but I would definitely appreciate more lighting. I always walk with keys in my hand.

Kara Laughin, Soph., Terrace— I felt safe last year, but I don't this year with all the rumors going around. I think if the people on campus treated the people in the town with more respect, then it would be a lot better.

Terry McIntosh, Fr., Tussey— I don't feel safe. I feel like I can't walk outside without having someone with me. I'm always afraid that there is a chance that something might happen.

Bea Hlaing, Jr., East— No. I don't feel safe. I don't think there is adequate lighting and security is never stationed where they should be. Overall, I think we just need more lights.

Men hoopers off to a good start

The Men's basketball team opened its season at the Scotty Wood Memorial tournament two weekends ago at Muhlenberg College. In the first round game the Indians faced MAC Northern conference rival King's College (the game does not count on the league record) and walked away with a 82-69 victory after being up by as many as 20 points.

Senoir swingman Joe Deblase led the charge connecting for 21 points in the victory over one of the top rated northern division teams. Deblase was 9 of 13 from the floor and three of four from the charity stripe for the Indians, who trailed early 9-2. Four other Indian players scored eight points, while three of those four led the Indians on the glass. Bob Dombroski had eight caroms, while Jay Nicholson and Mike Antenucci each had seven. Don Wagner was the other eight point score.

The Tribe outrebounded King's 38-29, after the Monarchs made early claims as having the best one-two rebounding punch in the league. Inside strongman, Rob Grim was held to a measly four points and three rebounds. Juniata shot a sub-par 51% from the floor but connected on 17-21 from the charity stripe.

The Indians advanced into the championship game against Muhlenberg, easy winners over Haverford College. Despite tournament MVP Jay Nicholson's 16 point, 13 rebound performance the Tribe fell short 67-66. Juniata shot a lousy 42% from the floor and only 56% from the line.

After trailing by one with only 30 seconds remaining Les Squair put Juniata out in front by connecting on two free throws in a one plus one situation. Unfortunately, the Indians fouled a King's player with 15 seconds to play and he hit both ends of a one-and-one. An Antenucci jumper missed in the final seconds and the Tribe fell 1-1 and had to settle for second place.

After a week of practice Juniata regrouped for what would be considered a tougher tournament hosted by Carnegie Mellon University. The Indians played host school in the first round and jumped to a 47-31 half-time lead. Despite poor shooting from the field and the foul line in the second half the Indians escaped with a 78-69 victory.

Tournament MVP Les Squiar scored 16 points and hauled in seven rebounds and was followed by Nicholson who had 12 points and eight boards. Antenucci scored 11 points off the bench and Deblase added ten more to aid his selection to the all-tournament team for the second weekend in a row. Dombroski added eight more caroms for the Tribe, who pushed their record to 2-1.

Allegheny College, overtime winners against NAIA Westminster College, would face Juniata in the Championship game. The Gators, NCAA qualifiers last season would be the toughest test for the Indians in this young season. A great team effort allowed the Indians to capture the championship 72-64.

Deblase was an outstanding 8 for 11 from the floor, while Dombroski and somewhat injured point guard, Shawn Habakus, connected on 12 of 14 chartiy attempts. Squair ripped down a game high 18 rebounds, while Nicholson added 12 points to the balance scoring attack, which saw four in double figures and two with eight. The Tribe out rebounded their opponents for the fourth time in as many games and entered league play this past Monday with a 3-1 record.

The Indians hosted two of the tougher conference teams in Elizabethtown and Lycoming this past Monday and Wednesday, respectively. They travel to Messiah College this Saturday before returning home on Monday to host Lebanon Valley. Monday's Varsity game gets underway at 7:30 and preceeds the JV contest with LVC.

Women lose in tourney league season underway

The women's basketball team got off to a slow start in opening their 1988-89 season. The Indians were defeated 66-33 in the Muskingum tournament by the host team. Their luck didn't change any in the consolation game, as the Tribe fell to Salisbury State 68-52.

In the first game freshman Sherry DeAgostino paced the Indians with 14 points, shooting 6 for 15 from the floor and making two of her three shots from the charity stripe. Pam Wyrick tossed in eight points and led the Indians on the boards, hauling in eight rebounds.

The Indians shot a dismal 30% from the floor and only 42% from foul line. The poor shooting was aided by 27 turnovers and an extremely large rebounding edge in favor of the opposition (52-28).

In the consolation game the Indians fell short to Salisbury and recorded a lower shooting percentage (25%) from the floor but shot extremely better from the foul line (72%). DeAgostino once again led the way, tossing in 17 points and snarring five rebounds. Andrea Smeigh was next with 11 points, while Wyrick ripped down a team-high 17 rebounds. However, the Indians could not overcome their 36 turnovers and went in to conference play with a 0-2 record.<P<MSAgainst Messiah last Tuesday the Tribe fell four points short despite a 19 point effort from DeAgostino and 16 from Wyrick. Hiedi McCarthy also scored 12 points in the game for Juniata. The Indians stood at 0-3 entering Monday's game against conference favorite Elizabethtown. They played host to Lycoming yesterday and are off until the seventh when they will travel to Susquehanna in the first half of a men's and women's MAC double-header.

V-ball season was extremely successful

The Juniata College women's volleyball team once again found itself among the elite of the NCAA Division III national scene with its third consecutive trip to the Final Four. An outstanding third place showing in the national tournament capped a 43-7 season for veteran coach Larry Bock's squad.

It was Juniata's sixth Final Four appearance in eight straight trips to the NCAA Division III women's volleyball tournament. The Indians also captured their eighth consecutive Middle Atlantic Conference volleyball championship this fall.

"We can't help but be very pleased with the way the team and players developed this season," said Bock who is 424 and 84 in 12 seasons as head coach of the program. "They came together when things were tough, learned from mistakes and losses and became an outstanding athletic team. The Juniata College volleyball team reached its potential at the right time and came within a break or two of winning a national championship."

The Indians lost a devastating semi-final match to host University of California—San Diego, three games to two after winning the opening two games. However, the Tribe bounced back to take consolation honors with a 3-2 win over a third consecutive national crown.

Juniata played some of its best volleyball ever in the Final Four. Two Juniata players, senior Jackie Rebert of Spring Grove and junior Melinda Selby of Elmora (Cambria Heights High School), were selected to the Final Four All-Tournament team. Prior to the tourney, Rebert was named a 1988 Russell Athletic/American Volleyball Coaches Association Division III second-team All-American for the second consecutive year.

"Jackie was playing tremendous all-around volleyball," said Bock. After the award was announced, Bock praised Rebert as the best player ever at Juniata, and voiced strong regret she did not receive the first team recognition he felt she deserved.

An outside hitter, Rebert led the team in service aces (61) and passing with 317 digs. She was second on the team in kills with 442, with a kill percentage of .247.

Along with Rebert, Bock will lose senior captain Dana Worthington of Johnstown (Bishop McCort) and senior student assistant Sue Gelston of Phoenix, Md. (Hereford High School) to graduation. Worthington was fourth on the team with 121 digs as a defensive specialist.

"We will certainly miss Jackie, Dana and Sue," said Bock.

Thanksgiving Thanks

By George Zanic

As we look back on Thanksgiving, here are some things the following people can be thankful for:

Chuck Noll- The season is almost over.

Joe Paterno- At least his candidate ran better than his football team.

Dan Helm- Sixteen players who are unselfish and only care about wins and losses not playing time.

Joe DeBlase- Bleachers to run into and basketballs to dive after.

Barry Sanders- Iowa State, Kansas State and Kansas

Tommy Lasorda- Kirk Gibson and pasta (not necessarily in that order).

Paul Evans- Jerome Lane went to the NBA and took his attitude with him.

Pittsburgh- Mario

The Eagles- A long-awaited playoff bid (I hope I jinxed them), thanks to Buddy Ball.

Notre Dame- Lou Holtz

Lou Holtz- Notre Dame

Mike Antenucci- 71% from the field

Buddy Ryan- The perfect city for him to coach in; everyone in Philadelphia has the same mentality as he does.

Joe Scialabba- He only has to put up with me for one more semester.

Les Squair- A well deserved MVP trophy form the CMU Tournament.

Troy Aikman- Detroit isn't really a bad city.

George Zanic- College basketball, college football, the NFL, Dick Vitale, Chris Berman and point spreads.

Dear Editor,

Shame, shame, shame again!

It's apparent once more that Juniata College needs to stress foreign language awareness and understanding. In the October 13th issue of "The Juniatian" there appeared an article about the Spanish evening that had been presented. The article said there are "different languages in Spain--it's not just Spanish, there are lots of different dialects". It is true that there are different languages spoken in Spain, but they are not dialects; these two words are not synonymous. I am currently studying in Barcelona which is a bilingual city. The people in this part of Spain, known as Catalonia, speak Catalan as well as Castilian (what Americans call "Spanish"). Catalan is an entirely different language than Castilian, with it's own history and literature. I think it's great that attempts are being made to educate our campus about foreign languages, but it is quite evident from this article that people are walking away from these "information sessions" still uniformed.

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXIX No. 12 Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 December 8, 1988

A visit from "SANTA"!

Santa promises Julie, Jenn, and Linda something special for Christmas at South's annual Christmas Semi-Formal.

32 Juniata students named to Who's Who

The 1989 edition of WHO'S WHO AMONG STUDENTS IN AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES will include the names of 32 students from Juniata College who have been selected as national outstanding campus leaders.

Campus nominating committees and editors of the annual directory have included the names of these students based on their academic achievement, service to the community, leadership in extracurricular activities and potential for continued success.

They join an elite group of students selected form more than 1,400 institutions of higher learning in all 50 states, the District of Columbia and several foreign nations.

<SMOutstanding students have been honored in the annual directory since it was first published in 1934.

Students named this year from Juniata College are as follow: Rebecca Abraham, Michele Anderson, Joelle Beecher, Renee Bender, Karen Brubaker, Daniel Crossey, Joseph DeBlase, John Deppen, Brent Flickinger, Mary Fortson, Susan Headley, Robert Herzog, Melanie Hopkins, Jennifer Howells, Crickett Julius, Meg Kistler, Linda Lloyd, Nancy McCullen, Sharon Miller, Donnell Orleski, Shawn Peck, Richard Russell, Kevin Seachrist, Douglas Spotts, Heloi Stark, Dan Stambaugh, Michael Welker, Richard Weyman, Dana Worthington, John Yelenic, and George Zanic.

Dr. Hunter presents A Christmas Carol tonight

Dr. Richard E. Hunter, professor of English at Juniata College, will read Charles Dickens' "Christmas Carol" on Thursday, December 8, in Shoemaker Galleries at 8:15 pm. The public is cordially invited to attend and share in the spirit of the season.

Every other year for the past 16, Dr. Hunter has given an hour-long dramatic reading of Dickens' famous yuletide story. He continues the tradition this year.

"We've got all your favorite characters in there: the three ghosts, Scrooge's nephew, Bob Cratchit, Tiny Tim -- the works," says Dr. Hunter. "I like being completely loyal to Dickens' words. There may be no dance routines or songs sung, but I believe the story comes alive; and I'm sounding more and more naturally like old Ebenezer as the years fly by."

Dr. Hunter expects this to be the next to last time he does the story presentation before he retires. He emphasizes the story is for children of all ages.

There is no admission charge for the evening. After the reading, light refreshments will be served.

Thought for the Week

World News at a Glance

The trial of Joel Steinberg, accused of beating to death the 6-year old child he and Hedda Nussbaum were raising continues to escalate. Hedda has taken the stand to testify as key witness against her ex-lover who has over the past 10 years repeatedly beat and abused her. This trial has become a national symbol of child abuse and domestic violence. Hundreds of spectators have packed the courthouse and calls to hot lines have surged and once-battered have been drawn to their televisions to relive their nightmares. Experts hope Nussbaum's tragedy will give other battered women a rallying point-and help them get out before it's too late.

Companies plan to continue their hiring binge into 1989- after adding 3 million new jobs this year. The demand will be stronger in the South and West and only slightly weaker in the Northeast according to The Manpower forecast.

More teens are dying from accidental injuries, murder and suicide than in the 1960's says a government report. The rate is 11% higher today than in the past eight years. Surveys show that some causes for this may be that teens don't wear seatbelts, more consider suicide and threats on teen lives has increased dramatically. Alcohol and drug use have increased and the poll also suggests that TV and movie violence have also played a role in the increase.

Barry Sanders, Oklahoma State running back ran away with this year's Heisman. Sanders also set the single-season rushing record with 2,553 yards this season, 211 more than the old record set in 1981.

"Radiothon" slated for Sat. Dec. 10

WRLR-FM in Huntingdon is sponsoring a "Celebrity Radiothon" on Saturday, December 10 to benefit Special Olympics. Items to be auctioned include autographed pictures, t-shirts, posters, and musical instruments from some of todays most popular television celebrities and recording artists. Over 100 items have been contributed by celebrities such as Michael J. Fox, John Cougar Mellencamp, Bon Jovi, Justine Bateman, Journey, Hooters, Pittsburgh Steelers, and more. Beginning at 10:00 AM on December 10, a WRLR announcer will describe one item at a time and give listeners a specified amount of time to call WRLR and bid on that item. When the time is up, the listener who called in the highest bid will obtain the item. All proceeds will go to area J Special Olympics.

"It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas" is becoming a popular song on campus. For the first year ever, Juniata students have taken a special pride in their campus for the season by decorating not only residence halls, but administrative and classroom buildings alike. The end of the semester is made just a little bit easier when students have the opportunity to enjoy the wonderful atmosphere these decorations bring to campus.

The decorations were the mastermind of Mrs. Robert Neff and Dottie Hershberger. With full cooperation from the administration and students, Centerboard created a new "Hanging of the Greens" committee to carry out the plans. Thanks is definitely in order to Cindy Burgo and Donna Spencer, co-chairs of the committee, who began what I hope will become a new Juniata tradition. It is sad to note that the committee was made up of only five other students, beside the chairpersons. Hopefully, students will notice this year what a difference the decorations make on the campus and will be waiting to get involved next year. It is interesting to note, however, that President and Mrs. Neff, Jim and Nan Hunt, and Dottie Hershberger all took part in the actual "hanging of the greens". Not only were the students and administration important in this new undertaking, but also the physical plant employees. Without their manpower and cooperation, the decorations would not have been possible. It's really touching to see the Juniata community able to work so well together to achieve such an end. Hats off to all of you for setting such a wonderful example to all of us.

The decorations bring not only beauty to the campus, but also a sign of relief. To me, the decorations remind me that every day brings me a day closer to the end of the semester. All of the papers and tests are almost over, at least for a little while. Most students do not take time to do much of anything this time of the year, but this gives us some appreciation for the season in the midst of all the chaos the end of the semester brings.

As the last day of classes draws near, take a few minutes on your way to class to appreciate all of the time and hard work these administrators, students, and campus employees have put into making Juniata everyones "home away from home".

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Being a Senior (finally!), I looked forward to this year with excitement, anticipation...and wonder. I wondered about many profound things, like who I am, and what and who I might be after this year. (Fleeting images of a garbage woman or a bag lady kept creeping in!) But most of all, I wondered how the new alcohol policy would afect JC's social life.

At the end of last year a metamorphisis seemed to take place in the students as they heard about the new policy. Eyes flew wide open, blood pressure increased, terrified screams of "I'm transferring" were heard--and hundreds of people stormed Quality Beverage to purchase that "last keg". At the beginning of this year different comments were heard--that it was going to be boring, there would be nothing to do , and that JC was going to become a suitcase college.

Since we've heard so much of that side, I'd like to make another argument. There are plenty of activities, this is not a suitcase college, and that it is not the change in the alcohol policy that would make JC boring--rather it's the attitude of the students.

"There is nothing to do." Okay, let me see if I remember the year correctly (of course I can - I wasn't 21 yet and remember everything--there's a plus!) So far first it started off with the opening picnic- the Lobsterfest- good food and entertainment! Then came Parent<Rs weekend and Homecoming, both weekends booked full of actitivies. And of course Mountain Day (and that's not even a weekend event!) Films are shown on Fridays, Coffeehouse provide after-film entertainment, the artist series has put on a number of performances and there has been a lounge party every Saturday. There are also a great number of clubs and organizations which run independent social activities! During the week there are guest lecturers! Hmmm, there sure is nothing to do around here.

So what else "isn't" going to happen in the rest of this year. Well, of course we have madrigal, and then there aren't entertaining lectures (Yolanda King in Feb and more are being planned presently), lounge parties, artist series performances and films have already been planned. The Spring break trip is being arranged and its inexpensive, guaranteed, and the hotel is located above the best 2 bars in Florida. Of course there is the Presidential Ball and preceeding that an all campus winter beach party (complete with sand, 2 1/2 feet deep pools, and entertainment). And of course there is always Springfest, it'll be a litle different with the new policy, but the big picture is still the same.

It seems that I have filled a great bit of this letter up with all of that "nothing" that is going on around here! So, maybe we don't like the idea of not being able to drink. Think about that for a second... in this day and age, isn't it kind of convienient to remember who or what we were with during and after that lounge party? Is it so bad that we're now noticing that we can wear nice clothes to a lounge party and not worry about going back to our rooms covered with beer? Do we really miss being told how we made fools out of ourselves the night before?

Maybe you're thinking, "sure, you're a senior--you're 21!" But I wasn't for a while in the beginning of the year, and I still had fun. Maybe we don't like the activities provided. Many students and administrative people have put together as much as they could, but they are not our babysitters! If we don't like what it provided--it's not illegal to come up with something new and creative to do ourselves (trust me--I checked the pathfinder!) Instead of sulking and repeating "There's nothing to do"--why don't we just create something on our own! I would be inclined to say that those who have had a "boring" time this semester, just have "boring" attitudes. Everyone complained about the madrigal line, but the way Rush wrote about it in last week's Muddy Run made me sorry that I didn't wait in that line--it sounded like fun! It's not what's provided or if we like it or not, it's all in how we look at it! Anything can be fun--as long as you have a fun attitude!

Sincerely,
Joelle Beecher

The day after the election, President-elect George Bush said in response to a reporter's question that he believed the number of racial incidents in America had decreased during the eight years of the Reagan-Bush administration. As I reflect on this statement, I cannot help but ask, "Where was George?"

Has he forgotten the bloodshed at Howard Beach? Has the image of civil rights marchers being attacked and harassed in Forsyth County, Georgia slipped his mind? Has George Bush read the papers recently and seen the story about the Ku Klux Klan activity in Huntingdon County?

Racism in America is not dead. We may no longer see "whites only" signs, but segregation and discrimination still exist. The KKK still actively preaches its twisted gospel of hatred and racism. Despite numeruous victories in the fight against bigotry, Martin Luther King, Jr.'s dream of racial equality in America remains a dream deferred.

What must we do? We must resolve to continue the fight. Though racism today often comes in more subtle forms than it did twenty years ago, it is just as important to combat it vigorously at every turn. We can no longer afford to just talk about Dr. King's dream - we must roll up our sleeves and prepare to work hard to make his dream a reality.

I think it will be interesting to see what transpires when Yolanda King, Dr King's eldest daughter, visits Juniata in February. Will the Klan stage a demonstration in Huntingdon? If so, what will be our response? Will we be content to remain within the confines of our insulated (some would say unreal) world, or will we have the courage to take to the streets in the nonviolent tradition of Dr. King and stand up against racism and its ignorance?

I do not have a crystal ball. I do not know what the future holds. I do

Wellness Tips

The way to survive chilly winter weather without a cold is to stay out of drafts, button up your coat, and wear your boots-right? Not necessarily.

According to recent research, there are over 300 viruses which cause symptoms of the common cold and as yet, there is no evidence of a cure. Much scientific opinion holds that cold-causing viruses are present in the body most of the time. In most cases they do not cause problems. However, when a person is run down, eats improperly, and doesn't get enough rest; these viruses tend to overcome the body's natural resistance. That's how we get a cold. But - how do you "catch" one?

One widely held belief about inheriting someone else's virus is that it happens most frequently during the colder months when there are increased contacts among people. Staying out of a sneeze's way is not enough. According to research by the University of Virginia Medical School, only two out of 25 persons afflicted with a cold expelled "detectable" rhinoviruses in a cough or a sneeze. Cold viruses, the study showed, are most readily picked up by touching an object or a surface handled previously by someone else who deposited the virus.

Hence, you can catch a cold more easily by shaking hands than by kissing. What is left then, in the way of cold prevention? Washing hands may help.

The person who gives you the cold would not have to be in the same room with you at the same time. Cold viruses have even been known to survive overnight on surfaces such as faucets, sinks, or glasses which the virus carrier may have handled or used a number of hours previously.

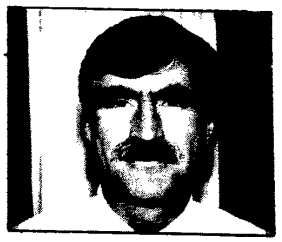
Even if there are a very few preventatives for a cold, here are a number of recommended precautions of which a cold-sufferer should be aware.

1. Get more rest than usual.
2. A hot shower or bath before bed may help decongest respiratory passages.
3. Tylenol and nasal decongestants may help to alleviate symptoms.
4. Drink lots of fluids.
5. Don't smoke.

Be sure to see a health professional if symptoms persist accompanied by a fever, acute sore throat with a productive cough or chest pain. Take care of yourselves. Stay well for finals!

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan



As the semester comes to a close, it seems appropriate to begin to think about, and more importantly, to plan for the soon-to-be-here final exam period.

Please notice that I said to "think about and plan for" and not to "worry" about finals. As mentioned many times in this column, worry is a waste of time and energy and all of us have far more productive ways to use our valuable time and precious energy.

While the following remarks are directed toward those individuals who are taking final exams at JC for the first time, presumably they will be helpful to all. Remember also that the suggestions are aimed at helping us to understand how emotional and physical well-being contribute to academic success.

* Take on a positive attitude. Don't view finals as more than you can handle and try not to overreact and aggravate the situation by negative self-talk. Challenge yourself to do well and take the view that exams present an opportunity to succeed and not to fail.

* Organize your time and create a plan. My discussion with successful students make it abundantly clear that planning ahead, not allowing work to pile up and not waiting until the last minute are critical considerations as we head in to final exams. As one student told me, final exam preparation is a process that begins long before the exams are actually taken.

* Include recreation, exercise, and socializing in your plan. Preparing for final exams does not require that we become hermits and give up all sense of normalcy. In fact, in times of stress it is imperative to follow a somewhat normal routine. Use exercise and recreation as a means of physical replenishment and tension release. Use brief visits with friends as a way of reinforcing study behavior and a means of motivating yourself. Reward yourself for having studied by doing something nice for yourself.

* Take care of yourself. Try to maintain some semblance of regularity regarding sleep. Take the time to eat properly and by all means make every effort to eat a balanced breakfast.

You don't have to go it alone. Seek advice and support form friends, PA's, RA's, professors and others in your environment. Above all, be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

"Behold, the days are coming, says the Lord."

Days of shopping, wrapping, sending;

days of baking, cooking, feasting;

days of happy decorating.

Behold, the days are coming, says the Lord,

when I will fulfill the promise I made."

Come, Lord Jesus.

It was with these words that Catholics lit the first candle on the traditional Advent wreath.

The Advent wreath dates back to ancient celebrations of the winter Slostice, that time in the year when the sun reaches its southern most point in the heavens and the days are the darkest and most gloomy. Because they longed for the return of the sun's light and life, the ancients stopped all usual activity, sacrificed the use of their wagon wheels and hung them up, festooned with lights and greens in their celebration halls.

There they awaited the return of their sun-god, thinking of the warmth and life that god brought. Celebrations culminated in the "nativity" of the sun--the turning point of the year.

As Christians, we use the same meaningful custom to anticipate the feast of light and life: the nativity of the Savior. We add one light on the wreath for each Sunday in Advent. We think of the darkness after Adam's sin and watch the growing hope and light as the prophets and the Virgin help up prepare for that saving birth. But Advent (the word means "beginning") not only recalls the past event of the Savior's birth. It also looks forward into the future preparing us for the second coming when Jesus will return in glory on the clouds of heaven. In this sense, Advent is a season of patient waiting and joyful expectation.

As my mother continues to be in a coma in Washington, D.C. hospital, this aspect of Advent has taken on a much deeper meaning for me. My family and I patiently wait and joyfully expect her to awake and recover just as we patiently wait and joyfully expect Jesus to come today, tomorrow and for ages to come.

The circular shape of the Advent Wreath reminds us of the coming light of the sun and the coming light of the "Son of Justice", the Savior, the Eternal Word of God.

The evergreens of the Advent Wreath remind us of the eternal life we have in Jesus.

The four candles of the Advent Wreath remind us of the many millennia the human race had to patiently wait in joyful expectation of the Savior while their light reminds us that Jesus is the light of the world and the light of our lives.

That light, that patient waiting in joyful expectation is what we will gather to celebrate in a special way at the All Campus Advent Christmas Worship Service on Sunday, December 11, 1988 in Oller Hall after Catholic and Protestant Worship at 6:00 p.m. The theme of the Service is "Waiting with Shepherds and Angels" and includes the ancient "Proclamation of Christmas". Please mark your calendar with this event and join us in the celebration. Come, Lord Jesus.

Nothing can get me down at Christmas -- I won't let it. My grin will not fade, regardless of the fact that for some strange reason the academic powers that be have decided to make the next 72 hours, every ho-ho-ho-one of 'em, the most crucial of my college career. Despite the reality that the South Semi-Formal summed up some psychological field that provoked incredible animosity, and a few fist-fights, among 90 percent of the couples in attendance there between 8-12 pm on Saturday Night. In spite of the fact that I was numbered among the ninety without setting foot in South. Notwithstanding the truth that the weather is, as usual, messing around and not behaving itself and acting as proper weather should and settling down to the business of snowing. Irregardless of the problem that all the money I had set aside for Christmas presents for my destitute family decided that it was better off paying for a phone call to England in the middle of the afternoon, when the rates were higher. Even though last week's Muddy Run got near simultaneous "great article" and "what a piece of crap" comments from people whose opinions mean something to me. Truly, this is the stuff of which holidays are made - I must keep this clipping so my kids can understand the true meaning of Christmas someday. In the meantime, I'll just be crouching here in my corner, maintaining a glazed smile and keeping my rifle trained on the door. "DO NOT OPEN TIL CHRISTMAS".

know that if our generation fails in its obligation to struggle against bigotry and intolerance, our obligation to struggle against bigotry and intolerance, our children will inherit a legacy of racial divisiveness and inequality. If this happens, I hope our children will forgive us. I earnestly hope they will have the strength and wisdom to move forward in pursuit of the dream.

Into this world,
this demented inn,
in which there is no room
for him at all,
Christ has come uninvited.
But because he cannot be at home in it, because he is out of place in it,...
His place is with those who do not belong, who are neglected
by power because they are regarded as weak,
those who are discredited, who are denied
the status of a person, tortured and exterminated.
With those for whom
there is no room,
Christ is present in this world.
He is mysteriously present in those for whom there seem to be nothing but the world at its worst.

Hot Wax

By Ferris Buehler

Ho Ho How's it goin? Season's Greetings and welcome to the final edition of the Hot Wax music review mondo-newspaper-Christmas-spectacular. (Ooops, slipped.) This is my fourth annual (and likely final) R.E.M. album critique. It's a tough one, too, considering that I generally want to promote (what I believe to be) their musical/lyrical qualities. Normally, I judge an R.E.M. album by listening to it from start to finish in one sitting. If I don't have to take a break (other than the 'natural function' kind), it's a good album. Green, R.E.M.'s latest effort, didn't pass this test. The album as a whole just doesn't come out and grab me - and I'm not sure why. But I'll try to describe it and maybe you'll know what you think of it. (Welcome to the wonderful world of self-service Album Reviews - typifying the Bush motto: "You want it? Do it yerself!"

Overall, the band keeps becoming clearer, more defineable and more precise. This applies to both texts and music. However, as their musicianship has evolved to a well-honed and exact performance, and as Michael Stipe's singing/songwriting has developed into something almost too understandable, R.E.M. may be showing signs of losing its musical cohesion. One could say they've chosen clarity over concept. (And so by doing left us with an album that's somewhat unclear.) R.E.M. started out telling stories and creating moods (Murmur, Reckoning). They then drifted towards a more artistic/poetic musical landscape ("...practice makes perfect perfect is a fault and faultlines change"-from Lifes Rich Pageant) and have now arrived somehwere else. Stardom, perhaps? After all, Green is their first major-label (Warner Bros.) release. We're talking big bucks here. (Aha - that's why it's called 'Green'!?) But what price fortune?

The first song on the 'Air' side, quite ironically entitled "Pop Song '89", sets the tone for a lot of the album. It almost seems as if R.E.M. were trying too hard on this song, which gave me (and my ears) the impression that they didn't really try hard at all. The main guitar riff rings all too similar to its counterpart in "Feeling Gravity's Pull" (from Fables of the Reconstruction), while losing most of its old impact. The song hangs at a medium pace with a 'medium' amount of energy and emotion. There are no highs and lows, no peaks and valleys, no precipices or dark depths... Well, the point is made. With a few exceptions, the album tends to stay in the middle and not push either extreme. A few songs almost break out of the rut and/or have certain individual qualities which keep you listening. Examples of songs in this category would be "The Wrong Child" (a rather depressing piece about an abused child, and which has a good guitar/piano instrumentation) and "Get Up" (a somewhat "rousing" song - Ho, Ho - with great harmonies) and a music box - as compared to drum or guitar-solo to boot.

But there are the "fabulous four," as it were. These will be the initial force which will drive me to purchase the CD (as the first of the six CDs I'll get for one penny from one of those Casey Casem record-clearance-house-deals - boy, I LOVE America!) But enough about politics... "You are the everything" is the first song that critics and listening public alike will correctly analyze as being a "love song", after being way off base with "Fall on me" and "The one I love". It is a beautiful song. Peter Buck used some of the monetary spoils from the last album to pick up a mandolin. It was money very well spent as evidenced here. The melodies simply cascade through the song. Some of the neatest couplets are sung with feeling and meaning, whether or not they actually mean anything (but they usually do). "World Leader Pretend", the first R.E.M. song whose lyrics appear in their entirety on any album, is indeed worth your while. It's potentially biting theme is handled with a matter-of-fact poise and the best keyboard-guitar arrangments on the album. A song about the abuse of power given an "unleader-like" sense of despair.

On the "Metal" side we find a cynical statement about T.V. evangelists and their "God-given" powers in the song "Turn you inside out". (Don't quote me on that - it's just a hunch.) But whatever it's meaning, Mike Mill's bass playing locks you in for the duration. Imagine the base from the Beatle's White Album compressed into one song - WOW! Stipe's crooning shows signs of leaning towards Dylan, but not to worry - it's not another case of Bono-syndrome. Lastly but not leastly is the by now well known "Orange Crush", a song dealing with either A) soda, B) The Cincinnati Bengals' offensive line, or C) the cancer (and other nasty things)-causing defoliant, Agent Orange? (Ask your friends and family - have a blast!) It's a song that you can really sing to - it even makes you think you know the lyrics: "Swallow tea, don't swallow tea - I got some time, I got my Orange Crushed" sez my roommate. Yep - their words exactly!

Enough! There's no way I can summarize my feelings about this album in a form at least as coherent as the rest of the article (Oh - that coherent?) I'm buying Green. No question. It may take some time, but I think it will be worth it. R.E.M.'s definitely given us something to chew on here. Some of it tastes kind of funny. I have faith, though... Pass me another plate.

yesterday's classics... today's hits!

By Heidi N. Wagaman

Power Notes...

The end of a busy semester is rapidly approaching and everyone at Power 92 has been working very hard to meet his/her goals for 1988. So far, many new ideas proposed in September have been developed and implemented.

Working together, the News Department and the engineering wizards in the Engineering Department brought to the Juniata campus and Huntingdon, the ABC Satellite News. The national news is now aired every hour on the hour, and it seems that the news has been well received by the community in general.

This semester, Power 92 also saw the birthday of its mascot, Tuner Rabbit. Created by Bill Mundy, named by Chris Glover, and artistically rendered by Kim Asplund, Tuner will surely be seen around campus in the coming months.

Looking into December, Power 92 is celebrating the holidays with a Christmas dinner, Wednesday, December 14, 1988. The festivities begin at 5:15 pm sharp. If you didn't RSVP yet, contact Mike Barnett in order to attend.

Finally, the new Spring Schedule for radio shows is completed and posted in the station lobby.

Until next time, remember to turn your dial to 92.3 Power 92, bringing you yesterday's classics AND today's hits!

Come to the FRENCH TABLE. Tuesday nights at six thirty in the North alcove of Baker Refectory. Meet and speak with lots of interesting people with new ideas and a different viewpoint! The Russian Table meets Wednesday afternoons at one o'clock. Come learn more about a language and a nation that makes such a difference in our lives as the USSR. The International Club is selling Gummi Bears - imported from W. Germany - Look for them at sporting events and support a very worthwhile (and broke!) educational group!

Come one- come all Join the Internat'l Club

We have an image problem. People just haven't gotten the idea. THE INTERNATIONAL CLUB IS NOT just for exchange students and those Juniata students who have been, or are going, abroad. We're NOT elitists! Really! Our club is for everyone who has an interest in the world we live in.

We are an educational as well as a social club. Our past activities include: films, trips (Niagra Falls, Toronto, New York City), a day at the Pennsylvania Renaissance Faire in York, an afternoon at an Amish Village, the Monday Night Explorer series (exploring France, England, West Germany, Spain, and Japan). We have a tutorial service for those students studying French, German, or Spanish (call Cherie at -2808 or ask at the language lab). There are our language tables - The Russian table meets Wednesdays at one o'clock, the French table, Tuesday nights at six. Both take place in the North Alcove of Baker and you don't have to speak the language to come - just an interest in the world - IT'S FUN!

We are associated with the International Clubs of Penn State and will be taking part in many of their activites during Spring term. Also coming up next semester are our Mardi Gras extravaganza in February, a trip to Busch Gardens-The Old Country in April, a Model UN, ski-weekend at Mt. St. Anne's near Quebec City, etc., etc., etc!

We meet Monday nights at 6:30 in South's Carpted Lounge, and will be planning films, speakers, and games to follow. Come to our first meeting of 1989, Monday, January 16 and learn more about the world!

JC's Annual Christmas Worship

Juniata College's Christmas Worship Service will be held on Sunday, December 11, at 7:00 pm in Oller Hall on the Juniata Campus. The candlelight service, attended by over 350 people last year, will follow Catholic Mass in the Ballroom of Ellis College Center and Protestant communion in the Stone Church of the Brethren. The Mass and communion services will begin at 6:00 pm.

The worship service program, led by the Rev. Dr. M. Andrew Murray, chaplain; Father David Arseneault, Catholic campus minister; and Christopher Noyes, Protestant campus minister, will include participation by members of the Juniata College student body. The service will conclude with the traditional singing of Christmas carols on the Oller lawn.

The Campus Ministry Board invites the Huntingdon community to celebrate Christmas with Juniata College by attending this worship service.

By Trish Kazmerski

'Twas the night before Madrigal in a small college town, not a student, professor, or security guard to be found.
The decorations were hung in Baker with care,
With the hope that no would catch food poisoning there.
With Mama Neff in her kerchief and Paper Neff in his cap,
They had just settled down for a long winter's nap.
Bill Houston was nestled, all snug in his bed,
While visions of lounge parties danced in his head.
The students were locked safely behind wooden doors,
Either studying or partying, I won't say anymore.
The Chem Labs were closed, the Vax was in slumber,
Lesher's pipes weren't leaking, no need for a Blue-Army plumber.
The coaches and players were content as they slept,
A lone Power 92 DJ counted CD's to protect them from theft.
T-N-T was quiet, what else is new?
While Sherwood was Sherwood - who cares what they do!
Cloister was lit, the arch as well as the guys.
While East kept a vigil, looking towards Western skies.
North stood proudly, on top of the hill,
As a train passed the cliffs, and left a sharp shrill.
The moon was shining high in the sky, as the silence was broken as a townie's pick-up drove by.
All was quiet and tranquil that night, as I turned off the light and whispered good nite.
It was 3 am when I heard a loud shatter,
I ran to my window to see what was the matter,
I looked down on the ground, nothing was there,
then wistfully I looked up into the air.
When what to my wondering eyes should appear,
but a miniature sleigh, filled with Budweiser beer.
And a drive so built, with a smile so bright,
I knew it was Randy Deike who was aligned in my sight.
I stood there and said,"No way, what the f!"
As that townie drove by again in his truck.
I knew I wasn't dreaming, drunk, or asleep,
why do these things always happen to me?
My roommate was gone, my neighbors asleep.
That's when I awoke my RA from her deep sleep.
She said, "OK Trish, now what's the problem, who are you scoping, or where's the goblin."
"Gee you're funny, I can hardly stop laughing, but wait to you see this," I said nonchalantly.
She came to my room, thank God, I hid all my booze,
Looked out the window whispering,"What do I have to lose?"
I said look for yourself, as I stood there in glee,
She looked for a moment, then let out a scream,
"Oh look up on Ellis, on top of the roof, there's a sleigh, and some reindeer, and a red-suited goof." (She's so observant.)
I said, "No shit, but that's not a student carousing, that's
Mr. Deike, the one in charge of discipline and housing".
She looked more carefully and said; That's Randy alright, but what's he doing up there on a cold winter's night? (I said stargazing "What are you going to do about him?", curiously I asked.
She replied, "I have my Pathfinder, paper, and pen, I'm an RA prepared for the task. He's drinking and transporting the devil's brew, and reindeer aren't allowed in resident rooms. Plus his sleigh isn't registered, he has no ID, he's parked illegally, that's $15 fee. I would say his next stop is in front of the Judicial Committee!" (I said OK)
I said, "Oh come on, he's a real nice guy, " as I greedily drank that cold Bud with my eye.
"Think of the party that we could have, if you let him distribute the halves."
She said, "What's the deal, what's in it for me?" I replied, "Instant popularity!!"
She said, "I don't buy it, let's see some green." So Randy smiled and handed her a Christmas tree.
He said with a smile of course, as he lit up his pipe, "that's the spirit Heloi, you're a good girl alright.
What do you want for Christmas it's yours in a minute."
I said, "Quit the chatter, get the kegs distributed!"
So down every chimney he flew like a flash, he looked like a peddler carrying his sack. The Ranch light flew on, Jim Tufano awoke. He went down to the tree, he thought he smelled smoke.
Jim looked dazed and yelled, "Yo Randy, what's up? But Randy didn't answer, just filled up his cup.
Jim knew that Randy was feeling real good even though he was covered with soot from his head to his foot.
And his eyes were all glossy, his cheeks too rosy, and his stomach just wiggled like a bowl full of jelly.
Randy then gave a toast, and yelled, "Let's Party!!"
So Tufano ran to wake Jimbo

Good Hall gets a facelift for the season.

Scholars abroad- great way to see the world

By Pam Mertz

This year the Admissions Office at Juniata College has started a unique new program to attract students with exceptional scholarship, character, and leadership potential to come to school here. This program, the Scholars Abroad Seminar, offers qualifying students the chance to travel abroad for four weeks in Europe for college credit the summer before their freshman year.

Applicants to the college who score 1100 or higher on their SAT's and rank in the top 20% of their graduating class will be invited to Juniata's campus on January 21, 1989 to take an examination to qualify for Brumbaugh-Ellis Scholarships. Twenty-five scholars will be awarded the opportunity to participate in the Scholars Abroad Seminar, "Comparative Cultures". This is a four week tour of Europe that is supervised by Juniata faculty and staff. This seminar is a three credit course which can satisfy the international studies requirement for Juniata's liberal arts core curriculum. Countries included in the itinerary are England, Holland, Belgium, and France.

The total cost of the seminar, $3,800, is paid prior to the student's departure but is reimbursed by the College when the student is enrolled. The $3,800 is deducted from the tuition bill over the student's first two semesters at Juniata. These scholars also receive Brumbaugh-Ellis Scholarships determined by financial need. Those students qualifying for need based aid are awarded an amount over four years. To scholars not qualifying for need based aid, Brumbaugh-Ellis Sholarships of $500 will be awarded the first year.

The Admissions Office is working very diligently to attract students to visit the campus. This year it is providing visitors with more opportunities than previous years. Visitors are offered a campus tour, an interview, the chance to attend classes, and the opportunities to meet with the financial aid director and the career planning and placement director. They can also talk to an athletic coach or a professor if they desire to. The prosepctive student is also given a chance to experience lunch in Baker Refectory. Previous to this year, only the campus tour and the interview were offered to visitors unless they specifically asked for something more. Now they are encouraged to do more things and come back a second or even third time. The idea is to do a better job than competitors with the campus visit.

The new program seems to be working as more people thus far have come to visit the campus; as of Friday, November 4, 277 prospective students had come to campus this year, as compared to last year's 214. This is a 29.4% increase.

In the future the Admissions Office also hopes to initiate a Minority Education Task Force to encourage minorities to attend Juniata College.

Father George Zabelka speaks out about peace

In August of 1945 a young armed forces chaplain blessed the Enola Gay and its crew as they departed to drop the first atomic bomb on Hiroshima. Two days later the same Catholic chaplain blessed the crew which dropped the second bomb on Nagasaki, one of the few predominantly Catholic cities in Japan.

Some time later, that same priest travelled to both cities in the same group as General Douglas MacArthur and saw the suffering and destruction caused by the bombings. The young priest was never the same again.

Father George Zabelka visited Juniata College to speak this past Tuesday, December 6, about his experiences in Japan and his subsequent work for peace. The program was entitled "What Can You Do About Peace?".

Father Zabelka, who lives in Fenton, Michigan, retired from the priesthood over 12 years ago, and since then has been very active in peace work. He continues to keep a full schedule of speaking engagements as well as church retreats and workshops.

"The Reluctant Prophet," a 60-minute documentary film produced in London, deals with Father Zabelka and other issues in the peace movement since World War II. It will be available in the United States next year.

The lecture is part of programming sponsored by the Juniata Campus Ministry Board and the Juniata Catholic Council.

and Harper. Soon everyone on campus was up and about. Except some Freshman Lesher girls who didn't want to get locked out.

The campus was rocking, the stereo's blared, so Ed Pascual and Rando put KVR on the air.

Everyone was smiling from ear to ear, as Rich Gottschall filled everyone's mug full of beer.

This no doubt would go down in JC history, not to be conceited, but all thanks to me.

Arond 5 in the morning, in the midst of a "Social!!" Randy said, well it been real, but I got to go now.

So laying his finger aside of his nose, he gave a quick grin and up the chimney he rose.

And all heard him exclaim, as he drove out of sight, "To avoid tomorrow's hangover, take three aspirin tonite!"

(I'll be broadcasting to 2am tonite, so if I see anything tonite, I'll let you know. If not, Merry Christmas and Happy New Year! Make it a good one!)

The Greenhouse Effect fact not fiction!

By Ei-Ichiro Ochiai, Chemistry Department

Everybody knows what a "greenhouse" is and what it is used for. We even experience often such an effect. The inside of a car left in the sunshine becomes quite warm; that is an example of "greenhouse" effect. Why? It is a matter of energy balance. Energy comes in the form of sunlight; it can get through the window glass. The inside gets warm, and energy is emitted from the warmed material in the form of what's called "infrared" radiation, which cannot escape to the outside because the glass blocks it. On balance, therefore, the amount of energy that gets in is larger than what gets out, thus the interior gets warmer.

The same thing is happening on our planet. In this case the screening agency (corresponding to the window pane) is carbon dioxide. The sun's rays penetrate the atmosphere and warm the earth. The warmed earth emits "infrared" light (see above). This energy (in the form of infrared radiation) cannot get out into space, because it is sucked up by carbon dioxide in the atmosphere. As long as the rate of energy coming from the sun and that escaping into space is balanced, there is no problem. The temperature remains the same. Unfortunately, the carbon dioxide content of the atmosphere has been increasing rapidly in the recent centuries as a result of man's activities. This reduces the rate of energy dissipation from the earth into space. As a consequence, the earth is now definitely warming. What will be the consequence? The answer to this question is debatable. We do not have enough space here to talk about it in detail, but the overall effect may still be described as "global and disastrous".

Where does the carbon dioxide come from in the first place? Everybody is contributing to it; for one thing, the main component of everybody's exhaled breath is carbon dioxide. Of course this is not the major source of the problem; it is a minor source of carbon dioxide. However, almost everybody is also emitting carbon dioxide in larger quantities. Carbon is the major component of coal, wood, and petroleum. So every time you burn one of these materials, whether in a wood-burning stove, or in the motor of your automobile, you are creating carbon dioxide.

So the problem is how to reduce the emission of carbon dioxide. This is not an easy problem to solve. We may need to change our life style completely.

Dana Worthington, Co-captain of Juniata's volleyball team, presents to President Neff and Athletic Director Berrier, the third place trophy won by the Lady Indians at the NCAA Tournament.

Volleyball season wrap
All-conference selections

Four Juniata College women's volleyball players have received All-East and All-Middle Atlantic Conference honors after the Indians' 43-7 season and third-place finish in the NCAA Divison III national tournament.

Coaches from across the country selected the American Volleyball Coaches Association (AVCA) All-Region teams while coaches from the MAC Northern Division voted for the All-Conference team.

Senior outside hitter Jackie Rebert of Spring Grove tops the list for the Tribe. A two-time second-team AVCA Division III All-American, Rebert was also All-East last season and is a three-time All-MAC pick.

Selby, a junior from Elmora (Cambria Heights High School), was a key contributor at outside hitter after transferring to Juniata this fall. She and Rebert were also selected to the NCAA Final Four All-Tournament team.

Juniors Rhonda Bygall and Kris Witchey received their first post-season accolades this fall. Bygall, a middle blocker from Brogue (Red Lion High School), had a strong season despite back problems while Witchey of Grand Junction, Colorado, stepped in to replace three-time All-American Beth Hoppel at setter and responded very well.

"(Assistant coach) Susan (Benusa) and I are very glad and most appreciative of this kind of recognition for our players," said veteran Juniata coach Larry Bock. "The four persons selected are most deserving and all had terrific seasons.

"Outstanding individual performances in volleyball are obviously supplemented by great team support. The honoring of any of our individual players also recognizes the accomplishments and talents of our entire team."

Juniata won its eighth consecutive Middle Atlantic Conference women's volleyball championship this fall and advanced to the NCAA Divison III Final Four for the sixth time in eight appearances in the national tournament.

Grapplers at LVC

The Juniata mens wrestling team opened the season at the Lebanon Valley Invitational this past Saturday , placing four entries into the consolation bracket.

Freshman Glenn Smith (136) finished fifth with a 2-1 record and John Swanson (150), Steve Manderbach (177) and Terry Weaverling (167) all finished at 1-1 to snatch seventh place.

Juniata finished 13th out of 17 teams. Thiel earned the team title while King's finished second. The Indians will open their dual meet season this Saturday night at Susquehanna.

Women falter again drop two league games

The Women's basketball team continued its slow pace this past week by dropping two league games to Elizabethtown and Lycoming. The Indians had a tough chore in stopping the defending champion Bluejays but kept it close at first. Sherry DeAgostino paced the tribe with 18 points and Pam Wyrick added 10. Colleen McGinn tailed seven points and ripped down 12 boards in a losing effort.

Juniata shot only 36% from the field and a mere 33% from the line while their opponents connected on 72% of their shots from the charity stripe. Nancy Keene led the visitors with 30 points.

Lycoming didn't make things any easier for the Tribe. The Warriors pulled away to an 82-60 victory with four players scoring in double figures. The Indians continued to have their shooting problems, only connecting on 35% of their shots and only 36% of their free throws. Meanwhile, Lycoming recorded a respectable 46% from the floor and 76% from the foul line. McGinn led the way for Juniata with 19 points and added eight rebounds. Wyrick also contributed 17 points and had 18 rebounds.

Juniata now stands at 0-5 and 0-3 in the conference. They played at Susquehanna yesterday and won't play again until January sixth and seventh when they host the Optimist Tournament. Grove City, Ursinus, and Muhlenberg will be the other teams competing in the tournament.

Field Hockey wrap All-stars named

Three Juniata College field hockey players were selected to the All-Middle Atlantic Conference team in voting by the league coaches.

Juniata, which finished in a three-way tie for first place in the MAC Southwest, completed a record-setting 12-3-1 season for third-year coach Kathi Quinn.

Sophomore Jill Schadler of Perkiomenville (Perkiomen Valley High School) was the only repeat selection for the Tribe. She was also honored last season at the sweeper position.

Senior Joanne Thomas of Chester, NJ (West Morris Central), was chosen as a midfielder while freshman Carolyn Sheedy, from Furlong (Central Bucks East High School), earned honors as a back.

"We had a well-balanced team this season," said Quinn. "Our team accomplished a lot this year and I am very pleased to have several of our players receive recognition by other coaches in the league."

Amy Blough, a sophomore from Elizabethtown, did not receive conference recognition but received honorable mention for the NCAA Regional All-Star team.

Men hoopers split beat E-town, Messiah

The Men's basketball team started and concluded last week with victories, however, the game in between start and finish turned out to be a nightmare.

Elizabethtown entered College Hill last Monday night with hopes of avenging last year's loss to the Indians which knocked them out of the playoffs. After leading by only three (33-30) at halftime, the Tribe cruised to a 90-75 victory. Juniata shot a modest 55% from the floor led by Joe DeBlases' 19 points and Bob Dombroski's 17. Dombroski recorded the first triple double of the season for the Indians, grabbing 12 rebounds and dishing out 10 assists.

Jay Nicholson also ended up in a double-figure for Juniata with 13 points while five other players poured in anywhere from six to nine points. Juniata raised its record 4-1 and 1-0 in the conference with the victory.

Wednesday night turned out to be nothing short of a nightmare for the Indians, who once led Lycoming by as many as 25 points in the first half. It looked as though the Tribe was going to win its fourth game in a row and its 11th straight at home. The Warriors chipped away and with four players scoring in double-figures Lycoming managed to come back and win 75-71.

A 41-25 halftime lead was blown as the Indians were outscored 50-30 in the second half. Juniata only connected on 50% of its free throws and only 50% of its shots from the floor. Dombroski and Nicholson each had 15 points while DeBlase and Les Squair added nine points each. Jeff Jones paced Lycoming with 21 points.

Juniata bounced back on Saturday notching a 66-54 victory over the Falcons of Messiah College. Without Les Squair, who had to attend to a personal situation and not starting the slowed Joe DeBlase, the Tribe held back a fisty Falcon team who returned their 6'9 center for the first time since he injured his hand. The Indians placed four players in double figures paced by Nicholson's 12 points. Juniata raised its record to 5-2 and 2-1 in the conference.

The early season finds Juniata in a tie for second in the MAC Northwest section with Lycoming. Susquehanna is in first with a 3-0 conference mark. The Tribe controlled its own early destiny with yesterdays game at Susquehanna. Earlier in the week the Indians hosted Lebanon Valley in a non-conference showdown.

More and more, Financial Aid comes with strings attached

Students in the near future will have to participate in a community or military service in order to get financial aid, if a proposal made by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen (D-Tex.) and the Democratic Leadership Council in the last days of the presidential campaign becomes law.

If it does, it would be another social string Congress has tied to student aid in recent years to change student's behavior.

Bentsen said he would wipe out most current forms of student aid, instead letting young people earn "vouchers" worth $10,000 for each year of community service or $12,000 for each year of civilian work for a military service.

In campaign speeches at Stanford University, the University of California at Los Angeles and in appearances in Dallas and Minneapolis in early November, Bentsen explained students could then use the vouchers to help pay for college, vocational training or for a down payment on a house.

But while Bentsen and fellow senators J. Bennett Johnson (D-La.), Barbara Mikulski (D-Md.) and Sam Nunn (D-Ga.) endorsed what Mikulshki termed "a hot idea", the concept got a cool response from financial aid officers, student representatives and the U.S. Department of Education.

"Oh Lord!" gasped Dept. of Education spokesman Roger Murphy when told of the idea.

Others were more concerned that the measure would further change financial aid from an effort to help students pay for college into a "social tool".

In recent years, the government has made aid a way to make sure students and their schools have complied with civil rights laws, military registration laws, immigration procedures, tax laws and debt ordinances.

In October, lawmakers agreed to strip aid from any student convicted of using or selling illegal drugs.

"Financial aid is the source for federal dollars to assist students, so the government is making this a major tool of social influence in higher education," said Dr. John Anderson, financial aid director at Oregon's Portland State University.

Conditioning financial aid "holds students ransom to whatever is the agenda of Congress at a given time," argued Janet Lieberman, legislative director for the United States Student Association (USSA) in Washington, D.C.

USSA, Lieberman said, is against using student aid as a tool for any agenda or purpose except funding a student's education.

Bentsen's plan, moreover, "may result in only low income people doing it (community service) rather than people of all levels," she added. "If you have plenty of money, you can go to school without the federal aid."

The plan would also hurt the economy by keeping newly graduated students out of the workforce, and thus deferring the day they start paying taxes to the government, contended Shirley Boardman, aid director at Indiana University and Purdue University's combined campus in Indianapolis.

Boardman added, "An engineering graduate who gets a $35,000 job will pay back his financial aid in taxes soon enough." She tells financial aid applicants, "'I'm here to make you into nice little taxpayers.'"

Anderson and Lieberman deride the idea of tying politicians' goals to student aid as "social engineering" that doesn't work.

The eight-year-old law that makes male students swear they've filled out military registration forms, for example, really hasn't helped the government track down draft evaders.

Portland State's Anderson noted the U.S. Dept. of Education tried to verify if students who said they'd filled out the military forms actually had done so, and found that "90 percent" were telling the truth.

"They didn't find evaders, but they're still continuing with this," Anderson complained.

Schools have not actively opposed the military registration string tied to aid because they themselves don't have to go to the trouble of deciding if students are telling the truth on the forms.

"Part of the application form asks if the student has complied with the law. He checks the box. There's no verification on the part of the school, so there's no big problem," said Rich Bishop, the University of Connecticut's associate director of financial aid."

And some are upset with Congress' new effort to deny aid to students who have been convicted of violating drug laws not because of any sense of violated principle, but because it would be difficult for the financial aid office to administer.

"How is the university to know when a prosecuter has called for denial of financial aid?" Boardman asked.

"There is no good network to look up (a student's record). And if the student was convicted in Los Angeles in 1989, then comes to Indiana, we have no way to find this. The logistics baffle me."

Boardman also questioned the logic of the measure.

"It's so uniquely American to try to tie everything to legislation and money," Boardman said. "Why pick this one kind of criminal behavior, but all else is okay? It's unfavorable to have possessed marijuana; a serial ax murder is okay?"

"I know they're trying to find a way to win the drug war, but is this going to discourage someone from using drugs?" she wondered.

To Anderson, it's a case of "misdirected social engineering".

"If education is a way of overcoming poverty, and involvement with drugs is part of that background, then denying access to college forces the individual to stay in that environment," Anderson reasoned.

Despite all the grousing, observers expect Congress will consider tying new strings to aid--cutting aid to students who go to

Plans are taking shape for the 1989 Presidential Ball which will be held the evening of February 4, 1989. Be sure to remember to bring back your suits and dresses. In case there are any questions about "black tie optional," the expectation is that people will be dressed up; but we do not expect anyone to feel they must purchase/rent formal garb in order to attend the Ball. The important thing is that you come and enjoy a great evening!

There will be a mandatory meeting of all Perkins loan recipients in A 100 on January 16 and January 17. Meetings will begin at 6:00 p.m. Plan to attend one of these evenings.

George Keller, author of "Academic Strategy" will be visiting Juniata on Friday, December 16. There will be an open presentation by him on Strategic Planning beginning at 1:30 p.m. in the Ballroom of Ellis.

There is a non-partisan, non-denominational group on campus that wants to nudge Juniata out of its silence and into some active awareness. The group--Human Concerns Committee--welcomes new members and new ideas. Why not risk an evening with HCC and see what we can do to pull Juniata out of its apathy? This is the last issue of the Juniatian for the year 1988. Since this is the last issue I thought I would take this editorial and say some thank yous to deserving people.

First, to my Co-Editor-in-Chief. Thanks Michele for making this semester a lot of fun. The paper would have never hit the press if it weren't for you. Good luck in Harrisburg next semester and have fun next year when you return to your position here.

Next is Lynn Merritt. Thanks Lynn, you've done a great job as Business Manager and Co-Features Editor. I wish you good luck next semester in DC with your internship. Hope you come back next year and continue the great job you've been doing.

I'd also like to thank the rest of the staff for all the time and effort they've put in to the paper. I know you'll be back and I hope next semester goes as well as this one has!

Next, thanks all of those people who have contributed in any way to our paper. The Campus Ministry staff for their weekly column, Dr. Buchanan, Jane Brown, and all of the students and faculty who contribute letters to the editor and from the pens of.

I'd also like to thank all of the sutdents, faculty, administration, and parents who read and support our newspaper. It really makes us feel good to know that we are doing something worthwhile and that can be enjoyed by everyone.

Good luck on finals to all of you lucky enough to have them. Be careful on the drive home, and to everyone--have a Merry Christmas and a very Happy New Year! See you next semester!

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

(A note from Counselor's Corner: This is the second of two articles dealing with the management of stress. Information discussed herein was a part of a presentation made to Sherwood residence last week. What follows are suggestions aimed at effective management of al stressors and not just academic stressors.)

It is critical to keep in mind as we examined the impact of stress on our lifespace that we cannot totally eliminate it, nor do we really wnat to. AS noted by Hans Selye, a pioneer in te study of the subject, we should strive to have it work for us(eustress) and not against us(distress).

The National ASsociation for Mental Health ofers a number of suggestions to help deal with stress. Let's look at a few of them.

Talk it out. We all recognize the therapeutic value of the simple phrase "Let's talk Bout it." Bring things out into the open, put your problems on the table and focus your time and energies on resolution. Bertrand Russell once said, "Worry is like a rocking horse. It keeps you going, but gets you nowhere."

Work off your anger. Anger is a normal emotion but what gets us into trouble is our inability to deal with it and communicate it effectively. More often than not we take our anger out on the wrong person or allow it to buld up inside. Take a walk, do a jog, or engage in some other form of exercise/recreation. Remember, you are bound to get angry but don't allow it to control you.

Take one thing at a time. Researchers suggest that procrastination is perhaps the greatest producer of stress for college students. We become overwhelmed as we allow things to pile up as a result of putting things off. We need to set priorities and manage our time more creatively. Keep reminding yourself that you can indeed get through it if you just do a little at a time.

Do something for others. "When you are wrapped up in yourself, you make a small package" is a statement that can be a real reminder to us that by helping others we help ourselves. Aiding others can help us put our own problems into perspecitve.

Finally, we should keep in mind that these and other suggestions need to be worked on. There is no magic involved and there aren't any panaceas for successful stress management. As 1988 comes to a close, let's resolve to get started and just do it! You'll be happy with the results.

Counselor's Corner wishes all a joyous holidya season with family and friends. Tell those you are special to you just how you feel, and above all, be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I was quite happy to see the turnout for Father Zabelka's program on December 6th. It was great to see community people there--but it was tremendous to see Juniata College students there as well.

Father Zabelka had a very important message to deliver--"Do Something for Peace." Whether we are Republican or Democrat, religious or not--most of us would agree that the ravishing killings of war are terrible. We believe we live in a calm, serene world here in Huntingdon, but just outside vicious killings go on daily. We know they exist--just watch the world news. By not doing something about this violence, we are condoning it. Father Zabelka knew what would come of the flights to Hiroshima and Nagasaki, yet he did nothing to stop them at first. If we continue to listlessly stand by, wars will go on and crisces will destroy--even though we had the power and the rights to do something about them. Father Zabelka finally had the courage to step forward and do something for peace--why don't we? Let's break this stifling chain of apathy here at Juniata College and do SOMETHING for peace and justice-before it's too late!

Sincerely,
Suzanne Lydic

It is a tragic historical irony that Israel, the nation which came into being as a result of the world's horror at the mass murder of the Jews in Europe during World War II, is now a purveyor of violence and oppression in the Middle East. The world, which once reeled in shock at the sight of stacks of corpses at Dachau and Buchenwald, now shakes its head in disbelief and consternation at the sight of Palestinians in the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip being beaten, harassed, victimized, and, in all too many cases, killed by the children of the Holocast.

How long is this going to be allowed to continue? When will negotiations for a peaceful settlement begin? The Palestine Liberation organization is inching toward a less radical position regarding Israel. Yassir Arafat, the PLO chairman, is willing to talk. When will Israel soften its hard line and take its first steps towards peace? Granted, the PLO has committed barbarous acts of terrorism against civilians; but how many innocent Palestinians have been gunned down by trigger-happy Israeli soldiers?

Fortunately, the world seems to realize the importance of solving the Palestinian problem. The United Nations ignored Secretary of State Schultz' ridiculous attempt to thwart Arafat's appearance before the UN and voted to move the discussion of the Palestinian issue to Geneva. It is my fervent hope that the world can convince Israel and all the parties involved that peace and justice are within reach in the Middle East. It is my greatest fear, however, that if the world fails in this attempt, we may one day wake up and discover that Israel has come up with a "final solution" to the Palestinian question.

Wellness Tips

With the holidays just approaching and visions of sugar plums dancing in our heads, the hunger for sweets may win out.

Why do people overeat? Is the overweight person who wolfs down a chocolate bar or overdoses on dessert crazed with lackness - or on an uncontrollable quest for more calories? Or does he need carbohydrates for chemical balance? Nutritionist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technololgy have recently made a good start at deciphering the physiological basis for a craving.

Serotonin, one of several brain chemicals, may in part regulate the desire for sweets and other high-calorie treats. When eating sweets, the release of serotonin causes us to feel satisfied and pleasantly drowsy. A high protein meal has no effect.

Researchers at MIT further speculate that some obese people crave carbos because they need extra serotonin and that the process is chemically based.

As the brain chemistry is more widely understood, maybe our diet worries are over. With a combination of diet and supplemental drugs that control our "Sweet Tooth", slimness will be attainable.

As usual— The Greek speaks

That Crusader jinx

By George Zanic

If someone would have asked me four years ago what the word Susquehanna meant to me, I would have told them that it's a river somewhere near Harrisburg. Ask me the same question four years later, and the word Susquehanna brings frustration, resentfulness and disgust. These feelings come from the series of miracles Susquehanna has pulled off against Juniata over these four years in football, basketball, and baseball.

It really doesn't seem to matter who has the best team, where the game is played or the importance of the game; the results are always the same, a heart-breaking loss for the Indians. Over the past few years, the Indians have been beaten by wind-blown flyballs, unbelievable three-point shots, a 250 pound place kicker, incompetent shot-clock operators and whistle happy referees.

If the Boston Celtics have a leprechaun lurking somewhere in the Boston Garden, then Susquehanna must have a little orange Crusader hiding in the rafters when the Indians travel to Selinsgrove. It has come to the point where everyone expects the miracles to take place.

Last baseball season Juniata went to Susquehanna tied for first place. After one-inning and a wind-blown fly ball that scored three runs and led to three more, Juniata's hopes for an MAC title had vanished.

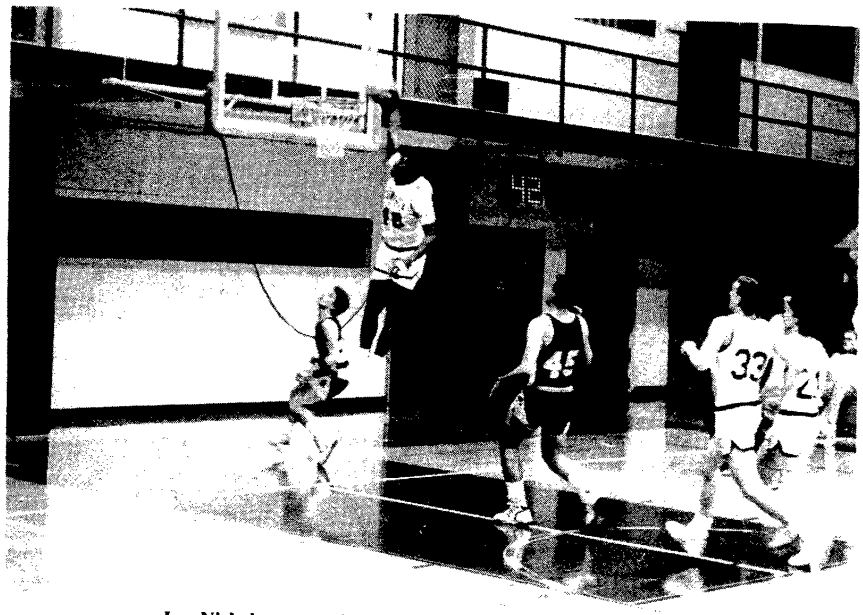
This past football season, Juniata had a 14-13 lead with under one minute to play. A miraculous fourth down pass that went for more than 50 yards, and a 47 yard field goal with time running out gave Susquehanna another unbelievable win.

The most incredible game in this series of miracles came last Wednesday. Juniata had a six point lead and possession of the basketball with only 27 seconds left in the game. A desparation shot by the Crusader's point guard Gregg Alloco, at the buzzer, highlighted the comeback and sent the game into overtime. Susquehanna won the game in overtime without making a shot from the field. They made 15 out of 16 foul shots in overtime defeating Juniata 86-80, thus retaining the early season lead in the MAC Northwest.

As Allocco's shot was travelling through the air in what seemed like slow motion, I had a sick feeling in my stomach that we were going to overtime. Sure enough the shot went through and we were forced to watch Susquehanna, in their orange uniforms, celebrate.

All of this would make a Juniata fan resort to fighting. We even tried that at halftime. They even won the fight by outnumbering us by about 5 to 1 and then throwing all of our fans out of the gym.

Well, we have three more chances against Susquehanna, one on January 12 in basketball and two this spring in baseball. Wouldn't you know that when Susquehanna comes to JC next month, our rowdy fans will be on break. The Crusader jinx strikes again.



Jay Nicholson goes in for the slam against Lebanon Valley.

Women record win beat Altoona campus

The women's basketball team faced yet another set back after leading for most of the game against Susquehanna University last week. With the lead switching hands several times in the first half the Crusaders pulled away to a 25-19 halftime lead.

The Indians failed to place anybody in double figures with three finishing with eight points. Heidi McCarthy lead the charges with eight points and ten rebounds. The Indians shot a horrid 26% (17-64) from the floor and only managed to connect on 8 of their 21 shots from the foul line.

Juniata broke into the win column this past weekend by defeating PSU/Altoona campus 79-46. Stephanie Haines led the Tribe with 14 points, DeAgostino and Wyrick each added 13 for the 1-6 Indians.

Entering the Christmas break Sherry DeAgostino leads the Tribe in scoring, averaging 14.2 points a game while Pam Wyrick is second with 9.8 points a game and leading the team in rebounding, averaging 10.3 caroms a game.

The women return to action on January sixth and seventh when they host the Optimist Tournament. Other teams include Grove City, Ursinus and Muhlenberg.

Grapplers lose opener

The young Juniata squad gave Susquehanna all they could handle this past weekend in the opening dual match for both teams. The Crusaders notched a 27-15 victory winning the final four matches of the day.

Joe Sohmer dropped a 5-0 decision to Susquehanna's Nathan Jones at 118 and Juniata had to forfeit at 126, giving the Crusaders a 9-0 margin after two weights. However, Juniata was awarded six points at 134 as Glenn Smith took credit for the win to cut the SU lead to 9-6.

John Swanson tied things up for the Tribe with a minor decision at 142. D.J. Korlewitz put the Indians out in front for the first time with a 6-0 win over Gary Alhmers at 150. Juniata's John Telenko increased the margin with a 5-0 decision over Ted Maock at 158.

Susquehanna escaped danger as their 167 pound All-American Joe Lawrence beat Terry Weaverling 3-2. JC's Steve Manderbach also lost a tough match (3-2) at 177, allowing the Crusaders to tie the score at 15. Both SU wrestlers won by fall at 190 and Unlimited making the margin of victory 27-15. Nevertheless, this was a great sign of a program on the rise as the Indians gave SU all they could handle.

The grapplers won't get back into it until January 21st when they host a tri-match with California (PA) and Washington and Jefferson.

Indians too unpredictable now stand at 6-3

The men's basketball team continued to be hurt by bad fate, turnovers and poor foul shooting. After defeating Lebanon Valley 84-78 in lack-luster fashion the Tribe faced their third set back of the early season by dropping a 86-80 decision to Susquehanna University.

In the Indian's victory over LVC Duane Dise poured in a career high 30 points and Jay Nicholson added a season high 22. Bob Dombroski led the way on the glass, ripping down 11 rebounds for the Tribe, who have outrebounded all comers this season. Dise connected on 11 of 15 shots, five from three point land as the Indians shot 63% from three point land in the first half.

The Flying Dutchmen stayed in the game the entire time and would not let the Indians deliever the knockout blow, trailing by as many as 10 points on several occasions. With the victory the Indians moved their record to 6-3 and set up a first place battle in Selinsgrove with the Crusaders.

In front of a capacity crowd the Tribe entered halftime with a nine point 37-28 lead. Juniata managed to hold off all Susquehanna come back attempts and led by five points with 17 seconds left. Then, a Juniata turnover led to a SU three pointer with ten seconds left and a SU foul put Joe DeBlase on the line to shoot a one-and-one for the Tribe. DeBlase hit the front end but missed the second and a "Hail Mary" shot with time running out put the game into overtime.

The Crusaders connected on 15 of 16 shots from the charity stripe during the extra period as they failed to score from the floor. However, it was good enough to send the Indians home with a loss and left the Tribe wondering for the third time this season how they lost a game in which they were leading the whole time until the final buzzer. DeBlase led Juniata with 18 points, which outscored SU by six more field goals but lost the game at the foul line where the Crusaders connected on 28 of 37 attempts.

The mid-term report card for the Tribe looks like this: 49% shooting from the floor--about par but could be better. 34% from three-point land--not bad for your average team, but this is not your average team. 62% from the charity stripe--it is a charity stripe isn't it? 41.5 rebounds a game--A for astonishing, and 21.1 turnovers a game.

Juniata still has to play Penn State on the 22nd of December, but won't return to league play until January fifth when they travel to Albright. Susquehanna (Jan. 12) and Scranton (Jan. 14) come to College Hill over break and Messiah (Jan. 18) and Delaware Valley (Jan. 21) roundout the four game home stand for the Tribe.

November AOM to Sr. Davis and Jr. Selby

Senior Cubby Davis of Hollidaysburg and junior Melinda Selby of Elmora (Cambria Heights High School) have have been selected McDonald's/Juniata College "Athletes of the Month" for November.

Davis completed his football career at Juniata by leading the Indians to victories over Wilkes (51-12) and Upsala (42-6) in the final two weeks of the season. The All-Middle Atlantic Conference quarterback tied his own school record with five touchdown passes in the win at Wilkes, when he completed 19 passes on 28 attempts for 276 yards.

Selby, who transferred to Juniata this fall, earned All-Tournament honors during the Tribes' third consecutive trip to the NCAA Division III Women's Volleyball Final Four. As an outside hitter, she also garnered All-MAC and All-East recognition after leading the Indians in kill percentage this season.

Both Davis and Selby will receive plaques courtesy of John Eastman and McDonald's of Huntingdon.

Davis, a 1985 graduate of Hollidaysburg Area High School, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Gary A. Davis of Leaf Lane, Hollidaysburg.

Selby is a 1986 graduate of Cambria Heights High School. She is the daughter of Mrs. Margaret Selby of Elmora.

Swim team is competitive

After a three-week break, the Juniata men's and women's varsity swimming teams hosted their first-ever home meet on Wednesday, December 7, when Elizabethtown visited Kennedy Sports+Rec Center.

Juniata dropped the men's meet 96-53 to the Blue Jays while the women fell 121-51. Both Indian teams are 0-2 for coach Scott Preston.

Senior Steve Grater of Ephrata was a winner in the 100 meter butterfly and qualified for the Middle Atlantic Conference meet. He also took first in the 100 breaststroke.

Freshman Brad Newman of Carlisle qualified for the MAC meet in the 200 free and 100 back, taking first place in the latter.

On the women's side, sophomore Mary Strapple of Monroeville (Gateway) took a first in the 100 meter breastroke to qualify for MACs.

The swim teams finished the pre-Christmas schedule on Saturday, December 10, when they hosted Susquehanna.

Students call home for money

By Deb Dougherty

On the evenings of February 1st and February 2nd, Juniata College students will be calling home in an effort to raise money for the Annual Support Fund Committee, directed by Nan Hunt.

Although members of all four classes will be involved in the drive, Hunt said that the senior class officers have been a key in orgainzing the phone-a-thon nights by arranging the competition between the classes and by agreeing to be present to help out through both nights of the campaign. Along with the class officers, fifteen students from each class will be present to call parents and relay messages from parents to their student sons and daughters.

Volunteers will spend two hours each night phoning Juniata parents. The Annual Support Fund has set a goal of $600,000 this year.

According to Hunt,"It's important to have a high percentageof parent's supporting Juniata's annual fund. While we're aware these are sometimes tough financial years for parents, even a small gift can show corporations that the parent's, 'believe' in the school. This support can mean additional corporate dollars. And who's better at calling home for money than a student?"

All of the funds raised are used for annual scholarships and operational costs which help in keeping tuitions costs down.

A committee of parents helped to coordinate this year"s fund effort. The chair people for the fundraising portion, Roger and Linnie Long, and their committee, have been mailing requests for contributions, and Hunt said that many parents have already responded to these requests. If parents are not home or do not get a call either evening, they may still contribute by sending a check to The Parents Fund, Developmental Office, Juniata College, Huntingdon, PA 16652.

The Annual Support Fund phone drive is coming soon. Pictured above, committee members Cindy Burgo, treasurer, and Ed Hoffman, vice-president, are all smiles as they practice begging parents for money. Not pictured are committee president Dan Stambaugh and secretary Amy Hoffman.

Juniata to receive fellowship

Juniata College has been awared one of 10 grants from the Camille and Henry Dreyfus Foundation of New York for a teaching fellowship in chemistry and support of the Central Pennsylvania Chemistry Teachers' Science Education Improvement Project.

The $45,000 grant is part of the Foundation's Grant Program in Chemistry for Liberal Arts Colleges, which is directed to undergraduate institutions which have a highly successful record of educating chemists. The grant is for the 1989-90 academic year and will support a Teaching Fellowship for a recent Ph.D. in chemistry as well as aid in funding of a program involving high school chemistry teachers in research projects.

"We are proud to receive this award from The Dreyfus Foundation," said Dr. Robert W. Neff, Juniata president. "I believe the tradition and direction of our chemistry program are in close harmony with the program goals of The Dreyfus Foundation."

Under the program guidelines, the new Teaching Fellow will work in close association with Juniata professor Dr. Donald J. Mitchell. Dr. Mitchell, a teacher at the college for two decades, is an active scientist conducting funded research in polymer chemistry and the project coordinator in the Central Pennsylvania Chemistry Teachers' Science Education Improvement Project, originated by Juniata to improve chemistry education in high schools

Forensics coming to Juniata

Recently the nation marked the twenty fifth anniversary of President John F. Kennedy's assassination in Dallas. Along with the many TV specials and newspaper and magazine articles analyzing the event and its effect on the nation has come a resurgence of the many conspiracy theories which have been passionately advanced by numerous observers. The mafia, the CIA, pro-Castro forces, anti-Castro forces, you name it, they have all been blamed. My own uncle informed me this fall that Lyndon Johnson did it. Up to three co-assassins have been postulated on the famous "grassy knoll," and various cohorts of Lee Harvey Oswald have also been placed in his building. Amid all this hoopla, and on the occasion of the birth of a science and technology column in this esteemed newspaper, it is perhaps fitting to see what science has to say (and, not incidentally, what it does not have to say) about the Kennedy assassination.

The first order of business is to separate fact from speculation. The facts are these: Kennedy was shot and killed while riding in a convertible in Dallas on November 22, 1963. Texas Gobernor John Connally, who was in front of Kennedy, was also shot and wounded. A rifle and three cartridge cases were recovered from the sixth floor of the Texas School Book Depository building, and Lee Harvey Oswald was apprehended several miles away. Two days later Oswald was killed by Jack Ruby while in police custody. Ruby, in turn, died in prison some time later. Thus all the principles are dead, and motive can only be speculated on.

Forensic evidence lives on, however, and tells us something about what happened that day. Everyone knows about fingerprints, and that here is enough variation in the patterns that hte chance of finding two individuals with the same fingerprints is nearly zero. Finding an individual and a fingerprint which match is accepted as evidence that the individual touched the object on which the fingerprint was found. Oswald's palm print was on the rifle found in the book depository.

Most people also know that rifles leave marks on bullets which are as unique as fingerprints. This is due to the fact that the barrel of a rifle is not perfectly smooth, so that as the bullet spins down the barrel it gets scratch marks (striations) left by the imperfections in the rifle. By shooting a new bullet from a suspect gun and comparing the striations on the new bullet with those on a bullet found at the scene of a crime, experts can determine if the bullet was fired from that gun. What is considerably less well known is the fact that bullets themselves have their own fingerprints. Bullets are made from lead, but not 100% lead. Each bullet has traces of other elements in it, and the amount varies from bullet to bullet. Antimony, bismuth, copper and silver are often found in bullet lead. In particular, bullets of the type used in Oswald's rifle had previously been shown to have anti-

Ringing in the new year means to bring things into our lives of which we are uncertain. We have begun another 365 days of which we know nothing about. Changes will occur in this next year; some we can control, some we can not.

We must not be afraid to change, though. A slight adjustment in something can bring a new perspective to life. As they say, go with the flow and do not get stuck in a rut. Change is not the end of the world; it is a movement into a new world.

The Juniatian has taken a step into the new world. Look at the front page again and notice the new look. This is the first of several changes which will be occurring over the first month of this semester.

As a student paper, we are interested in what the students like to read and look at. All of our changes have been made in accordance with a marketing research team's results of a survey of students about the school paper. We, the staff, would really like to hear what you think about the new look of the Juniatian or any other suggestions you may have. This is your paper also. Feel free to come to the staff meetings also a 7 o'clock on Sundays. We are always looking for new faces.

The Juniatian has brought in the New Year with a positive change. Granted, a change will not always be so cut and dry in every day life, but we have to take this is stride and try not to let it get us down. A change should be looked upon as a challenge; someone is tempting us to look to something different instead of doing the same old thing. As a person of the eighties, you should take this challenge and go with it to wherever it leads you.

<MWe do not know what tomorrow will bring, but we can do things today that will affect our tomorrow. I challenge you to reevaluate your list of resolutions for the new year and make a vow to yourself to change the old habit of breaking them halfway through the year. I wish all of you luck in this New Year of change.

By John Deppen

"One man come in the name of love/ One man come and go/ One man come he to justify/ One man to overthrow." Many of us are familiar with these lines from "Pride," a song by the Irish rock group U2 about Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. More of us may be familiar with the words of Dr. King's historical "I Have a Dream" speech: "I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character. I have a dream today!" We all seem to know the words, but how many of us have paused to ask, "What does Martin Luther King mean to me?"

Dr. King means strikingly different things to different people. To some, he was a no-good "rabble-rouser," to use the words of one of my high school teacher; to others, he was a new Moses, leading his people to the promised land. to FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, he was "the most notorious liar in americo-ca;" to my father, he was a modern prophet who pointed out the evils in a sick society.

When I reflect upon the meaning of Martin Luther King's life, I think of the awesome movement he led, a movement which produced sweeping change throughout America. I think of the civil rights legislation passed aby Congress; I think of the segregation laws which disintegrated under the marching feet of thousands, both black and white. I cannot help but think of the brave souls who lost their lives in the struggle-Medgar Evers, an NAACP official in Mississippi who was shot on his front porch; Addie MacCollins, Denise McNair, Carole Robertson and Cynthia Wesley, four young girls who were killed when a bomb exploded outside a church in Birmingham, Alabama; Andrew Goodman, James Chaney and Michael Schwerner, civil rights workers who were murdered in Mississippi; Vida Liuzzo, a homemaker from Detroit who was shot by the KKK while serving as a volunteer on the march from Selma, Alabama to the state capital, Montgomery. There were many others who made the ultimate sacrifice. These people were the martyr of a noble movement.

We will never know what accomplishments lay ahead of Dr. King when he was killed in Memphis. We do know, however, that he left us a tremendous legacy. We have his wisdom to enlighten us, his courage to inspire us, and we have his dream to guide us. To me, Martin Luther King, Jr. is not a stale figure in a history book- he is a shining example of heroism and perseverance in the face if frightening adversity. He is a beacon of hope pointing the way to a brighter future through the determined pursuit of justice and equality.

Dr. King spoke the following on April 3rd, 1968, the day before his assassination. May his spirit inspire you and motivate you, and may his guiding precept of nonviolent resistance to evil transform your life as it has mine: "We've got some difficult days ahead. But it doesn't matter with me now. Because I've been to the mountaintop...Like anybody, I would like to live a long life; longevity has its place. But I'm not concerned about that now. I just want to do God's will. And he's allowed me to go up to the mountain. And I've looked over. And I've seen the promised land. I may not get there with you. But I want you to know...that we as a people will get to the promised land."

mony and silver in varying amounts, with the atnimony varying from 20 to 1200 parts per million (ppm) and the silver ranging from 5 to 15 ppm.

The official reconstruction of the assassination (by the Warren Commission) claims that one of Oswald's shots missed the car entirely and the other two hit the President. One hit him in the back, exited from his throat, then hit Connally in the back, exited his chest, bounced off his wrist and stopped in this thigh. The second bullet hit Kennedy in the skull. Is the evidence consistent with this? A number of bullet fragments were found in and around the bodies, and all that were large enough were analyzed for antimony and silver. All had levels within the expected range for bullets from Oswald's gun. But more importantly, two different ranges were found. A fragment from Connally's wrist and a nearly whole bullet found on his stretcher (after falling out of his thigh) both hd antimony levels of 815 ppm and silver levels of 9.3 ppm. A fragment from Kennedy's brain and two fragments found in the car all had antimony levels of 622 ppm and silver levels of 8.1 ppm. The two floor fragments were large enough to look for striations, and both they and the nearly whole bullet found on Connally's stretcher came from Oswald's gun. No fragments were found in Kennedy's back or Connally's back. While this prevents proving that the same bullet created both wounds, it is at least consistent with finding a nearly whole bullet at the end of its path.

What does all this prove? Proof is a dirty word in science: most scientist will tell you that nothing can ever be proven true, hypotheses can only be proven false. Nevertheless, the evidence suggests strongly that only two bullets made their way into the President's car. Both came from Oswald"s rifle. Thus it appears that whoever was shooting at the President that day, only Oswald hit anything. Of course, no evidence will ever rule out an army of assassins shooting from the grassy knoll, or a rifleman in every window of the Texas School Book Depository, and conspiracy buggs will cling tenaciously to their scenarios. But it is almost certain that none of these alleged shooters hit anything.

Incidentally, much of the information in this article comes from the book "Criminalistics" by Richard Saferstein. Bullet analyses were done by Vincent Guinn using a technique called neutron activation analysis. Interested parties are encouraged to take my course on forensic chemistry, which will be offered when the chemistry department gets an additional faculty member.

PAULETTE PAPADOPOULOUS

C.P.P. + 1 equals more help for you

Paulette Papadopoulous will be working with Dr. Jay Buchanan in the Counseling Center during the spring semester. She will be conducting career planning workshops in the residence halls, and is assisting Buchanan in teaching a credit course in career planning.

She is currently completing a Master's Degree in Counselor Education at The Pennsylvania State University. She received a B.S. Degree in Human Development from Penn State in 1967.

As a co-owner and manager of the Central Pennsylvania Dance Workshop in State College, she has instructed and counseled young adults in developing a career in dance. Having a strong interest in wellness promotion, she has developed a wholistic techniqaue and approach to fitness and is currently instructing students, faculty, and staff through Penn State's Continuing Education.

Believing that a choice of one's career is an important aspect of the wholistic approach is to wellness, she has completed an internship in career counseling with State College's Community Education. Working with students' growth and development is extrenely rewarding and has led her to choose an internship in career counseling at Juniata College.

Please contact Dr. Buchanan or Shirley Powell to arrange an appointment with Ms. Papadopoulous.

ANTIBIOTICS— They are nothing to sneeze at

Most of you have received prescriptions for penicillin, tetracycline or similar medicines when you have had an infectious disease. These antibiotics are to kill or at least reduce the proliferation of disease-causing bacteria. Since the discovery of penicillin in the 1930"s, millions of lives have been saved by antbiotics. It would seem that this must be one science/technology success story that has had only beneficial effects on mankind.

What does an antibiotic do? Many are chemicals actually produced by bacteria or other microorganisms (such as fungi), though today artificially modified varieties are also used. Why do microorganisms produce such things? Antibiotics serve as "chemical warfare" agents. A species produces an antibiotic and then secretes it in order to attack and kill other organism. The life system is infinitely clever, however. Thus, organisms have also developed defense systems against antibiotics. You may notice an uncanny similarity to what mankind itself is doing!

Let's pursue this matter furhter. Some bacteria have in their genetic systems a capacity to counteract the effects of certain antibiotics. That means they could be described as antibiotic-resistant. Such a capacity is usually dormant, but in some strains of bacteria it is always present, furthermore, this capacity can readily be transmitted to other non-resistant strains, so antibiotic-resistnece can spread rapidly. (By the way, this trnasmission occurs through a route similar in principle to that used by the AIDS virus.

As we noted mankind discovered, extracted and used antibiotic materials as medicine. However, you can imagine from the above that it was not long before bacteria began to develop a resistance toward some of these very antibiotics. The phenomenon was first discovered in hospitals: certain antibiotics seemed to have lost effectiveness and needed to be used in larger and larger doses. Doctors have now become wary of this fact, and they try not to overuse antibiotics or to use them in combination. This is fine, although in some countries the medical use of antibiotics still goes on unchecked. so, as far as we are concerned, is this the end of story, a happy ending? Unfortunately, it is NOT.

In 1984, more than 18,000 people in the Midwest became ill from drinking Salmonella-contaminated milk. The milk had been pasteurized; so the possibility was raised of a superbug, one that is resitant to heat treatment-pasteurization. It turned out that the contamination was actually caused by faulty processing (unpasteurized, contaminated milk was mixed with pasteurized milk). Nevertheless, this particular Salmonella still showed a nasty property,i.e., resistance to antibiotics. The incidence of resistant Salmonella seems to be on the rise. Many believe this is due to the use of antibiotics in animal feeds. Indeed, the outbreak mentioned above was eventually traced to a herd of cattle that had been fed high levels of tetracycline.

Many drugs are used in animal feeds in the hope of raising healthy (i.e., profitable) animals; these include, in addition to antibiotics, antifungal and antiparasitic drugs. Additional concern has been expressed about the effect of hormones used in the cattle and poultry industries as a way of increasing the productivity. In principle, these might severly disrupt the hormone balance of a person ingesting them. It would probably be difficult ever to scientifically verify a cause-effect relationship in this case because the hormone balance is a very complicated subject. The food producing industry is of the opinion that low-level usage of drugs does not have any significant effect on the public; besides, it has the beneficial effect of providing consumers with the high-quality products less expensively than otherwise be possible. It is interesting to note, however, that others disagree. Recently, for example, Europe has threatened to stop importing American meat because of the hormones it contains, hormones considered to a danger to consumers.

Indiscriminate use of drugs in the food industry (whose products we consume with confidence) deserves to become a much more widely discussed public issue. After all, it may be our health that is at stake.

Modern folk songs come to JC

Windfall will be appearing at Juniata College on Friday Jan. 27 at 9:30 in the Catharsis Lounge.

Windfall is a 5-member folk group from Virginia's Shenandoah Valley who are beginning to be known nation-wide. Their presentation is reminiscent of the great folk groups of the 1960's, but far from being a nostalgia trip, theri music is mostly contemporary, with lyrics either up-to-date or timeless.

"Windfall makes music for communities; Honest, meaningful music that comes out of their lives and their community. And makes you want to sing along, for that music comes from the place which is shared by us all." Paul Reisler, Trapezoid.

The dictionary defines Windfall as, "...an unexpected pleasure, piece of good fortune." Come and experience folk music for the 1980's!

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

For awhile there things seemed to be going so well everywhere, I suspected that God, world leaders and Santa Claus just might have been conspiring together to make this "Christmas" thing a fun time for everybody. Gorbachev was shocking us with an open-ended promise of military reduction which left our revered leaders slack-jawed and speechless, and which possibly, hopefully was the premiere act of a great humanitarian concerned with banishing the possibility of nuclear kablooey from the earth. In the Middle East, Yasir Arafat was making motions that he to wanted to talk, and terms like terrorism and chemical weapons were in the air, which was far better than actually having them in the air, if you take my drift. Peacableness, it seemed, was breaking out all over. And to cap it all off, the Traveling Wilburys were playing Philadelphia.

Like I said, I suspected for awhile. First, an earthquake in Soviet Armenia claimed a half-million lives, and that tragedy called short Gorbachev's peaceful mission to the U.S. Next some contemptable...person decided that terrorism wasn't getting the attention it damn well deserved, and so blew up a jet-liner over Scotland just to stoke up whatever fires of bad feeling might be burning low around the world. Lastly, Roy Orbison died: too soon in my estimation. Call it a shame, call it divine retribution, call it just plain dumb, but it all happened, and it was driving me crazy. How could mothers teach their kids that good deeds would be rewared, when this was what happened? How could people keep their hopes up? How could I graduate into a world like this? Who did you rail against - God? Arabs? Presidents? The Supree Court?

In desperation, I took my problem to my sagely grandmother. The expurgated version of our conversation appears below:

"How's school?"

"Okay"

"You sound so sure. What's the matter...college leaving you unprepared for the real world?"

"Nah. Mom and dad just blew fifty thousand bucks to teach me what I liked about immorality."

My grandmother is pretty liberal. "OH I learned that when I married your grandfather. Maybe you should get married."

"No thanks. Actually, I"m disappointed that nobody told me the world"s such a crummy place. Only four more months and I have to go live in it"

"You mean that college didn't turn you into a daredevil who's going to change the world? Aren't you going to make it a better place so that I can die contentedly, knowing that my grandson reshaped history in his own terms and made my family famous?"

I couldn't tell if she was smiling or not. "Uh, no."

"Weren't you going to college to do that?"

"I think I may have said something about it. Maybe I was joking."

"Maybe I was too." She was definitely smiling. Phew.

So perished my grand delusions. Incidentally, my irrational worries about the state of the world that Christmas perished too. I'm still utterly consumed with horror when I think of what the future has planned for me and everybody else, but I'm much more rational about it now.

Next week's article will hopefully be a guest feature by Joe Scialabba, the prophetic bard who awed me with effortless circles of intelligent editorializing when I was only a wee freshman. (Now Joe, eternal shame will of course doom you should you fail to accept this mission. Just a friendly reminder.)

Coach Ash resigns: replacement search is on

Juniata College will begin a national search for a new head football coach immediately, according to William F. Berrier, athletic director.

The new coach will replace Rob Ash, who has accepted the head coaching position at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa. Ash posted a 51-38-3 record in nine seasons at Juniata. His last four teams were a combined 30-11-1, including a 6-3-1 mark in 1988. He recorded more wins than any other football coach on College Hill.

"We are looking for an individual who will continue to uphold the philosophies of athletics at Juniata College within the context and principles of Division III," says Berrier. "We anticipate accepting applications through late February. The search committee plans to complete the hiring process by mid to late March."

Berrier adds that Dr. Bradly G. Small, assistant athletic director at Juniata, will assume the duties of men's tennis coach thios spring. Ash-coached teams compiled a 42-39 record over eight season, including a 10-3 finish last year.

Indian gridders honored: Cottle an All-American

Juniata College senior split end Mike Cottle of Everett (Bedford High School) is a first team selection on Don Hansen's 1988 NCAA Division III All-America Team, announced this week.

Hansen is publisher of the National Weekly Football Gazette and is a writer for The Football News.

Also cited by Hansen were Juniata senior quarterback Cubby Davis of Hollidaysburg, sophomore running back Dennis DeRenzo of Reading (Exeter High School), and senior lineacker Frank Gay of Conemaugh (Central Cambria H.S.), each receiving honorable mention.

Cottle, Davis and senior tight end Jim Metz of Medford, NJ, (Cherokee H.S.) were preseason All-American picks.

The top ass catcher in Juniata history, Cottle holds several school records, including 36 career touchdown receptions. He finished fourth in the nation this season with 6.7 receptions per game. Cottle also caught 10-plus passes in three consecutive games and was one of only four players in the national top 28 to make 10 or more TD grabs this season.

Davis established numerous school standards at quarterback, and led the Indians to record passing and total offensive outputs this fall. DeRenzo became the first Juniata runner to gain over 1,000 yards in a season, using a school-record six 100-plus yard games. While Gay, a standout on defense, topped the team in tackles for the second straight season with 113 total, 47 totals.

"We are certainly pleased the programj has received this type of recognition," said nine-year Juniata head coach Rob Ash, who has accepted a similar position at Drake Unjiversity of Iowa. "Mike Cottle was obviously one of the best receivers ever to play at Juniata and is very deserving of All-America status.

"Cubby, Dennis and Frank also had outstanding season, and I'm happy their contributions to the team hve been noticed. As I've said in the past, any individual honors are direct reflections of the talent and dedication of the entire team. We are proud of what the Juniata football program and its players have accomplished."

Juniata finished 6-3-1 in 1988, and boasts an outstanding 30-11-1 mark over the past four seasons.

Grapplers compete

The Indian grapplers returned to action this past weekend hosting a three team tournament which featured Juniata, California (PA) and Washington and Jefferson. The Tribe managed to win two first places at 150 with John Swanson and at 177 with Steve Manderbach.

However the tribe outscored in total points by both schools, had to settle for third in the tournament. California ended in front with 40 points, with W & J notched 28 points and the Indians only managed 19 points.

The team hosted Gettysburg last night and won't be in action again until next weekend when they trabel to Messiah for a tri-meet with the Falcons and Elizabethtown.

Women 3-2 in '89

The women's basketball team opened the new year on the right note with a 81-36 schalacking over Muhlenberg in the first round of the Juniata Optimist Tournament. Sherry DeAgostino pace four Indian double figure scores with 16 points, while Stephanie Haines and Colleen McGinn both chipped in 13. The Tribe shot 49% from the floor as the Mules struggled, connecting on only 29% of their 55 field goal attempts.

The finals weren't so promising as Juniata fell to Grove City College 67-53. The Indians shot only 25% from the floor and were dominated on the boards (39-57) despite the 21 point effort by DeAgostino. The Tribe had to settle for second place as Ursinus defeated Muhlenberg 67-52 for third place>

The Indians bounced back against Susquehanna with a 69-57 victory as DeAgostino poured in 24 points. Entering halftime with a five point advantage the tribe never trailed in the second half leading by as much as 13 points with two and a half minutes to play. The Bouncing road continued for the women, as Scranton dealt the Tribe a 68-33 loss. The overwhelmed Indians connected on only 25% of their shots and trailed by 20 at halftime never reaklly getting back into the game.

Once again the tide turned when Sherry DeAgostino nailed a 23-foot jump shot with one second remaining in regulation to give the Tribe a 64-61 victory over Messiah. The last shot added to DeAgostino's 23 point effort. Dana Patete also added 16 and Pam Wyrick notched 10. The ball took one more bounce as Wilkes knocked off the Tribe 64-56 in Wilkes-Barre this past Saturday.

The ladies host Gettysburg Monday at 6:00 before they travel to Elizabethtown Wednesday.

Men's hoopers are gaining momentum extend MAC win streak to 5-0

After losing to division I Penn State during the holidays the Juniata's men's basketball team has put together a five game winning streak to improve their overall record to 11-4 and 7-2 in the MAC a 79-61 road victory against conference foe Albright College. Leading by only five at the half the Tribe used a blistering 63% shooting percentage and Bob Dombroski's 15 point effort to pull away in the second half. Four other Indians managed double-figures as the tribe ouscored the outmanned lions by 13 in the last 20 minutes.

The Tribe then had a streak of four home games. Entering College Hill first would be the Crusaders of Susquehanna University, early season overtime victors over the Indians. With revenge on their minds the Indians sent the Crusaders back to Selesgrove with a 75-70 defeat. Les Squair paced Juniata with 19 points while Jay Nicholson added 16 and grabbed 10 boards. Ater a 33-33 deadlock at halftime the Indians pulled to a seven point lead early in the second half and didn't trail since. SU was within two points with just three minutes to play but was no closer.

>MSThe defending Northern Division champs were the next victims of the Juniata attack. Scranton, who had a 5-0 record entering league play, was shoxked from the opening tip as the Indians built a 40-23 halftime advantage. Juniata can 54% of its three-point shots, which included two of three by junior gaurd Shawn Habakus. The Tribe also shot 86% from the charity stripe while Scranton could only manage to knock in 11 of its 23 opportunities. Jay Nicholson paced the winners with 19 while Joe DeBlase added 17 and Habakus 14. For his efforts against Susquehanna and Scranton Nicholson earned Player of the Week honors in the Northern Division, the second Indian to do so this season (Duane Dise did it earlier).

Victim number three of the Tribe's home stand was Messiah College. The falcons were defeated 88-78 in a lack luster effort from the Indians. Four Indians reached double figures as Juniata let an early second half 20 point lead diminish to five with just over four minutes left to play. However key free throw shooting by the Tribe in the final minutes made for the difference as Juniata notched its fourth straight win

A fired up Indian squad rounded out their home stand with an easy victory over the Aggies of Delaware Valley, 84-64. Juniata lead by as much as 33 matching the Aggies shooting percentage for the game. Five Indians managed double figures paced by Nicholson's 16 points and eight rebounds. Juniata took to the road this past Monday for a non-conference game with Dickinson and traveled to Williamsport yesterday looking to avenge an early seasonloss to Lycoming.

The Indians will round out their January schedule with a home battle against Albright College. The Indians opened the new year by defeating the Lions in Reading. This Wednesday the Tribe travels to Elizabethtown, a team whom JC beat earlier this season on College Hill 90-75.

Swim news

The Juniata men's swim team notched its first win of the season with an 86-24 victory ofver Lycoming. Steve Grater recoreded three wins and qualified for the MAC's 200 meter freestyle race with his performance. Brad Newman also won two events and also had a qualifying time in the 100 freestyle.

The Women weren't as successful, dropping a 58-106 descion to the Wariors. Mary Stapple had two wins for the Tribe and qualified for the 100 freestyle.

Last night Juniata hosted Bethany College and will host Scranton this Friday night at 7:00.

Vol. XXXIX No. 15 Juniata College Huntingdon, Pa 16652 February 2, 1989

Yolonda King to speak at JC as part of Black History Month

Yolanda King, the eldest child of Dr. Martin Luther King will be speaking at Juniata College on February 7 at 8:15 in Oller Hall as part of Black History Month activities.

Yolanda King, the eldest child of slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King and Coretta Scott King, will speak at Juniata College on February 7 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium. Ms. King's presentation, scheduled as part of Black History Month activities at the college, will be entitled "A Dream Deferred."

At 33, Ms. King has devoted her life to the continuation of the struggle for equality and a better life for blacks, which her father began in the turbulent sixties. In her presentation she will discuss her father's dream, what the civil rights movement was all about and how the dream lives on today, nearly 21 years after Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. was gunned down by an assassin in Memphis.

Born in Montgomery, Alabama, two weeks before Rosa Parks refused to give up her seat on the bus, triggering the movement that ultimately desegregated the South, Ms. King has been in the midst of the struggle for human rights all of her life. She has participated in numerous civil rights demonstrations and has spoken before countless religious, educational, civic, and human rights groups.

Growing up in a home environment deeply involved in service to humanity, Ms. King naturally assimilated this value. In a recent article in EBONY, she pointed out that "when you grow up in an environment where that kind of commitment and dedication is not just talked about but lived so fully, so honestly, there is no way that it does not take root in your being."

"They say that the best lessons, the best sermons, are the one's that are lived. There is no way," she said, "I could be true to what is so much a part of me if I did not feel a responsibility to carry on and do what I can to further the unfinished work."

Committed to using her acting talent in service to humanity, Ms. King has combined her active involvement in social change with her artistic pursuits. According to Ms. King, "Working in the performing arts requires an ability to fully share one's self and to empathize with others. In addition, the arts have dramatic impact upon people's lives and contribute to the shaping of attitudes and opinions."

Ms. King went on to explain, "While it is imperative to actively challenge the forces that deny human beings their rights to a decent life... one must also stimulate and alter the hearts and minds of both the privileged as well as those who have been too long denied. Within the arts lies the power."

Ms. King's involvements have reflected this belief. In addition to working with a number of human rights organizations and causes, Ms. King was founding member of Christian Theatre Artists and has taught theatre to young people and college students. She presently serves a co-director of NUCLEUS along with Attallah Shabazz (the eldest child of Malcolm X and Dr. Betty Shabazz). NUCLEUS is a company of performing artists dedicated to promoting positive energy through the arts.

Ms. King's film credits as an actress include the role of Rosa Parks in "King," an NBC made-for-television movie; the manageress in"Hopscotch;" and the role of Betty Shabazz in "The Death of a Prophet" about Malcolm X. She has worked as an associate producer and consultant in television and film projects.

Ms. King serves on the Board of Artist series features keyboards, strings

The Juniata College Artist Series will feature a Keyboard and Strings Festival on February 5 and 6 in Oller Hall beginning at 8:15 p.m. each night.

On Sunday, February 5, pianist Leon Bates will bring his talents to the stage on College Hill. Mr. Bates has established himself as one of the leading performers in America. In addition to his Carnegie Hall and Alice Tully Hall appearances, he has performed at the Jordan Hall in Boston, the Kennedy Center, the Academy of Music in Philadelphia, Proctor's Theatre in Schenectady, NY, and has appeared several times on the Today's Artists Series in San Francisco. His sheer mastery of his instrument has led to many invitations to perform with major symphonies such as the New York Philharmonic, the Phiadelphia Orchestra, the Cleveland Orchestra, the National Symphony, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the American Symphony, the San Francisco Symphony and the Detroit Symphony.

He has performed all over the world, appearing with the Dublin Symphony, the National Symphony Orchestra of Zimbabwe, the Strasbourg Symphony in France, the Vienna Symphony, the Victoria Symphony in Canada, and the Orchestra Sinfonica dell'Accademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia in Rome. He performed the Gershwin Concerto in F with the Basel Symphony and the exciting classical music video has been seen around the world.

Mr Bates will accompany the Fresk String Quartet on Monday, February 5 in Oller Hall. The Fresk String Quartet made their American debut tour in 1977, traveling through much of the East Coast and Midwest, including appearances at Carnegie Hall and the National Gallery. The "New York Times" led the praise of numerous papers, acclaiming the quartet's "...rich, homogeneous sound," and their "...highly adept and brilliant intensity ...in other words there is no question the Frest Quartet is good."

Subsequent tours have held many honors for the Fresk Quartet. In 1982, they toured under the banner of "Scandinavia Today"--an expression of the finest performing artists in the Scandinavian countries today. Performances included Alice Tully Hall, The Library of Congress, and Coleman Series in Los Angeles and many others. Further honors came when they were invited to play at the memorial service for their beloved former Prime Minister Olof Palme, while on tour in Washington, D.C. Last season their tenth annual tour of the United States included performances at the Frick Collection in New York, Music and Art for Youth in San Luis Obispo, Today's Artists Series in San Francisco, and Gustavus Adolphus College in Minnesota.

After more than twenty years of performing together, the Fresk Quartet brilliantly achieves the delicate

Editorial

Throughout this issue there are a various articles and letters dealing with violence. John Deppen speaks of campaigning against war all over the world. Joel Meyer deals with the fact that common stereotypes of our mascot remind us of violence. Yolanda King will be on campus during black history month. Her father died a violent death at the hands of assassins. Joel Meyer also addresses the violence associated with apartheid in South Africa. Finally Dr. Buchanan talks about college women being raped on campus, another form of violence. All of this violence is taking place in the world around us and what discourages me is that we continue this violence right here on this campus.

It may not be as newsworthy as the apartied issue in South Africa or discussed as much as rape on college campuses, but I see it everyday. People may not realize that they are being violent but I realize what they are doing. Let me explain something first. The past two and a half weeks I have spent in Altoona working in the Domestic Abuse Program with victims of domestic violence. I have learned that a shake of the fist, cussing and swearing, the threat of "I'm going to kill you" and kicking, screaming, etc. are all different forms of violence. If a person feels threatened by this and has actually been hit (and can prove this), they are protected by law. The thing that really gets to me is that this is the type of violence that I am seeing on this campus. The threats of hitting someone, the screaming and cussing, the pushes, and the punches thrown when someone has had a little too much to drink and has taken offense to a comment someone else had made. This kind of violence we can put an end to by monitoring our own behavior and asking others to do the same.

There is violence everywhere in the world, some that we can help to eliminate, some we can't. I'm asking you to do something about the violence on your own campus. This is something we have control over. If we can learn to control this violence now, our lives in the future may be much more fulfilling and happier for ourselves and our families. I see enough violence in the news and at my internship and I'm sure you see too much also. Please remember this the next time you become angry and take steps to learn how to deal with your anger and control your violence.

Letters to the Editor

An interesting thing happened the other day up on Third Sherwood. At about 8 am, one of the urinals began to gush water. As a result, we had to wade through a puddle that was about two and a half feet across and at least an inch deep in the center just to get to the door of the bathroom. The same thing happened that night, only worse; the RA had to put towels in front of her door to keep her room from flooding. When she called the emergency number at the physical plant, she got a mop, a bucket, and an assurance that it would be fixed the next day.

The Attack of the Killer Urinal, as Third Sherwood dubbed the incident, is an illustration of something that occurs all over this campus: lack of preventitive measures. The situation could have been prevented fairly easily. The sink in back of that particular urinal, like most of the sinks in our bathroom, has no stopper, and at some point a small tube of toothpaste was dropped down the drain by accident. The water backed up and had to overflow somewhere-in this case, out of the urinal. The time, effort, and money that went into unclogging the pipes and cleaning up the mess could have been saved by simply replacing the missing stoppers at the beginning of the year. The stoppers aren't very expensive, and I can't imagine that they wear out fast enough that they need to be replaced very often. Of course, that solution may make too much sense for Juniata. My fault.

It"s difficult to talk seriously about urinals overflowing in a women's bathroom, but it's little things like that that make me wonder where my $12,000-plus dollars go. The things we<"re missing are not luxuries, just practical objects that most of us have never had need to question-stoppers, window screens, dryers that dry. Tuition at JC has increased steadily over the past few years, yet problems like these that are easily solved by shelling out a few bucks are pushed aside, ignored, and forgotten.

How disappointing
Anne-Marie Dinwoodie

Dear Editor, etc.,

My complaint is directed towards the instructors of the General Education class The Greek Mind, which is one of the GE200 series of courses currently required by every Juniata student. I was both disappointed and upset with the conditions under which the final examination in this class was given. Each of the instructors of this course gave the distinct impression that they were unconcerned with the atmosphere in which students took their final exam. I feel that as this final exam constituted 30 percent of the class grade, and as the course is valued at four credits and it or another like it is required of every student, that the conditions under which the exam was given a matter of serious consideration by the instructors, rather than something to be made light of. Neither I nor other students appreciated remarks that "now was the time to actualize one's potentiality" delivered mid-way through the exam, nor the comments made by one instructor on the quality of exam answers after each blue-book was handed in, nor the conference held by another instructor and some student in the lecture area of an auditorium specifically designed to resonate speaker's voices to the four corners of the room. If the instructors felt three hours of exam time to be more than a liberal allowance, then perhaps they should have announced beforehand their intention to shorten the exam. This would have accorded students a time frame in which to plan their essays without mishap or misunderstanding.

The nature of examinations on this campus (and certain in this course) is that of the one-shot deal. In most cases, students have a single chance to present cogent, well-planned essays under a pressured deadline. While I understand that the intent of this system is to make each student a quicker, clearer thinker and writer, I feel that "pressure" situations should hardly include distractions like those mentioned above. In the SAT and GRE Standardized tests, where pressures to maintain a train of thought over several hours are arguably less because of the short-term types of questions asked, the courtesy of reasonable quiet is extended. The same may be said of all my previous exam experiences at this college. Why was this excepted in a required, four credit course? I have heard of a similar problem in the testing situations of other GE courses.

In conclusion, I should add that I am not knocking what I felt was otherwise an excellent course in its areas of content, method, and interest. The instructors of The Greek Mind did a very good job in a course which I originally had doubts about. But perhaps if each give the impression that they too cared about the conditions under which testing occured, there would be less controversy and complaint as to the worth of the required GE courses, and of the Greek Mind course in particular.

Sincerely,
Rush Blady

I am writing to support earlier letters which suggested that Juniata's mascot be changed. I have discussed this idea with many other students. One argument which I often hear is that the name honors the Juniata Indians, much as the naming of parks, rivers, mountains, and so forth honors other American Indian tribes. However, Juniata does not preserve or describe the culture of the Juniata (or any other) Indians; on the contrary, it contributes to the common stereotype of American Indians as a savage, violent race. When do we see our mascot represented any other way than as mohawked, war-painted, and carrying a tomahawk? Another example is the bumper sticker saying "Scalp 'em Injuns!" Indians are referred to derogatively with slang, and we are reminded of a violent aspect of the Indians culture. Incidentally, it is an aspect which was taught to the Indians by the settlers.

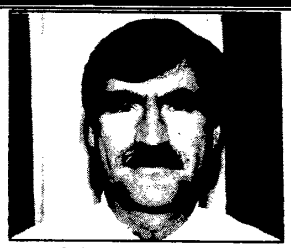
Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan



By Dr.Jay Buchanan

Research studies have found that from 15% to 20% of college women have been raped and that another 20% to 25% have been victims of attempted rape, furthermore, over 50% of college women experience some sort of sexual victimization.

We hear statistics like these all the time and rather than just talk about them, Juniata College has decided to attempt to do something about it. I would like to use this column to introduce a series of programs to be presented during the spring semester on the issue of date/acquaintance rape on college campuses. The intent is to make the campus community more aware of an sensitive to the issues and more importantly, to offer a forum whereby attitudes and behaviors can be openly examined and discussed.

The series is being arranged by the counseling center and the office of student services with the tremendous help and input of interested students. One hopeful outcome of the program is the establishment of a support group for victims of date/acquaintance rape and other victims of sexual assault.

What follows is a listing of presentations. Dates and times will be announced later. Dr. Ron McLaughlin, whose human sexuality course is one of the most popular on campus, will talk about and encourage a discussion on gender role stereotyping.

Susan Radis, Sociology professor, will discuss the grieving process, including the critical issues of lack of trust and cofidence as a result of being a victim of date rape. Dr. Jay Buchanan will explore our need to develop true intimacy as a critical factor in building and maintaining meaningful relationships. "Rape Says the Person Doesn't Count", a poignant, professionally produced video, will be shown as a evocative and stimulating tool for discussion of feelings and emotions regarding date rape. Dr. Tim Ring, Director of the counseling center at Albright College and adjunct professor of counseling psycholoy at Lehigh University, will talk about the other "victim"and examine the question "Do we unjustly stereotype men as uncaring, dominating individuals out to get what they want from a woman?" "Everyday Violence", a video that examines how films, magazines and advertising often promote a harmful and often times violent approach to sexual relationships. Your suggestions about and participation in the programs are encouraged. Please take the time to make yourself heard in these most critical issues.

Many people are surprised to learn that fatty meat has about the same amount of cholesteral as lean cuts. In fact, cholesteral is found primarily in lean tissue, not in the fat. Its concentration in the lean tissue and in the fat in meat is about the same-- 75 to 85 milligrams in three ounces. Since meat is primarily lean tissue, that's where most of its cholesteral comes from.

Though foods high in saturated fats tend also to be rich in cholesteral some foods are high in one but not the other. Organ meats (such as liver and kidneys) and eggs (which contain preformed cholesteral for the chicks) have lots of cholesteral but only moderate amounts of fat. Sour cream and butter aree rich sources of fat but aren't particularly high in cholesteral. Vegetable oils or peanut butter, which are largely or completely fat, contain no cholesteral at all since they aren't animal products.

If you are trying to control your blood cholesteral level, you must limit not only the amount of cholesteral in your food, but also the amount of saturated fat, which stimulates the body's production of cholesteral. That's why you should trim fat from meat or buy lean cut-- to reduce singificantly the amount of saturated fat you eat.

SHAC and the Health Center will again be sponsoring "Wellness Day" March 29 and there will be blood cholesteral testing as well as many othe valuable tests. Keep that date in mind for a healthier you!

Those of you who have ventured into my neck of the woods (313 North Hall) may have noticed an interesting picture hanging on one of the walls of my room. It is a picture of a First World War veteran saluting at a recent Veterans Day ceremony. Given my reputation for being a peacenik, this picture may have seemed out of place to those who saw it. However, this picture fits in perfectly with both the decor of my room and my personal ideolgy.

The man in the picture is my great uncle, Boyd F. Mertz. He is 93 and still active. To those of us who know him, he is "Pop." Pop served in France during World War I. He drove an ammunition truck and was a witness to many horrors. He remembers having to wash the blood out of his truck after driving a group of wounded men to safety; he remembers having one of his friends bleed to death in his arms. His anguish is evident in the picture-there are tears in his eyes as he remembers the destruction he saw; his lips quiver has he salutes the memory of his dead comrades.

I have this picture hanging in my room, along with pictures of Gandhi, Martin Luther King, Jr., and Desmond Tutu, because it is a reminder of the pain and sorrow that war brings. When I look at Pop's picture and see the sadness etched in his face, I feel the strength and determination rise up within me to keep on speaking out for the cause of peace and brotherhood. My weariness is replaced with energy and my resignation is transformed into commitment when I think of my three beautiful little nephews and how I am resolved to making sure that they will never have to see what Pop saw.

The fight is not easy-sometimes I feel discouraged. Sometimes I want to give up, to surrender to hopelessness, to let indifference have its day. But then I look at Pop's picture and I say "Hell no." As long as I have breath in my lungs I will not hesitate to speak out against the scourge of violence that plagues our world. I and others like me will continue to lend our voices and our hearts to the crucial struggle against the glorification of militarism. Our voices will be heard until that day when mankind finally realizes that, as Mark Knopfler sings, "We're fools to make war on our brothers in arms."

By Dan Crosby

Just about everyone likes music, or at least has some appreciation for it. Each person has his or her own particular tastes, but music is regarded as something possessing universal appeal. Music is a means of communication, an expression of self, or sometimes just an integrated series of sounds and pauses. Music means many things to many different people, and the world would certainly be a much sadder place without it.

No one likes politics. The entire American political scene is a jumbled mass of lies, unclear distinctions, inappropriate labels, incompetence, and general chaos. And despite all of the noble (and sometimes not-so-noble) efforts, it is rare that any tangible changes are made. Politics is something we endure, however, and usually concern ourselves with, for we have been taught that our opinion, our vote, can-help to change the world.

So what happens when music and politics are mixed? Is it legitimate? Is it good for music? For politics? Does it ever accomplish anything? Is it even taken seriously?

We usually think of the sixties when someone mentions political music. They called it "message music" and it was the angry voice of a youth dissatisfied with the static conservatism and rigid social boundaries of the previous generation. The Beatles, Creedence Clearwater Revival, Crosby, Stills, and Nash, and dozens of other bands wrote song after song about war, peace, sex, drugs, religion, and the government.

But humankind's greatest musicians had been incorporating passion, political commentary, and social indignation into their music for over a century before the "freedom rock" of the 1960's. Frederic Chopin, the world's greatest writer of piano music, was fiercely proud of his Polish heritage, and several of his greatest works reflect his rage at the Russians who oppressed his homeland. That was during the first half of the nineteenth century. Later, Ignace Jan Paderewski, a spectacular pianist and famous composer, also championed the cause of a free Poland, and even served as Prime Minister after Poland gained its independence. Claude Debussy, the father of modern music and arguably the greatest composer in the history of the world, was considered revolutionary, hedonistic, and humanistic, and his music was reproached as a symptom of impending moral disease and societal decay.

The presence of politics in music is enjoying a rebirth in the eighties. It is hard to say exactly when the renaissance began, but many of the movement's major proponents are very visible. U2, probably the world's most popular band at the moment, is at the head of the list. In their new movie, "Rattle and Hum," band member Adam Clayton says "Some people think you shouldn't mix music and politics or sports and politics. I basically think that's a bunch of bullshit." U2's themes include opposition to violent revolution, support civil disobedience in oppressive nations, objection to the rampant materialism in our society, and opposition to the U.S. military

In addition, can it really be said that this honors American Indians? No-- not only are we not relaying any true information about the Indians,, we are actually increasing an untrue and derogatory stereotype about them. How can we gain any respect for American Indians or learn more about them if we are consistently presented with a false and degrading image of them?

I have also often heard the sentiment, "even if it is bad, who cares? What's the big deal?" Most people aren't aware of this, but there are American Indians who are offended. For example, here are quotes from a letter from an American Indian published in the February Sports Illustrated:

St. John set out to persuade South west students and administrators and the Minneapolis Board of Education that athletic teams should not be nicknamed Indians or Braves or Chiefs because such names trivialize Native American heritage and perpetuate stereotypes.... The efforts paid off. Southwest changed its nickname to the Lakers, and the Board of Education ruled that nicknames that perpetuate racial or ethnic stereotypes would no longer be allowed in the city's schools.

Sentiments such as those have also led respected schools such as Syracuse and Stanford Universities to change their mascots. Both of these were formerly "Indians." The big deal is that people are offended--their racial identity is insulted. What would be the reaction if we were the "Juniata Negroes?" Would we have bumper stickers saying "Scalp 'em Niggers?" Using "Indians" as a mascot is just as discriminatory as using "Negroes" would be. American Indians have been consistently mistreated since our ancestor's arrival in America. We should be trying to reverse that treatment, not continuing and perpetuating it.

Anyhow, what is the big deal? Changing our mascot's name is not a big step, nor is it unprecedented. If it is so easy to stop offending a group of people, why not?

Hot Wax

By Ferris

"I'm not aware of too many things. I know what I know if you know what I mean. (Do you?)"

Simple words of wisdom which would probably make our lives a lot less complex if everyone learned them by heart. (I know my life would be simpler...) Who spoke them? Plato? Gandhi? Dr. Buchanan? Neither nor.

Welcome to Hot Wax, the closest to a 200-level GE course the print media has to offer. Todays lecture is about music in the modern age. Our featured example is the first album released by a group of musicians who call themselves Edie Brickell and the New Bohemians. (The second part of the name refers back to nearly a quarter of a centry ago, a time in which students questioned authority and fought for causes other than resume-building. Really, it did exist.) But of course, it's the music that really matters and that's what we're here to talk about. After I bought this album, the man at the counter of the quaint (and fairly trendy) music store said those very important ten words that you never really believe anyway: "It's the hottest thing on the face of the Earth!" Indeed, this was no surprise. But he MEANT it.

Truth to tell, the album - Shooting Rubberbands At The Stars - is good. But not that good. The music ranges from the "Go-Go beat" style popular in the D.C. area, to tropical sounding guitar rhythms, to basic 80's Rock and Roll. But the overall sound of the album is something of an enigma. It's sort of an unclassifiable hodge-podge of various styles. This mix gives it a rather unique, but at the same time middle-of-the-road sound which, depending on what catches your ear, will make or break the album musically.

Lyrically, however the album is 45 minutes of poetry par excellance. Edie Brickell, responsible for all the song texts (including an initial quote, by the way), has such a gift for expressing the obvious about life in such a - I don't know - NEAT way. Her words - combined with her voice - make the album worth while even if the music sometimes doesn't seem that special or challenging. Edie Brickell sings like she's been there: in good bad relationships, confused, depressed, happy, and content. I believe that she has been there and that although the album isn't likey "the hottest thing" on earth it is worth checking out.

Going for the gold: Special Olympics at JC

Juniata College will be the site of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics Volleyball Tournament on February 10-12, 1989.

Approximately thirty teams of Special Olympians will travel to Huntingdon and participate in this state event, to be held at the College's Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center.

Dr. Robert Neff, president of Juniata College, will be serving as honorary chairperson of this year's events. In a recent interview, Dr. Neff expressed his enthusiasm toward the upcoming event. He said "The Special Olympic athletes and the Juniata students benefit from this event. Last year's tournament was such a good experience, that Juniata was chosen once again to host the event. The students are eager to volunteer, because it made such a lasting impression on them last year." He also stated "Special Olympics is a great community activity and it encourages competition in all people and at all levels." He stated "The involvement that has arisen here shows that Juniata students are concerned with community activities and have a focus which is much broader than that of the classroom."

The Huntingdon and surrounding area communities are encouraged to support these special atheletes and share in their moments of glory by attending the weekend's ceremonies and competitive events.

FORMULAS FOR THOUGHT

By Dr. Ei-Ichiro Ochiai, Department of Chemistry

You may have heard the word "Ozone Hole" lately. If so, you might have also heard that "ozone" somehow protects you from skin cancer; or conversely the the "ozone" layer depletion is causing an increased incidence of skin cancer. Just in case that you haven't, here are a few facts: ozone is a regualr component of the upper layer of the atmosphere;and it has been discovered that an ozone hole (of a large diameter) forms regularly above the Antarctic continent. This is considered to be a sign of reduction of ozone level in the upper atmosphere.

Why is ozone so important? What is "ozone" anyway? Everybody, without exception, needs oxygen, which is written as >L"O2" in chemical symbols. The chemical symbol "O"is the oxygen atom. That is, what we breath in is a molecule made of two atoms of oxygen. Ozone is made of three atoms of oxygen, and is expressed as "O3". This may seem a small difference, but the regualr oxygen, O2 and ozone, O3, behave very differently. We do not want to go into the details of their chemistry, but we need to point out one important fact: ozone absorbs ultraviolet light whereas regular ozygen O2 does not. Therefore, the ozone layer in the upper atmosphere absorbs the ultraviolet light portion of the sun's ray. If a significant portion of ultraviolet light were to reach the surface of the earth, we would be in big trouble, because ultraviolet light damages the organic compounds which constitute living systems. Particularly vulnerable is the genetic material in cells; it can be readily damaged, leading to cancer as one possible result. The ozone layer is thus acting as a shield to cut off and, therefore, to protect us from ultraviolet. In the process of evolution, terrestrial organisms could evolve only after sufficient ozone accumlated in the upper atmosphere as a result of the buildup of O2 in the atmosphere. Before that (it is supposed to be 600 millions ago), i.e., during most of the earth's history (4600 millions years), organisms could not live on land, because there was no shield for ultraviolet; they lived only under water.

How is ozone creatd in the upper atmosphere? It is being formed constantly from O2 by the action of sunlight in the upper layer of the atmosphere. Ozone is not very stable and is destroyed in the lower atmosphere as a result of reactions with a number of compounds that are present in the lower portion of atmosphere.

One of the major culprits for the decrease of ozone in the upper atmosphere (the "ozone hole" is a reflection of this phenomenon) is believed to be CFC's (Chloro Fluoro Carbons). One of the CFC's, CFC-12, is widely used in refrigerators, air conditioners and hairsprays, for example. Another CFC-113, is used as a solvent to clean electronic circuit boards (i.e., in a high-tech industry).

CFC-12, CCl2F2 (a molecule made of one carbon atom,C,and two atoms each of chlorine,Cl, and flourine,F), is very stable in the lower atmosphere, but when it reaches the upper layer, it is decomposed by the action of sunlight, producing chlorine atoms (Cl). These chlorine atoms then decompose ozone. Mankind has released and is still releasing a large quantity of CFC's into the air. 27 countries agreed (Montreal protocol) on cutting back the use of CFC's about 50% by 1995.

The USA and other countries are now trying to develop alternatives for CFC's. The advantage of CFC-12 and 113 is that they are the most effective chemicals for the purposes they are used for and that they can be produced inexpensively. The problem is then that any alternative is very likely to be less efficient and more expensive. The US already has banned the use of CFC for hair spray and similar purposes. This does not seem to have cost us significantly. Further bans, however, may necessitate a substantial and costly change in ever existing refrigerator, freezer and air conditioner, yours and mine.

No one, regretably, has predicted this consequence (depletion of ozone layer by CFC), although there were some earlier warnings. Luckily, let us hope, we can do something relatively easily in this case (unlike the Greenhouse effect case; see STS Issues column No. 1, Dec., 1988), though we may need sacrifice somewhat in terms of our pocketbook.

This issue involves a lot of interesting chemistry, and this also presents a very interesting case of interaction of science/technology/society with respect to the overall health of the organisms on the earth and the economy.

Power 92 to Host AIDS Charity Show

By Ann Telferain

WHAT ARE YOU DOING FOR YOUR VALENTINE? Yes, it's here again, the 3rd annual "Dedicate Your Heart to Charity" show sponsored by Power 92.

This year the entire campus can send some hugs and kisses to their sweetheart, scope, etc. and help the AIDS Foundation find a cure for this century's worst epidemic.

By now everyone has received a form in the mail and if not pick one up in the station. For $1.00 a tune you can dedicate a song to your favorite Valentine. Then, at 6:00pm February 9th the dedication show begins. You can listen to Ed Yencha, Mike Barnett, Joel Ranck, and Heidi Wagaman D.J. the show until the very last dedication is played. Be sure to get your form in prior to the show.

So if you have a secret or "not-so" secret Valentine that needs a little attention, dedicate a tune for them and the AIDS foundation.

New club on campus offers a thought (or2)

The New Year has seen the advent of a new organization on campus: The Reader's Group. Have an interest in a work of art? A viewpoint to express? Want to explore or absorb something new: an idea? A concept? A theory? Even if you just have more fun thinking about things when you don't have to do it under a deadline, please come join us.

At last week's meeting we kicked around future discussion topics ranging from Milan Kundera's "The Unbearable Lightness of Being", to themes in social conscience being broached in current movies like "Biko" and "Mississippi Burning," to analysis of James Joyce's "Ulysses" and "Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man". The emphasis of the group is on exploration, arguement,and discussion. All opinions are invited; but be prepared to defend yours!

Interested in attending? Now comes the tricky part. The group usually meets alternating Sunday evenings at Baker House across from the Stone Church. But as the schedule of meetings may be changing, the best course of action would be to call Heidi Lutz, -9875, for information on the next one. Again, the invitation is open to anyone. Keep an eye open for a roster of discussion topics, hopefully appearing sometime next week.

presence in Central America. U2 has toured for Amnesty International, as have such "political" music figures as Peter Gabriel, Sting, and Tracy Chapman.

Some groups are more subtle in their approach to political and social issues (Paul Simon, Talking Heads, R.E.M.), but political statements have pretty much become standard fare in the world of popular music. Everyone from Michael Jackson, Huey Lewis, Bruce Springsteen, to Bruce Hornsby, INXS, and Metallica is writing or has written political music of some sort.

Does all of this do any good? The message music of the sixties helped to fuel a revolutionary subculture that nearly tore apart our nation. It oversimplified the many evils of the world and tried, perhaps, to change too much too fast. One of the new U2 songs, "God Part II," says "I don't believe in the sixties, the golden age of pop/ You glorify the past when the future dries up."

But what is happening to music now is clearly different than what happened during the sixties. There is responsibility, purpose, and dedication in the men and women of the new rock revolution. Rather than flower children dancing naked in the rain at Woodstock, and burning flags, bras, draft cards, and sometimes even entire cities, there is a sense of caring and hope to this "revolution". There have been the Live Aid concerts, raising millions of dollars to help feed the starving masses in Eastern Africa. There was Freedomfest, a musical tribute to Nelson Mandela, imprisoned South African civil rights leader. There are tours performed and songs released as charity for organizations such as Amnesty International and Greenpeace.

Most importantly, a new generation is being exposed to ideas that really can make a difference in our troubled world. Instead of the hopeless idealism of the sixties, and far from the selfish, uncaring materialism of the eighties, the new youth may take the 21st century by the reins and start to correct the errors of a thousand years.

Rock 'n' Roll can change ideas, and ideas can change the world. Music and politics may seem to be strange and sometimes disagreeable bedfellows, but the children of their mutual discontent may grow to be strong and conscientious.

Let us hope so, for all of our sakes.

By Joel Meyer

Upcoming in February is Black History Week featuring a lecture by Yolanda King (daughter of Martin Luther King Jr.), the showing of Cry Freedom, and other activities. It is appropriate in this context to remember the plight of South African blacks. We hear about the violence almost daily in the news, but what are the facts, and what can we do about it?

South Africa is a country larger than Germany, France, Italy, and Portugal combined. It is inhabited by 21 million (72%) Africans, 4.5 million (16%) whites, and 3.3 million (12%) others (Indians and people with mixed blood.). 87% of South Africa is reserved for the 16% whites. Africans can't own this land or remain on it without a permit. Indians and Coloureds (mixed blood) must live on segregated portions of the white's land. Africans make up 70% of the workforce, whites 18%. However, whites earn 64% of the total income, Africans only 26%.

These statistics are a result of the system of apartheid which was institutionalized by the ruling Nationalist Party in 1948. Apartheid designates Africans as non-citizens, unable to vote, buy or sell land, live or work where they choose, or move freely. Education is also segregated and is taught using vastly different curriculum. In 1980, per capita spending was $1,389 for whites, but only $115 for Africans. The teacher:pupil ratio was 1:18 for whites, but only 1:42 for Africans. Only 2% of all blacks were educated past the high school level.

Health care is also widely segregated. Infant mortality rates in 1980 for whites were 13/1000; for Africans they were 90/1000, and estimated as high as 320/1000 in rural areas. An African man's life expectancy is 55, twelve years less than a white man's. 2.9 million African children suffer from malnutrition. Doctor:patient ratios for whites are 1:330; for Africans they are 1:19,000.

Violence is the method used by the South African goverhnment to enforce apartheid. Torture such as electric shock and beatings are used extensively by the South African police. South Africa has the highest per capita prison population of any nation in the world. Of the 130 hangings in South Africa in 1980, one was white. Thousands of peaceful demonstrators have been shot over the years by South African police.

What can we do to help? A common answer is sanctions. An equally common response has been that sanctions are just as harmful to the Africans as they are to the government. However, polls taken in South Africa which show this merely demonstrate the fact that it is treason to advocate sanctions in South Africa! Well-known and respected leaders have endorsed sanctions.

World News at a Glance

-The countdown continues in Afghanistan. Soviet troops are trying to disengage from a 10-year involvement in Afghanistan by Feb 15. The government in the capital city of Kabul is expected to fall once the Soviets are gone, according to multiple experts. Months of civil war between the rebels and the Soviet-supported government are expected to follow.

-Mardi Gras, the pre-Lenten party, is underway in New Orleans. Nearly one million people are expected to take part in the festivities before its peak on Feb. 7.

-Greenpeace, an ecological activist group, is planning to stop Japanese harpooners on a whaling ship from killing more whales in Antarctica.

-Moscow residents are afraid to go out in the city after dark, according to the NY Daily News poll of 1,000 Moscow residents. They also favor the death penalty, abortion, and are concerned about the quality of education.

-Elvis lives! On an ABC "docu-series". ABC has already committed to four one-half hour episodes starting this fall. The series is going to chronicle a white youth's rebellious journey into the black man's world of blues in the deep South, according to USA Today.

Hit the beach before the ball JC

The evening of February 3 will mark a new and exciting event on the Juniata College campus. On this Friday night, Center Board will be sponsoring the Ray Boston Beach Party. With the Presidental Ball taking place the Saturday after, the entire weekend should be one of the more festive of the year. The party will be in the multi-purpose room from 9:00 p.m. until 2:00 a.m. The beach atmosphere will be complete with sand, sun lamps, golf areas and much more. Additionally, Haagen Dazs ice cream will be sold throughout the evening. Admission will be $2.00 for students, and you must have a towel and bathing suit to enter the pool area. This new event should be an enjoyable additon and prelude to the Presidental Ball weekend. Hope to see you there!

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Joe Scialabba '86

I don't know whether it's an honor to write this column again, or if it's some form of unnecessary torture. As a student, working on "Muddy Run" was certainly a pleasure, but the memories of last-minute story writing still haunt me.

So, in an attempt to make this effort as joyous as possible for everyone, especially the author, I sit before my computer screen on Sunday afternoon as opposed to Monday morning at 2 a.m.

When the offer to write another "Muddy Run" for The Juniatian came to me, I jumped at it with much excitement. A chance to relive, I thought. But, here I am again, searching for something inspirational to throw at you -- something for you to read and remember. It is maybe a tougher task now than when I did it every week.

What to write about? A question that I'll face many more times unless I change careers.

Change. Now there's a word that can always lead to something.

This newspaper is making changes. This school is making changes. We are making changes.

I can never understand why change causes so much hassle when we, as people, almost always invite it. But, when it happpens watch out for the trouble it can cause.

For example, I remember watching my father shave when I was a little boy and wishing I could shave too -- right away I wanted to be able to do it. Well,not too many years later the necessary changes took place and, sure enough, I got my wish -- I needed to shave. Now, shaving has become one of the biggest pains I know.

Another example could be high school. I wanted to be in high school in a bad way. Then when I was in high school I enjoyed it, but I couldn't wait to go to college. I needed a change.

The college days arrived and were great. But, as the four years progressed again there was the need for change. Oh, how I wished I had a job.

Soon graduation came and went, and 9-to-5 had begun. It was the full-time working world. This wasn't just a summer job, but the real thing.

After a while, I liked my job but thought I could use a change. Maybe another job? Another change.

Well, that happened and here I am again in a new situation. But, deep down I always think about what's next

I guess there is no precise meaning to this article, except to hope you'll look at Juniata as it is for you now and not be so distraught with what it has become; how it's changed.

Juniata, like everyone and everything, changes. It changed before I was a student. It changed while I was a student. It changes while I work here. And it will change when I'm gone.

Change is inevitable. It's natural. It's healthy.

Sometimes change happens despite all our hopes that it won't. If it's going to happen anyway, why not make the best of it?

In my job as an admissions couselor, I met people that worked for every kind of school imaginable. I heard them talk about their schools. In some cases, I heard them talk about their alma mater.

Now, that I've moved into a position working more with our alumni, I've heard similar talking. But it changes. It's definitely different.

I can remember telling prospective students that Juniata is different from other schools. It sounds kind of corny, but there is a feeling I don't think is found at other places. It's definitely diffferent.

And the more I talk to alumni, my old Juniata friends (the best I'll ever have), new Juniata friends and associates, and, of course, students, the more I still get that weird feeling. That feeling I get only about Juniata.

Yes, Juniata has changed. It's different in many, many ways all the time. But, there is one thing that can't change. It won't change. There is something about Juniata that only we, as Juniatians, know about and feel.

Outside laws can force us to change Raft Regatta, lounge parties, tower parties and Springfest. But no one can force us to change our spirit.

Juniata has something about it that's hard to define, explain and sometimes even see. But when you're gone you miss it. Ask someone who's been here and gone. They'll tell you.

Changes will always occur at Juniata. But Juniata, in ways only we can notice and feel, will never change.

Take care.

Swimmers end season MAC meet next

The Men and Women's swim teams suffered close defeats in their past two swim meets. The best of the matchups was in the men's meet with Bethany College, which pulled out the victory by winning the last relay race of the day. Juniata later fell to a tough Scranton squad 97-56.

In ladies action the Tribe also fell to Bethany 97-69 and to Scranton 103-53. Geoff Cixon, Brad Newman and Steve Grater have all qualified for the MAC's in more events for the men while Pam Ezdebski, Sue Humphrey and Mary Strapple have done the same for the women.

The men have concluded their regular season, while the women will finish this Saturday when they travel to York College. Mac's will begin February 24th.

Women drop tough game to Lyco

By Mike Antenucci

The Women's basketball team played only one game over the past week dropping a 68-63 decision to Lycoming. Despite a 28 point effort by freshman Sherry DeAgostino and an added 12 from Pam Wyrick, Juniata was unable to hang onto their 31-29 halftime lead.

Lycoming was paced by Kim Wood who scored a team high 28 points. Poor foul shooting resulted in the difference for the Indians as they only connected on 9 of their 21 attempts from the charity stripe. Meanwhile Lyco nailed four of their five three point tries and was able to escape with the narrow victory.

The women traveled to Elizabethtown yesterday and play at 2:00 on Saturday against King's.

Men hoopers drop two; playoff outlook good

The Men's basketball team took a turn in the wrong direction last week and suffered a key league loss. After winning five straight games in the new year the Indians traveled to Dickinson College for a non-conference showdown. Juniata has always had trouble winning at Dickinson and this year was no different.

The 72-69 setback marked the third straight loss for the Tribe in Carlisle. Poor shooting from the free throw line along with a sub-par shooting percentage from the field led to the demise of the Indians. Despite the perfect performance turned in by captain Shawn Habakus (4-4, 2-2, 4 assists and no turnovers) the Tribe could not withstand the hot handed Red Raiders. Duane Dise was second in scoring for the Tribe with 12 points.

With a trip to Williamsport at hand the Indians needed to bounce back and key up for a most important conference game. However, Juniata never really showed up for the Lycoming game and suffered their worst defeat, 85-56, in about two years. The Tribe shot a horrid 31% from the floor, connecting only 3 of 13 three-points attempts. Meanwhile, the Warriors were shooting 54% from the field, 80% from three-point land and nailed 79% (27-34) of their free throws. Needless to say, the Indians were outplayed in every phase of the game.

Bob Dombroski was the only Indian to reach double figures with 11 points, while three of the 10 players who scored for Lycoming marked 75% of the Warrior points. The loss put the Tribe at 11-6 and 7-3 in the conference.

This past Saturday Juniata was able to rebound against conference foe Albright. Still not producing that great of an offensive performance, the Indians managed to crush the Lions 80-53. Jay Nicholson (15), Mike Antenucci (13), Joe Deblase (11) and Craig Copeland (10) all reached double-figures. Juniata opened a 21 point halftime lead and the Lions didn't pull any closer than 17 points. Juniata moved its record up to 12-6 overall and 8-3 in the MAC northwest.

The playoff picture looks like this: As of now the Indians trail Susquehanna by two games for first place but lead Lycoming for second place by one game and Elizabethtown by two games. The Tribe played at E-town yesterday and a victory would most likely knock the Bluejays out of the running.

With the first two teams from each section making the playoffs the Tribe can not afford another league loss because the first tie breaker is head-to-head record. If the Indians were to end the regular season with an identical conference record with Lycoming, then Lyco would get the second playoff spot because they knocked off the Tribe twice this season.

The first round of the playoffs will be held at the site of the first place team from the Northwest and Northwest section with the championship game to be played at the site of the Northwest survivor. If both northwest teams win the first round games the game will be played at the site of the regular season first place team.

With only five conference games remaining the Indians control their own destiny. If they win the remaining five conference games they make the playoffs. If the season was to end today the Tribe would have to travel to Scranton which leads the northeast division by two games, and King's would travel to Susquehanna.

Juniata enters a big double-header weekend with home afternoon games with King's (4:00) on Saturday and FDU-Madison (3:00) on Sunday. The Indians dropped both games last year during the same double-header weekend. The Tribe defeated King's in the first game of the regular season in the first round of the Scotty Wood Memorial Tournament (hosted by Muhlenberg) to start the Season.

Last season the Tribe dropped two games to Madison, both by two points, with the second game being the first round of the MAC playoffs. Juniata continues to have great success at home, boasting a 7-1 record so far this season and winning 17 out of their last 19 games at the Kennedy Sports + Recreation Center over the past two seasons. However the Tribe only owns a 5-5 record on the road this year.

The regular season concludes with home games with Drew (Feb. 11th), which features the return of past Juniata players for an Alumni game, and Wilkes (Feb. 18th) where all senior players will be honored. Two non-conference road games proceed the final home stand, one at York, the other at Western Maryland.

Varsity reserve also enjoying success

The Men's Varsity Reserve basketball team has enjoyed a so far successful season. Entering February the team stands at 5-4 and has won three games in a row. A 113-71 victory over Central Penn Business School saw sophomore Frank Shue toss in a game high of 22 points.

In the most recent victory, a 96-81 win at Dickinson, the Tribe was paced by Frank Webb and Craig Copeland. Both scored 22 points in the winning effort.

The Varsity Reserve wil be in action tonight at 7:30 playing host to Mount Aloysius College. The reserves lost to Aloysius 87-78 earlier in the season.

According to Winnie Mandela, "they are the only peaceful door still open for us. And Archbishop Tutu, as well as other leaders like Reverend Allan Boesak, agree. Our call for mandatory and total economic sanctions to be imposed on us is a confirmation of the fact that we are determined to end the oppression against us, once and for all, regardless of the immediate, short-term discomforts that would accompany global economic sanctions on our people."

Some sanctions which are presently in effect are boycotts of Coca-Cola Company, Shell Oil Company, and Shell's parent company, Royal Dutch Petroleum. Both of these companies are heavily invested in South Africa, and Shell supplies the oil used by the South African military and police. The Shell boycott has received endorsement of the South African mineworker's union, 14 countries, the National Council of Churches, American Baptist Churches, the Episcopal Church, the Unitarian Universalist Association, the Progressive National Baptist Church, the United Methodist Church, several Roman Catholic orders, and the Church of the Brethren.

In order to raise awareness about apartheid, the Human Concerns Committee is passing out yellow ribbons to be worn on the wrist. Yellow ribbons traditionally symbolize hope for the release of hostages. Specifically, these ribbons protest the fact that over 10,000 black South African children have been arrested in the last 2 years for merely protesting the system of apartheid. Symbolically, it symbolizes hope for the release of all oppressed South Africans from the system of apartheid. If you would like to wear one of these ribbons, see myself, Chris Forney, Greg Howe, John Deppen, Suzanne Lydic, Bob Coursen, or other members of the Human Concerns Committee.

You can also join the Amnesty International Chapter which will soon be started at Juniata. If you want to know more about apartheid, there are many good moves and books out. Movies include "A World Apart" and "Cry Freedom." A few books are "If This is Treason, I am Guilty", by Allan Boesak," Part of My Soul Wen With Him", by Winnie Mandela, and "Somtimes it Rains", a collection of essays.

President Neff and Mrs. Neff greet ball-goers as they enter Baker Saturday evening. This year's Presidential Ball was a huge success and was well attended.

J.C. has a Ball!

By Pam Mertz

A flaming volcano, chicken fingers, eggrolls, mozzarella sticks, miniature eclairs, a Founder's Hall made out of gingerbread, great dance music - all of this and more were a part of the 1989 Presidential Ball held on February 4.

Dr. and Mrs. Robert W. Neff hosted the gala event which was held in Ellis College Center. The theme for this year's ball was "A Touch of Broadway." If anyone was wondering why the huge lit-up sign in front of Ellis stated, "Dorthy and Robert Neff Starring in the Presidential Ball,"there's the reason.

A reception in Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m. started the evening underway. Then at 8:45p.m., the Juniata College Band presented a pre-ball pops concert. The band played four sclections, starting with a piece that consisted of theme songs froms different Broadway musicals. They also played the score from "West Side Story", an arrangement of "Porgy and Bess", and selections from"Fiddler on the Roof".

The ball itself began at 9:30 p.m. Couples braved the cold night air to walk over to Ellis and into a Baker Refectory that seemed a bit transformed. There was a backdrop of New York City behind the dance floor, two VCR'S set up showing various Broadway shows, and the hors d' oeuvres tables were decorated with, among other things, the flaming volcano and the gingerbread Founder's Hall. Actually, the flames of the volcano were not real, but the effect was still there.

The Richard Victor Quintet from State College entertained the guests at the Ball with dance music. The Ball lasted until 12:00. Then the time came for all good princesses to get the carriages home, before they turned back into pumpkins, or at least they had to once again brave the cold night air instead of dancing.

MacArthur grants PACS

Juniata College will receive a $100,000 grant from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation of Chicago, Illinois, for support of a faculty fellowship program in peace and conflict studies, according to Dr. Robert W. Neff, Juniata president.

"We are very pleased to receive such a generous award," said Neff. "This grant has stimulated a new level of enthusiasm and excitement about our peace studies program. The support of the MacArthur Foundation will help us raise this important program to higher visibility and to extend its impact to wider audiences."

Juniata's Baker Institute for Peace and Conflict Studies, which was formally established in 1987, had its origin in 1973 when John C. and Elizabeth E. Baker provided the first support for their vision of a peace and conflict studies program at the college. Today, the Institute receives support from many friends of the college.

The PACS program features a core of 21 courses with 15 faculty and staff members representing a variety of departments. Widely regarded as one of the finest programs of its kind, Juniata's PACS program receives over 25 inquiries a year from other schools seeking advice on how to establish a PACS program.

"The fellowship will make it possible for a full-time member of the Juniata faculty fo be released from regular duties and to devote all of his or her attention to research and curriculum development around a war/peace issue," said Dr. Andrew Murray, director of Baker Institute. "Work done through the fellowship will not only result in offerings at Juniata but will produce curriculum materials that could be used by other institutuions."

"Our PACS program has enjoyed broad support from the Juniata faculty over the years. The MacArthur grant will have a significant impact on our commitment to assist faculty members who would like to develop course-work for the program."

Approximately 200 Juniata students enroll each year in peace and conflict studies courses.

Happy Valentine's Day! ♥

ASF Goal touched by reaching out

Forty-five students completed 305 phone calls to raise a grand total of $6,940 in firm committments for the Annual Support Fund on February 1 and 2. In addition many parents said "Yes, they'd consider a gift" when the follow-up mailing arrived.

Inter-class rivalry got hot and heavy both nights, with the reward being dinner at President and Mrs. Neff's home for the class raising the highest amount. The freshmen total of $1,940 won them that honor, even though they eked out their victory by only $25 margin over the junior class. Juniors totalled $1915 for both nights with seniors and sophomores raising $1,720 and $1,365 respectively.

After phoning for dollars, the students wrote Juniata postcards to the Moms and Dads, and in addition, sent parent-o-grams to the sons and daughters of those they called. Messages ranged from "Too bad we changed the locks at home" to "We love you very much!" and were put in the college mail the day after the calls.

"Juniatians" that told of the upcoming phonathon were sent to the homes of all Juniata parents. Many had read the article and were ready for the phone calls when they arrived.

Students who participated on February 1 were: SENIOR CLASS - Becky Abrahalm (highest total of the evening), Cindy Burgo, Darelle Lombardi, Lara Mann, Maureen McElligott, Dan Stambaugh; JUNIOR CLASS - Alison Stewart (highest total of the evening), Lori Kieffer, Jenn Knabb, Rich Russell, John Seckinger, Alex Trotta; SOPHOMORE CLASS - Jim Campbell (highest total of the evening), Doreen Desa, Mike Kauffman, John Moody; FRESHMEN CLASS - Heather Neff (highest total of the evening), and February 2: SENIOR CLASS - John Milsovic (highest total of the evening), Jill Crouse, Amy Hoffman, Maria Tweardy; JUNIOR CLASS - Bob Herzog (highest total of the evening), Sue London, Todd Miller, Annette Oberdorf; SOPHOMORE CLASS - Bill Samuels (highest total of the evening), Jeff Fetterman, Bonnie Fogel, Trish Kazmerski, Joanna Rebert, Nancy Simpson, Julie Turano; FRESHMEN CLASS - Kevin Fayette (highest total of the evening), Chris Bush, Stephanie Haines, Grant Hunter, Craig Miller, Mark Moyer, Kristen Pederson, Wendy Wengert.

Editorial

Last week, when "The Juniatian" asked for the students to vote for the new logo, a very small percentage of them responded,(only 24 total votes!). I was disappointed by this fact and began to seriously think about the student participation on campus.

As a student, I am constantly being asked by professors and staff what my opinion is on certain subjects or if there is anything that I would like to change on campus. I usually give my opinion, feeling kind of awkward because of my dissatisfaction about some issues. The person I am speaking to, though, listens intently, not because he is just being friendly, but because he is genuinely interested.

This is the whole point. People are asked for feedback by their peers and elders on campus because these people are genuinely interested in what the students think. It is very disappointing to ask for an opinion and get no response.

The most frustrating part about a nonresponsive student body is that they will complain bitterly behind your back, but when you ask them what they think, you get the patented answer that everything is just fine. Sometimes I feel that this is a never ending cycle on Juniata's campus. I hear people complaining, but they won't take any actions to get their complaints resolved.

If you are one of these nonresponsive students, I would kindly ask that you keep your opinion to yourself unless you plan on taking actions to get the problem resolved. There are people on this campus who are very open minded and willing to help the students, but the students must take the first step.

The next time there is a vote taken or someone asks you for an opinion about something, please think twice before giving a patented answer. A person usually does not ask for input unless he truely cares to hear the answer.

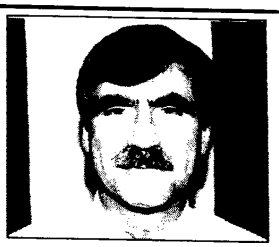
Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan



SADS, Seasonal Affective Disorder Syndorme, is a severe form of depression which was first studied by researchers in the early 1980s. More than the blues and blahs that most of us go through during the long and often light-reduced days of winter, SADS and a milder form of the disorder afflict somewhere in the neighborhood of 35 million Americans.

As with severe depression, SADS victims have a tendency to gain weight, to sleep longer, to be fatigued, to withdraw and socially isolate themselves and, if that isn't enough, to lose interest in sex.

While most of us do not experience these severe symptoms, all of us are affected in one way or another with the blues and blahs which accompany the winter season. How do we effectively cope with the remainder of the winter? Let<"s examine a few possibilities.

In terms of the calendar, the month of January is history. Did you realize that when Juniata went from terms to semesters, "winter" was totally eliminated from the academic schedule? One month down and only two to go!

Excercise your blues and blahs away. Since many of us have a tendency to put on a few pounds over the winter due mainly to reduced activity, make a special effort to work out on a regular basis. Remember, excercise is a mood elevator, stress reducer, a chance to meet new friends and it puts you in control.

On a related note, take time to schedule social and recreational activities. Keep busy with friends to help combat the boredom that can set in during the wintertime. Plan an escape weedend. Visit a friend at his/her campus, invite your roommate/friend to your home for a weedend or just spend the day in State College or elsewhere where you can perhaps shop and have lunch in a different environment.

Try to get outdoors as much as possible during the winter, particularly when it is bright. Researchers have consistently stated that light has a great deal to do with managing depression. Mary Ann Knapp, clinical social worker with Penn State's Center for Counseling & Psychological Services suggests the use of light therapy to combat mild depression. She goes as far as to advise us to turn more lights on in our apartments or rooms.

There are many additional strategies that we can employ to deal with cabin fever and the blahs of winter. Drop me a note if you come up with some creative ideas and we'll share them with others.

Be good to yourself, think good thoughts and tell those people who are important to you just how you feel.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

The best English professor I ever had told me never to begin a story by apologizing in advance for my writing. So I'm sorry, sez I. Who listens to professors anyway? Somebody, operating under the assumption that I am getting much too serious to write this column, suggested that I write something a little more light hearted, so that maybe a few people would try reading it for a change. Well that wasn't exactly the real reason, but who's counting? But the point of today's perky little article is that something is supposed to be funny in this world, and it might not be so bad to acknowledge that occasionally. Well, sorry to say sorry again, but I can't find it exactly. It's difficult to function comically when your humor gland is all tapped out from laughing at the senior's All Class Night Script.

So, smashing weekend, huh? That term is really the most apt description of the festivities this past Saturday. Man, I was having such a good time that I didn't leave the dance floor once, and I kept spinning for awhile after the Presidental Ball was over, too. By the looks of it, so did everyone else. That was fun, but not really funny.

I was considering saying something funny about the Yolanda King lecture this last Tuesday, but A) I don't think I'd be able to face my children in the future when they ask me "Daddy, what's a bigot?" and B) the fun of writing under a Sunday deadline (actually Monday in my case, to the external aggravation of my editors and the typists.) means that this interesting little gap exists between Tuesday (when Yolanda

The Library:

A TRIP WORTH TAKING

Concerned that there might be students out there in Juniataland who still do not realize all the fun things one can find out in the library, Beeghly Library is inaugurating a once-a-month contest called "Convivial Pursuits." By stooping to the crass merchandizing technique of offering a large O.I.P. pizza, with choice of toppings, to the first student who can correctly answer this month's 10 questions, (and then shamelessly exploiting the lucky winner with speaking engagements and a publicity appearance at Nittany Mall), Beeghly Library expects to establish its reputation as the "in" place to be on campus. So if you have been waiting for an excuse to visit the library, wait no longer. See you there!

Contest Rules

The contest is only open to Juniata students.

Questions must be answered by using resources found in the Beeghly Library.

Answers must include a complete citation (title, volume, page, call number, etc.) to the library resource used.

Other than location questions, no fair asking librarians for help. (Unless, of course, you want to share the pizza with them!)

1. How many gold records selling over 1 million did the Beatles make?
2. What is Madonna's full name, and how old is she?
3. What is the original meaning of the word "geek?"
4. What does Bud Shuster do for a living, and where can you write him? (Office address, please.)
5. What does IUPAC stand for?
6. Who is the treasurer of the American Dehydrated Onion and Garlic Association? How many other members are there?
7. What was the short story from which the movie "Smooth Talk" was made?
8. Who said, "There is no frigate like a book?"
9. What were the only two states which F.D.R. failed to carry in any election?
10. Who is L.A. Beeghly, and how did he make enough money to build us a library?

Spring play gets underway

Ms. Ryan Chadwick has chosen Noel Coward's classic farce Blithe Spirit for the Spring theatre production. The trouble begins when a published writer, Charles Condomine, and his wife Ruth, decide to hold a seance; and the local medium, Madame Arcati, conjures up the spirit of Charles's first wife, Elvira, an ectoplasmic manifestation who always felt she had more than a ghost of a chance to win him back, set in motion the events of the remainder of the play, for she always thought she had more than a ghost of a chance to win him back.

The cast, in order of appearance: Edith (a maid)- Amy Carter; Ruth- Shana Erb; Charles- Rush Blady; Dr. Bradman- Rob Biter; Mrs. Bradman- Sharon Cadman; Madame Arcati- Carol Ann Rezensky; Elvira- Joann Rishel.

Understudies: Rush- Amy Carter; Charles- Rob Biter; Madame Arcati- Patti Stepp; Elvira- Christie Brown; Edith and Mrs. Bradman- Michelle Trick.

Production Staff: Assistant Directors- Rob Biter, Christie Brown; Stage Manager- Christine Krudwig; Assistant Stage Manager- Nadine Vreeland; Properties Coordinator- Becky Shreckengost; Lighting Assistant- Mark Moyer.

Crew: Sets and Props- John Olsen, Dan Crosby, Katy Lynn, Alicia Rosenthiel, Richard Thompson, and Becky Wentling. Lighting and Sound: Suzane Erb, Damian Gessner, Richard Thompson, and Bryan Miller. Costumes and makeup: Patti Stepp, Lisa Mitschang, Alicia Rosenshehl, Becky Wentling. Props and Sound- Richard Thomposon. Publicity- Jef Buelher, Brian Geiger, Edith Ellen Reuwer, and Christine Bash.

The dates for the performances are March 29,30,31, and April 1,5,6,7,8.

Writing Center: Help is a path away

By Janine Hyde

I came across a problem in trying to write this article. Besides writers' block, every writer knows the next biggest problem is being too close to your subject. Working for the Writing Center as a tutor is one thing. Writing about it is another. Promotional executives say the best way to plug a product is to use it yourself, so I did. I went to the Writing Center.

For those of you who've never been there, the Center's an invaluable resource, if I do say so myself. By using the Socratic method--tutors ask students questions that gear them toward solving problematic areas--the student discovers his or her own errors. People learn from their mistakes, or so the old story goes, and that's what makes this method so effective.

The student tutors don't tell you what to write, don't write for you, don't shred your work, and certainly don't guarantee A's. What they do is act as a sounding board, help ideas develop into clear, concise papers, and assist students in discovering their particular writing style. The tutors cover a variety of majors and are down to earth, friendly people.

Stop down, check the place out, and talk with a tutor. We're equal opporunity tutors and treat freshmen and seniors in the same respect (Yes, upper classmen do utilize the Center. This isn't just for freshmen.) We're located in the basement of the library and are open Sunday through Thursday nights, 6:30-9:30, and Monday through Thursday afternoons, 2:30-5:30.

Beach Party '89

Beach Party '89 was a great time for all, as depicted in these photographs. At the top left, Mikey Barnett stands out with his brilliant smile as his fellow RA Chris Glover gets chummy. If you can, trace the hands to the owners to see who really is having fun, and who is smiling for other reasons! (Sorry guys couldn't resist!)

In the bottom left, we see the same group getting attacked by a group of T-Shirt wearing women. Where are those hands now guys?

Freshmen Joel Myer and Mike Juniper show that they can have fun the dry way, pun intended. The Haagen-Dazs bars served were a welcome treat to the dance weary, after the floor reached a temperature of a sweltering 85 degrees.

The Beach party was great for all, and we hope next year we'll have more great photos of this event.

Indians fate in the hands of Lyco

The men's basketball team dug a big hole in its playoff chance last week when they fell to the host Bluejays of Elizabethtown 71-56. The Tribe picked up their fourth conference loss, putting themselves a half game behind Lycoming who also has four losses but beat the Indians twice.

A horrid 32% shooting from the floor by the Indians and a 34 for 30 effort by the Bluejays from the charity stripe was the combination that equaled victory for E-town. The Indians were paced by Joe DeBlase who had 18 points in the losing effort. Shawn Habakus also added 12, while five oppossing players managed double-figures.

Juniata now had four league games remaining, while Lycoming also had four. The Indians need to win the rest of their games and hope that the Warriors lose one. The Tribe completed half their task this past weekend sweeping victories from King's and FDU-Madison. Lycoming played last night against Albright in Williamsport but takes to the road this Saturday to play Susquehanna before they end the season at Delaware Valley and at Elizabethtown.

Against King's the Indians were led by Bob Dombroski and Don Wagner who both had 14 points. Dombroski just missed his second triple-double, falling short of ten assists by three. Three other players added double-figures for the Tribe, as Juniata connected on 77% of their free throws, sealing the 80-64 victory.

The following day Juniata held back FDU-Madison 83-76 as Jay Nicholson poured in 23 for the Tribe. Les Squair also added 16 points, nine rebounds and eight assists just missing a shot at his first triple-double of the season. The Tribe led by 11 at the half 42-31, but were outscored by four in the second half as the Blue Devils made a valiant effort to come back. FDU was led by freshman sensation Nova Madison who tallied a game high 34 points.

The Indians traveled to York yesterday for a non-conference battle. The Indians are sub .500 on the road this season and will be on the road for the playoffs if they get there. This Saturday the Indians will host Drew in its next to last league game. Game time is 7:30.

The Greek returns; New year, new thoughts

By George Zanic

No one asked me, but:

If someone would have told me the Juniata men's basketball team would have seven losses at this point in the season, I would have told them they were crazy.

The men's basketball team has a 119 and 2 win-lose record the past two seasons at the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center.

Saturday's game against Wilkes will be a gut check for the hoop team. A win should bring a play-off berth, a loss will bring an end to the senior's basketball careers.

In the winter 1992, Sherry DeAgostino will become the all time leading scorer in Juniata women's basketball history.

I hope the opening of the head football coaching job was simply a formality. On April 1, Brad Small should be named the head football coach.

If Small isn't named head coach, there will be a lot of upset football players. Small will keep the program going in the same direction without a major change, he has the respect of the players and most of all, he hates to lose and won't accept losing.

The Penguins beat the Flyers this past week at the Spectrum. The last time that happened, Mario Lemieux was eight years old.

John Thompson makes me sick, that's why I hate to say that he'll make another appearance in the final four this March.

Bobby Knight should be NCAA Coach of the Year. He has a bunch of players with limited ability, yet he continues to win in the toughest league in America, the Big Ten.

When the Pirates fired General Manager Syd Thrift, the organization took a huge step backward. Don't look for the Pirates to compete with the Mets this year.

Baseball season starts in 22 days, let's hope Juniata's basketball season hasn't ended by then.

Grapplers drop two; with Messiah, Etown

The Juniata wrestling team dropped two close matches this past weekend, losing 19-31 to Messiah and 13-33 to Elizabethtown. Coach Berrier stated that each match was closer than the final team score indicated and that he felt his grapplers wrestled well.

Jim Weaver was the only Indian to manage two wins on the day, while teammates John Swanson, Glen Smith, John Telenko, Terry Weaverling and Lee Abromovitz each scored 1-1 records during the day's action. Berrier was optimistic about the teams performance and about its future. "With a break in a match or two we would have beat Messiah and come closer to beating E-town ," stated Berrier.

This weekend the Tribe packs its bags again and hits the road for a trimatch with Scranton and host Mulhenberg.

Alumni to return to JC this weekend

Former coach Dr. Arnold Greene and player Roger Galo will be honored when numerous Juniata College men's basketball alumni return for their annual reception and game on Saturday, February 11, at Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center. The activities begin at 3:30 with a reception, followed by the alumni game at 5:30 and varsity men's contest against Drew University at 7:30 pm.

Dr. Greene, who coached for 12 seasons from 1949-61, returns to the Juniata campus as the only coach to record over 100 wins on College Hill. His career stands at 103-131. Greene-coached teams had winning marks in five consecutive seasons from 1953-59, including a then school-record 15-9 finish in 1953-54.

"Doc" was a part-time member of the Juniata physical education department from 1948-60. A full-time practicing dentist in the Huntingdon area for many years, he has retired and still resides on Warrior Ridge. He remains an avid golfer.

Roger "The Dodger" Galo, Juniata '79, will return to Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center nearly 10 years to the night he poured in a school-record 50 points during the Tribes' 111-110 double-overtime win over King's. Galo, who teamed with his "Twistin' Twin" Bob Musser for a record 976 points during the 1978-79 season, hit the half-century mark on February 3, 1979.

Galo holds numerous Juniata scoring records, including points (582), points per game (27.7), 40-point games (3), field goals made (243) and free throw percentage (.865) in a season, all set during his senior year, 1978-1979. His single-game records, along with total points, include field goals made (21), free throws made (20) and field goals attempted (22).

He is the career record-holder for 40-plus point games (3) and field goals made (733), and is tied with total career-point leader Jake Handzelek in free throw percentage (.779). Galo, with 1,692 career points, trails only Handzelek (1,950) on the Juniata scoring chart.

"Last year's Juniata alumni basketball gathering was a huge success. Jake Handzelek was the guest of honor, and many other players from the '40's, '50's, '60's, '70's and '80's returned. We are looking forward to another fun-filled memory-filled day this year as well," said current Juniata head coach Dan Helm.

"We are pleased to able to honor a player like Roger Galo and coach like Dr. Greene this year," said Helm. "Our current players are looking forward to meeting many of the people who have been in the program over the years."

ACADEMIC SUPPORT WORKSHOP

Dr. Jay Buchanan will be conducting a three part academic support workshop beginning Feb. 14, 1989. The sessions will be 45 minutes in length and deal with basic ways to improve your approach to studying. The sessions are set for G221 beginning at 3:30 pm. If you have any questions, stop by the Counseling Center and talk with either Dr. Buchanan or Shirley Powell. The number is extension 353 or 350.

February 14 Time Management
February 16 Creating and sustaining an effective study environment
February 21 Stress management techniques, test anxiety and relaxation techniques

Remember, the sessions are intended for ALL Juniata students and not just for those experiencing academic difficulties.

Women win two out of three

The Women's basketball team has won 2 out of its last three games starting with a 71-67 victory over Gettysburg last week. Sherry DeAgostino and Pam Wyrick both chipped in 22 for the tribe while Stephanie Haines added 9 points. Juniata trailed at the half 36-30 and trailed by as many as nine points with 12:20 remaining in the game. The Indians outscored the bullets 13-2 over the next five minutes and never looked back.

The lone loss of the week was suffered at the hands of Elizabethtown 85-53. The first place lady Jays turned out to be too much for the younger Juniata squad. JC only managed to hit 37% of its shots from the floor and 56% from the foul line. Leading the way for the tribe was DeAgostino who had 24 points.

The Indians used a balanced scoring attack to defeat King's 62-59 despite only shooting 34% from the floor. DeAgostino had 20 while teammates Heidi McCarthy added 13 and Pam Wyrick 12 for the Indians. The tribe nailed 18 foul shots, nailing home the victory and pushing the team's record to 5-11.

The women played at York yesterday and host Wilkes this Saturday at 2:00.

Vol. XXXIX No. 17 | Juniata College • Huntingdon, Pa 16652 | February 16, 1989

Last week Juniata College was honored with a visit by Yolanda King. She delivered a message of non-violence and hope for a peaceful reversal of our nation's current priorities. See related story.

King breathes life into father's dream

By Alex M. Jones

Yolanda King, the daughter of the great Martin Luther King, Jr., visited the Juniata campus last Tuesday to deliver a message of non-violence and hope for a peaceful reversal of our nation's current priorities; taking care of our poor and homeless and funding education before increasing defense spending.

Using the poetry of Langston Hughes and quoting great black leaders such as Malcolm X and her father, King, several times won applause from the predominantly white crowd which filled Oller Hall to capacity.

King said that by non-violence, she "did not mean smiling and saying 'hi' when you're angry inside." "Organize against that civil evil,"said King.

Rumors which flew across the campus before King's arrival of a Ku Klux Klan protest proved unfounded. The campus was quiet for the duration of King's stay.

"Put your dollars where your heart is," pleaded King. "When a country spends more than ten times as much to kill and destroy life than to deucate their young, then that country is toying with destruction."

King said that she likes the tone of the Bush administration. "We have to hold him to his promise of a kinder, more gentle nation," she said. "I am pleased that he is reaching out and cutting across the spectrum of leadership," noted King. "I think he will surprise a lot of people."

The thrust of King's message described the work of the Martin Luther King, Jr. Foundation, which works to develop programs that instill the theory of non-violence. "By the turn of the century," pledges King, "there will be an army of non-violent soldiers, soldiers who will utilize non-violence as a way of life."

"We as black poeple, as humanity, have not remembered the promised land," lamented King as she described her father's famous dream, the quest of the beloved community of harmony, as "only that: a dream." "We must continue to create constructive means to fix these ills in society."

In an afternoon discussion which included both King and college president Dr. Robert Neff, King discussed the decrease in black college enrollment figures. Although King, in her evening speech, said that she "did not mean to indict the college" for its small minority population, in the afternoon, Neff said that those small numbers were an indictment of the college.

In the college's defense, Neff cited figures which showed that Pennsylvania was 47th in the nation

Volleyball meets with success

"Give me one moment in time/ When I'm more than I thought I could be/When all of my dreams are a heartbeat away/And the answers are all up to me."

These lines are part of the popular song, "One Moment in Time" and were sung by Sue Gilver at the opening ceremonies of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics Volleyball Tournament held at Juniata College February 10,11, and 12.

This event was unique because it is the only state level tournament which is completely supervised by students. The management team, comprised of Juniata students, was responsible for organizing and implementing the entire program with the Juniata faculty and staff advising them.

A total of 27 groups from all over Pennsylvania participated in the event. These teams were broken down into seven divisions according to competence. On Saturday each team played the teams in its division twice. Then on Sunday, the teams were seeded and then played

Students urged to apply for internships

The student intern program at Juniata seeks to provide students with practical work experience in their field of interest through hands-on experience in a related job. Internships are available to students in any department, and the Internship Office has a wide variety of information on internship openings in fields such as science, medicine, economics, business communications, and social sciences, to name but a few.

Professor Bill Duey, in addition to his teaching duties, is serving as Director of Internships for the spring semester. Mike Ford (Cloister R.D.) has been hired as his assistant, replacing previous director, Marianne Ciarimboli, who left last month to take a new job in the Pittsburgh area. The Internship Office is located in Good Hall, Room 420, and is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

While many internships are done in the summertime, they may be done during the academic year as well. Furthermore, the arrangement of an internship can vary with each student: it can be non-credit, (but noted on your transcript), or for-credit, (from 3-12 credits); full-time or part-time; volunteer or fully paid. Frequently, an internship is an excellent experience for a student who needs to confirm their interest in a particular field, get on-the-job experience in their field of study, or even get a foot in the door with a prospective employer.

Any interested students are encouraged to stop in and see Professor Duey or Mike Ford in the Internship office. Furthermore, all students who have applied or plan to apply for internships for this coming summer are reminded that they must stop in the Internship Office within the next week to update their files.

In the future, the Intership Office will be publishing information on available internships in "The Juniatian". Currently, internships are advertised by professors in related classes and are posted on the bulletin board in Room 420. The Internship Office also maintains files and reference materials for student use. In the future, be sure to look in "The Juniatian" for the latest information on internship oppurtunities.

Beethoven challenges JC Choir

On April 29 & 30 the Juniata College Choral Union will join the Altoona Symphony and the Allegheny Chorale for two performances of Beethoven"s Ninth (choral) Symphony.

Rehearsals for the Choral Union will be held on Monday evenings at 7:00 pm in Ellis Hall, beginning February 13.

All persons interested in performing this great masterpiece are cordially invited to attend rehearsals. No audition is necessary and music will be provided. For more information please contact Dr. Joseph Figg at 643-4310 extention 471.

Editorial

I am sitting here waiting for a volleyball game to begin; 30 minutes to kill and I did not bring any work with me. Now I will be that much further behind next week. Midterms are coming up and what am I doing-nothing.

I take time away from my fretting, though, to really watch the Special Olympians warm up for their game. Four teams are mixed together just hitting the ball around. It does not matter that in a few minutes they will be competing with each other, going for the gold. These special people are living for this moment; the one that they can enjoy.

As a student volunteer, I can learn a lot about life by watching all of the Special Olympians compete. Compete-I question whether this is really the proper word to use here. These people are not competing against each other, but helping each other overcome an obstacle, the obstacle of a handicap. No foul words are exchanged if someone makes a mistake. Instead, a pat on the back and a word of encouragement is given. Each team cheers not only for themselves, but the others as well.

Cheering on a competitor, now there is a new one to a student such as myself. I can not remember the last time I congratulated the curve breaker in my class. I only bemoan the fact that he got a higher grade than I did and ruined the curve that I was counting on. He can not even freely exalt in his victory because the rest of the class will scoff at him and tell him not to brag.

After watching the players for a short time, I get the feeling that we live too much for the future. Everything that we do now determines how well we will do when we graduate. But what speceal moments are we missing today becsuse we are projecting to tomorrow? So many events occur in one day which many of us miss because we look past them to tomorrow. These events seem trivial because they are such small things.

Take it from one who knows, though, that tomorrow is too late to look back to today. I recently lost my sister in a car accident. Watching these special people living in the present moment has brought back a rush of memories. The little things that my sister and I did together which seemed so trivial are now what I cherish the most. I think of the many times that I was getting ready for tomorrow that I was too busy to spend time with her. I now chide myself for these moments. I can not recall the events from the past, but I can pay more attention to the "trivial" events of today.

The work I have to do will get done, I am sure. I still live most of my life for the future, some things never change, but I now take time to look around. Remember not to take the small things in life too lightly because it may catch up to you sooner or later. The next time the curve breaker does a good job, give him a pat on the back; even the best need encouragement to go on. Go for the gold, but do not miss the golden oppurtunities in the interim.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

On February 7, 1989 I attended the lecture by Yolanda King. I found it both meaningful and motivational. I would like to extend my sincere thanks to the Joint Lecture Committee for allowing Juniata College and the community the opportunity to witness such a moving lecture.

We can all be a part of Yolanda King's dream by becoming involved in our community and on our campus. The Juniata College campus itself has a variety of organizations ranging from the Women's Action Committee, to the Social Services Club, the Council of International Affairs and many more that can be found in the Juniata College Handbook.

Let's take action and make a difference on our campus and in our community. Sincere thanks again to the Joint Lecture Committee for bringing Yolanda King to Juniata. She has truly brought motivation to myself and Juniata College.

Sincerely,
Dawn VanGrin

Dear Editor,

I'm not one to complain about anything, so it's going to seem odd that when I do choose to comlain, the subject happens to be, of all things, field trips. Let me just say that I am not at all opposed to college field trips, but I am upset with the way some professors handle their attendance policies concerning these outings.

First of all, classes such HOBO, Survey of Western Art, and Professional Writing, just to name a few, either demand or imply that class attendance is an absolute necessity. I have no problem with that because a lot of information is covered in one class, but it bothers me to find out that while a student is on a mandatory field trip, his/her attendance grade is being docked in another class. Case in point: Jim, a friend of mine who lives in East, has three mandatory field trips scheduled for this semester: 2 in HOBO and one for the Russian G.E. Unfortunately for him, all three trips require him to miss Dr. Rosell's Survey of Western Art class. Dr. Rosell's attendance policy allows for two absences, excused or unexcused, before points are taken off. In this case, Jim's grade is being reduced even though he is technically not "blowing off" class in the sense that we know it.

What are we as students to do if we're thrown into this damned if you do and damned if you don't situation? Should you attend the required lecture, or go on the required trip? Obviously, something has to go, and that decision may not be easy. I'm sure that most students would agree with me when I say I'm not real thrilled about having my grade docked over something I have absolutely no control over.

Another case in point: On March 27-28, I must go on a required trip to Washington, D.C. for a Survey of Western Art. On March 28, Mr. Levin, a reporter for CNN will be visiting the campus to speak with my Professional Writing class. That Thursday, March 30, I must write a news story on Levin's speech. This situation leaves me in quite a quandry; Do I skip the trip and go to the lecture, or vice versa? Qujite honestly, since my major is English/Public Relations I would rather stay here.

My point is this: I hope that this will help to bring to light a potentially serious problem that the faculty may not be aware of. Most professors are more than willing to let their students broaden their horizons, but others adhere strictly to their attendance policy, which may create serious problems for students. We want to get out into the world, but we don't want our grades to suffer because of it.

Sincerely.
Shelley Houseman

The conservative movement has dominated American politics for the past decade. The term "conservative" has been used in connection with political views for over one hundred years, but the modern American conservative movement began in the mid-1960's. Its first visible results were the back-to-back elections of Richard Nixon as President in 1968 and in 1972. The Watergate scandal was a black mark on the record of the conservative movement, but it quickly rebounded. The past three Presidential elections have all resulted in landslide victories for a conservative candidate.

Throughout history, colleges and universities have been hotbeds of political dissent. All over the world, students have been advocates of change, radical revolutionaries who have fought against the established order. But all of that has changed in the United States today. American college students are becoming increasingly conservative. They carry with them the promise that the conservative movement will continue to flourish in years to come.

What is it that makes the students of today so conservative? I am sure that it is not an ideological position. The conservative movement has clung to certain principles over the past decade: paranoid militarism, apathy towards equal rights for women and minorities, destruction of the environment, lack of concern for education, etc. I refuse to believe that the new American generation is so morally depraved that it wants to perpetuate these ideals.

But the students of today are nevertheless proud to proclaim "We are conservatives!" Why is this? There is only one possible answer remaining. They support a conservative economic system in which they can grow rich. Twenty years ago, the thing that most college students wanted to do was help humankind. They wanted to make a difference, to help free the world of the scourge of poverty. Today, the thing that most college students want to do is increase their earning power. Money. They want a big house, two nice cars, and a member-

It's the week of All Class Night, otherwise known as "Hell Week," so do not expect anything more than the basist level of humor from this column. It'll help get you in the mood for Friday night. So, in keeping with the general trend of my creative writing skills to sluff off as the work piles up, in emulation of the great tradition started by David Letterman himself, in cognizance with the saying that brevity is the essence of all wit, and without further ado, here are "The Top 10 Lies Told At Juniata College," (in no special order.)

Wouldn't you like to enjoy something you spend close to one third of your life doing? Unfortunately, millions of people in our society don't and, as a result, suffer various kinds of sleep disorders.

Insomnia can range from what is called transient insomnia, which is short in duration and usually lasts no more than a week to ten days, to short-term insomnia (up to months at a time.)

Insomnia can be psychologically induced or physiologically induced. For pourposes of our discussion, let's conentrate on the former category. Tests, papers, oral presentations, and the constant pressure of meeting deadlines can contribute to an inability to get a good night's sleep. In other words, stress producing activities lead to stress producing thought patterns which can then lead to insomnia.

Dr. Wallace Mendelson, director of sleep-wake study programs at SUNY-Stony Brook, says if we learn to deal with these stress producing thoughts, insomnia will often disappear.

How much sleep is enough? Researchers suggest a range from four hours to ten hours, with most people needing somewhere in the neighborhood of seven to eight hours per night.

Here are a few suggestions for dealing with the less serious kinds of insomnia (transient or short term). Seek professional help from sleep disorder specialists if your problems persist.

Don't become overly stimulated just before bedtime. You can't expect to fall off to sleep after having exercised vigorously. The same is true after studying, that is, you should allow yourself time to relax and come down from the high that sometimes accompanies intensive studying.

Establish a regular sleep routine. Go to bed at the same time and get up at about the same time.

Avoid naps during the day. Realizing full well that this suggestion boarders on insanity and is a definite violation of long-standing college student norm, napping can appreciably interfere with a good night's rest. If you are having trouble sleeping at night, it may be because of you napping habits during the day.

If you are not asleep within thirty to forty-five minutes, do something about it. Get out of bed until you feel sleepy enough to go back to bed and fall asleep. We want to associate being in bed with sleeping and not sleeplessness.

There are a few more suggestions to help combat insomnia and we'll do that next time. Be good to yourself and sleep well.

ship in the local country club. They want to earn six figures. Money. No one gives a damn about anything but money or anyone but themselves.

Don't Americans realize how rich they are already? Even many lower-class Americans have a house. They have hot and cold running water and indoor plumbing. They can afford to eat three meals every day. These things are considered bare necessities in the United States. But in dozens of countries and to millions and millions of people around the world. These "bare necessities" would be luxures! There are no available jobs for many of them. Those lucky enough to have work must often toil for 12 or 14 hours, 6 or 7 days a week for the equivalent of a few American dollars. Paid vacation is unheard of. Basic medical care is unavailable. Poverty is a way of life.

I come from a lower-middle class family; Juniata College is expensive for me. I will graduate with a considerable debt, and my areas of career interest are, unfortunately, not very well paying. But whenever I start to worry or when I feel like complaining, I try to think of the millions who would give anything for just a chance to be as "rich" as I am. But they don't have a chance. The only thing they can ever be is poor. Poorer than we Americans can ever know.

I look around and I listen. I hear hundreds of my fellow students complaining about not having enough money. I hear myself saying the same things, and I am ashamed. I hear people describing how they plan to get on top, without a thought as to whom they hurt along the way. It makes me want to cry. Is this what we have come to? None of us are innocent. Is greed the only legacy left by the conservative movement?

Spring Break: Are you welcomed?

(CPS)--Spring break hasn't been what it used to be during the last three years. There have been terrible riots in Palm Springs and South Padre Island, a string of deaths in Daytona Beach and a rigid crackdown on public drinking in Fort Lauderdale.

Yet, though the size of the welcome mat varies, most of the traditional spring break getaway spots say they want students back. Sort of.

Fort Lauderdale, Fla., for example, which once reigned as the national magnet for those looking for sun, sex and fun during break, in 1987 passed a series of strict new laws to punish students who sleep on the beach, look drunk in public and are crammed too many to a hotel room.

Palm Springs, Calif.--still smarting from a 1986 riot in which hundreds of revelers ran wild, vandalized property, threw rocks, ripped clothes off women and briefly took over the center of town-- met students last spring with a show of force, empowering police to ticket and arrest vacationers for public drunkenness and rowdy behavior on the spot instead of letting officers use their discretion to issue warnings.

The crackdowns have helped drive students elsewhere.

Only about 20,000 students are expected in Fort Lauderdale this spring, city recreation superintendent Steve Person says. In 1985, about 350,000 students descended on the resort, snarling traffic, littering beaches and outraging local residents.

Person added the city is making no special attempt to invite students this year, either.

Something like 10,000-15,000 revelers are expected in Palm Springs, city promotions director Pam LiCalsi said.

"Palm Springs is way out," complained Chris Schneer, a national sales repersentative for College Tours, the largest spring break operator for Mexico. "It's too strict, there are no crowds and way too many police officers."

The Florida resorts have become so rigid that "it's really slowed down, and you can't even do what you want," added Schneer, who of course gets paid to lure students to Mexico instead.

Nevertheless, some U.S. resorts still want students to come.

Some 230 miles up the Atlantic coast from Lauderdale, Daytona Beach gladly has tried to fill the void, spending about $40,000 on marketing gimmicks to draw students.

About 300,000-400,000 should show up, predicts Georgia Carter of the city's tourist bureau, each spending an average of $325 each wewk they stay.

Civic paydays like that normally help city officials tolerate a lot of the insulting public behaviors, vandalism, violence and even deaths that seem to arise whenever huge hordes of students descend on a town.

Although Daytona Beach has had its share of petty crime and major tragedy--since 1984, seven people have died and 34 others have been injured in falls from hotel and motel balconies--city officials are resolutely upbeat.

"Everybody's getting better" at behaving civilly, Carter maintains.

"Many citizens are curious to see what goes on," she adds. "Others just avoid it."

At Sokuth Padre Island off the Gulf coast of Texas, the hosts are similarly tolerant. "Most of us enjoy (the student invasion)," says Breeze Carlyle of the island's tourist bureau, "although we do look forward to our survivors' party in April."

The beach town, which last spring endured a violent riot, has "been real careful and (we) have been able to learn from (other resorts') mistakes," Carlyle said.

Traffic jams remain the island's biggest spring break problem, though Carlyle said the inconvenience is minor in light of the boom 300,000 students visitors are to the local economy. To keep the students happy, five new nightclubs have opened.

Mexico also is openly inviting students.

Schneer estimates 40,000-50,000 students will visit Mazatlan, about 1,000 will go to Puerto Vallarta and that Cancun, the normally expensive east coast resort that is trying to recover from a 1988 hurricane by promoting itself as a spring break town for the first time, will draw about 3,000 collegians.

Other vacation spot promoters are staging events to keep visitors lawfully entertained.

Many resort officials are organizing intramural sports tourneys, concerts and contests to shift the emphasis away from drinking during the five-week break period, which different schools start anywhere from late February through early April.

Under those circumstances, Lauderdale, for one, would still love to host students.

"If a student is looking for a nice place for a vacation, with good restaurants, bars, and stores, then Fort Lauderdale is a good choice," Person offered.

"We're continuing to encourage students to come to Palm Springs and have a good time," LiCalsi noted. "But we're also encouraging them to follow the rules."

Figuring some students may find that requirement too onerous, College Tour's Schneer points out Mexico is "a lot cheaper and the drinking age is only 18."

Wayfarer's Journal

By Liesl Owens, Joseph Wiedemer, and Russell Miller from Leeds University, England

Once upon a time, three JC students, Liesl, Russ, and Joe, ventured across the ocean to the University of Leeds in England. When they arrived in Great Britain, they found themselves surrounded by what was supposed to be 'the same language;' "Me mate got pissed and was squidged by a coach." On their first evening in this foreign isle, they were treated to fish and chips and a pint of bitter at the local pub. The following morning, they discovered that the land was populated by double decker coaches, red phone boxes that could be engaged, chip butty's/or 35p, and red tape as thick as their homeland's.

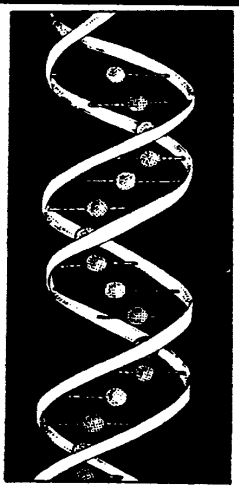
After a few weeks, they finally began to understand the customs and language of this land. They found the University to be different from their own-they were treated maturely, given independence, and given academic freedom. Despite 3 papers, 24 hours of lab and lecture, and 3 tutorials a week, (none of which counted toward their final grade), they still found time to venture into the countryside, and participate in hall and university activities. (Alas, the hiking club was not one.) In other words, they worked their bums off.

When winter break rolled around, they ventured out into the world. Russ stayed in the United Kingdom, slept under a rhododendrum in Plymouth, committed a misdemeanor in Tintagel, and danced around a goat in Edinburgh. Liesl and Joe travelled together (What did you expect?) to Paris, Barcelona (Sarah?), Geneva, and Germany, but it was in Paris that they found the building that goes "like this..."

Their adventures continue with 5 months to go, but our tale must now end. However, remember three things: "what" is a four letter word; learn to eat properly; and never have too many pre-conceptions.

Authors Note: To understand the above, why not experience it yourself.

FORMULAS FOR THOUGHT



Dr. William E. Russey, professor of chemistry at Juniata College, in conjunction with two German chemists, has written a book entitled "The Art of Scientific Writing." The book was released by VCH Publishing Group in Weinheim, Germany and New York.

Dr. Russey's book, based in part on a text originally in German, has been acclaimed as one of the most comprehensive books in its field. His work on the book has led to a part-time position with VCH as an editorial consultant and translator.

According to Dr. Russey, the book is about "types of publications that can be written." It contains sections on reports, theses, papers, and books. The book is useful for students as well as professionals.

His other recent publications include the translation of Jakobi and Lohr's "Detergents and Textile Washing: Principles and Practice," and numerous articles translated for Ullmann's Encyclopedia of Industrial Chemistry, fifth edition.

Dr. Russey intends to go on leave from the college next year to begin work on a second edition.

A Juniata faculty member since 1966, Dr. Russey received his B.S. Degree magna cum laude from Kalamazoo College in 1961. From 1961 to 1962 he studied as a Fulbright Scholar at the University of Bonn, Germany. He received his M.A. degree (1964) and his Ph.D. (1966) from Harvard University.

A member of Phi Beta Kappa, he has been a Woodrow Wilson Fellow, a National Science Foundation Fellow, and a National Institutes of Health Pre-Doctoral Fellow. At Juniata, he has served as chairman of the chemistry department, director of the International Exchange Programs, and chairman of the Foreign Studies Committee.

Dr. Russey has in the past served as chairman of the board of administration of Huntingdon's Stone Church of the Brethren, and as a trustee for J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital. He has also served on the Huntingdon Borough Planning Commission and is currently a member of the Nittany Valley Symphony.

He is a member of numerous professional organizations, including the American Chemical Society, the Royal Society of Chemistry, and the Fulbright Alumni Association.

the teams in their divisions once.<p

In each division gold, silver, and bronze medals were given out for first, second, and third place team member's. Fourth and fifth place teams received ribbons. Essentially everyone was a winner.

Funds were raised for Special Olympics through various organizations. Valentine's Day balloons were sold; this brought in approximately $100. There was a raffle of a basketball donated by the basketball team, Hard Knox, a book by Chuck Knox, and two free passes to Lake Raystown Resort. The raffle raised approximately $115. Approximately $230 was collected going door-to-door, local businesses donated aproximately $100, and McDonald's donated food. Juniata College also helped with funds, as well as did many other businesses, organizations, and indiviuals. The band Fiveplay will be playing at a dance in the future at Huntingdon High School; money from this dance will go to Special Olympics.

There were approximately 270 volunteers from the college and the Huntingdon area helping with the event. The Huntingdon High School Key Club sent many volunteers. All of the volunteers put in patience and time, helping to make this year's tournament a success.

POWER 92:

The transition begins

Power 92 is currently undergoing the transitional period between management boards. The 1989-90 staff are learning their various positions and responsibilities to make this year the most successful ever. Past successes included the "92 days to graduation" contest in which t-shirts and coupons were given away. In the future, look for Power 92 bumper stickers to be throughout the college. As winter hopefullly comes to an end soon, stay tuned to Power 92 as we'll be bringing you the hottest spring hits.

"Blithe Spirit" cast learns to speak English

By Edith Ellen Reuwer

"It's like doing calisthenics with your mouth," Patti Stepp (understudy for Madame Arcati) said when commenting on the British dialect work being undertaken by the cast of Blithe Spirit. The challenge of dialect work involves sound changes but more importantly, a relearning of speech muscle positions. "It's incredibly difficult," Shana Herb (Ruth) said of the dialect training.

The action of the script revolves around the characters of Ruth and Charales Condomine and their dilemma when confronted by the ghost of Charles' late wife, Elvira. "Charles married Ruth because she was Elvira's exact opposite," Joann Rishel (Elvira) commented. Rush Blady (Charles) states that Elvira was "a mistake of youth." Rush continued "Charles has less depth than I do." Shana Herb (Ruth) believes that Charles married Ruth because, "He was looking for his mother."

Elvira cannot be seen or heard by people, other than Charles, for the majority of the play. I asked Joann how she felt about that aspect of her role. "I get to make the most incredible cuts on Ruth and she can't hear me. So, you just get this incredible ego boost."

It will surely give the whole cast an ego boost to perform the play as well. Blithe Spirit is staged differently than last semester's play. It will be performed with the seats on the stage. This seating arrangement is called half round. Most of the cast is very nervous and excited about this difference. And of course, they all hope you come to see the play.

Musicians to give performance

The Juniata College music department promises an entertaining evening on Monday, February 20 when bassoonist Douglas Bakenhus will be featured performer in a faculty recital at Oller Hall. The public is invited to attend the 8:15 pm performance. There will be no admission charge.

Bakenhus, the visiting director of bands at Juniata, has played professionally with symphony orchestras in Austin, Laredo and San Antonio, Texas, as well as Adrian, Flint and Saginaw, Michigan.

A native of Houston, Texas, Bakenhus received a B.M. Music Ed degree and performance certificate from the University of Texas at Austin in 1983. Bakenhus then received a full scholarship for doctoral studies at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

Bakenhus will be assisted in the facutly recital by Dan Armstrong on percussion, Daryl Durran on the bassoon, and Juniata faculty members Diane Gold (flute) and Katsuko Ochiai (piano). The performance will include works by Motzart, H. Villa-Lobos, Chihara, de Boismortier and Boutry.

The program will feature two portions separated by a short intermission.

Off-campus housing applications available

Applications will be available at the Residential Life/Housing Office to the members of the class of 1990 and Class of 1991 beginning Monday, February 20 through Friday, February 24, for permission to reside off-campus for the 1989-90 academic year. Completed applications will be accepted beginning Monday, February 27, through Wednesday, March 1. The members of the Class of 1990 will be given priority. Applying does not ensure that permission to reside off-campus will be granted. Additional information regarding how decisions are made will be provided when you obtain your application. Please note that applications will be available and accepted only on the dates listed above.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact the Residential Life/Housing Office at 213 Founders Hall or call extension 260.

Lecture aimed at giving information and support

By Miss Crickett J. Julius

On January 25, the Student Health Advisory Committee sponsored an eating disorders lecture with four different speakers, two of whom were Juniata College students -- Jody Holman and myself, Crickett Julius. We spoke about our personal struggles with the disorders anorexia nervosa and bulimia. The audience seemed to respond with concern and as I peered out into the crowd, I saw a number of worried faces, teary eyes and couldn't seem to forget the seriousness of eating disorders. It is incredible how rampant the spread of eating disorders, especially bulimia, has become. Believe it or not, it is spreading on this campus quickly, also.

Because I've personally experienced anorexia nervosa, I understand how self-destructive an eating disorder can be and how hard it is to acknowledge the fact that one has a problem. I think that is why so many girls have come to Jody and I for support. They trust us because, we can not only sympathize with them, we can relate to them.

Some individuals have expressed interest in organizing an eating disorders support group. Jody Holman and I, in cooperation with the Student Health Advisory Committee and Nurse Jane Brown,plan to form the support group. We are both willing to listen and share our opinions with any individuals who need an outlet, but do not know where to turn. Nurse Brown, Jody and I pledge the utmost confidence and respect.

We haven't yet chosen a date to meet, but the Student Health Advisory Committee will post the time, place, and date soon. We encourage anyone who feels the need to express their concerns to our group. If anybody has questions, please feel free to contact me at Box 83.

TRIVIA WITH TRISH

By Trish Kazmerski

February 14, Valentine"s Day, has become an enigma of sorts to me. My attitude of this holiday depends on what my relationship status is like at the time. If I'm happily dating someone, I love this holiday. If I've just been dumped, the only person shooting arrows is me, poison tipped ones, at the nearest male specimen. But even on those off years, Cupid manages to get me, and he gets me good. Believe me, the only thing worse than not having a special someone to celebrate Valentine's Day with, is sitting around fantasizing about some stranger coming to your door, knocking, presenting you with a bouquet of wild flowers, a box of chocolate truffles and peaches, as a waiter pours champagne into two long stemmed glasses, while a quartet of violinists play "Strangers in the Night<R." Then as you come back to reality and glance at the clock which is flashing 11:59 and sigh in relief that in one minute, this horrid day is over, you hear a knock at the door. Your heart stops, you enter into the Land of Oz, you check yourself in the mirror, dab on some Obsession, spray some Binotine in your mouth, put some lipstick on, straighten the room quickly, take a deep breath, fling open the door, strike a Mae West pose with a Marilyn Monroe pout; and look dreamily into the eyes of your neighbor. She looks at you and says,"Can you turn down the radio and quit making so much noise, I have a test tomorrow and need some sleep." She then adds, "Who were you expecting, Rudolf Valentino?"

Well, where did this theory of a bare-bottomed archman with wings come from anyway. Well that's what I'm here to tell you.

St. Valentine's Day celebrates the 2-3rd century martyrs of this name. It is also believed to be a continuation of the Roman festival of "Lupercalia". (I don't know what the festival of "Lupercalia" actually is, but I'll save that for another column.) Getting back to the martyrs, one of them is described as a priest of Rome and another as Bishop of Interanena, now Terni. They suffered martyrdom during the second half of the 3rd century and were buried in the Flanunian Way. What was known as the Flaminian Gate to the ancient Romans, became the Gate of St. Valentine from a Church in the immediate neighborhood dedicated to the saint. It is now known as the Gate of the People. This does tell you something, because I didn't know this, and I went to Catholic school for 13 years. I thought St. Valentine was just a promiscuous guy who did something good along the way.

How Valentine's Day became associated with lovers, candies, and cards has many theories. One is based on the belief that during the Middle Ages, the birds began to mate on February 14. Chaucer in his "Parliament of Foules" refers to it this way: "For this was St. Valentine's Day, when every foul come there to choose his mate." Various English literature also references it to the day of lovers because of the birds.

There is still another view for those who suggest that there is no connection between mating birds and a saint. They believe the association grew out of the similarity between the Norman word "galantin" meaning a lover of women, and the name of the saint. They think that Galantin's Day with the initial "G", frequently pronounced as "V", led to the confusion of today. So it was screwed up long before I started this campaign.

Well getting back to the festival of "Lupercalia," which I sort of accidentally on purpose ran into, the festival is a Roman feast which occurs in February. The names of young men and women were put in a box from which they were drawn by chance, an arrangement under which a young man became the protector and escort of a young woman for the next year. (Anyone have a one way ticket to Rome?) It is said that the Christian clergy objected to this custom and substituted the names of saints for the names of the young people. The young person was then supposed to emulate the saint he or she picked for the next 12 months. (I revoke the statement about the plane ticket.) Because this drawing took place on February 14th, the day of the saint, the association of Valentine was established.

The children exchanged gifts throughout the year, and this explains why we give Valentine cards, candy, and other tokens of our affection to one another.

Before I write off, I have one more modern theory about the origination of Valentine's Day. It was graciously given to me by a cynical, but beloved businessman, my father. He believes that one day the founders of FTD florists, Hallmark, Whitman's candy, and a group of air-headed women gathered and announced that February 14th would be a day when men bought gifts for their favorite ladies, and if they didn't, were sentenced to a year of guilt and a need to make penance at every waking moment in order not to be reminded about it again by their beloved. He believes it to be a money making scam for businessmen and just another sugar coated form of torture designed for men to be administered by women. That's what he believes, but everyone has their right to opinion. By the way dad, thanks for the flowers and candy, but I hate raisins and coconut. I like nuts dad, get it right next time! Mom's the one who likes raisins.

JC's World Affairs lectures continue

Dr. Robert Legvold, director of the Harriman Institute for Soviet Studies at Columbia University in New York, will speak at Juniata College on Tuesday, February 21 as part of Juniata's World Affairs Lecture Series. Dr. Legvold will present his lecture, entitled "Gorbachev: New Opportunity or Old Rhetoric," at 8:15 pm in Alumni Hall, Brumbaugh Science Center.

There is no admission charge for the lecture, and the public is encouraged to attend.

Dr. Legvold is widely regarded as one of the foremost scholars in America of U.S./Soviet relations. Along with the public lecture, Dr. Legvold will be on the Juniata campus throughout the day on February 21, speaking to classes and talking with students and faculty.

Dr. Legvold's visit is part of the World Affairs Lecture Series sponsored by the Baker Peace Institute and the Juniata Peace and Conflict Studies Committee. It is funded by a grant from the American Academy for Arts and Sciences under their Kistiakowsky Program for visiting scholars.

Tilden presents program

Juniata College's vice president for educational planning and student services Dr. Arnold J. Tilden, Jr., presented a program on student retention at the winter conference of the Tufts-EDUCOM Data Sharing Consortium last month.

The winter conference was held in New Orleans for the group's 200 representatives of member institutions. Among the prestigious colleges and universities joining Juniata in the consortium were Franklin & Marshall, Dickinson College, Bucknell University, Lafayette College, and Allegheny College.

The primary purpose of the group is to share data on the many aspects of college administration such as admissions practices, retention, funding raising, financial aid, and faculty salaries.

According to Dr. Tilden the data sharing provides the member institutions with points of comparison for various means of analysis. "Through the examination of the baselines which we establish through data sharing network," he said, "we can assess the progress we are making toward our institutional goals and objectives."

"In addition," Dr. Tilden noted, "the data provided often prompt changes in programs, which occurred recently with some of the financial strategies being utilized by several of the member insitutions. Data analysis is essential to our strategic planning process."

Dr. Tilden's presentation on student retention, which is the percentage of students returning each year to continue work toward graduation, came about as a result of the marked improvement in Juniata's figures over the last several years. During that time the college implemented strategies including the increase in work-study earning potential for students as they progress through their college programs. The college also revised portions of the advising system, several career planning programs, and basic skills programs. Current projections show a retention rate of over 95% from spring to fall semesters, up more than 10 points since 1984.

Dr. Tilden received his doctoral degree in educational psychology from Temple University in 1976. He received his master degree in edcuational psychology from St. Lawrence University in 1970, where he also earned his bachelors degree in 1969.

Prior to joining the Juniata administration in 1977 as dean of students, Dr. Tilden served as associate dean of students at Albright College. He became vice president for student services at Juniata in 1983 and assumed his current position as vice president of educational planning and student services in 1986.

Dr. Tilden formerly served as a member of the Board of Education for the Huntingdon Area School District and is currently a member of the Huntingdon Country Club.

Too scared to open "Pandora's Box"? Let Trish do it for you!

"Trivia with Trish" is a new article presented by the Juniatian and Trish Kazmerski, feature editor of the Juniatian. If there is anything you would like to know about, but never had the time to find out, drop the question to Trish, Box 329 or the Juniatian, Box 667.

Roger Galo (top), Juniata's second leading scorer, and Dr. Arnold Green (bottom), the Indian's winningest coach were honored during half-time Alumni festivities of Saturday's varsity game.

Volleyball Coach, Player honored

Juniata College senior Jackie Rebert of Spring Grove and Tribe volleyball coach Larry Bock both received national recognition in the latest edition of Volleyball Monthly magazine.

Rebert, a 5'7 outside hitter, was one of six players selected to the Tiger/ASICS NCAA Division II All-America team while Bock was chosen as "Coach of the Year" in NCAA Division III. Rebert was also a member of the Russell Athletic/AVCA (American Volleyball Coaches Association) All-America second-team, announced in November.

"The Tiger/ASICS All-America team is probably the most prestigious," said Bock about Rebert's honor. "Only six players are chosen as opposed to 12 selected by the AVCA coaches committee. Votes are by objective third parties not coaches, so it is definitely tougher to make. Jackie was the only player from the East named in any division."

Rebert was a member of the AVCA All-East team the past two seasons and was selected All-Middle Atlantic Conference for three consecutive years. She capped her career by setting several school hitting record and becoming "one of the U.S.A.'s premier ouside hitters," according to Bock.

Bock, the only women's volleyball coach ever at Juniata, led the Tribe through its 12th volleyball season last fall. The Indians finished the 1988 season with a 43-7 record and took third place for the second time in the NCAA Divison III National Tournament. It was Juniata's third consecutive trip to the national final four and its sixth in the past eight years.

"Any award is a compliment to the team as a whole," said Bock about his "coach of the year" recognition. "It speaks highly for the entire team, Susan Benusa (his assistant coach) and for the school. I am very proud of what we've accomplished this season."

Bock, who has a career record of 424-84 on College Hill, was the Collegiate Volleyball Coaches Association NCAA Divsion III "Coach of the Year" in 1984 and CVCA Eastern Regional "Coach of the Year" in 1986.

Women's hoop squad showing promise

As the season comes to a close the young Juniata women's basketball team has shown signs of a team which will win many more games in the future. Early last week the Indians knocked off York College 56-51 in a non-conference game to improve its record to 6-11. Sherry DeAgostino continued her record scoring pace by leading all scores with 23 points. Teammate Dana Patete also chipped 18 points and dealt out 11 assists to help lead the Tribe to victory.

After trailing by three at the half the Indians got red hot and shot 52% from the floor to outlast the Lady Spartans. Clutch free throw shooting near the games end allowed Juniata to hold onto the victory.

The week's second game didn't turn out the same for the Indians as they lost a 28-24 halftime lead by being outscored 32-18 in half number two by Wilkes. For the second time in month the Tribe just fell short in knocking off the Cononels, one of the better teams in the conference. Pam Wyrick paced the Tribe with a game high 18 point effort, while Colleen McGinn added 10 points and eight rebounds.

The difference was in free throw shooting where Wilkes out scored the Indians by 17 points. Juniata only managed to make two of their five attempts from the charity stripe while Wilkes nailed 19 of 26 attempts.

The women played at Dickinson yesterday and close out the season this Saturday afternoon when they host Franklin and Marshall at 2:00.

Indian grapplers put forth "outstanding effort"

The Juniata wrestling team dropped two matches this past weekend to Muhlenberg (30-18) and Scranton (36-8). The Muhlenberg match went down to the final bout with the Tribe trailing 24-18. Coach Berrier stated that his team had outstanding efforts all afternoon with several JC grapplers losing one and two point decisions to the MAC's top wrestlers.

Glen Smith, Terry Weaverling and Lee Abramovitz all split their matches while John Telenko recorded a win and a tie. Telanko was leading his match 9-7 when he was taken down in the last seconds, forcing the draw. Meanwhile, at 177, Steve Manderbach wrestled two tough matches, losing 4-2 and 5-3 to two MAC place winners of a year ago.

This Saturday, the team finishes out the regular season, hosting a four team tournament. Johns Hopkins, Baptist Bible, and Philadelphia Bible will all travel to College Hill. The matches start at 1:00. Come cheer the team on.

in percentage of high school seniors that go on to study in college. He also stated that Huntingdon and Bedford counties are among the least educated in the state, hence our local draw of students is not overwhelming, let alone our local draw of minority students.

"We must work harder to heighten our own expectations,"said Neff. "It would be irresponsible for the college to ingore this problem." King said her father "would be pleased to see so many black students go to college, but disappointed that enrollment is falling as it is and homelessness...is just assanine."

King defended both affirmative action programs and abortion Tuesday, as she asked for the American people to "use common sense.""" "Although I am not an advocate of abortion, having been brought up with a strong church background, I realize that it is a necessity, both among poor America and poor black America," said King.

The crowd responded to King's speech with questions about how to increase minority enrollment at Juniata and how to better educate the population about minorities. King answered these questions by praising the Peace and Conflict Studies program and suggesting that minority or ethnic studies be required for at least one semester in every college program.

King received two lengthy standing ovations from a receptive crowd and greeted students after her brief question and answer period.

Cottle receives yet another national honor

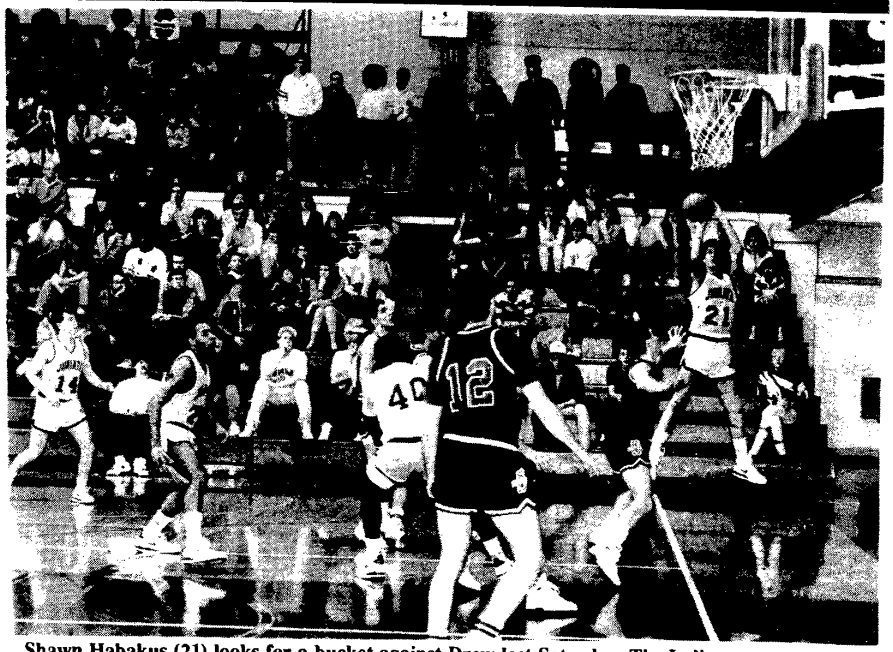
Juniata College senior split end Mike Cottle of Everett (Bedford High School) has received yet another postseason honor. Cottle, the top career pass catcher in Juniata history, was named to the second team offense of the 1988 Pizza Hut Division III All America Football Team, last week.

Last month, Cottle was a first team selection on Don Hansen's 1988 NCAA Division III All-America Team. Cottle was a preseason All-American in 1988 and was All-Middle Atlantic Conference for a second consecutive season.

Cottle holds several school records, including 212 career receptions and 36 touchdown catches. Last fall, he caught 67 passes for 799 yards and 10 scores. Cottle finished fourth in the nation this season with a 6.7 receptions per game average. He also caught 10-plus passes in three consecutive games and was one of only four players in the national top 28 to make 10 or more TD grabs this year.

Only one MAC player, defensive lineman Dave Duffy of Widener, was named to the first team. Cottle was joined on the second team by Widener's Al Azzari and Lycoming's Rick Bealer, both in the defensive secondary. Cottle was the only conference player on the first three offensive units.

The Pizza Hut Divison III All America Football Team was selected by a panel of sports information directors from across the nation. Hofstra punter Tom Salamone, Wagner running back Terry Underwood and Central College defensive tackle Mike Stumberg were the leading vote getters, according to Wally Johnson, sports information director at St. Lawrence University.



Shawn Habakus (21) looks for a bucket against Drew last Saturday. The Indians can guarantee a playoff spot with a win this Saturday.

Men's hoop team controls own destiny for playoffs

The Men's basketball team had a change of fate this past week despite the fact that they lost another game on the road. After dropping a non-conference game to York College 73-67 the Indians were graced with good news from the Middle Atlantic Conference office. Lycoming College lost to Albright at Reading, therefore, opening the playoff door for the Tribe. Juniata controlled its own destiny with two league games remaining.

At York, the Tribe blew a two point halftime lead and a nine point lead which they carried midway into the second half. A horrible shooting effort by the Indians in the second half, 21 turnovers and a respectable 52% shooting effort by the Spartans made for the difference. A 30 point game high performance by York's Mike Donahue stopped the Indians in their tracks and left the Juniata players wondering what they needed to do to win on the road.

With the good news in hand the Indians would face their first of its last two conference tests. A capacity crowd at the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center saw the Tribe hold onto a 69-65 victory over a stubborn Drew University team. Once again the Indians just fell short of shooting 50% from the floor and for the second game in a row did not make a three-point shot.

The Tribe suffered a major set back before the game even started as starting center Bob Dombrowski went down with a severly sprained ankle in the previous day's practice. Dombrowski could be out the remainder of the regular season depending on the Indians playoff position. Jay Nicholson, Joe DeBlase and Les Squair picked up the slack for Juniata however, scoring 15, 15 and 14 respectively.

Squair also ripped down a game high 11 rebounds and connected on seven out of his nine shots from the field. Nicholson also nailed six out of his eight shots. Drew was paced by John Milano's 22 points and fell to 6-16 on the season. The Tribe moves its overall record to 15-8 and its conference record to 11-4.

The Tribe travelled to Western Maryland this past Tuesday for a non-league game and rounds out the regular season at home this Saturday when it hosts a tough Wilkes team at 7:30 on senior night. The two teams which will represent the Northeast section have been decided but neither King's or Scranton has clinched the first place position. The Indians have beaten King's twice and Scranton once so far this season. Susquehanna has clinched one playoff spot in the Northwest and split with Juniata in the regular season.

A win Saturday by the Tribe puts Juniata in the playoffs. A loss by Lycoming in its next two games will also allow the Tribe to advance to the playoffs. Lycoming played last night at Delaware Valley and plays Saturday at Elizabethtown.

As usual: The Greek Speaks

By George Zanic

Whenever I write something about football coaches I get myself into trouble, so I'll try to concentrate on baseball and basketball this week.

The major league baseball players are getting a little out of hand with their contract demands. Maybe the owners should go on strike.

Dickie Thon was recently awarded a contract that will pay him $500,000 this year. There are probably five hitters better than Thon. Five hitters on Juniata's team that is.

It was nice to see the gym packed on Saturday, I hope the Juniata students can fill the gym this Saturday without the help of the Special Olympics.

The Seniors, who have been the focal point of Dan Helm's rebuilding program, will play in what could prove to be the last home game on Saturday. They deserve a packed house.

If Juniata wins Saturday, the school should sponsor a bus to take the home court advantage up to Scranton, along with their airhorns and Sigler's mouth.

The Buffalo Bills have inquired about Juniata's Junior linebacker Steve Campbell. Just remember Soup, you'll need an agent.

Some Predictions:

Final Four-Georgetown, Indiana, Missouri, and Syracuse.

Juniata 84 Wilkes 74.

The Calgary Flames will win the Stanley Cup.

Don't count the Celtics out when it comes to playoff time.

The baseball team's record after our southern trip: 3 wins, 1 loss, and the weather will win 5.

Indian swimmers doing well in first varsity season

By Kathy Collins

The Juniata College swim team travelled to Washington, Pa. last Thursday to take on the Presidents of Washington and Jefferson College. The women earned their first win of the season, while the men fell short of another victory.

The women captured first place finishes in all but three events and in those three events they earned a hard fought second place from the Presidents. Leaving W&J with first place honors Mary Strapple - 1000 freestyle and 200 breastroke; Pam Ezdebski- 200 freestyle, 500 freestyle, and freestyle relay; Kris Newman- 50 freestyle and freestyle relay; Kathy Collins- 100 freestyle; Wendy Winter- 200 backstroke and freestyle relay; and Lisa Playford- freestyle relay. Betsy Derr gave Juniata a second place finish in the 100 butterfly while Sue Humphrey came away with three second place finishes. One teaming up with Winter, Collins and Playford in the medley relay.

For the men it was a meet of hard fought races. They came home with second place finishes in all but one race. Steve Grater earned the one Juniata win with a victory in the 200 breastroke. Getting second place finishes for the Indians; Steve Grater, Geoff Dixon, Brad Newman, Shawn Stafford, Grant Hunter,and Dave Maxwell.

On Saturday, the swim team travels to Lebanon Valley College for their last meet of the season. Then the following week members of the team will be representing Juniata at the M.A.C. championship meet at the University of Scranton.

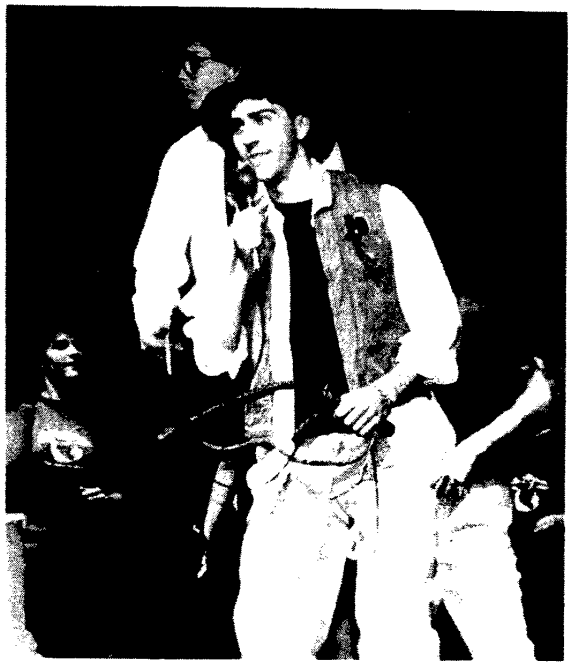
ACN 1989!!!

Trish Kazmerski

Well,in the Scriptures, they say the last shall be first. So it shall be with the critique of All Class Night 1989.

The Sophomore"s had potential. As Freshmen last year, they were told they were the best Frosh performance in a long time. They were the incoming favorites for ACN-"89. What happened, nobody knows, but some matters can be identified. Technical problems were evident from the beginning on the set of"Good Morning Juniata". Sound and lighting problems were tricky and did cause some problems, such as the delay in the opening. The opening cast member really nuked her lines, or you could say"nuched" her lines amidst the cheers of rowdy hall monitors and friends. The flu hampered the acting ability of star Mike Kauffman, who shined brightly none-the-less. Kate Bradley also did a good job opposite Kauffman. The dancing was good and the music upbeat, while the cast members did a great job carrying the play to completion amidst destroyed props. The Sophomores did keep the play clean and in good humor, and ended with a slide presentation of JC life to the music of "What a Wonderful World". Another reason for the unsuccessful comedy was that the Sophomores were last, and their vast majority of jokes were already beaten to death by the Juniors, Freshmen, and Seniors. The Sophomores were disqualified from the competition because of a faux-pas by a cast member. He lit a cigarette on stage. Smoking in Oller is prohibited. The only thing that can be said is better luck next year Sophomores!!



Next we come to the Seniors. They spoofed "Back to the Future", I think. The only parallel to the movie was the automobile being used as the time machine. The performances of Mike Barnett and Brian Roselli were good and did add some humor to the play, but Dave Fouse's portrayal of Randy Deike was questionable in authenticity. I'm not blaming Dave. I feel it was the script's characterization which caused problems. The opening seemed to take forever to end and brought back memories of the Presidential Debates. It was boring! The Seniors were also much more crude than past years. Rumors heard through the grapevine say that this is where the Seniors lost some points. Dan Lazowick's portrayal of the comedian "Dice" was superb, but I don't think many people over the age of 25 know "Dice's" humor. It did affect some audience members who wanted to know why little boy blue. Well Seniors this was your last chance to win ACN. Just remember:"It's not if you win or lose, but how you played the game!"

Now comes the hardest part of the article. Congratulations to the Freshmen who placed second in the competition. They did a remarkable job, but remember, these guys do have the highest SAT scores of all 4 classes. If they didn't do well, the people in admissions would have to eat a lot of crow. Rob Biter and Sue Givler led the cast in the quest for the "Lost Keg". They were supported by a terrific and talented cast. Special consideration should be given to Sandy Moran for her portrayal of a Blue-army command sergeant. It looked like she was born for the part. Well Freshmen, you made a lot of upperclassmen eat their words. You should be proud.

Last, but not least,(drum role please, but I don't know how to do a drum role) congratulations to the Class of 1990 for winning All Class Night 1989. This marks the second consecutive year the Class of 1990 has one ACN. Either this class has an abundance of talent or an abundance of money to dish out in bribes, I'm guessing talent. The script was well written and followed the movie "Dirty Dancing" without deriviation. Peggy Dixon was wonderful as "Baby", as well has the talented Bob Herzog portraying "Dr.Jay". The pair had excellent stage presence which enhanced the entire play. Rick Russell should also be recognized as adding a colorful display of humor, wit, and talent as Scotty Neff. Again Juniors, congratulations, but can you make it three in a row?

ACN also provided more entertainment than the class plays. Nick Spadea performed his hit "The Sandwich Song" which will probably become a multi-million dollar hit. The Masters of Ceremony, Mike Ford and Chris Noyes have been offered prime time talk shows, both opposite Johnny Carson. The band "Five Play" provided music during the tense moments of ballot counting. For their rendition of "Louie, Louie" they have been offered a contract to make commercial renditions of top hit songs. Finally, the judges for the evening: Dale Wampler, Bill Duey, Nancy Van Kuren, and Dawn Williams, have been selected to appear as judges on the TV show"The Gong Show" sometime next fall.

Yes, all ended quite pleasantly for the Juniata Community on the night of ACN. Believe it or not, these are what memories are made of, no matter how bad they are. Goodnight Juniata!!!

Editorial

Persons are the gifts of God to me. They are already wrapped, some beautifully and others less attractively. Some have been mishandled in the mail; others come "Special Delivery." Some are loosely wrapped; others very tightly enclosed.

But the wrapping is not the gift, and this is an important realization. It is so easy to make a mistake in this regard, to judge the contents by the cover.

Sometimes the gift is opened very easily; sometimes the help of others is needed. Maybe it is because they are afraid. Maybe they have been hurt before and don't want to be hurt again. It could be that they were once opened and then discarded. They may now feel more like "things."

I am a person; like everyone else, I too am a gift. God filled me with a goodness that is only mine. And yet, sometimes, I am afraid to look inside my wrapping. Maybe I am afraid I would be disappointed. Maybe I don't trust my own contents. Or it may be that I have never really accepted the gift that I am.

Every meeting and sharing of persons is an exchange of gifts. My gift is me; your gift is you. We are gifts to each other.

Anonymous

I don't know who wrote this, but after reading it I realized just how quick we all are to judge other people by appearance or by any other superficial means. Maybe we do this becuase we are uncomfortable with who we are. Everyone deserves a chance, even yourself.

So next time you find yourself judging someone by some superficial means, stop yourself and get to know that person first. Exchange gifts!

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

In her letter to the editor (February 16 issue), Shelley Houseman raised an issue that has occasionally surfaced - conflict between required class attendance and required field trips, lectures, etc.

When confronted with such a conflict, most students would have approached me directly and found me most accommodating. In the future, for Shelly and others, I suggest this approach.

Sincerely,
Dr. Karen Rosell

Dear Editor,

Once in a great while an incredible thing happens. The dream of a few becomes the dream of many. On Feb. 17, 1989, it happened once again. The entire freshmen class united to capture second place in the Annual All-Class Night competition.

This achievement was special for many reasons. It created a sense of accomplishment, feelings of self-worth and an acceptance for the new-comers. But most importantly, it represented the unification of a class. Behind each flat scenery, piece of property and every one-liner was a group of individuals, each of whom offered his or her time and talents to create "the best Freshmen show yet." In this way every member of our class deserved the loudest applause of appreciation Friday night.

Appreciation also is deserved by Professor Marty Lammon who supported us throughout the days of preparation. He gave us the confidence and encouragement needed to unify us into the "Freshmen Raiders of the Lost Keg."

Congratulations are extended to the Junior class who also supported us and exemplified the school spirit that collegiate activities were designed to create. We'll see you back in Oller next year!

And in reference to last week's Muddy Run column, it looks like the 4th biggest lie will have to be modified just a little. Second place freshmen are definitely winners in my dictionary.

Proudly,
The Class of 1992

From the Pen of ...

By John Deppen

Yolanda King has come and gone. Big deal. She was well-received - she even got a standing ovation from the normally docile masses in Oller Hall. So what. Did her presentation really make a difference, or was "A Dream Deferred" just a tasty little morsel, digested and excreted by the campus community?

Ms. King made a real difference to me, For weeks previous to her talk I had been feeling tired, unfocused and frustrated. "A Dream Deferred" recharged my batteries. It motivated me to inquire about the Scholars-Internship Program of the Martin Luther King, Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change. It also inspired me to seek membership in the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People). With her own special light in her eyes and her father's spirit alive in her heart, Yolanda King touched my soul and made me feel proud and excited about the course I have chosen for my life.

I am just one person, however. There were hundreds of people in Oller Hall that night. They were willing to "get off their apathy," to use her words, to give Ms. King a standing ovation. How many of them left Oller Hall honestly resolved to make a change, even a small change, in their lives? How many of them were inspired to plan a new course of action? How many left with an increased sense of obligation to serve the human family?

Perhaps only time will tell if Yolanda King made a real difference in the life of Juniata College. I know that, as I stood on stage beside her, I saw the well of apathy begin to crack. After three years of writing and speaking against indifference in our privileged "never-never land," I saw a shaft of light penetrate the darkness. For one brief shining moment I caught a glimpse of the mountaintop - and realized that we have a long way to go before we get to the promised land.

"Monday Morning Hangover!" Not the kind induced by excessive alcohol intake the night before, but that which is associated with the practice of sleeping in on Sunday mornings. Sleep researchers at the Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit suggest that "Sunday-night insomnia" may well be the result when we try to catch up on our sleep on Sunday mornings.

The point of all this , as we mentioned last week, is the importance of maintaining a regular sleep schedule. Granted, most Juniata College students do not suffer from Monday morning hangover, but it is something to think about and look into for some as a possible remedy to persistent insomnia.

Consider the following as possible aids to better, more restful sleep. As we mentioned last week, exercise just before going to bed is unwise. However, exercise performed in the morning or afternoon can enhance sleep. Studies show that regular exercisers sleep better than sedentary people.

Sleeping pills and other sleep-inducing medications are to be avoided. Prescription medication may be fine for a short while, but continued use is not advisable. In fact, some experts suggest prolonged use of sleeping pills produces the opposite effect, that is, they can contribute to insomnia.

Drinking before bedtime can interfere with the sleep cycle. One drink or so may help us relax and feel drowsy, but when the effect wears off, we may awaken and be unable to fall back to sleep.

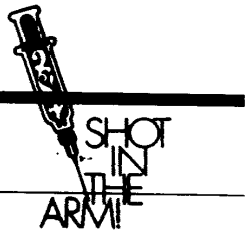
Think about sleep as a positive activity. Of the millions of people who experience sleep disorders, many create a negative self-fulfilling prophecy associated with sleeping.

Maybe you should consider sleeping less. Your quality of sleep may improve by eliminating a half hour or so in the morning and by going to bed a half hour or so later in the evening.

Finally, it is my opinion that many people's sleep behavior is a reflection of their waking behavior. Examine how you deal with your stressors, make some appropriate changes in the way you cope and, in most cases, your sleep will improve and be a bit more restful. As pointed out last week, seek professional help if your sleeping patterns do not improve as a result of some of these suggestions.

Take care of yourself, think good thoughts, and sleep.

Wellness Tips



By Lisa Purcel-Kreamer

"According to our test, you are pregnant." Imagine yourself or your partner, having to hear these words from a nurse or doctor. Your heart sinks. Now what are you going to do?!

First, let's keep in mind this is just an imaginaray scenario. Hopefully neither you nor any of your friends have had to find out that you are pregnant even though you didn't want to be!

Let's wind back the imaginary time clock even further. Why would you even get in a situation like this? After all, you're an intelligent person. You're in college, working towards your future.

The simple fact is that many unplanned pregnancies occur every year on college campuses across the country. Intelligence is worthless without the use of common sense. You always thought it was a scare tactic when your health teacher in high school told you that you risk pregnancy every time you have unprotected intercourse. Well, it may have been used as a scare tactic, but it is also very true.

There is no "safe time of the month", or special protection your first time having intercourse. Withdrawal is not effective birth control, nor is douching.

Luck doesn't last forever. Unfortunately, too many college-age couples find out too late.

Keep your future going forward. Plan. communicate honestly with your partner. If you are sexually active, be sure you and your partner are using effective birth control, and are using it correctly every time. It's simple, and it makes sense.

Consult with the campus health center, your doctor, or medical professionals at places like Women's Health Services. We're all here to help you.

Join the alfarata staff

By Kirk Altmenshofer

For over seventy-five years, The Alfarata, the Juniata College Yearbook, has been capturing the special "Juniata life-style." Through the years, The Alfarata has captured into memory many changes in the Juniata Community. The time has come for a change on The Alfarata staff as well. The Alfarata is actively searching for applicants for the positions of Editor-in-Chief and Financial Director for the 1989-90 academic year. Applicants must be hard-working and devoted students. These positions are challenging positions which allow students to exhibit their creative and academic talents. The Editor-in-Chief and the financial Director do not work alone. They work with competent, willing staff-members, and work together as well, to achieve new standards in yearbook production. The entire production of The Alfarata is done with computer aided design. In additon, many business department functions are also done on computer. The software used is part of the Taylor Publishing Company's "Vision Software Series."

The responsibilities of the Editor-in-Chief include supervision of all production functions. There are three major facets of production which the Editor-in-Chief supervises. These departments are layout, copy. and photography. In addition, the Editor-in-Chief is in regular direct contact with the publishing representative. The Editor-in-Chief works closely with the Faculty Adviser and Student Production Adviser on a regular basis.

The responsibilities of the financial director include supervision of all business department functions. These functions include the activities of the sales staff as well as the advertising staff. In addition, the Financial Director serves in the capacity of public relations coordinator, dealing with students, facutly and staff, and alumni. As with the Editor-in-Chief, the Financial Director works closely with the Faculty Adviser and Sudent Financial Adviser throughout the year.

Applications will be availabe at the information desk beginning on Thursday, February 23. Deadline to submit applications is Sunday, March 13th. Return applications to The Alfarata, Box 918. Individual interviews will be scheduled with applicants to discuss complete job descriptions. Application is restricted to only those who will be of sophomore or junior status for the 1989-90 academic year.

The Juniata College Student

The College Governance Committee of Student Government, after much painstaking work, has rewritten the Student Government Constitution. In order for it to take effect, we need students to read it and sign a petition. The new Constitution is presented here in "The Juniatian" so that students can take a look at it. Petitions will be available for students' signatures at lunch and dinner on February 28th. If anyone has any suggestions or comments regarding the Constitution, please contact Student Government at Box 995 or the members of the Governance Committee: Angela Orwig, Jim McManagle, and John Deppen.

Juniata College Student Government

Preamble

Constitution

We, the students of Juniata College, in keeping with the democratic tradition of the United States of America and in the spirit of the motto of our institution, Veritas Liberat, do hereby establish and ordain the Juniata College Student Government Costitution. This constitution shall provide the basis for student representative government and shall provide the precepts by which that government shall conduct.

Play adding new demensions in actors' formative years

By Edith Ellen Reuwer

"There is no getting sick!" Nadine Vreeland (Assistant Stage Manager/Set Properties Coordinator) informed me. Nadine continued, "I am responsible for hunting down furniture, and basically helping Christine Krudwig, (Production Stage manager)." Once Nadine and her crew find the appropriate furniture pieces, she must make sure that loan agreement contracts are signed.

Rob Biter and Christie Brown (Assistant Directors) both find themselves in the unusual position of being in the cast, as Dr. Bradman and understudy for Elvira, repectively. I asked Rob if this made his job a little more difficult. "Christie and I will exchange. When she can't direct I will be, and vice versa. The part of Doctor Bradman is a minor role." The job of Assistant Director has provided Christie with a chance to get to know all the actors, and has provided insight into the rehearsal process. She is now even considering pursuing theatre as a major.

Mark Moyer (Lighting Coordinator) and his crew are responsible for hanging and focusing all lighting instruments as well as running and dimmer board during performances. "We only have ten days," Mark explained, when referring to the time for all crew work, and lighting rehearsals for"Blithe Spirit".

Damian Gessner (Sound Coordinator) and his crew must make sure that the sound effects (doorbells, telephones, music) are appropriate for the production. This crew has the added responsibility of teaching several of the cast members how to use various sound devices as most of the sound effects will be live rather than recorded.

A very important aspect of "Blithe Spirit" will be the hand properties. Becky Schreckengost (Properties Coordinator) and her crew have the unenviable task of collectiong and organizing all the properties which are handled by the actors and which decorate the set. Becky and her crew will not only collect items but must be present at each technical rehearsal and performance to see that the proper items are in the proper place, (this includes cooking food for several scenes).

Jef Buehler (Publicity Coordinator) explains, "It's all in delegating responsibility." The publicity crew is in charge of all media releases as well as poster and program design and front of the house management during performances.

The person responsible for coordinating all of the crews is Christine Krudwig, the Production Stage Manager. Christine compiles the production calender, chairs production meetings, and is the liaison between Ryan Chadwick and all production crews. "Christine is the 'glue' that holds the collage together," Ryan Chadwick commented. Christine's job really begins when "Blithe Spirit" goes into final rehearsals and performance when she assumes control of backstage reponsibilities.

Performance dates are March 29-31, and April 1, 5-8. there is still time top get involved with one of the many crews. If you are interested, contact any of the crew coordinators, or Ms. Ryan Chadwick.

ALL CLASS NIGHT 1989!

Jay Nicholson receives all-district honors!

Juniata College sophomore Jay Nicholson, a 6'5 power forward from Braddock (Churchill High School), is a member of the 1988-89 National Association of Basketball Coaches (NABC) Middle Atlantic Division III All-Star Team, announced Saturday.

Nicholson, a second team selection, was the only sophomore named to either the first or second teams. He was the second leading vote-getter among the four forwards cited.

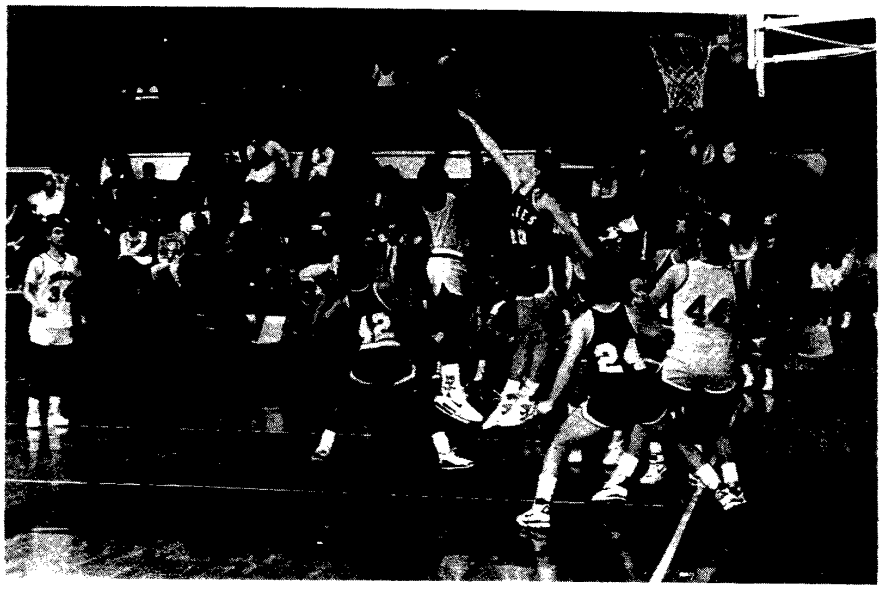
"We are pleased that Jay has received this recognition from the coaches of our region," said Juniata Coach Dan Helm. " Jay has been a key contributor for us the past two years and has laid the foundation for an outstanding individual career. Of course, we also feel that Jay's selection to the All-District team speaks highly of our program in general."

Juniata concluded the regular season with a 16-9 overall record and 12-4 mark in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest. The Indians, the second place team in the MAC Northwest, travel to Scranton on Thursday for the semi-finals of the Northern Division playoffs.

Nicholson heads into post-season play as Juniata's leading scorer and rebounder, averaging 14.0 points and 8.0 rebounds a game. He is shooting a school-record 60 percent from the field, ranking in the national top 20 in field goal percentage for much of the season.

Nicholson becomes the second Juniata player in the past two seasons to receive NABC All-District honors. Last year, senior guard Wayne Paul earned first-team laurels.

The complete 1988-89 All-District squad: First team: Brad Markey (F&M), Phil Hoeker (F&M), Joe Butts (Delaware Valley), Tim Keehan (Washington, MD) and Neil From (Moravian); Second team: Jeff Jones (Lycoming), Brian Townes (Gettysburg), Marko Gittens (Cabrini), Jay Nicholson (Juniata), Jim Hepfer (Elizabethtown) and Brian Lynch (Western Maryland).



Senior Les Squair shoots in traffic as Bob Dombrowski (44), Joe DeBlase (34) and yes STANDING in the background Coach Helm look on.

Swim team sends seven to conference swim meet

By Kathy Collins and Mary Strapple

Starting tonight at 7:30 and over the next two days members of the first Juniata swim team are at the University of Scranton. Five women and two men represent our school's delegation to the Middle Atlantic championship swim meet. We are hoping for some awesome performances and to show our Juniata spirit to the other schools in the MAC.

Back in August there was a fear that there would be no swim team. Now in February we are showing our true potential and desire to be the best. The attitude, will, and enthusiasm that we possess as a team is strong and will carry us far.

Last year at this time swimming was only a team sport and this year we are sending seven to MACs. Under the direction of coach Scott Preston the team has developed into one to reckon with in the league.

The following swimmers have qualified for MACs:

Steve Grater, a senior from Ephrata High School, who is competing in the 100 butterfly, 100 freestyle, and 100 breaststroke.

Sue Humphrey, a sophomore from Highlands High School, who is competing in the 100 and 200 breastroke along with the 800 freestyle relay.

Mary Strapple, a sophomore from Gateway High School, who is competing in the 100 and 200 breastroke, freestyle events, along with the 400 and 800 freestyle relays.

Kathy Collins, a freshman from Sayre High School, who is competing in the 50 and 100 freestyle along with both the 400 and 800 freestyle relays.

Pam Ezdebski, a freshman from Danville High School, who is competing in the 100 and the 500 or the 1650 freestyle, along with both the 400 and 800 freestyle relays.

Brad Newman, a freshman from Carlisle High School, who is competing in the 100 and 200 backstroke and the 200 freestyle.

Kris Newman, a freshman from Cherry Hill High School (NJ), who is competing in the 500 and 100 freestyle, the 100 backstroke, along with the 400 freestyle relay.

Coach Preston feels that "Steve has a good chance at a title in the breastroke and will place well in the fly and free. Brad will place in the backstroke events with good, strong swims he will final in both. Mary and Kris are the women's best chances of making it into the finals. I'm looking for good swims from Pam, Sue, and Kathy and time drops from all seven. It should be noted that Geoff Dixon Qualified for MACs in five events but due to previous plans can not travel to Scranton with us."

Next year we are looking forward to having an even stronger team and to getting the recognition that we deserve. We are hoping to have the school's support behind us. We really appreciate all the public that backed us through the season. It's a privilege for us to receive your support.

Watch out MACs here comes the Juniata Swim Team!

Womens' hoopers perform well

Entering the 1988-89 season head coach Kathi Quinn realized that a lack of experience was going to be the only thing to slow down her Indian team. Unfortunately, it turned out that that lack of experience did hurt the women's team, a team which at times proved that a very promising future lies ahead.

With four sophomores, six freshmen and a possible double-figure score sideline with a season long illness the Tribe finished 6-14 and lost four games by four points or less. The Indians wrapped up the season dropping a close contest to Dickinson 65-61 before losing to nationally ranked Franklin and Marshall 77-56. Coach Quinn has a lot of talent and more experience to build a solid program on next season.

Freshmen sensation Sherry DeAgostino led the Tribe in scoring 15 out of 20 times averaging 17.8 points per game and well on track to becoming the school's leading scorer three years from now. Sophomore, Pam Wyrick was second in scoring with a 10.3 average and led the team in rebounding, ripping down 9.7 boards a game. Steph Haines chipped 7.2 points a game and Colleen McGinn added 6.7 ppg and was second in rebounding with 5.7 caroms a contest.

Dana Patete also chipped in 6.4 points a game while dishing out a Juniata season high 128 assists for a 7.1 average. Heidi McCarthy chipped in 4.2 ppg and 4.4 rpg while Gretta Gross notched 3.2 ppg and 4.9 rpg. Cathy Packer, Kelly Woodworth and Jennifer Kraft also contributed to the Indian cause off the bench.

With everyone back next year Coach Quinn can only be optimistic. The team proved that they have the talent to play with all teams in the league and should be a force to be reckoned with next season.

I was all set to write an article about Barry Switzer and the improprieties of the Oklahoma football program, but I think everyone is sick of hearing about Switzer. It can all be summed up in one sentence- Switzer is a crook, and Oklahoma University is responisible for letting him obtain more power than anyone else in the state of Oklahoma, including the Governor.

Nick Spadea says the Phillies will finish ahead of the Pirates this season; this is the same Nick Spadea who bet someone $20 that the Penguins wouldn't make the playoffs. Hey Nick, stick to sandwiches.

Scranton University's mens basketball team is a perennial powerhouse, playing on their home court in front of a packed house. Juniata has lost five road games in a row and has never won in Scranton. Don't bet against the Indians. Juniata 81, Scranton 78.

Look for Bruno to go the distance with Tyson this week in Las Vegas.

The Oklahoma football players stay in their own exclusive dorm, off campus, and near the football stadium. Asked why he didn't attend classes in his first semester of Oklahoma, Marcus Dupree, a former tailback replied, "No one showed me where the campus was." I'm not joking.

Wayne Gretzky claims the NHL should put a ban on fighting. Wayne is the greatest hockey player of all time, but he wouldn't make a very good commissioner. Fighting is what attracts a lot of Americans to the game of hockey. Once they see there is more to the game than violence, these fans fell in love with the game. Fighting then does serve a purpose, it attracts fans who otherwise would have never been introduced to the game.

The NHL needs to get back to a TV contract with ESPN so the whole country can see the NHL in action.

The Juniata College baseball team will win the MAC title if Kevin Neff can keep his ERA lower than his GPA.

Now that it is less than a month from tourney time in NCAA basketball, let's take a look at the bests and worsts of the 1988-89 season.

"Best Coach"- Bobby Knight- he'd win with Dick Vitale playing point guard for him.

"Worst Coach"- Paul Evans, Pitt- His team has shown a great amount of talent beating five top 10 teams, but he has shown a lack of coaching in losses to Duquesne, Sienna and Boston College.

"Best Freshman"- Chris Jackson, LSU- 28.5 PPG.

"All American Team"- Guards- Jay Burson, Mookie Blaylock; Forwards- Danny Ferry, Pervis Ellison; Center- Stacy King

"Most Likely to Run Into the Bleachers"- Joe DeBlase, Juniata

"Best 12th Man in the Nation"- Frank Shue, Juniata

"Worst Team"- Loyola-Marymount; Their idea of defense is letting their opponent score so they can get the ball back.

Mens' basketball team wins big game at home - playoff bound!

The Juniata men's basketball team earned a spot in the MAC northern division playoffs when they defeated Wilkes College 90-86 this past Saturday. The last regular season home game of the 1988-89 year honored the four graduating seniors who play for Head coach Dan Helm.

All four seniors played extremely well in their final appearance before a capacity crowd at the Kennedy Sports + Recreation Center. Joe DeBlase scored a game high 32 points, including a five for eight effort from three point land. Les Squair tallied nine points and eight boards, while Mike Antenucci had six points and six caroms as Duane Dise dished out six assists.

Jay Nicholson added 20 points and four rejections while Shawn Habakus added to his career assists record dealing seven assists. The Tribe was hot, nailing 62% of their shots from the floor and 47% of their attempt from beyond the three-point stripe. The Indians out rebounded the Colonels 45-30. Juniata did commit 19 turnovers and only connected on 53% of their foul shots.

The Indians conclude the regular season at 16-9 and 12-4 in conference play. The new season is based on a do or die situation, with a loss ending the season. The first game of the new season is tonight at 8:30 at Scranton University in the first round of the Northern Division playoffs.

The other Northern Divison semifinal will feature Northeast runner-up King's (15-10, 10-6) at Northwest champion Susquehanna (16-8, 13-3). Susquehanna earns the right to host the Northern Division championship on Saturday with a victory on Thursday. However, a Susquehanna loss would give Juniata the home court with a win. Scranton would host a King's/Scranton final.

"We are very happy to get another opportunity at the MAC playoffs," said Juniata coach Dan Helm, whose team was eliminated in the opening game last winter by FDU-Madison, 63-61. However, that loss was later changed to a forfeit victory because the Jersey Devils used an ineligible player as their starting point guard.

"Playing Scranton at Scranton will be tough assignment," said Helm. " "Even thought we beat them at home (69-55) this season, we know they are a talented and playoff-tested team with an outstanding tradition. It is going to take a great effort on our part."

The Junaita victory over the Royals in January was only the third in their last 10 meetings. However, the Indians have won two of the last five. The Royals lead the overall series, 24-7, and last lost to the Tribe in Scranton 29 years ago, an 81-79 decision in 1959-60.

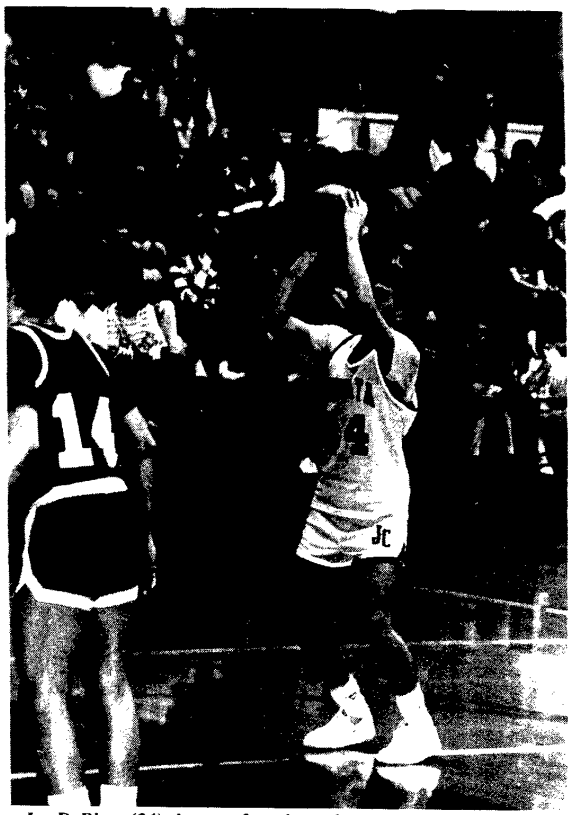
The Indians, who finsihed 11-1 at home this year with 10 straight wins to end the season, have lost five in a row on the road. Juniata was 3-8 on opponents' floors, winning at Carnegie Mellon, Messiah, and Albright.

"We struggled on the road especially late in the regular season, but we're looking at the playoffs as a brand new start," said Helm. "Getting into the playoffs last year was a great accomplishment. This year, we worked hard to get back and now want to accomplish more."

Juniata last won a MAC playoff game in 1968-69 when the Tribe upset top-seeded Wagner 89-88 before losing in the championship final to Scranton, 63-61. The Indians have made the MAC playoffs in consecutive seasons only once before when Juniata qualified in both 1968-69 and 1969-70.

Helm expects to start junior point guard Shawn Habakus of Mohnton (Governor Mifflin H.S.), senior shooting guard Joe DeBlase of Boswell (North Star), small forward Les Squair of Pittsburgh (Schenley), power forward Jay Nicholson of Braddock (Churchill) and center Bob Dombroski of Mountain Top (Bishop Hoban).

Juniata is 4-1 against the MAC Northern Divison playoffs field. The Tribe swept King's in two games this eason while the Indians and Susquehanna each won on their home floors.



Joe DeBlase (34) shoots a free throw in the Indian's game against Wilkes this past Friday night. DeBlase had a game high of 32 points during his Senior night game.

Swim teams earn their first wins!

By Kathy Collins and Mary Strapple

Last Saturday Juniata's swim team traveled to Lebanon Valley for their last swim meet of the season. The women won with a score of 86 to 69 and the men out swam Lebanon Valley in the last relay to win 88 to 79.

Leaving Lebnon with first place finishes:

Brad Newman-200 free, 100 backstroke, and free relay.

Steve Grater- 100IM, 50 fly, and 100 breaststroke.

Geooff Dixon- 100 free, and free relay.

Rich Gaitings and Grant Hunter- free relay.

Kris Newman- 50 free, 100 back, and free relay.

Mindy Winter- 50 fly.

Pam Ezdebski- 400 free (Her time qualified her for MACs).

Mary Strapple- 100 breast and free relay.

Sue Humphrey and Lisa Playford- free relay.

Coming in second for Juniata: the women's and men's medley relays, Geoff Dixon, Kathy Collins, Pam Ezdebski, Sue Humphrey, and the women's free relay of Collins, Winter, Betsy Derr, and Ezdebski.

Coach Scott Preston had the following to say about the meet: "Our MAC qualifiers were a bit tired and weren't quite as sharp as they should be next week. The rest of the team was at its best. Mindy, Betsy, and Lisa were all super in their final swims for the women this season. Grant, Shawn, Rich, Dave, and Geoff also swam very well for the men."

It's only nine days until the start of BASEBALL season. Good luck to the Indians on their southern trip!!

ANNOUNCEMENT

If Juniata College has the opportunity to host the Play-offs in Men's Basketball February 25, 1989, the Conference rule states that students must pay to get into the event. Rates will be $3.00 for Adults and $2.00 for Students. This is just to remind you ahead of time, that students must pay at MAC Championship Events.

Wrestlers finish season headed for mac meet

The Juniata College wrestling team travels to the University of Scranton this weekend for the 51st annual Middle Atlantic Comference Wrestling Championships. Veteran coach Bill Berrier expects to enter nine wrestlers in the competition, which begins at 9 a.m. on Friday and continues through Saturday.

The Indians, who finished 1-8 in dual meet competition this season, have three wrestlers with above .500 records heading into the tournament. Freshman Glenn Smith of Easton is 9-8 at 134 pounds. Senior John Swanson of Warren is 8-4 at 150, while 158-pounder John Telenko, a junior from Elizabethtown, is 7-4-1.

"Telenko is probably our hottest wrestler right now," said Berrier. "Swanson has also finished the season strong. Terry Weaverling and Steve Manderbach have been coming around as well."

Weaverling, a freshman from Huntingdon, is 7-8 at 167. A 177-pounder, Manderbach of Leesport (Schuylkill Valley H.S.) takes a 6-8 record into the tournament.

Freshman Joe Sohmer of Lock Haven (3-10) takes a three-bout winning streak at 118 into the weekend. Sophomore Jim Weaver of Johnstown (Richland H.S.) is 3-7 in the 142-pound weight class.

In the upper weights, senior Lee Abramovitz of Potstown (Owen J. Roberts H.S.) is 3-10 at 190 while freshman Scott Geary of bonner Springs, Kansas, has a 1-7 mark at heavyweight.

"We've shown improvement throughout the season," said Berrier. "I hope this will carry over into this weekend, when we'll be wrestling against some outstanding competition."

Lycoming is the defending team champion, winning its eighth title in 12 years last winter. Delaware Valley, ranked number one in the country for most of this year, is expected to push for its third MAC crown in five seasons.

Juniata, which has never won a MAC wrestling title, looks to improve upon last year's 18th place finish in the 19-team field.

Juniata students bleed for charity as Red Cross blood drive visits

Alex M. Jones

"You are such a coward"

Juniata College senior Cherie Byars was seemingly not in a position to speak to a reporter with such authority, as she looked up from the table where she lay. But she was.

Byars, like several other Juniata students last Thursday, donated blood in the American Red Cross Blood Drive which was held in the Ellis College Center ballroom.

"The blood drive visits the college three times during each academic year,"said Ruth Saupp, a local volunteer. "We try to reach a quota of 100 pints each time we come to the college," said Saupp, "and we usually reach our quota. We should have over 100 students today."

Roughly translated, that statistic means that 1 of eleven JC students gave blood last week. Saupp said that the students have traditionally given the blood drive strong support.

Janet McFarland, Juniata sophomore, donated her time instead of her blood. McFarland said "I would never do it. These people are all heroes to me. If my life depended on it, I would never, ever, ever donate blood."

Instead, McFarland, like other members of the Outreach Club, spent part of her afternoon working as a "walker." She helped blood donors make the trip from the blood tables, where they had just given a pint of blood, to the food table, where each donor was treated to donuts and orange juice or coffee.

The blood drive is run largely by volunteers, although the people who actually draw the blood from donors are paid by the American Red Cross.

Before giving blood, each donor is screened by the volunteer staff to check for fevers, illnesses, weak blood pressure and hemoglobin. "They ask some pretty personal questions,"said Juniata senior Patty Stepp, as she answered "No...no...definately not," to questions which dealt with sexually transmitted diseases, homosexuality and AIDS testing.

Stepp, a first time donor, was nervous before giving blood, but Red Cross worker Maryanne Pozar, of Seward twp., Pa., lent a soft bedside manner as she prepared Stepp's arm for the needle and neatly slid it into Stepp's vein.

Six minutes later, Stepp, with the help of a "walker", was making her way toward the food table, minus one pint of blood. The blood, said vounteer Cathy Roby, would "be marked for blood type and sent to area medical centers wherever they need blood."

The Huntingdon Chapter of the American Red Cross, which is based in Johnstown, Pa., runs blood drives in three area locations; Shaver's Creek, the Huntingdon boro building and the college, according to Roby. Roby said that donors must wait 56 days before they can give blood again, to give the donor's body time to regenerate the lost blood.

"It takes the body only two days to regenerate the liquid part of the blood," said Roby, "but the waiting period helps the body regenerate minerals like iron, so that the blood is healthy."

Roby called last week's blood drive a rewarding success, but added that there is always a need for more donors. As for this reporter, Cherie Byars may be right. Sorry Cherie, the needle still looks to big for me.

Juniata Concert Choir departs for spring tour

The Juniata College Concert Choir left the school by bus today to spend their spring break touring the south-eastern United States.

The choir will perform ten concerts within twelve days, including the "home" concert in Oller Hall on Monday, March 13, 1989, at 8:15 pm.

Roughly, forty persons will make the trip, including the choir, two faculty advisors, Dr. Joseph Figg, director, and Karen Eckenroth, vocal coach/accompanist, and a wise-cracking bus driver named Tim who joins the tour each year.

Hacky-sack, basketball and an infinite number of card games are annual choir tour favorites. Choir members also amuse themselves by voting their peers to prestigious titles such as; Bus Head king and queen, Most-likely-to-become-a-choir-couple and "who would you most like to be stranded on a desert island with?"

Of course, the choir takes its music very seriously. This year's tour will feature works by Giovanni Gebreli, Orlando Gibbons and Thomas Tellis as well as music arranged by Alvin Parker, Robert Shaw and Undine Moore, to name a few. The choir will perform in six different states; Pennsylvania, Virginia, South Carolina, Maryland, Florida and North Carolina.

Although members of the choir do receive retribution for the meals they will miss at JC on Thursday and Friday, the tour is largely paid for from their pockets - the choir will stay in 2 hotels and the homes of parishioners of churches of various denominations along the tour.

Last year's tour took the choir through New England, featuring stops in Boston, Portsmouth and the National Cathedral in Washington, D.C. The 1987 tour featured a 2-day stay in New Orleans, La.

Students attend Jubilee

By Pam Mertz

"The Jubilee Conference is an opportunity for college students to begin to understand the relationship with faith and learning," said Chris Noyes when asked about Jubilee Conferences. The 1989 conference was held this past weekend at the Pittsburgh Hilton Hotel.A total of 59 people from Juniata College, including Chris and Terry Noyes and Mike Ford, attended the conference, which started Friday night and ended with a worship service on Sunday. Various universities were represented by over 1500 students.

Editorial

Dear Editor;

The Juniatian recently published a letter to the editor (Shelley Houseman, Feb. 16, 1989) which concerned required field trips and the conflictions which arise when a student is forced to choose between the trip and a required lecture, either way suffering the consequences that absence would entail.

While the current conflict, which involved field trips for both the Decadence to Disaster and Survey of Western Art classes, as well as a required-attendance lecture in Professional Writing class, has been resolved, the question remains: what will happen next semester, when classes (such as HOBO, Choir and the afore-mentioned classes) with a large student enrollment schedule conflicting trips, tests and required lectures?

Clearly, the administration must set a precedent for the faculty to follow. Jill Shrum, the Registrar at Juniata College, said Friday that "there was obviously a lack of communication amongst the faculty departments in their coordination of special event...which , hopefully, can be avoided in the future."

One solution to the problem: Maybe professors should be forced to announce the specific dates for required field trips and important guest lectures before registration, so that the administration can review the dates and eliminate any conflicts.

There is no question in that the college cannot require a student to be on two separate field trips or in two separate states at the same time. Dr. Dale Wampler, Dean of Academic Affairs, said "I really don't want to see new policies, instead I want to see better communication between the departments."

That is all that the students want. Required field trips, "outside experiences," are certainly beneficial to students, both because of the first hand-education one receives when visiting, for instance, an art museum, and because of the contact with people from other places and cultures.

An increase in the communication between the faculty departments would help to resolve these problems in the future, both for the students and for the faculty themselves.

Letters to the Editor

I have been a member of the Student Government for two out of the last three years. I currently sit on the Student Senate as the representative from North Hall (East). One thing has become clear to me during my years of service - our Student Government lacks two crucial components: resepctability and visibilty. I am running for the office of President of the Juniata College Student Government with the fervent hope that I can change this situation, not just for the betterment of Student Government but for the betterment of the entire Juniata College community.

If I am elected President, I will make every effort to get the members of Student Government to take their jobs seriously. The members of Student Government must realize that, as elected representatives of the student body, they have an obligation to serve the interests of the students. Above all they must realize that if Student Government is to be respected, it must earn respect.

The administration must also begin to regard Student Government with a greater degree of seriousness. Granted, our government does not possess the power that student governments at other schools possess; nevertheless, we are the elected representatives of the students, and, lest it be forgotten, the students are the lifeblood of Juniata.

Along with heightened repectability, I want to increase the visibility of Student Government. If I am elected President I will instruct the Executive Secretary to advertise the time and place of all Senate meetings - these meetings have always been open to the student body but have never been adequately publicized. I will also instruct the Executive Secretary to have the minutes of Senate meetings published in The Juniatian. The minutes of our meetings are posted in residence halls but often go unnoticed.

I have other goals I intend to pursue as President. I want to motivate students to become more involved in the government process; I want to improve the Student Government office, which currently lacks a number of items, including a suggestion box, which would increase student participation, and even our nation's flag, which should be present in any office of an elected governmental body in the United States.

Who will be my Vice President? Kelly Senetcen, a Junior who is currently serving as Executive Secretary of Student Government, has informed me of her decision to run for the position of Vice President. Kelly has done a commendable job in her position; she has conducted herself with poise and maturity. She knows the workings of Student Government from firsthand experience. There is no one whom I would prefer more to be my partner in this challenging leadership position than Kelly Senetcen.

I am asking you to put your faith in me as a leader. I know this is a significant request, but I belive I am worthy of you faith. I urge everyone to vote for John Deppen and Kelly Senetcen on Tuesday, March 21st.

Dulce et docorum est pro patria mori?

Nationalism has been the single most powerful force in world politics since the end of the 19th century. And now that most of the world's nations have been aligned along ethnic, cultural, and linguistic boundaries, there has been a growing sense of national pride of "patriotism" present in most countries. Nowhere is this more true than in the United States. Patriotism is in vogue. Patriotism is politically fashionable. Patriotism elects Presidents of the United States.

But simply put, American patriotism is no longer just patriotism. It has become chauvanism. It has become hatred of anything that is not American. We have ceased to see ourselves as brothers and sisters of humankind. We are no longer a beacon of light to the oppressed masses of the world. Rather, we have become one of the oppressors. We have become a self-righteous people, sure of our superiority, and ruthlessly bent on achieving our own ends, regardless of the cost of non-American lives. We even go so far as to make a national hero out of a terrorist wearing the uniform of a Lieutenant-Colonel in the United States Marine Corps. It has been said that one can tell much about a nation by judging its idols, and our idol has hands soaked in the blood of thousands of innocent men, women, and children. But because those people were the soldiers and civilians of "dangerous foreign nations" we excuse him - - - we praise him.

I plead with anyone who is able to read these words and who holds a piece of humanity close to the heart. Do not look to our government for stability, and do not gaze upon our flag for strength. Instead, look at your brothers and sisters all around the world. They are our equals, and together, we are a race. We are the end result of our biological heritage. We are creators of beauty, and we are beautiful. We are humanity, but why are we not united as one?

"so here begins the human harvest

Another war to end all wars

To give a life for no rhyme or reason

There are no words that justify the cause

So if our future lies in the scarlet fields

Who would be a patriot at the price of humanity?

WHO WOULD BE A PATRIOT AT THE PRICE OF HUMANITY?"

By Rush Blady

This column is in response to last week's informative and lengthy, but decidedly erroneous and slightly biased review of All Class Night '89 by Trish Kazmerski, and what happened after...

"You have fallen into a deadly trap" in quoting scripture, Trish. For scripture also says "the meek shall inherit the earth." Inheriting the earth may be stretching things a bit, but the meek certainly ran away with first place in All Class Night this year. But more on that later. For now I'm interested in why you insisted on adding to the normal who-what-when-where-how and why? progression associated with normal news columns your own category, "WHY NOT?", with which you seem to allow yourself liberties commonly absent in factual, reportive-style front page articles of even so esteemed a newspaper as the Juniatian. It is understandable that one such as yourself might be excited immediately following All Class NIght, but if I was in your particular investigative shoes I should perhaps curb my enthusiasm for explanation, at least until I had time to...

1. Think rationally "Do I really want to say the Sophomore Class deserved better than they got?"

2. Substantiate the rumor that the Sophomore Class was disqualified into 4th place (see below).

3. Denounce some plays for being "crude?", while lauding others which did the same thing.

4. Insinuate that the best plays were the ones which followed the plot of the movie closely (hard to do with "Good Morning, Vietnam" if you see what I mean.)

5. Check a dictionary before I submitted my article (I especially enjoyed puzzling over "derivation" but there were a few other gems as well...)

6. Get some sleep and sober up.

I hate to burst your bubble, Trish, but... boom. Despite rumors to the contrary, the Sophomore Class clearly earned their right to 4th place. Each class could earn a possible 400 points, based on the judges' assessment of the script, acting ability, sets and costumes, and participation. The totals were: Jrs.-348, Frosh.-294, Srs.-280, Soph.-226. The judges's scores, as it turned out, were unaltered. According to Bill Huston, no points associated with penalties were subtracted from any class totals because no standings would have changed. No points were subtracted form the above scores for "inappropriate behavior", either in the auditorium or onstage. The use of lit cigarettes, water, and a bag ful of beer cans in the Sophomore skit, all grounds for disqualification in ACN rules, were not enacted, because the order of victory would have been unchanged. You were already last, guys. the Seniors reportedly ran 5 or 10 minutues overtime, hypothetically incurring a 25-or 50-point penalty, but again, this would have left the final results unaffected, i.e. the Seniors would have scored 230 points, still 3rd place, so it was not enacted. Personally, I thought you Sophomores had your funny moments, your "Huntingdon" signs were great, as was the "pop vs. soda" scene. But your continuity was...lacking. It's the same story with every class that doesn't win: If only we'd been sober enough to remember our lines; If only we could have nailed our props to the floor so they'd stay up; if only we'd started the script before Christmas. Ah well, the judges speak, and egos topple.

Also, how do you plan on defending a statement like "The Seniors were also much more crude than in past years"? Now really Trish, do you think that the Juniors called Dr. Jay "Dr. Bulge" because they wanted to draw attention to his calf muscles? Is the pelvic thrust really any less crude and tasteless than stuffing Lisa Baer's sweatsuit? Can anything beat that belch somebody let out in the middle of your play? I laughed myself out of my seat, and that's the whole point. I mean, are you really arguing that suggestiveness and naughty words be taken out of ACN scripts? If you'd really bothered to look at videotapes of past AC Nights, you'd find that crudity, for what it's worth, has been the essence of wit in most, if not all, of the skits from years past.

Oh, a personal aside to the individuals responsible for composing last week's letter to the Editor signed by the "Class of 1992". How eloquent. But you didn't come first, and the stretch between winning All Class Night and a respectable showing is a long one. Rather than pat youselves on the back too much, I'd nurture whoever wrote up the scene where your class poked fun at the various profs--it was brilliantly written and acted, and it saved you from mediocrity. But you're right one thing, R.B. All Class Night, and the great amount of work and preparation associated with it, sometimes unifies a class beyond any normal conception. when that takes place, it becomes a great and happy thing to see class clown and class idiot, jock thank everyone who worked on our All Class Night production. We started out, as freshmen usually do, pretty much clueless, and we ended up in second place.

YouR<"ve all heard both the positive and negative comments by now, and happily the positive are outweighing the negative. Regardless of what the other classes have to say about freshmen and seniors, and juniors and freshmen, and how we placed, we know how much work it took us and what we started out with.

Everyone from the script writers, to the actors, to the dancers, to the technical crew gave all they could, and a little bit more, and Friday night, it showed. We looked terrific--better than the "good for nothing Freshmen,"we heard from so many people

Thank you for your patience all the times we yelled, and especially at the first few practices where we weren't sure quite what we were doing. Thank you also for pulling the play together from isolated scenes that weren't bad on Tuesday into a play to be proud of Wednesday. Most of all, thank you for the great time we had Friday night.

We must have looked pretty silly running into Oller auditorium screaming "We are...Freshmen!!!" Friday night you all made that something to be proud of.

Thanks again guys,

Dear Editor;

This letter is in response to the front-page article in last week's Juniatian on all Class Night. Before anyone criticizes me for being a sore loser, let me say that I congratulate both the Junior and Freshmen classes on their performances, and the results of the competition were just as they should have been. This is not a reaction to the ACN results, but instead to the article itself.

A newspaper's responsibilty is to report the facts. I do not feel that the facts were fairly presented in the article in question. The treatment of the Junior and Freshmen skits was complimentary and accurate, as I'm sure most people would agree. However, the synopses of the Sophomore and Senior skits were not accurately presented. The description of the sophomore skit was simply a list of excuses as to why they didn't receive the award they thought they deserved. Concerning the smoking and water onstage: the ACN committee reviews the rules ahead of time, and the sophomores knew that these things weren't allowed. Furthermore, the head of the ACN committee informed me that not only were the sophomores not disqualified, but no penalty points were assessed for any classes because the results would have been unchanged.

In regard to the senior skit: "They spoofed 'Back to the Future', I think...It was boring...Rumors heard through the grapevine..." These remarks were totally inappropriate. If it's a journalist's obligation to report the facts, then the author of the ACN article fell very short of the mark.

Personal opinioins have no place in a news article. The senior skit, contrary to that journalist's opinion, did follow the movie plot: the main character was in the present, went to the past, changed it, and then went back to the future. How much closer does she want? And yes, Dan Lazowick<"s portrayal of Dice was "superb", and no, not many people over 25 probably know Dice's humor. But how many JC students are over 25? ACN is supposed to be directed at the student body; the judges are there to determine originality, creativity, etc. If ACN skits were written to appeal to the judges, it's my opinion that the student body would quickly lose interest.

It was my understanding that that article was intended to be a news article. Please correct me if I'm wrong. As I've stated earlier, news articles should relate the facts and nothing more. The "facts" in that article were not only incorrect, but also obviously slanted. When a journalist writes an article, he or she is assumed to be reflecting the opinion of the newspaper. If this is how the Juniatian feels, then I am disappointed. Opinions like the ones expressed in that article should be reserved for letters to the editor. If that article was inteded to be a critique of ACN, then I suggest a less biased journalist write the next one.

Dear Editor,

The Juniata College Men's Basketball team would like to take this opportunity to thank those students faculty, administration, and others who traveled to Scranton last Thursday night. We are just as disappointed as you that our season came to an end. We are grateful for the support we have received this year form the college community.

The team and coaches would like to extend a special thanks to the cheerleaders who, not only trekked to Scranton last week, but have made several trips to foreign floors in support of our team.

Again, a blanket "thank you" to those from the Huntingdon area, our student body, and the cheerleaders for your cheers.

Dear Editor,

In her article (ACN 1989!!!, February 23) Trish Kazmerski takes the book on unbiased reporting and throws it out the window. It's obvious from the second paragraph that she's a sophomore. How can you, as a responsible journalist allow her to be so unprofessional? Saying the sophomores were "the incoming favorites for ACN-'89." is crazy. They were about as favored as next years freshmen will be. Furthermore, Trish goes on to blame the sophomores lack luster performance on "sound and lighting problems." Everyone else used the same systems without a hitch. It seems to me the sophomores created their own problems. The most outrageous part of the article was when she called congratulating the freshmen "the hardest part of this article." How could congratulating the freshmen be hard? Put simply, they were awesome. They deserve all the credit in the world. They nearly pulled off as big a coup as making it through the arch.

In conclusion, I hope that in the future you require all of your reporters to show a certain degree of integrity. It is unconscionable to write 42 lines about the worst performance while at the same time giving only 24 to the winners and 19 to the first-runners up.

Sincerely,
Henry Salomon '90

Dear Editor,

To all interested off-campus housing parties:

Recenlly, we had to deal with the Juniata Cross Country Coach, Jim Payne. Those of you interested in renting apartments next year, beware!

After finding a suitable apartment, we set up our first meeting with Mr. Payne. Before we insisted on a meeting, he wanted us to get back to him in May. Since housing applications are due in February, it was imperative that we met. Everything was fine after the meeting. We had a verbal agreement along with a place to live next year. He asked fora $100.00 deposit at our convenience. This meeting took place on February 6. By the 20th (only two weeks later) we gave him the deposit. Upon receiving the deposit he informed us that he had already rented the apartment.

When questioning his business ethics and why he didn't call us before renting our apartment, he replied that he didn't have our telephone number. The next question asked was "How did you reach me today?" Mr. Payne's excuse was "Oh, um, I just found your number today"

Knowing how upset we were, Mr. Payne offered us the apartment next door. Two of our current roommates and friends had talked to him about this apartment. Didn't it matter that he was breaking yet another agreement?

He then offered to try to find us another place. Since we had gotten off to such a good start, we decided to end it there and told him that we didn't need him as a landlord. In response, he promptly slammed down the telephone.

In response to his actions we have advice for Jim Payne. Sign up for Janet Lewis' and Jim Donaldson's Business Policy and Ethics class. You need it.

If you have a conflict with all three of these classes, you must attend the field trip with the art class on Monday, meet the Decadence class in Washington, D.C. on Tuesday and then attend the Levin lecture in another class. All of Jill Shrum's Senior Values Studies classes will host Levin once during the week of March 27.

Make sure to inform your professors if you are affected by any of these conflicts. They will have further details for students so that they may "make the connection" in Washington and make up the Levin lecture without suffering penalty.

Dear Editor,

We would like to thank everyone who helped put the Senior All Class Night effort together, particularly Stephaine Payne, Christina DelMarcelle, Jill Crouse, Rush Blady, Jef Buehler, Angie Orwig and Tim Garvin for the use of his house where, yes, we did have a keg.

We would like to congratulate the Junior Class on being awarded their first place finish. We also would like to commend the Freshman Class for a tremendous showing. It would seem that the Freshman Class is one of the few bright spots that Juniata has going for it at this time.

Sincerely,
Dan Stambaugh

Hot Wax

In the words of the current King of Juniata's popular music culture, Tone-Deaf (Tone-Loc, whatever), "LEZ DO IT."

Happy March, and welcome to Hot Wax number 2 of the current term. If, by now you're wondering why I haven't written anything during the last-oh-four weeks or so, allow me to give you a three-letter explanation: ACN. But enough about school pseudo-politics. On to the music.

Unlike my usual articles, this one does not contain an album review. However, to make up for not being able to find an album good enough/interesting enough to be critiqued, I intend to review a few new songs from different genres which (I believe) are worth your while.

First, a tune for you headbangers out there: "Keep Shining Your Love On Me." It's by a mid-western band who call themselves Oriental Spas. (the cornerstone of this musical triad, Jade, appears to be wearing a skunk that's been through the tumble-dry cycle once too often on his head.) "Keep Shining" is the one song on the Spas' album which "Mr. Average Joe American" may actually hear on the radio. It's the 'traditional' slow song of the LP - every hard rock album has one, you know - and has the potential to become a viable alternative for the "Every Rose has its Thorns" fans.

My personal favorite tune of the moment falls somewhere in the Reggae/Dance category and is song #2 of this review. "Time to mek (make) a dime" is Ranking Roger's very successful attempt at melding poignant political purpose with a mindless, fun dancing and calypsol Carribean atmosphere. This song is smoothly produced and given the most effective reggae/dance beat I've heard in a long while. This song deserves at the very least to be cranked across North Lawn. (That is, if it doesn't become a major club hit first.) Surprisingly, "Time To Mek a Dime" is a 'B' side (of R.R.'s "Falling Down" 12"), so you may have to dig around for it. (Music trivia addicts should note that Ranking Roger was originally one-fourth of the English Beat and one-half of General Public before finally forming his curent band).

Moving on to the "Progressive Rock" genre, let's talk about the fun stuff that London<"s Transvision Vamp has put out. The band is fronted both vocally and visually by Wendy James (reminiscent of Debbie Harry with 3 cubic feet of hair) and their their song "Tell That Girl to Shut Up" is fitting to start off any weekend on a rowdy note. It's a fairly pointless, guitar-driven piece which deals with one woman's arguing with another for having taken her favorite beau (Ahh - the simple things in life are the best). Word has it that Transvision Vamp is quite the trendy item in England currently, so they might even be so honored as to be given a spot in MTV's rotation. Check'em out!

Oh - all of these songs really DO exist and can even be requested at our very own radio station, WKVR.

Coming (hopefully) after break: The latest and greatest in music trends from Florida, D.C., or Warminster, Pa., depending on where I end up for the week off... Hasta la vista, baby!

TRIVIA WITH TRISH

by Trish Kazmersky

Many times we are so overwhelmed by the amount of work we must complete, we forget how lucky we are to be able to eventually finish all of it in a relatively simple manner. (What Trish? Lucky to have 3 mid-term papers due, 6 novels to finish, and 15 Greek Mind stories to read before break, you've got to be kidding!!) OK, what I mean is, the only thing usually prohibiting us from reaching our potential is the finding the motivation to sit down and read MOBY DICK or giving into the blow-off syndrome by venturing into town to see a movie. (however, this is ill-advised due to irrational townies. Cloister men should be hired as body guards to protect the weak and passive among us.) To sum up this week's question, if you think life is hard now, can you picture (no pun intended) going through college blind?

There are thousands of college students today, who along with the "normal" pressures of college life, must face many more because they cannot see. They cannot see the cover of their science book. They can only read about the cell and through the description, simulate some sort of picture. They cannot copy the notes their profs place on the board. The cannot even identify with their profs through sight. The cannot enjoy a good movie after a hard week of studying, yet they continue to pursue their education. Each day they become further detached from society's label of boundaries, both physical and intellectual, can be attributed to one man, a great man with a great idea and the self-confidence to make his idea work. I am talking about Louis Braille and the Braille system.

Louis Braille was a 19th century Frenchman who was blinded himself at the age of 3 in his father's harness shop. An awl, which is a device used to punch holes leather, slipped and plunged into his eyes causing sympathetic opthalmia and consequently blindness. Nevertheless he became an excellent organist and cellist. In 1819, he received a scholarship to attend the National Institute of the Blind in Paris. He remained there as a teacher until 1826. At this time, learning was primarily memorization of the professor's lectures. Needless to say, falling asleep in class was a dumb thing to do. However, the school's founder, Valentin Hauy,had discovered that blind children could decipher texts printed in embossed Roman letters, and in this way successfully taught them to read. This laid the foundation for Braille's work.

Braille became interested in a system of writing, exhibited at the school by Charles Barbier. A message, coded in dots, was embossed on cardboard. When he was 15, he worked out an adaptation written with a simple instrument, that met the needs of the sightless. He later adapted his system, which consists of a six-dot code in various combinations, to musical notation. He published an article on his type of system in 1829.

For the last years of his life, Braille was ill with tuberculosis. His remains, sent to Paris in 1952, were buried in the Pantheon.

His work lives on everyday through the use of the Braille system. The Braille system is a tactile method of communication suitable for use by the blind. It uses groups of dots embossed on paper or some other flat surface to represent printed letters and numbers. It was fashioned by Louis Braille, parallel to the dash-dot-code pushed in paper, which had been invented for night communication on the battlefield.

The system uses a basic cell of six dots arranged in vertical columns of three dots each. The left column is numbered downward from one to three, the right from four to six. Each of the 26 letters of the alphabet is represented by a different arrangement of dots, which are easily identifiable to the touch. A single dot in the dot-six position and set just to the left of a formation indicates that the formation is a capital letter. A "backwards" L formation, which consists of dots three through six, signals that the formation that follows is a number. The symbol is prefixed to the formation for A-J to indicate the numbers 1-9 and 0.

Braille was established in 1829, and though many other systems based on it soon followed, adding confusion, today it is the standard system used by the blind for all English speaking people.

Now does reading MOBY DICK seem that bad??

Have the guts, want the glory— Rats head south

By Ed Yencha

Y'all come back now, hear." The words which were ringing in the ears of Rat Ruggers for one year. Well, look out Dixie, here come the Rats! This coming Friday, the Juniata River Mens Rugby Club will be leaving for their second annual southern tour. The tour includes a stop in Statesboro, Georgia on the campus of Georgia Southern University as well as a stop in Savannah, Georgia where the Rats will engage in some elegant violence as they play the Savannah school of Medicine and Arts aside before heading for Daytona Beach.

The week long segment of the tour comes to an end in Daytona Beach where the Rats are entered in the National Collegiate Sport Games. This tournament is open nationwide to all athletes. The tournament consists of several week long tournaments, where each weekly winner will be flown back to Daytona Beach to compete for the right to be crowned National Collegiate Sport Games 1989 Rugby Champion. The tournament this year consists of sevens on the beach. The sevens tournament promises to be fast paced, high scoring and as elegantly violent as possible. So, all JC students who are making the trip south to Daytona Beach, find out the location of the pitch, the time of the game and please come and support the Rat Pack.

In its second season as a member of the Allegheny Rugby Union (ARV) the Rats are looking at one of its biggest rosters ever. The number of Rats is on the increase as the game becomes more popular on campus. The spring season outlook for the Rats looks promising with all but one home match. The Rats are thankful for the support which hs been given to them by the students as well as local business sponsorship and a national sponsor. So, this spring, drive on out to Captian Jack's Lions Club park, located on Route 22 East approximately five minutes from campus for the one in the afternoon start to elegant violence. Please come and support the Juniata River Mens Rugby aClub and oh, by the way, don't question our behavior, TRUST US!

Artist Series presents: "Red Fox/Second Hangin"

Roadside Theater from Whitesburg, Kentucky will be coming to Juniata College's Oller Hall on March 17 at 8:15 pm with its original production, RED FOX/SECOND HANGIN'.

RED FOX/SECOND HANGIN' is the story of M.B. "Doc" Taylor, the Red Fox of the Cumberlands. Taylor was a red-haired, red-bearded popular preacher, medical doctor, herb doctor, religious mustic, and U.S. marshall who was hanged in 1893 for the ambush murder of moonshiner Iry Mullins and his gang. The story takes place during the pivotal and vivid time of Central Appalachia's first coal boom.

The tale was pieced together by Dudley Cocke and Don Baker from the history books, old newspaper accounts, lost court records, and most importantly from conversations with people who remembered the man or had memorized the stories passed down by close kin.

The New York Times has called the result "as stirring to the audience for its historical detective work as for the vanishing art of frontier yarn spinning."

Roadside Theater is a nationally acclaimed touring company. Since 1974 they have presented their unique style of storytelling theater throughout the south and to other parts of the nation. They have performed at Lincoln Center, the Festival of American Folklife in Washington D.C., in Europe, and in several successful runs off-Broadway in New York City.

In addition to the Artist Series performance, the Roadside Theater residency will include workshops and performances in schools and with theater-workers around the county. The residency is co-sponsored by the Juniata College Arts and Lectureship Council and the Huntingdon County Arts Council and is supported in part through a grant from the PA Council on the Arts.

Tickets for RED FOX/SECOND HANGIN' may be purchased at the information desk in the Ellis College Center prior to the event, or the night of the performance for $8.00 (adults) and $3.00 (children). The Juniata College Artist Series is intended to provide cultural and aesthetic opportunities to both the campus and its larger regional constituency. In addition to the season subscribers, the Series is supported in part by the Edith B. Wertz Endowment for Cultural Events, the Henry Endowment for the Performing Arts, Bill Fegan, The Pennsylvania Council on the Arts, and the Middle Atlantic Arts Foundation.

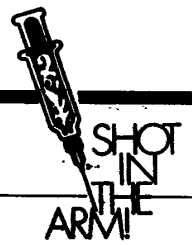
Wellness Tips



Many of you will soon be heading south to the sun-drenched beaches for basking, baking, and general merry-making. In order to help prevent painful sunburn which in turn could jeopardize your fun-power, be careful of the sun power! Those who don't spend for sunscreens in the morning end up spending for sunburn lotions in the afternoon.

Protect yourself especially at noon when the sun has the greatest burning power by using a sunscreen that blocks UVB rays as well as UVA. Among the brands that protect most are Ban de Soleil 15, Pre Sun 15, Sundown 8 and 15, Clinique 19. Look for a screen with an SPF (Sun Protection Factor) of at least 15. Choose a long-lasting formula that penetrates and clings to the skin well and apply it about half an hour beforehand to give it time to penetrate the outer layer of the skin. Remember, a single application won't last. Use generous amounts and reapply frequently. For lips, nose, and ears use an opaque sun block such as zinc oxide.

If all else fails and you do get a burn, the best thing you can do is soak it for 5 minutes in cold water - not ice water or apply cold compresses. This conducts heat from the skin and lessens the swelling. Don't coat the burn with oily or greasy substances which seal in heat. Over-the-counter first-aid sprays can provide temporary relief such as products containing benzocaine. If your sunburn causes blisters, swelling, and oozing of fluid, it is a second degree burn - and treatment may be necessary: Don't break blisters or peel damaged skin, you will only encourage infection.

Experts warn against heading for a tanning bed to start your tan. Animal studies suggest that the combined effect of lamps plus sun can be extra risky because of the high intensity discharge units which generate up to 100 times the UVA in nature.

As for sunglasses - if you can see your eyes clearly through the lenses, they are probably not dark enough. The most expensive glasses are not necessarily the best, but price may be some indication of qualtiy. Plastic lenses are as good as glass if the "transmission factor" (check the label) is 10 to 25%.

It is important to know your own skin type and how easily and quickly you burn. Gradual exposure, good sense and lots of block will help you to enjoy your vacation without the chills and fever of over exposure.

Look for carnival after break

Come one! Come all! Got anything planned for the night of March 18th? Well, even if you do - Forget it! The International Club is celebrating Carnival. It's more than a party. It's more than a dance. It's an experience! Don't know what to wear? How about a funky costume. and, if you do wear a costume, we'll take half off your admission cost! Also, we'll be giving prizes for costumes. For example, the costume that shows the most (tastefully!) or the most unique costume.

If you just can't come up with a costume, that's OK. We'll be selling masks. What else? We<"re serving mocktails. There will be a combination of disc jockeys and a live band to keep Carnival swinging! Also, we'll have a small cafe set up and people to do face painting.

So, look for that costume and circle the date on you calendar. That's March 18th in T-n-T from 9 'til 2! You DON'T want to miss this!

There's a winner in Beeghly Library

By Peter Kuppersmith

Beeghly Library has announced a winner in February's "Convivial Pursuits<" contest. Senior Jerry Albright correctly answered last month's questions, and for this deft display of cerebral dexterity he was rewarded with an O.I.P. pizza. After being presented his prize, Jerry had the following to say about the importance of the library in his life: "My friends laughed at me when I decided to quit the football team so that I could work full time on my library skills, but they aren't laughing now. School is tough, and life is tougher; but now that I know how to find an answer for everything in th library, my worries are over. I wouldn<"t be where I am today if it wasn't for the library. So take it from me, Jerry Albright: think smart - think library!

Answers to last month's contest.

1. The Beatles made 43 gold records selling over 1 million.

2. Madonna's full name is Madonna Louise Ciccone. She is 30 years old.

3. A geek is a carnival performer specializing in bizarre acts like biting off the heads of live chickens.

4. Bud Shuster is your local Congressman

5. IUPAC stands for the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry.

6. J. Dennis MaQuaid is treasureer of the American Dehydrated Onion and Garlic Association. There are three other members.

7. "Where Are You Going, Where Have You Been" by Joyce Carol Oates is the short story from which the movie "Smooth Talk" was made.

8. Emily Dickinson said, "There is no frigate like a book."

9. Maine and Vermont were the only two states which F.D.R. failed to carry in any election.

10. L.A. Beeghly was an industrialist and philanthropist from Yougstwon, Ohio.

A new contest will appear in the next issue of the Juniatian.

ence this year was Rev. Dr. John Stott, President of the London Institute for Contemporary Christianity and the Rector Emeritus of All Souts Church, Langham Place in England. His presentations examined "Jesus is Lord," "Vocation," and "Ministry."

Those who attended the conference had their choice of three areas in which to attend seminars. They included the following: "The Secret of Your Success," "Making a Difference," and "The Christian in the University." The first two sessions broke up into small groups on Saturday afternoon for discussions, while "The Christian in the University" seminar divided students up into three areas of interest, "Science," "Social Science," or "Humanities." They were then divided into more specific areas such as "Arts," "Biblical Studies," "Health Related Professions," "Law," etc.; almost any area of study in which a student might express interest.

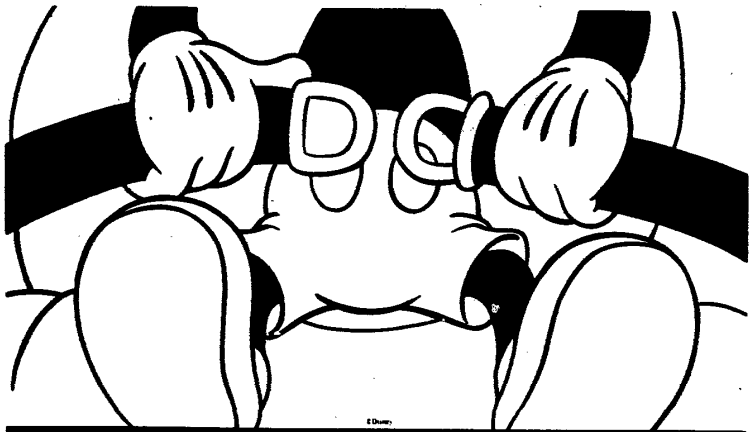
In free time at the conference, JC representatives experienced Pittsburgh and took a break from college food by dining in various restaurants.

Friday night there was a coffeehouse for entertainment, and Saturday night a concert was given by Michael and Greta Blanchard. Michael Blanchard has written songs for Glad, Debbie Boone, Phil Driscol, and other well-known performers. Saturday night the movie "Cry Freedom" was shown as an alternative to the concert.

The conference had something to offer for everyone that attended. Chris Noyes summed up the trip when he said that the conference was an "excellent opportunity for students to understand how to impact our world through all vocations and not just in the stereotypical 'Christian' vocations of pastoral ministry or missionary activity."

"I'VE BEEN TO THE MOUNTAINTOP!"

On April 3, 1968, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. gave his last sermon. On April 3, 1989, John Deppen will present this moving and prophetic speech in Alumni Hall at 8:15pm. Everyone is invited to attend.



Buckle Up For Spring Break '89

Mike Antenucci shoots a free throw in the Indian's game against Scranton. Mike, along with the rest of the Seniors finished their eventful careers at Scranton.

Men's Basketball Squad bows out at Scranton: finish 16-10

The Juniata Indians had high expectations of winning the MAC crown before the season started and through the mists of controversy, injuries and being jinxed by traveling the Tribe still found themselves vying for the title near the season's end. However, road losses at Susquehanna in overtime, Lycoming and Elizabethtown kept the Indians from hosting the playoffs and taking a 20-2 home court record over the past two years into the playoffs.

Traveling and winning at Scranton would not be an easy task, as the Royals proved to be too much for the Tribe in front of a home crowd of 3000 people. The slow start for Juniata forced the Tribe to play catch-up basketball the entire game. Scranton only managed eight field goals in the second half but connected on 28 of 42 free throws after only going one for two in the first half from the line. The result, a 71-63 Scranton victory. The Royals turned around and lost to Susquehanna 78-71 Saturday in the finals.

A poor first half shooting effort by the Tribe (39%) and a game total of 19 turnovers never allowed the frustrated Indians to get within three points of the Royals after Scranton took its first lead in the game. Juniata shut the Royals down the last four minutes of the first half, closing to within five, after trailing by as many as 13, however, a Scranton turnaround jumper in the closing seconds of the half pushed their lead to 27-20 at the intermission.

Juniata scored the first two points of the second half but did not take advantage of the many opportunities they had to pull any closer. Forced to foul in the later moments of the game the Indians found the Royals connect on 70% of their free throws keeping the Tribe out of reach. A season of high expectations ended in dissappointment and left a 16-10 team, which recorded the second highest win total in school history, wondering what and where they went wrong.

Second-team all district selection Jay Nicholson led the way averaging 14.5 points a game and 8.2 caroms while shooting a school record 62% from the floor. Seniors Joe DeBlase, an Academic All-American and Les Squair were two and three in scoring respectively. DeBlase averaged 12.2ppg and led the team with 43 three-point shots. Squair, averaging 10.2ppg this season along with a 6.6rpg. Sophomore, Bob Dombroski, averaged 9.6ppg and was second in rebounding with 6.9 caroms a game.

Junior point gaurd Shawn Habakus averaged 6.6ppg and dealt out a season high school record of 11 assists. Of the bench Don Wagner (5.8ppg), Duane Dise (5.7ppg 3.0rpg) and Mike Antenucci (5.0ppg 3.2rpg) were all key contributions to the team. Mike Welker was third on the team in assists, scoring 3.7ppg and Dan Lizun chipped in 3.0 ppg missing the last three game of the season with an ankle injury.

Juniata shot 48% from the floor on the season and 68% from the line. The Tribe also out rebounded their opponents in the second half 1028 to 980. The Indians finished the regular season at 16-10 with a 12-4 record within the MAC northern conference. To start the season the Tribe dropped a one-point descion in the championship game of the Muhleberg tournament 67-66 and missed a shot at the buzzer. A week later Juniata knocked off host CMU and now nationally ranked Allegheny to win the CMU tournament.

The second loss at home in two seasons was handed to the Indians by Lycoming after the Tribe led by as many as 25 points in the first half. Lycoming was the only team to defeat Juniata twice this season. After winning two in a row the Tribe dropped an overtime game at Susquehanna after leading most of the game and by five with only 17 seconds remaining. The fourth loss game at the hands of Division I Penn State 76-61.

Juniata put together a mid-season win streak, winning five in a row with victories over Albright, Susquehanna, Scranton, Messiah and Delaware Valley. Then the road losses piled up. A three point loss at Dickinson, a blow at Lycoming, a poor effort against Elizabethtown and non-conference losses to York and Western Maryland. There were wins against Albright, King's, FDU-Madison, Drew and Wilkes all at the Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center.

Losing the individual season title to Susquehanna the Tribe was forced to hit the road and the road was not the place to be. Eight year coach Dan Helm will lose four seniors but will return six key players, three starters and a host of talented freshmen for the 1989-90 season.

Women's Softball team starts 1989 in South

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata College women's softball team continues to build for the future with 14 incoming freshmen joining a returning roster of 11 letterwinners in 1989. The Tribe opens its regular season schedule against visiting St. Francis College on March 18.

Coach Dick Scialabba, entering his fourth season, will take his team to Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, for preseason camp over spring break (March 3-11). The Indians will train with Adrian (Michigan) and Ursinus Colleges, both Division III schools.

Juniata was 8-16 a year ago and 1-7 in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest. However, the Indians gave MAC-champion Elizabethtown its only league loss, a 1-0 setback in Huntingdon.

"The win over Elizabethtown was a great lift for our program," said Scialabba, who suffered his first losing season at Juniata last spring. "Our returning players know we can win the big game against the best competition. If we play with the enthusiasm and intensity we had that game in every game, good things will happen."

The Tribe has seniors, but returns three juniors and eight sophomores to form the nucleus for Juniata this spring.

Junior infielder/outfielder Roberta Goshler of Pheonixville (Owen J. Roberts H.S.) hit .310 last year while classmates 1B Kirsten Grell of Johnstown (Bishop McCort H.S.) and catcher Pam Lau of Kennett Square (Unionville H.S.) batted .284 and .242 respectively. All three started the past two years.

Sophomore pitcher Kate Bradley of Philipsburg is back after throwing 23 complete games last season and finishing with a 3.75 earned run average. She led the Tribe offense with a .411 batting average.

Jennifer Dippery of Middleburg, also a sophomore, hit .361 at third base and had the team's only home run. Classmates Dee Penepacker of Lewistown (.230) and Tina May of Lancaster (Manheim H.S.) (.292) were also regulars in the outfield last season as freshmen.

Other returning sophomores include Laura Johnson of Devon (Conestoga H.S.), Jen Martinez of Blauvelt, NY (Rockland County Day), Valerie Ryan of New Hartford, NY, and Amy Shorrock of Coraopolis (Moon H.S.).

Jennifer Wade, a third-team Academic All-American at second base, and team MVP Emily Beach, an outfielder, were lost to graduation, while sophomore designated hitter Gina Leis has decided to sit out the year.

"We have some experience to build on, but we have to realize nothing is going to come easy for us," said Scialabba. "I'm happy with our incoming group of freshmen. They all have excellent high school backgrounds and some will have to contribute to our program immediately."

"There are really three areas I feel will be keys to our success this season," said Scialabba. "First, we have to give Kate Bradley some help in the pitching department. I expect that will come from freshman Leslie Wass (of Harrisburg and Central Dauphin H.S.)."

"Second, we must dramatically reduce the number of errors we committed last year. We had 82 errors to just 27 by our opponents, helping them to 86 unearned runs and 62 free baserunners."

"Third, we can't allow the 'big' inning like we did last year. Cutting down on our fielding mistakes will help us head off the three, four, and five run innings."

"Basically, if we just play better defense and continue to improve our hitting we will have a good season," explained Scialabba.

The Juniata schedule features five doubleheaders on College Hill and seven on the road, including key trips to Susquehanna and Elizabethtown to finish the season.

"In order for us to make a run at the conference playoffs, we'll have to play well on the road," concluded Scialabba. "However, we'll need to set things up by getting off to a good start at home, especially by playing well against league rivals Messiah and Wilkes on our own field early in the season."

Men's Volleyball team wins three in a row

By John Olsen and Andy Hulslander

Last Friday, the Juniata Men's Volleyball Club defeated Messiah in a home game for their third straight win this season. Messiah won the first game in the best-of-five match with fast sets and a tough defense which prevented Juniata from playing their own game. Score: 15-5, Messiah.

However, the Juniata men regrouped in the second game, with the impenetrable block of Mike Juniper and Dennis Hohenshelt providing a foundation for a comeback. Bob Davies contributed to the rally by pounding home several kills while the JC enthusiasm and quality of play skyrocketed. 2nd game; JC 16, Messiah 14.

The third game showed that Juniata was, in fact, warmed up and ready to play with their normally aggressive, unpredictable style. Juniata's defense improved steadily while Dan Stambaugh repeatedly faked-out Messiah's defense with repeated dumps, ending the game with a score of 15-8, Juniata's win.

The win in the third game gave the men momentum and incentive to finish off Messiah in the fourth game, thereby avoiding playing a fifth. the fourth game was almost an exact opposite of the first game, with Juniata allowing Messiah only three sideouts after the first few points. At match point, the frantic Messiah players asked for a time-out, but found they had none left. The resulting penalty gave JC the point, game, and match: Juniata 15, Messiah 5.

One week before facing Messiah, the men Spikers bested Lebanon Valley College in a hard-fought five-game match at home. In the absence of coach Jim Donaldson, the players were coached by Larry Bock, of women's volleyball fame. The JC men won the first two games 15-12 and 15-7, only to be defeated twice in a row by LVC, 15-13 and 15-11. In the fifth and final game, Juniata came out victorious, 15-11. Acting coach Bock described the final game as "an emotional roller coaster," and said that the team "controlled its own destiny" and "played with a lot of character."

After an away win against Franklin and Marshall and a loss to Bloomsburg, the Juniata Men's Volleyball Club's record stands at 3-and-1.

Good Luck to all Spring Sports Teams!

Experienced Tribe heads South to begin season!

Juniata will begin the 1989 baseball season with high hopes as 16 letterwinners return from last year's14-12 campaign. The Indians won eight straight games down the stretch last spring and completed the year with a 7-5 record in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest section, good enough for third place.

"We have a solid nucleus returning," says coach Bill Berrier, who begins his 21st season at the helm. "We should get good leadership from our seniors while several underclassmen will also step to the front this season."

Senior tri-captains Paul Hayduk, Jim Tomassetti and George Zanic will be key contributors for the Tribe. Hayduk, a pitcher/outfielder from Gaithersburg, MD (Seneca Valley H.S.) led the team last year with a .421 batting average. Tomassetti, a pitcher/third baseman from Altoona, and Zanic, a second baseman from Pittsburgh (Swissvale H.S.), have anchored the infield for the past two seasons.

An experienced and talented senior class also includes designated hitter Amo Cianci of Folsom (Ridley H.S.), who hit .371 a year ago, pitcher Henry Marche of Alexandria (Juniata Valley H.S.), who was 1-0 last spring, and 1B David Reed of Stroudsburg (.348).

Sophomore pitcher/outfielder Kevin Neff of Reading (Wyomissing H.S.) hit .420 last season with a team-high 37 hits and nine home runs. He was a leader on the mound with a 3-3 record, three saves, and an impressive 1.90 earned run average.

Juniors Scott Close of Somerset (.326) and Vic Huber of Altoona (.380) are expected to continue to play key roles in the outfield, while sophomore Mike Reed of Woodbury (Northern Bedford H.S.), who hit .390 in '88, will help on the mound and at shortstop.

Sophomore John Bulger of Martinsburg (Central High School) will direct the Tribe from behind the plate, while classmate Dave Crissman of Bellefonte will add infield depth.

"I was pleased with our hitting last year (.336 average as a team to compared to .296 by opponents) and we should be even better this year," says Berrier. "This could be our best hitting team ever. The keys will be to compliment our hitting with solid defense and improvement in our pitching performances."

Close, Hayduk and Tomassetti will join Neff, M. Reed and Marche on the pitching corps. Sophomores Joe Calamita of Woodlyn (Ridley H.S.), Scott Munro of Jersey Shore, and Nick Spadea of Philadelphia (St. Joseph's Prep) will also help the Indians on the mound.

Nine freshmen are on the preseason roster, with pitcher/infielder Joe Doktorski of Hamilton, NJ (The Hun School) as one of the top newcomers.

"Our incoming freshmen will definitely give us better depth this season," says Berrier. "It will be important for us to have good bench players since our schedule could be a real grind."

Juniata opens the season with nine games in eight days during a trip to Daytona Beach, Florida, from March 4-12. The Indians will meet tough competition along the way including stops at VMI, Ferrum, Randolph Macon and Mary Washington College.

The Pennsylvania portion of the season begins at Geneva on March 17. The MAC northwest schedule starts with a double header against visiting Albright on March 18.

Albright, Dickinson, Elizabethtown, Messiah, Susquehanna and Wilkes join Juniata in the MAC Northwest. "E-town is probably the top preseason contender," according to Berrier.

"We are once again going to be tested extremely early," says Berrier about the start of the season. "We need to use our southern trip as preparation for the rest of the season However, I think we have the people returning to make a good showing the entire season, not just in April."

Berrier begins his 21st season as head baseball coach at Juniata.

Les Squair (23) stands in the huddle with his teamates (L to R) Mike Greenly, Shawn Habakus, and Frank Shue. Les exemplified team leadership throughout his four years at J.C. and is the topic of this week's Greek Speaks.

As usual:

The Greek Speaks

As time ran out last Thursday night, Les Squair got the ball in the middle of the lane, spun and laid the ball in for what would be the final basket of his great career at Juniata. With the help of Wayne Paul, Mike Antenucci, Joe DeBlase and Duane Dise, Les has turned a losing program into one of the most respected in the MAC.

During the 1985-86 season Les was the lone bright spot on a team that failed to reach the double-figure mark in wins. Continually dazzling the fans with his awesome rebounding and power moves against players much taller, Squair was destined to be one of the greatest players in Juniata's history.

As time went on, however, Dan Helm provided Les with a supporting cast that would take some of the superstar status away from the power forward from Pittsburgh. Les' contributions didn't show up quite as much on the stat sheet, but the wins started coming with more frequency than the losses. Early this season, Squair was even delegated to perform the role of the sixth man. His unselfish attitude carried over to the rest of the team, and an example was set which everyone followed, thus helping the Indians clinch another playoff berth.

Off the court, Les Squair has set an example which has taught me more than any Juniata professor could have taught me. Coming from Pittsburgh's Hill District, which is well known for crime and drugs, Squair was determined to be the first person from his neighborhood to get a college degree. It hasn't been easy.

Les has made it in an atmosphere which is far removed from his friends and family in the heart of Pittsburgh. When it would have been much easier to leave school and go to a school near home, Les was determined to make it at Juniata. So determined in fact, that he decided skip his junior year of basketball to concentrate on academics.

In this era of illegal recruiting and giving atheletes grades, its refreshing to see what Les has accomplished. So many times we hear of athletes who have made it off the streets through athletics. Les is different, however. Les made it by succeeding in the classroom. Basketball got Les to Juniata, his hard work with the books has kept him here.

On May 14, of this year, Les Squiar will graduate on time with the rest of the Class of '89. While many will remember what number 23 did on the hardwood, I'll remember the hard-work and dedication Les put forth in all aspects of his life. This dedication has enabled him to get a degree which Les will probably cherish more than anyone can imagine.

Les' final basket on Thursday may have put an end to his basketball career, but unquestionably, he will succeed in whatever he does when he leaves Juniata.

JC Swimmers finish promising first season

By Kathy Collins

The first swim season at Juniata College is now over. It came to an end at the 1989 MAC Championship swim meet that was held at the University of Scranton over the last weekend. Two Swimmers came back with places in the top ten and the other five placed well in relays in their individual events.

Steve Grater, in his last athletic appearance for JC, captured 14th in the 100 free, 10th in the 100 fly, and smoked to a 6th place finish in the 100 breast. Brad Newman, a freshman backstroker, earned a 8th place in the 100 back, and a 9th in the 200 back.

The top finisher for the JC women was Sophomore Sue Humphrey who placed 13th in the 200 breaststroke missing consolations by one place. The women's relay teams placed respectively. The 800 relay (Strapple, Humphrey, Edebski, and Collins) got a 9th; the 400 relay (Strapple, Newman, Ezdebski, and Collins) placed 11th and the 200 relay (same as 400 relay) placed 10th.

Scott Preston, varsity swimming coach said "Steve and Brad both did a super job. I was especially impressed with the way they came back in the evening races, after having very tough qualifying races earlier in the day."

"Steve deserves a lot of credit for any success this team has had this year. I think that some of his attitude, athleticism and competitiveness has worn off on the entire team. I can't say enough about the contribution he has made both to myself and our team."

"The women were successful as well, though perhaps not as consistent as would be desired. Sue Humphrey was an especially pleasant surprise in the breaststroke races. Everyone swam at least one personal best and, more importantly began to see what it takes to swim in the finals of the MACs - something I believe a number of the women are capable of doing."

The MAC meet wrapped up a promising season for the JC swimmers. The teeam is losing two swimmers who will be furthering their education next year. Steve Grater is going to Temple for dental school. Mary Strapple is going to continue her quest for a degree in sports medicine. The team wishes them best of luck and will miss them next year.

So concludes swimming for this year. We will be back in October stronger and bigger than ever before.

ALONG

and study geek, Democrat and Republican, flamboyant and shy, coming together and having fun. It sounds as if your class had that experience. And if it sounds as if I just saw "The Breakfast club." But that's a different movie. My congratulations-sincerely. Our class, I think felt it as well, in the last hectic hours before curtain time. Every other class, I would guess, experienced that unification to a degree. It is, with the demise of the lounge party and the advent of the closed-party policy, probably the most important social element of its kind left on this campus. So here's a little lesson for you, Class of '92: While you're at it, don't let anybody take it away from you, like I might have said about an event featuring kegs and lots of inner tubes and bathing suits, that the Class of '89 just missed.

And that, in a nutshell, is what our class was trying to say during All Class Night 1989. We could have and should have said it better, but we didn't. And, if you (that's a collective "you", not just you writers of that editorial) put your respective feet down around this campus once in a while, you'll never have to say what we tried to say.

So it goes - What started out as my most critical "Along" ends up as my most pleading sermon. I'll never get that moral tone out of my writing to save my life. Oh, and one last thing. Somebody just go and beat the Juniors when next year rolls around, all right?

Itishree Devi will join staff next year

By Dan Crosby

It is rare that students at Juniata College have an opportunity to take a course which may vastly broaden our horizons and stimulate our minds, while at the same time fulfilling one of our core curriculum requirements. But we will have a great opportunity to do just that next year: Mrs. Itishree Devi, an accomplished Indian scholar, will be coming to Juniata as a Visiting Assistant Professor. She will participate as a staff member and consultant in the new GE 204-"The Heart of India" course and will be teaching EN 399/HS 399-"A Wounded Civilization? Twentieth Century India Through The Window of Anglo-Indian Novels." The GE 204 course features several other professors, including Dr. Klaus Kipphan, who is enthusiastic at the prospect of Mrs. Devi's visit. "Indian culture is a living museum," he explains, and through the eyes of a native Indian we may "gain insights we could not get independently."

The GE 204 course (four credits) will examine contemporary India in a broad scope, but will concentrate on the practices of Hinduism, a fascinating religion whose faithful millions range from snake worshippers to abstract monotheists, and whose practitioners constitute 85% of India's massive populace. The EN 399/HS 399 class (three credits) is a seminar which, in Dr. Kipphan's words, will utilize "the window of the present in order to understand the past." This will be an exciting and thought-provoking course which will explore and analyze the literature of many internationally acclaimed Indian writers, without the tedious fact-memorizing ritual of some history courses.

Mrs. Devi is not only a superior scholar, but is very much a part of Indian culture as well. She is one of the world's premier performers of Odissi (a form of Indian Classical Dance) and will be giving a grand gala performance of Indian classical dance as well as a a lecture/demonstration on the subject at some point next semester. Also a fine athlete, Mrs. Devi was selected as the best all-around woman student of Ravenshaw College in 1983. She is currently a lecturer in English at Nehru Women's College, located in Bhubaneswar, India. Her visit represents an excellent opportunity for the students of Juniata College to get a taste of the intriguing and often exotic culture of the East. Dr. Kipphan and the rest of the history, English, and GE faculty strongly encourage all students to consider the courses with which Mrs. Devi will be involved when planning their schedules for next year.

Thinking about the next life

By Darrell Sifford

It was an interview with James P. Smith, professor of counseling psychology at Temple University, who said that a major problem he encounters in college students is that they decide too quickly what they want to do after graduation. The result, he said is that they get

SHAC helps get college into condoms

By Alex M. Jones

If you have visited the bathrooms on the basement floor of Ellis Hall since returning from spring break, you might have been surprised by a machine hanging against the bathroom stall. But it's official. Juniata College has entered the era of AIDS-awareness, and 2 condom machines, which will be accessible 24 hours a day, have been added to this school's facilities.

Of course, the first material step in AIDS prevention at Juniata has been a small one. How often will the two condom machines in Ellis be utilized? How well can two condom machines serve a campus of 1,100 students?

These questions have yet to be answered. The machines have been installed on a trial basis, as a result of a survey done by the Student Health Advisory Committee. The survey, which polled over 460 students, showed that the students favored on-campus condom availability by a ratio of more than 15 to one.

That was enough for the administration to make the move. The final decision about the placement of the condom machines was made by the Administrative Unit, a group consisting of President Robert Neff, Vice-Presidents Dale Wampler, Clay Pheasant, Bill Alexander, Arnie Tilden and Director of Admissions Chuck Kensinger.

"Our policies are driven by what we think is best for our students educationally," said Tilden. "As for other schools," continued Tilden,"the college is certainly not breaking ground around the Commonwealth."

Last Saturday, Father David Arseneault, speaking for the campus ministry office, refused to comment on the machines' installation.

Dr. Jay Buchanan, Director of Counseling Services, said "I am a Christian and I have no problem with the installation of these machines. I see it as a social and professional responsibility."

"A lot of care, a lot of caution and a lot of discussion went into making this decision, said Buchanan. "It's a big step, and I don't know yet what all of the ramifications are."

The machines thus far have two flaws in location and service. First, the machines accept only quarters. The change machine is located in another part of Ellis Hall. Security will have to watch carefully to protect the bookstore, the radio station and the Totem Inn from vandalism.

The other problem with the machines is that the condoms in them are out of date. As late as Monday, they were dispensing condoms packaged in 1985, with a warning that the spermicide which

Editorial

As I was getting ready to lay out the Juniatian Monday, at least five people came up to me with articles. This was at 5:00 p.m. when most of the articles were being typed into the computer. I know that people get busy or forget deadlines; I am not writing this to make these people feel bad. This incident got me to thinking, though, is Juniata really promoting punctuality?

I began to think back to everything that had happened in the past week. Some of my professors were late to class, some of them held class overtime. There were special lectures which started late and classes which started early. Does this flexible time clock carry over to the students? I believe that it does.

I watch the same student walk into my 9:00 a.m. class five minutes late every class and just shake my head. Students ask for extensions on papers or projects time after time. Admittedly, my Mickey Mouse watch is running faster than I am at times or my calendar gets a day ahead of me, but there is no excuse for this.

Juniata College is a liberal arts school which is not only supposed to teach us academics, but also what the real world is like. Are we, as students, really getting our money's worth when we are not taught about the consequences of being late or procrastinating?

I do not feel that the solution to this problem is only up to the faculty and staff. As young adults on our own, we students should make a point to show up for class on time or start our projects early enough so that we do not need to ask for extensions. The faculty, as role models for the students, should also make it a point to practice punctuality.

I do not mean to sound so down, but at times this small problem becomes very frustrating for those of us who must work under a deadline. What happens if you miss a deadline or are late in the real world? Are you just mildly reprimanded and then told to go ahead with your work, or does something worse happen that none of us at Juniata know about yet? I wonder, does everyone in the real world also have a rubber clock?

CAT STEVENS RIDING THE PEACE TRAIN

By Chris Huff

Hello. For the freshmen who don't know who I am, and the rest of you who don't have an excuse but just plain forgotten, I'm Chris Huff. I'm in England doing what Americans do best when they come to England, DRINK. So give me a second to crack open a beer and then I'll get on with this article. Psstt. Aahhh, that's better.

There are two reasons why I'm writing this article. The first, and thinly disguised, formal reason is to inform those students who are thinking of coming to England, or anywhere else for that matter. The second reason is to remind those people who call themselves my friends (you know who you are) that I'm still alive. The second reason was prompted by a line in one of the few letters I've gotten which reads, and I quote, "No one knows you're gone -- Juniata is thriving without your ugly face to hinder its prestige." And that's from a friend. To those of us with a smidgen of self-pride, this hurts.

The subject of this attempt at journalistic integrity is Identity. Before you shrug this off as a second-rate Counselor's Corner, I'm talking about National Identity, not personal. More specifically, how much American is left in me after six months in England? Well, that's a hard one. I think I can safely say that I am an 'in-the-middle' type person. To clarify this I will give two examples of either extreme. (The real names of these people have been changed to protect their self-respect).

Frank is the perfect example of the extreme American. He came to England with the impression that it would be just like the States. Except smaller, and with stranger accents. As soon as he found out that 'Hogan's Heroes' is not broadcast on the BBC and the closest thing to a Whopper is a Wimpy 1/4-pounder, he shut himself in. He refuse to admit that anything British is good. Well, O.K., Samantha Fox, but besides that, nothing. He complains at every chance he gets. That isn't me.

The other extreme is George. He has lost all trait of his former nineteen years of existence in America. He has gone from blue jeans and Converse high-tops to striped shirts and paisley suit vests. He goes out and gets a trendy British haircut, which in the States is equivalent to what is known as a 'bowl-cut', and refuses to admit knowing who Lynyrd Skynyrd is. This man did not even attend the Thanksgiving Dinner that the English so graciously prepared for us Americans. That isn't me either.

Before I came to England, I have to admit that I wasn't Uncle Sam's favorite nephew. I thought Ronald Reagan had the IQ of an empty beer can, (I still do, actually.) and that the best move the States ever made was the one out of Vietnam. This has changed. I now have great pride in this country. The other night I was watching Oprah. Under normal conditions in the States I would consider this about as interesting as pulling nose hair. But my presence in England has changed my attitude dramatically. As English associates commented on what trash Oprah was, I found myself defending it. Not because it isn't trash, that goes without question, but because it's my trash, American trash.

But before you go and assume that my views fall in the same category as Rambo's, I will have you know that there are things about England that I like better than in the States. For instance, the drinking age is 18, I like that. The British Top 40 is infinitely more intelligent, I like that, too. Oh yeah, I love a good kebab, also. But England isn't peaches and cream either. The pizza over here is crap and so is Margaret Thatcher.

So it is safe to say that I am an 'in-the-middle' type exchange student. Which means, I guess, retaining the best of the American while taking in the best of the British. Which is a good reason to go abroad your junior year (you can send the endorsement check to my parents, Buff). I will end this now 'cause I've gotta go to the liquor store to get some Marlboros and a six-pack of Guiness. See ya.

P.S. By the way, Budweiser isn't an American invention. Some guy stole the formula from a beer called 'Budvar' from Yugoslavia. Sorry.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Having a freshman in college, wondering about a professor's policies, I was happy to see Shelley Houseman question the area of conflict between required attendance and required field trips, lectures, etc. I felt she asked a very sincere question and spoke not just for herself but for many students. I honestly don't think most students would approach the professor directly, they would have questioned their peers rather than be put in a situation that was not accomodating. Perhaps there should be a general college policy on this matter.

Breakfast around the world- here at JC

By Ellen F. Sloan

If you have ever dreamed of being a world traveller but never had the opportunity or if you would like to revisit a favorite foreign land - now is your chance to experience the thrill of international excitement. The 1989 Juniata College Women's League "INTERCONTINENTAL BREAKFAST" is being planned for Saturday April 22 from 9:30 a.m. to 12 noon in the Ballroom of Ellis Hall on the Juniata campus.

This year's theme, "INTERCONTINENTAL BREAKFAST", promises to provide a taste of several foreigan countries. With the help of the Juniata College international students, Ellis Ballroom will be transformed into a colorful world of international tables and a bazaar. The bazaar, "A World of Goods", will feature authentic international items such as clothing, brass, jewelry, dolls, food, and a booklet of the students' favorite international recipes. Anyone interested in submitting international recipes for inclusion in the booklet may do so by sending them to Vi Confer at the Juniata College Development Office by Friday April 7. A fashion show is also being planned by the students to represent the modern dress in several countries. A featured item last year, a fruit cocktail, will be available again in addition to the traditional continental breakfast foods. Several different international coffees will be served. Attendees can enhance the breakfast atmosphere by wearing international clothing and jewelry.

The Woman's League originated in 1932 with its aim and purpose being "To promote the general advancement of the college interests, and to aid the Board of Trustees in furnishing funds." Members of the League include male and female alumni, relatives and friends of alumni, and friends of Juniata College.

Letters and tickets have been mailed to League members. Tickets will also be available at the door. Breakfast proceeds are used to support special projects at Juniata and a yearly student award.

League officers are Karen Orr, President; Sharon Bookhamer, Vice Presient; Roxann Deike, Secretary; Bonnie Lakso, Treasurer. Co-chairpersons for the breakfast are Marjorie Love and Nance Gerrity. Assisting them will be Sally Suba, Kitchen; Dottie Neff, Tea Table; Cindy Clarke, Tickets; Peg Ody, Phone: Erin Ody, Service Assistants; Terry Murray, Entertainment; Kathleen Biddle, International Students; International Students, Decorations; "A World of Goods", League Olfficers; Ellen Sloan, Publicity.

Additional information about the breakfast is available by calling Vi Confer at the Juniata College Development Office at (814)-643-4310 Extension 210.

stuck in jobs they don't like and quickly become disillusioned.

The period from about 19 to 26 ideally should be viewed as a time for people to get to know themselves - what they enjoy what they're good at, what they wouldn't touch again with a 10-foot pole. It should be a time when they try out many different things, experiment with life, anticipate the next great adventure. But instead, many young people "look for closure instead of trying to stay open."

I asked Smith about people who know from the very beginning what they want to do and never seriously consider anything else. It was that way for me with writing. Did we have an advantage over people who dabbled in this and that? Not necessarily, Smith responded. There were at least two potential problems with committing early to a career. One was that we might aim too low and not relalize our potential. The other was that we might be unable to do what we wanted - for whatever reason - but stubbornly keep trying and end up in a deep ditch.

"I'm a college senior, majoring in journalism at Temple University. Like you, I've always known that I wanted to be a writer ... I couldn't possibly think of investing my time and my parents' money in trying to 'find myself.' I've always known what I wanted, and it had to be practical. One of my classmates said her major was history. She had changed her major quite a few times. When I asked her what she was going to do with a history degree, she said she didn't know. First she chooses a major that isn't exactly in demand in the job market, then she doesn't know what she's going to do with it. How about that?

"But now that I'm approaching graduation, I, myself, find that I'm not sure what I want to do. I want to write, but now that I'm taking courses that I want to take like 'Victorian Novel' and 'Social Literature in the U.S.,' I ask myself: Do I want to be an English teacher? Should I go to law school? It amazes me that I can have so many doubts and questions...

"...I'm planning to take the summer off and do some traveling. Maybe I'll end up selling fruit at a stand on the beach. That wouldn't be too bad, would it?"

"That interview with Professor Smith put into writing what I have been struggling to get across to so many of my friends....I'm a junior at Johns Hopkins University, majoring in sociology. I enjoy my major, but, unfortunately, it is not very well respected among many of my 'precareered' classmates. When I tell people I'm a sociology major, the most common reply is a smug 'Sociology? What are you going to do with that?' I confidently respond, 'Get a job.' They counter, 'What kind of job can you get with a sociology degree?' I say, 'I'm not sure....An interseting one, I hope.' By this point, they're usually both perplexed and irritated.

"...College is helping me to figure out my interests and potentials. At a school like Hopkins a high percentage of students are on a premed, pre-law, pre-CEO career warpath, I'm friends with a lot of these people, and know they don't all want to be on such a rigid career track. Parental pressure, the allure of big bucks and prestige often play a major role, but I believe, as Professor Smith does, that the fear of the unkown forces students to decide their entire lives before they graduate."

"I wish I had had access to Jim Smith's line of thinking while I was an undergraduate. I was pushed - by my parents - into a pre-law program, and now I'm in law school, and I know that this isn't what I want to do with my life...You can't possibly imagine the kinds of people I meet daily in law school - people who aren't aware that there's anything worthwhile in life except law, getting into a good firm, making lots of money. It's all they talk about and, presumably, it's all they think about....I may be too smart to be in law school. I'm smart enough to know there are options....I wish to God I could get out without disappointing my parents."

"We do have choices, don't we? I'm out of college for 10 years, and I've changed jobs four times. Many of the people I graduated with are still working their first job and, when we get together, it's obvious that they're bored stiff and simply going through the motions....I think they envy what they view as my courage in changing jobs. I don't know if it's courage or simply as Professor Smith said, the realization that people need to try many things before they decide on a life's work....My father was instrumental in shaping my willingness to experiment. He always urged me not to be too serious about life, to have fun, to pursue my dream - and to change my dream whenever I wanted."

"I majored in philosophy, and now I<"m working in retail sales. It's a dreadful job, but the plain fact is that I don't know how to do anything. College prepared me for nothing and, if I had it to over again, I'd get a trade-school kind of education. I'd get a marketable skill."

"I'm a physician not because that's what I want but because my father and grandfather were physicians. I'm continuing the noble family tradition....What a joke. I'm miserable, even though I'm a very good physician, even though last year I made more than $300,000. What a joke."

covers the condoms may not work after January 1989. Nevertheless, a condom is a condom and serves a basic purpose.

Jane Brown, the school nurse and the advisor to SHAC, said "We are not trying to offend anyone's religious or moral beliefs. We are being realistic."

The machines were not installed to encourage sexual promiscuity, but to encourage responsibilty, said Brown.

The administration consulted with a clinical psychologist and an AIDS expert before installing the machines, said Buchanan.

The SHAC survey recieved responses from over 420 students in favor of condom availability, including over 150 students who said they were not sexually active. 407 of these students said they were in favor of 24-hour availability.

Survey responses listed several possible locations for condom dispensal, including; bathrooms, laundry rooms, the nurse's office and Resident Assistant's rooms.

Bailey Oratorical slated for April 12 -$500 prize

Interested in earning $500? On Wednesday, April 12, the John M. and Thomas M. Bailey Oratorical Contest will be held in the Faculty Lounge, Ellis College Center, at 8:15 pm. A $500 prize will be awarded for the best presentation by a Juniata College student. The contest has generated a great amount of enthusiasm from the student body in the past, and this year should be no different. The theme for the contest is "A Liberal Arts Education-Demands Excellence, Fosters Acceptance!! Does it?"

The original Bailey Oratorical Award was established in 1915 by the Honorable Thomas F. Bailey, who served as president-judge of Huntingdon County from 1916 to 1936. The contest and award was established in honor of the judge's father, John M. Bailey, who had also served as president-judge of Huntingdon County from 1896 to 1903.

In the early history of Juniata College the oratorical contest was a spectacle of major proportions. A prize of $50 was awarded to the winner of the contest, but presently, an enhanced endowment contribution by Judge Bailey's son-in-law, Sedgley Thornbury, makes possible an award of $500. In addition, the name of the winner will be permanently inscribed on an antique loving cup presented by Col. Thornbury's son, Thomas Bailey Thornbury.

The contest will be judged by a panel of three outside experts. Ryan Chadwick, instructor of drama, will serve as the moderator.

Students interested in participating in this event should pick up a registration form in Chandler Blewett's office on the ground floor of Founders Hall. Registration forms must be completed and returned no later than March 28.

Science Internships featured this week

This week we're featuring internships for students in the Sciences. For additional information on these and other opportunities, talk with a Science Department Chairperson, or stop in the Internship Office, Good hall, 420.

CHEMISTRY-Merck Chemical Manufacturing Division, Danville, PA. Work in chemical manufacturing plant in areas like Chemical Engineering, Chemistry, Biochem, Microbiology. Minimum salary: $1,500/month.

CHEM./BIOCHEM./MICROBIO./PHYSIOLOGY/HISTOLOGY-Nichols Institute Lab, San Juan Capistrano, CA. Work as bench technologist doing biochemical essays, esoteric diagnostic medicine. Exposure to various diagnostic technologies. Salary: $2,000/month.

BIO/ZOOLOGY/ENVIRN. STUDIES-Philadelphia Zoo. More than 15 various internship opportunities in all areas of zoo operation. some paid, some unpaid.

BIO./GEO./ENVIRN. STUDIES/FORESTRY/ARCHAEOLOGY-Student Conservation Association, Inc. Over 800 intern positions with National Park Service, U.S. Forest Service, Fish & Wildlife Service, etc. Working in back country, with endangered species research, related work. Positions available throughout USA. Volunteer with travel, lodging, food expenses paid.

BIO/ZOOLOGY/ANIMAL SCIENCE-Lifeline for Wildlife, Inc., Stony Point, NY. 35 acre wildlife sanctuary. Interns experience all facets of wildlife rehabilitation and daily care for 500 various animals. Volunteer position, free housing.

Beirut Hostage Levin To speak at Juniata

An American journalist who was held hostage in Beirut, Lebanon will deliver the annual Will Judy Lecture at Juniata College on Wednesday, March 29 at 8:15 in Alumni Hall of the Brumbaugh Science Center. Jerry Levin, currently with the Washington, D.C. bureau of CNN (Cable News Network), will be joined in the lecture by his wife Lucille (Sis), one of the founding members of the American Hostage Committee. Levins' will discuss the "American Options in the Middle East."

Jerry Levin joined CNN in 1981 as Washington, D.C. bureau chief, moving to Chicago as bureau chief and correspondent in 1982. He was appointed Middle East bureau chief and correspondent in 1982. He was appointed Middle East bureau chief, with headquarters in Beirut, Lebanon in December 1983. On March 7, 1984 Levin was kidnapped by Arab terrorists while walking to work and was held hostage for eleven months. He escaped on February 14, 1985.

Prior to joining CNN, Levin served in a wide variety of positions in television and radio news in the nation's largest media markets. In a career that spans more than 25 years Levin has, in addition to becoming a well known figure in broadcast journalism, participated in many civic and professional activities. His background includes service on the board of directors of the New Playwrights' Theatre of Washington, D.C., and the boards of directors of the Houston Grand Opera Huild and the Houston Theatre Under the Stars.

SEX! VIOLENCE! ILLICIT DRUG USE! All this and much, much more can be found on Tone-Loc's mega-popular release, Loc'ed After Dark. Actually, the album itself isn't that popular (yet), but "Wild Thing" and "Funky Cold Medina" have brought the man (-the myth-) from L.A. major acclaim. Outside of noting the blatant steal of guitar rythms for "Wild Thing" from Van Halen's "Jamie's Cryin'", let's save space for some other stuff. Like the lyrics! My gosh - this man has some funny material. "So I gave some to my dog when he began to beg/ and he licked the bowl/ and he looked at me/ and did the wild thing on my leg...", sings (raps) Loc during "Medina" when he takes the Beastie Boy's "Brass Monkey" concept and does it ten times better.

Most of the music which surrounds the sex, drugs, and cocky-as-hell-MC-bragging themes could have come from any mid-70's city oriented TV show. "Starsky and Hutch" comes to mind. A few songs break out of this genre, such as "Don't Get Close" which has some dark sax and piano to give it an edge over most of the other tunes. "Cheeba Cheeba" supposedly banned from general commercial airplay (and for that reason becoming a big underground hit), spices things up with some "Just say YES!" (to pot) imagery and soulful (female) backing vocals. Tipper Gore and Parent's Music Resource Center must have had major cows upon hearing this song.

While being your typical arrogant rapper (it's a prerequisite, I think), Tone Loc is also self-critical at times or at least doesn't take himself too seriously. He even raps about his use of the drug theme on "I Got It Goin' On": "The proof is in the pudding/ when I start to quote/ all the stupid dope rhymes/ That I just wrote." Most of the songs on the album have slower beats which are just fine if you're into the "Acid House" doobie/dance scene - but otherwise will probably have a smaller reception than his first two singles.

"Loc'ed After Dark" is definitely worth something if you're really into rap - Tone Loc is damn good at what he does and brings a gruff sensibility and down-to-earth sound to the often too polished 80's rap genre. It's (as the catch phrase says) "Good to Go" - Three stars or whatever out of four.

Countdown begins on set of "Blithe Spirit"

By Edith Ellen Reuwer

"Lighting is not an afterthought," Bryan Miller (lighting crew) informed me. He went on to explain that lighting is as important to a production as the sets and costumes. If the incorrect lighting is used it could make a person who is supposed to be healthy look ill.

When I stopped by to visit Suzanne Erb I noticed she was on the floor typing out a list of items for Mark Moyer. I asked her if she was making this list because she was female? "No," she assured me, "It is becuase I am a crew member. I get treated like one of the guys. I have no problem with that."

Sexism is not noted in the other crews working on "Blithe Spirit." Dan Crosby (Props and Sets) said that, although the crew is mostly made up of women, there is no sexism.

This equality is also true for the publicity committee. I asked Brian Geiger what it was like to work under Jef Buehler. According to Brian, Jef is tough, but he is open minded. I must agree with that, because Jef has never squashed my creativity. The work is divided up evenly, but that doesn't mean that we don't help each other.

The costume crew is just beginning to make costumes for the play. They are working on the costumes for the publicity pictures first.

The sound crew has conquered a problem that they were having with the phone. John Olsen explained that they had to take the "innards" out of one phone, and put another ringer in it. Damien Gessner, (head of sound) explained that they are using a mini door for door slams.

All in all the preparations for the production of "Blithe Spirit" are running smoothly.

Those students who have been selected to be Resident Assistants are: Rob Biter, Ted Blair, Darren Carns, John Colbert, Jeff Fetterman, Ty Furman, Smokey Glover, Phyllis Heverly, Kathy Hoover, Lori Kieffer, Gloria Klein, Andy Larmore, Kara Laughlin, Craig Longenecker, Renee Malkin, Todd Miller, Carol Redzensky, Valerie Schmoyer, John Seckinger, Nick Spadea, and Christine Weikert.

In addition, the following students have been rehired and will return for their second year as Resident Assistant: Martin Bunn, James Griffiths, Melanie Hopkins, Susan London, Rick Russell, Heloi Stark, Laurel Stephenson, Pat Sterner, and Leigh Trautwein.

Shoemaker to present German WWII artifacts

Fifty years after Adolph Hitler's April 3, 1939, issuance of instructions for operation "Case White," the code name for the invasion of Poland which began the Second World War, Juniata College is sponsoring an exhibit of art and artifacts entitled "The German Resistance Movement 1933-1945." The exhibit will run through April 8 in the College's Shoemaker Gallaries.

The purpose of the exhibit is to make the German anti-Nazi resistance movement better known to the non-Germanic public. "On some level," according to Profesor Michael Wyschogrod, director of the German White Rose Foundation, "the American public has long been aware that Hitler and National Socialism did not enjoy the unanimous support of the German people. Soon after Hitler came to power early in 1933, a stream of anti-Nazi German refugees began to appear in Europe and the United States. The realization that there wa sa significant, if small, German resistance to National Socialism...is not very well known outside of Germany.

The exhibit features historical plates, illustrations, photographs and artifacts, such as a uniform worn by concentration camp prisoners, to illustrate the period of 1933 to 1945. The exhibition opens with a photograph of the touchlight parade by the followers of the new Reich Chancellor Hitler through the Brandenburg Gate in Berlin on the evening of January 30, 1933, the day of the so-called "machtergreifung" (seizure of power).

The nearly 300 items in the exhibit conclude with a photograph of war criminals in the dock at the Nuremberg Trials.

According to Klaus Jaeger, assistant professor of German and the exhibit's coordinator, the exhibit represents a "sobering look by the Germans of their own history." According to Professor Jaeger, "there were Germans who were opposed to the war. Small groups did resist and most of them were liquidated. This is an attempt on the part of Germans to understand and come to grips with their past and to finally honor the Germans who opposed the Nazis."

"The historical data collected in this exhibit," said Professor Wyschogrod, "will reveal to anyone who is willing to learn that reality is far more complicated than the stereotypes which classify all Germans of the 1933-1945 era as Nazis. There were Germans who fought Hitler at the risk of their lives and some indeed paid with their lives for their troubles," Wyschogrod concluded.

The exhibit is free of charge and open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Pugwash USA hits JC campus

TO THOSE INTERESTED IN VALUES AND ETHICS SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY:

You may have noticed the ASK WHY? posters on campus explaining student Pugwash. Student Pugwash USA is an educational organization which brings students from campuses in the USA and Canada together to discuss the problems facing the world today and how science and technology can be used to help solve them.

Intracampus discussions and intercollege conferences address issues such as the Greenhouse effect, the AIDS crisis, alternative energy strategies, nuclear weapons proliferation, pollution crisis and privacy in an increasingly computerized society.

A chapter of Student Pugwash will soon be started at Juniata. An informational meeting will be held at 8:30, Tuesday, March 28th in the Gold Room. Everyone interested please attend. Student coordinators Tom Ferko and Joel Meyer, who have attended a Pugwash conference, would be happy to talk about the organization to anyone who is interested. Please contact Tom at box 1097 if you are interested and unable to attend the meeting.

Exchange students recognized for excellence

Francine Rosenberger, Cherlie Byars, and Jill Klova, seniors at Juniata College were recently recognized for their participation in the Juniata College exchange program with the Federation Universitaire et Polytechnique de Lille.

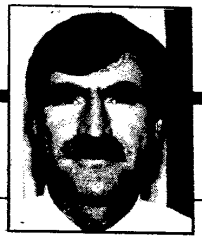
During the 1987-88 school year the students attended classes taught in French in their areas of specialty. The program is designed to immerse students in the academic, cultural and social life of a foreign country, and Juniata is strongly committed to developing this kind of in-depth international experience, according to William C. Vocke, Director of the International Programs.

William Vocke poses with the successful "French immersion" students.

Best wishes for a happy and safe Easter from the "Juniatian" staff

COLUMNS, ETC.

Counselor's Corner



By Dr. Jay Buchanan

Stop looking for the four-leaf clover! This statement was made recently by the minister at our church and it started me thinking about how many people actually believe in luck, chance, fate, and/or the actions of powerful others.

Consider the following well-accepted and oft-used expressions: "Good luck on your exam," "Boy was that a lucky break," and "I'd rather be lucky than good."

All of these statements, it seems to me, suggest that we really don't have much control as to what is going to happen to us. Hopefully, if we study and prepare for exams and other evaluative situations, good things will happen as a result.

Granted, in most cases we are merely using the term "good luck" as a figure of speech to communicate to another person that we wish them success or to do well in a particular endeavor.

Psychologists tell us that people who feel in control of most of the events in their lives are referred to as having an internal locus of control. They are better self-managers, usually more successful, and generally see themselves as being responsible for what does or doesn' happen.

On the other hand, those who have an external locus of control tend to be reactive and times often feel they are victims of fate and the environment around them. They see little relationship between what happens and their input or effort toward that outcome. Additionally, externals may blame others for what happens to them.

Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar" contains the following exhortation: "Men at some time are masters of their fates;...the fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves..."

Stop looking for the four-leaf clover and start making things happen for yourself. Take charge where you can and good things are bound to happen. We'll talk next time about ways to become more internal.

Enjoy the short Easter break with family and friends. Take care of yourself and think good thoughts.

Formulas for Thought

Dr. Richard Holm, the Higgins professor of chemistry at Harvard University, will present a bioinorganic chemistry lecture series beginning Monday, March 27 and running through Wednesday, March 29. The series, designed to give even the uninitiated a clearer understanding of the "hows" and the "whys" of research occurring in science, will be held on consecutive evenings at 8 p.m. in room A-201, Brumbaugh Science Center.

Dr. Holm began his teaching career at Harvard in 1960, following completion of his Ph.S. at Massachuesetts Institute of Technology in 1959. He remained at Harvard as an instructor and assistant professor until 1965 when he accepted a position as an associate professor of chemistry at the University of Wisconsin.

In 1967, Dr. Holm returned to M.I.T. as a professor of chemistry until 1975, at which time he accepted a similar post at Standord. Dr. Holm returned to Harvard in 1980 and was offered the Higgins chair in 1983. While at Harvard, Dr. Holm served as chairman of the department of chemistry from 1983 to 1986.

Among the many awards and honors Dr. Holm has received are the Bailar Medal for Research in Coordination Chemistry, the Harrison Howe Award, the Centenary Medal of the Royal Society of Chemistry, and the Dwyer Medal of the Royal Australian Chemical Society. Dr. Holm is mosts notably recognized for his work in the understanding of iron-sulphur proteins and molybdenum enzymes.

The series, sponsored by Juniata's department of chemistry and, in part, by the Central Pennsylvania chapter of the American Chemical Society, is designed primarily for those individuals with a prior background in chemistry, science, and/or scientific research. There will be no charge for admission to any of the three lectures.

CM Board looking for applications

By Suzanne Lydic

Do you want to make an impact on this campus? Do you want to stretch your faith? And do you want to have a good time with your peers? If you do-then apply for the Campus Ministry Board!

The Campus Ministry Board is a student group advised by Father Arsenault, Andy Murray and Chris & Terry Noyes. We organize various campus wide worship services, fellowship activities, and retreats for Juniata. We meet weekly to maintain our continuous calendar of events. The board is divided into four committees: worship, special events, fellowship and communication.

If you would like to apply--come to the Campus Ministry Office (top of Ellis) immediately! Applications are due by 5pm Monday, March 27.

Levin also served as president of the Alabama United Press International and Alabama Associated Press Broadcasters Asociations. He is a member of the National Press Club and the Chicago Press Club.

Sis Levin worked tirelessly both in the United States and in Syria for her husband's release. She became the first member of a "Forgotten Hostage" family to go public. After her husband's return to freedom, she returned to the war-torn Middle East to attempt negotiations on the remaining hostages behalf.

Seeing the hostage situation in a larger context, which includes the need for peaceful dialogue and reconciliation, Sis has become an outspoken advocate for women's involvement in world peacemaking. Her many appearances on the Today Show, Good Morning America, and network news broadcasts have produced an informal national support system of a growing number of women who realize their unique opportunity in facing the present challenge for diffusing tensions and creating world friendships. Encouraging women internationally in churches, schools, senior citizens organizations and community service groups has become her principle occupation.

The public is invited to attend the Levins' lecture, which is made possible, in part, by an endowment from the late Will Judy, a 1911 Juniata graduate. A valedictorian of the Hamilton School of Law, Judy practiced briefly in Chicago and served in the Army during World War I, rising to the rank of captain and receiving the Silver Star.

Before retiring in the late 1950's, Judy operated a Chicago publishing firm for 36 years. He wrote eight books about dogs, edited an encyclopedia about dogs, and made "Dog World" magazine the most widely read pet periodical in the nation. He also lectured frequently and judged shows in the U.S. and 26 foreign countries.

Judy made numerous financial contributions to Juniata and in 1958, 15 years before his death, provided funds to establish a lecture series "to supplement and enrich the academic program of the college."

Since its inception, the Will Judy lectureship has brought 32 speakers to the college, among them Isaac Asimov, Dick Gregory, Ruth Davis and Leo Steinberg.

Oller Hall rocked to the tunes of "Glad"

By Lance Marshall

The Christian musical group Glad performed last Saturday night at Oller Hall for the Eastern Regional Brethren Youth Conference. Over 500 screaming High School and College students attended this rock concert. The members of Glad are Ed Nalle as lead vocals, Mark on bass, John Gates on drums, Tom Beard on Keyboards and Chris Davis on lead guitar.

Glad describes their music as "contemporary, Christian music which means that the music is the same as you hear on the radio except the words are used to glorify God." During one part of the show they sang a song called "The Hymn Thing." What Glad did was to take a traditional German 18th century Hymn, change the tune and sing it as the song would have been sung in various musical eras such as jazz, country, rap and traditional rock n' roll.

Glad has been together for 13 years and has done 8 LP's. Their latest LP went out just last Friday and should hit Huntingdon area stores shortly. The album is entitled Romans and the group is very happy with it. Romans features a new keyboardist Rob Will. Tom Beard will be doing a solo project soon.

After 13 years does Glad get tired of having to tour? The answer is no. They want to use their God-given talent of exceptional voices to sing His praises and spread His truth. Their message is that to be a Christian, you must do more than just believe in Jesus, but you must follow Him.

Huntingdon was the last stop on their tour. They had spent two long months on the road and are looking forward to getting home.

It should be noted that the concert went very well, and an exceptional light show and sound system was featured. Glad considers Mike, the lighting manager, and John, in charge of sound, as much a part of the band as themselves. Glad considers themselves a seven member band. As on interested observer put it, "We were lucky to have them;" they are one of the better bands coming to the area.

Wellness Tips

J.C. WELLNESS DAY '89

Staying well is our own responsibility. Helping to keep people well has become another fine Juniata tradition by providing our students, faculty and staff an opportunity to participate in our annual Wellness Day. The Student Health Advisary Committee (SHAC) and the Health Center are planning such a day. Wednesday, March 29 from 11 to 5 the mezzanine of the varsity gym will be bustling with all kinds of testing and disemination of a wide variety of information pertaining to wellness. Over 20 agencies and services will be represented offering close to $200 worth of free testing. There will be a demonstration of correct use of nautilis equipment from 2-3, an areobics class from 3-4 (MPR), door prizes, free fruit and much much more. See the ad in today's Juniatian for more information.

Be good to yourself - come to SHAC Wellness Day '89.

Women's netters enter with an experienced squad

The Juniata College women's tennis team enters the 1989 season with one of the most experienced line-ups in its 15-year history. Seven letterwinners return for coach Ray Pfrogner from last season's 6-5 team.

The Tribe opens the new campaign with a trip to Dickinson on March 30. Juniata will play a nine-match schedule, including five dates with Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest opponents. The Indians finished 2-3 in league play last year.

"We expect to do well this season," says Pfrogner, now in the third season of his latest stint as coach. "Of course, how much the other teams improve will be a factor. However, I feel we should be more experienced and I expect another winning season."

Lycoming, Wilkes, King's, Susquehanna and Scranton join Juniata in the Northwest league. The Tribe has three of the five section match-ups at home, visiting only Wilkes and King's.

Juniata also travels to Wilson and York for non-league contests along with a home encounter with Elizabethtown.

Returning seniors Lynda Cass of Chaddsford, Alison Frutchey of Reading, Lara Mann of Waynesboro, VA, and Georgia Stanaitis of Marion, CT, will provide a solid nucleus for the Tribe.

Frutchey was 7-1 at the number-six singles spot last year while Cass and Mann were 3-8 and 4-6 respectively at #1 and #3. Stanaitis, who missed last season while studying abroad, will push to rejoin the lineup.

Juniors Amy Buckbee of Warwick and Julie Thaler of Akron were 9-1 as a doubles team last spring, finishing the regular season undefeated. Buckbee was also 7-1 in singles while Thaler was 6-4.

Another junior, Sue London of Clarks Summitt was 3-8 at the #2 singles position in '88, but will see limited action this year due to an internship committment.

"Julette Delattre, an exchange student, will probably be one of the top position players as well," says Pfrogner. "I also expect several of the incoming freshmen to compete for starting positions."

Five freshmen are on the preseason roster along with the upperclass veteran letterwinners.

Men's tennis team hopes to continue success

The 1989 Juniata College men's tennis team hopes to pick up where the 1988 squad left off last spring when the new season opens at Wilkes College on March 28. The Tribe makes its home debut April 3 against Shippensburg.

The Indians are coming off a 10-3 season that tied the school record for wins. Juniata finished 4-1 in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest section for the second straight year and just missed the playoffs.

"We should be very competitive once again and be an exciting team to watch," says first-year coach Brad Small. Small takes over for Rob Ash, whose teams were 42-39 through eight seasons.

"The team has had many successes in recent years and this year should be no different," says Small. "We have six players, four of them regulars, returning from last year."

All four back in the singles linup had excellent campaigns a year ago. Junior John Seckinger of Allentown (Parkland H.S.) was 9-4 at the number-two spot while seniors Rick Gottschall of Plattsburgh, NY, and Chris Glover of Chatham, NJ, played at the #3 and #5 positions. Gottschall (9-5) and Glover (7-5) both played in the MAC tournament.

Also back is junior Mike Welker of Altoona, who made his varsity debut last spring with a 9-1 record at the number-six spot. He looks to move up the lineup this season.

Two returning sophomores round out the returnees and hope to move into the regular six-man singles list in '89. Jeff Clukey of Mechanicsburg and Scott Peck of Bedford were 0-2 and 1-0 respectively in singles play last year. They combined for a 3-0 mark as double team as well.

Three newcomers are expected to join the squad this year, including Arendt Papenfuss and Andreas Thiele (exchange students from West Germany), along with freshman Grant Hunter of Cherry Hill, NJ (East H.S.).

"The entire team has been working hard over the winter," says Small. "I expect a lot of compeition for playing spots once we get started and into full swing."

The singles order will definitely have a new man at the top due to the graduation of Dan Corazzi. He was Juniata's number-one player for three seasons and also combined with Seckinger for an 11-3 doubles record last year. Corazzi and Seckinger advanced to the MAC tournament semi-finals last season before losing to the eventual tourney champions.

Another successful doubles team from last spring will need reworking since Mark Kearns graduated last May. Kearns, 4-6 at #4 singles, combined with Gottschall for a 9-3 mark at number-two doubles.

"Seckinger and Gottschall figure to be among the team's leading players again," says Small. "However, I think we have a good mix of experience and depth in general.

"The team is eager to get the season going," concludes Small. "We should be in position to content for the conference playoffs and have our sights set on the race for the MAC title."

Nine letterwinners pace JC golf teams in 1989 season!

Juniata College enters the 1989 golf season with one of its most experienced groups in recent years. Nine letterwinners are back from a team that finished 4-2 a year ago.

The Tribe begins the season at Susquehanna on March 28, and has two other away dates before the home opener with Western Maryland, St. Francis and Gettysburg on April 15.

"We'll have to play well on the road to be a .500 team," say co-coaches Bill Huston and Joe Scialabba, taking over the squad this spring for the first time. "Last season, every dual match was on our home course at the Huntingdon Country Club. We don't have that luxury this season."

Juniata has five away matches compared to just three on home turf. The Middle Atlantic Conference tournament concludes the schedule on April 29-30 at Shawnee-on-the-Delaware.

"The team didn't play in the MAC tournament last season due to a conflict with commencement, so it will be something for us to shoot for this year," say Huston and Scialabba. "We have the potential to improve our 16th place (out of 20 teams) finish of two years ago. The question will be whether we can improve our scores enough to push into the top ten teams in the conference."

Juniata returns all but one of its top ten players from a year ago. Seniors Tim Garvin of Jupiter, FL (Lower Moreland H.S.), Cubby Davis of Hollidaysburg and Mike Cottle of Everett (Bedford H.S.) were the top three individuals for the Tribe last spring. Garvin averaged 85.8 per 18 holes, while Davis (87.0) and Cottle (89.0) were also in the 80s.

Juniors Keith Watson of Hollidaysburg (90.5), Jeff Bertram of Clearfield (91.0) and Bob Kelley of Kean, NH (94.0) were four-five-six statistically last year. Senior Mike Speaker of Ridgeway averaged 95.0 per round while junior Chris Bistline of Carlisle was at 96.0 a round.

Sophomore Melvin Parker of Lewistown was the top freshman a year ago with a 98.3 stroke average.

"We have a number of freshmen interested in trying out for the team this year, but how much they'll contribute remains to be seen," say Huston and Scialabba. "Hopefully we'll get some good weather and have a chance to have a competitive qualifying tournament before the season. We hope to have a solid 12-man roster by April."

BRAD SMALL
Juniata Football Coach

Juniata names new head football coach: Brad Small to lead Tribe

Dr. Bradley G. Small, defensive coordinator for football and assistant director of athletics at Juniata since 1983, has been named the 16th head football coach at Juniata Collge. The announcement was made by Juniata President Robert W. Neff.

"We were looking for an individual who would dedicate himself to our philosophy of football and athletics within the context of academics at Juniata College," Neff said. "We feel we have that person in Brad Small. He has been a respected member of our football staff and college community the past six years and is dedicated to the student-athlete balance we promote at Juniata College."

"The search process was consistent with searches for all faculty and administrative positions at the College which are designed to identify the best candidates in the country," Dr. Arnold Tilden, vice president for educational planning and student services said. "We had a strong pool, and Brad Small emerged as the strongest candidate."

Small began his coaching career at Missouri's William Jewell with a B.A. degree in health and physical education, Small accepted a position as the college's defensive coordinator of freshman football, varsity football assistant and head coach of the women's swimming program.

From 1973-75 Small completed requirements for a master of education degree in reading and learning disabilities from Colorado State University, followed by two years at Simpson College of Iowa as an assistant varsity football coach. While at Simpson, he also held the position of associate dean of students.

Small was the defensive coordinator from 1977-80 at Illinois at Illinois Benedictine College, where he held concurrent positions as assistant professor of physical education, assistant track and head tennis coach. He then spent three years as assistant football coach at Springfield College (Mass.). Small received his doctor of physical education degree from Springfield and has published several football related articles in athletic journals.

"I am excited and grateful for the opportunity that has been offered to me with the head coaching position at Juniata," Small said. "Juniata successfully integrates a sound educational philosophy with the football program in a manner which provides the utmost benefit to our student-athletes. I look forward to continuing that philosophy."

Small succeeds nine-year coach Rob Ash, who accepted the head coaching position at Drake University (Iowa) in January.

"I am encouraged with the enthusiasm our current players have displayed toward Brad. All indications are we should continue our tradition as a winning football program at Juniata," athletic director Bill Berrier said.

Small and his wife Monica reside in Huntindon area with their daughter Kimberly and son Kevin.

Indian baseball team gets mixed results in South

By John Bulger

The Indian baseball team went south this year with a schedule of ten games to be played in nine days and the expectation of a lot of time spent in a bus. What they got was six games, some surprising performences from the pitching staff, and a lot of free time.

The trip started on Saturday in the rain. This caused both of the Tribe's games in Virginia, with VMI and Ferrum College to be cancelled. The first game came on Monday at Armstrong State, the opponent was Upper Iowa. Behind a strong pitching performance from Scott Close, the Indians prevailed 5-3. Close was the winning pitcher as the Indians collected their 5 runs on 9 hits with Mike Reed and Paul Hayduk having two a piece. The next day the team travelled to Daytona, Florida to play Walbash College. With several Juniata students on hand the Indians ripped Walbash 13-0 to up their record to 2-0. Mike Reed got the win. The team was scheduled to play a nightcap at Daytona with Embry Riddle but the rain prevailed once again sending the Indians back to Savannah to Indiana University Southeast. Behind a strong pitching performance from Scott Munro and eleven hits the Tribe won their third straight 3-2. George Zanic, Kevin Neff, and John Bulger all collected two hits for the winners. Scott Close got his second win in relief of Munro. The first loss of the trip came on Thursday at the hands of Division II powerhouse Armstrong State. Freshman Eric Reedinger got the start and the 9-3 loss. Mike Reed and Jim Tomassetti had two hits while Hayduk and Dave Reed homered for the Indians. The Indians followed up this loss with to more disappointing defeats. First, the Indians dropped to Assumpton 6-5. Neff took the loss in the close game. The tribe was down 5-0 in the fifth inning but rallied back to tie the score, yet they were unable to cap the winner. The next day in Ashland, Virginia the tribe fell to Randoph Mason 3-2 despite a strong pitching performance by Mike Reed and hard hitting by Hayduk and Bulger. The Indians took a 2-0 lead into the sixth only to see it slip away. The final game of the trip with Mary Washington was cancelled due to snow so the team returned home with a tainted 3-3 record.

The team started play in Pa. with a Friday game at Geneva and again lost a heartbreaker 8-7 in 10 innings. The Indans scored 4 in the first on hits by Mike Reed, Hayduk, Amo Cianci, and Bulger. Geneva scored its first on a solo home run in the third. Geneva then scored 3 in the fifth chasing starter Scott Munro. With the scored 7-6 Juniata in the ninth Dan Dewberry of Geneva tied the score with a solo blast. Geneva won it in the tenth when Van Zanic scored from first on a Mike Manez double. Close took the loss in relief for the tribe putting his record at 2-1 and the teams at 3-4.

In the Tribe's home opener this past Saturday Albright visited College Hill, for a MAC doubleheader. The Indians took the first game 7-4 with Mike Reed getting the win and Nick Spadea coming in to get the save. The Lions led early 1-0 but after that it was all Juniata. The Indians took a 7-1 lead into the seventh behind the home run hitting of Jim Tomassetti. In the second game a different Indian squad took the field. Albright silenced the Tribes bats and held them to three runs while scoring 4 of their own. Kevin Neff took the loss for the Indians. The loss puts the Tribe in a must win situation as far as the MAC goes, and puts their record at 4-5 overall 1-1 and in the MAC.

Indian track team eager to start new season on new track

The Juniata College track and field program moves into an exciting new era as the 1989 season begins. The opener against Lycoming on March 29 will be the official debut of Juniata's new all-weather track surface at Knox Stadium.

"Our new facility has given the program a real boost," says coach Alan Hartman. "We have an excited group of veterans and newcomers getting ready for the season."

The Juniata men's team hopes to improve last year's 3-3 record, as do the women who were 2-5 a year ago. The Tribe was 14th in the men's meet and 17th in women's competition at the 17-team Middle Atlantic Conference Championships last spring.

"Our problem in the past has been depth," says Hartman. "This year we have the numbers to combine quantity with quality to be competitive in MAC competition. We've had some upperclass people return to the program after taking time off, while also adding a good recruited class.

"Our weakness, especially early in the season, could be conditioning. I hope by the middle of the year we'll see some very fine times and distances."

Hartman has three returning seniors ready to move into leadership roles for the Indians. Brent Bittner of Kersey (St. Mary's H.S.), in the javelin, Randy Martin of St. Peters (Pennsbury H.S.), in the throws and 400 meters, and Eric Mitchell of Havertown (Haverford H.S.), a sprinter, are back for Juniata.

"Our three seniors have been very dedicated," says Hartman. "I think our strength for the men will be in the field events. We'll be okay on the track but depth will be the problem."

Top performers in the field could be junior Peter Grubb of Telford (Lansdale Catholic H.S.) and Frank Shue of Centre Hall (Penns Valley H.S.), all in the weight events.

Hartman expects junior Eric Arone of Homer City (Homer-Center H.S.), sophomores Dave Gleim of Allentown (Whitehall H.S.), Scott Shehan of Three Springs (Southern Huntingdon H.S.), and freshman Curtis Randolph of Danville (Wyoming Seminary H.S.) to handle the jumping events while sophomore Rob Rohrer of Duncannon (Susquenita H.S.) is the top pole-vaulter.

On the track, juniors John Flesher of Harrisburg (CD East H.S.), Jeff Moseman of Quarryville (Solanco H.S.) and Bill Mundy of Minersville (Nativity H.S.) will handle the middle distances. Dan Cain of Williamsburg (Chief Logan H.S.), who will also throw the javelin.

The longer distances will be controlled largely by sophomores Ted Breault of Coraopolis (Moon H.S.) and Andy Larmore of Wilmington, DE, (The Tatnall School), along with frosh Matt Cain of Williamsburg (Chief Logan H.S.).

"Our depth will be a little more noticeable this year than last year on the women's side," says Hartman. "I think we could see a great deal of improvement."

Hartman cites seniors Diane Hontz of Mohnton (Governor Mifflin H.S.), a hurdler, and Anne Telfeian of Columbus, NJ (Northern Burlington County Regional H.S.), a jumper and hurdler, for their hard work in the off season. They will be leaders, according to Hartman.

The women will also get a big lift in the sprints events. Senior Angie Orwig of York (Dallastown H.S.), junior Renee Malkin of Central City (Shade H.S.), and freshmen Chris Fryzlewicz of Portage and Amy Hohman of Johnstown (Bishop McCort H.S.) are expected to be the key contributors. Junior Heidi Loych of Middletown, who is recovering from an ankle injury, will also help with the sprints and relays.

Juniors Lisa Peterson of Pittsburgh (Baldwin H.S.) and Leigh Trautwein of Pitman (Tri-Valley H.S.), along with freshman Sandy Corliss of Malvern (Great Valley H.S.) will handle the middle distances. The longer runs will feature senior Crickett Julius of York (York Catholic H.S.) and freshman Kim Wurth of Norwichtown, CT(Academy of the Holy Family).

In the field, senior Donnell Orleski of Scranton (Riverside H.S.) and freshman Michelle Teeter of Mechanicsburg will have the responsibility of bringing points from the throwing department. Freshman Angie Gessner of Paxinos (Shikillamy H.S.) will join Malkin in the jumping events.

The hurdles should be improved thanks to another freshman, Heather Jones of Selinsgrove, along with Telfeian and Hontz.

"Overall, I believe we are beginning to see our program take a very positive turn toward a brighter future," concludes Hartman. "We have a great team attitude, and our student-athletes have been working very hard."

Hartman is being assisted this spring by former Juniata track standout Doug Spayd of Huntingdon and Juniata cross country coach Jim Payne.

Noel coward's 'Blithe Spirit' comes to life at JC this weekend

One of Noel Coward's best known comedies will literally "come alive" on stage when the Juniata College Theatre presents "Blithe Spirit" in Oller Hall on March 29,30,31, April 1,5,6, and 7 at 8:15 p.m. and a matinee at 2:00 p.m. on April 8.

"Blithe Spirit" is set in the living room of Charlie and Ruth Condimine in Kent, England. Mr. Condimine, a mystery writer, holds a seance to call back his dead wife Elvira, in order to get material for his latest novel. He's successful in his attempt and Elvira comes to live with them. However, Mr. Condimine is the only one who can see her.

Noel Coward wrote the play in five days in 1941 for the British who desperatley needed comedy at that time. This light-hearted play has been updated to modern day for the performance at Juniata College.

Charles Condimine is played by Rush Blady and Ruth Condimine is played by Shana Herb. Joann Rishel will play Elvira and Carol Ann Redzensky will portray Madame Arcati. Rob Biter will play Dr. Bradman, Sharon Cadman will play Mrs. Bradman and Amy Carter will play the maid.

Accoridng to Ryan Chadwick, director of the play, the students have been working extremely hard on this performance. The actors and actresses are all using British accents and have used an exchange student from London as a consultant to master the language. "Noel Coward is very difficult for people of this age and they have really responded to the challenge," Chadwick said.

"The community will not only get an enjoyable night of entertainment, but they will be showing their support of educational theater," Chadwick added.

The audience will be seated in the half round on stage and so there will only be a limited number of tickets for each performace. There is no admission price and tickets are available at the information desk. For more information you may call 643-4310 ext.330.

And the survey said...

In November, at the request of the Admnistrative Unit, the Student Health Advisory Committee (SHAC), conducted a survey of the student body concerning the distribution of condoms on the Juniata College campus. Results of the survey indicated overwhelmingly that the students of Juniata College felt that condoms should be made available on a twenty-four hour basis at some location on the campus.

Many constructive and helpful comments were noted on the returned surveys which indicated that it was taken seriously by a majority of students. As a result of the survey and several Administrative Unit meetings with SHAC members, it was decided to make condoms available on a trial basis twenty-four hours per day by dispenser in both the male and female restrooms on the ground floor of the Ellis College Center.

Installation and maintenance of the condom machines will be provided by a private, off-campus contractor and any proceeds from sales will be used by SHAC for health education programming.

Information on the safe use of all birth control methods, including abstinence, will be provided near the machines. Administrative Unit and SHAC welcome your comments.

Apply now to lead new Juniatians

Curent Juniata students are invited to apply for Summer Orientation Leader positions. Orientation Leaders are an important component of the College's orientation program for incoming freshmen. Qualifications include: good communication skills, demonstrated involvement in co-curricular actvities, good academic standing, and a general knowledge of the College. Orientation Leaders are required to be on campus June 15-29, 1989. Compensation for the position is room and meals while on campus and a salary of $300. Applications will be available beginning April 3, 1989 in the Residential Life Office (213 Founders) and completed applications are due by 12:00 noon on April 10, 1989.

Editorial

Well Seniors, only 46 more days until some of us have to face reality. I feel sorry for you guys (those who will be working), but on the other hand you people headed for the work force probably feel sorry for those of us who have choosen to continue killing ourselves in the classroom. Eithier way you look at it we won't be here anymore! But that<"s sad also.

I for one have had a great four years. True, there have been many things that have happened here that I don't particulary like or understand, but I lived through them. I guess I<"ve been lucky! I have't had to deal with the infamous Registrar's office, the wonderful Housing office, or the J-Board. But on the other hand I have had to deal with getting a refund for meals that I miss because of my internship. All I can say is I think I've been ripped off! I<"ve also had to pay money to have the privilege of parking my car on Juniata property. My question is, and always will be, Where does that money go? It sure doesn't fill the craters in East parking lot. Someday my tiny litte car will be swallowed by one of these huge holes full of water.

To continue with this complaining, just what exactly does the "graduation fee" pay for? I thought my contribution of some $30,000 plus odd dollars over the past four years entitled me to all the trimmings of a nice graduation. Guess not since this little fee showed up on last month's bill. Next year's seniors better start saving now. Don't be led to believe they stop asking for money after you make the last tuition payment. Not a chance! Guess I could go on and on and on, but there just isn't enough space in this entire paper for me to do so.

The last thing I want to say, and not in the form of a complaint, is that the most valuable thing this college gave me was my friends. I've had a great four years because of these people and this past year has been one of the best! Thanks to my roomates and all of those other fun people that have made life worth getting up for in the morning. And last but not least, this school did give me a great education that enabled me to choose the law school I wanted to attend. Now for another three years of studying and mind torture!

Good Luck Seniors!

From the Pen of ...

Hello Juniata students! Anyone awake out there? Anyone reading this column? God, I hope so, because I don't really have time to write this.

Today I'd like to talk about...THE MEANING OF LIFE! Actually, it's not quite that bad, but it's close enough.

What do YOU do with YOUR free time? Let me guess. You play some sports, get drunk, have sex, watch TV, or maybe listen to some music. And, all things considered, you probably think its a pretty full life. Well, if you fall into this category, I've got some bad news. You're missing out on an incredible amount of life. In fact, you're hardly living at all. Now don't get me wrong. I couldn't live without music. Sports can be a great part of life. Everybody should get plastered every now and then. Anybody who gives up sex is insane. TV...well, TV sucks, but everybody watches it, so who cares?

But, whether we like to admit it or not, none of these things mean a damn thing in reality. None of these things can answer any of the "big questions." Who am I? What does it mean to be alive? And, for God's sake, who makes up the amazing menu over at Baker?

But seriously folks, THINKING is the most important part of life. Honest! Within every person is a world of potential. Within each human being is the ability to figure out what it all means. And once you start to think, you never stop. You start to realize that all this other crap (I don't think I'm allowed to say "shit") is pretty pointless.

Sound depressing? Well, it is sometimes. But then you remember what it was like back when you were unconscious, when you didn't really bother to think about anything. And then you say "could I have ever been that dense?" I can't say that I've made much progress in figuring out the answers to the "big questions" Maybe I never will. But I sure have figured out that some of the common answers are a bunch of bull. If anybody claims that they have the answers or that they can show you exactly wher you can find them, they are a fool or a liar. It's something you have to figure out for yourself, and it's the most important thing you can do in your life.

So, the next time you're hanging around and haven't got anything to do, try something that incolves your mind and not just your body. Your body is going to get old and wrinkled someday anyway, but your mind will always be there (hopefully). Read a book and see if it stirs up any ideas, If so, talk to a professor about it. Or try a deep conversation with your friends. If they tell you you're becoming a geek, tell them to kiss your butt, (I don't think I<Rm allowed to say "ass"). Or, if you're really feeling intellectual, go sit under a tree in the cool shade and contemplate...THE MEANING OF LIFE.

Well, I've had my say. I don't know if I've accomplished much, but I've tried. All I can say in summary is this: thinking for its own sake is a wonderful thing, and anyone or anything that tries to take away your absolute freedom of thought is pure poison. Use your mind well, it's the only thing of value you will ever have.

PUZZLE SOLUTION

Someone (and you know who you are) told me the other day that I have this innate quality of being chronically sarcastic. I was appalled, revolted, offended, vexed, and all those other words one finds in a thesaurus. What, me sarcastic? Surely you must be thinking of somione else. I'm nothing but a happy camper here a Camp Juniata. Just ask snyone. The only reason I know theres ONLY 44 DAYS UNTIL GRADUATION is for statistical puróposes only. Perhaps this misled individual is misinterpreting true sincerity for superficial conversation because a strange lull has dampened my dampened my otherwise vivacious personality. These cold, rainy days find me singing choruses of how I left my heart in Daytona. Well, not really, I don't sing. However, I am reminded of how we passed those dreary days by pressing our noses against the window, watching the beach disappear and reassuring Toto that we really did leave Huntingdon despite the weather. Mother Nature was playing a nasty joke on us. The punchline: Daytona has no beach. They just put that in the brochures. I thought the ocean was supposed to be my friend, but I was left to think again. Naturally, the endless (and I really do mean endless) amounts of beer eased our discomforts along with other elements. In fact, I didn't even notice the backs of my hands resembled a coloring book I once owned when I was two (from the stamps of the bars). Nor did I notice how many times I did the 'wild thing'- figuratively speaking, of course. You'd never find this much maddness in Central PA. Where but Daytona would I get a box of condoms (that haven't expired) thrown my way, while I innocently basked in the last rays of sun that I would see for about five days? Getting lost in this other time and place has one overlook the small, minute details of contacts fusing to the corneas and abdomens forming the appearance of quarter kegs. Whoops, I said the "K" word. Alas, all this and more was brought to an abrupt halt when the week's end drew near. Bolted balcony doors, hard body contests, and flag rugby were quickly becoming a mere memory. As I reminisce all this, I wish I'd carried a 'Christina Can' so I could see again what actually happened. I didn't even get on MTV. Once again, Mother Nature had to get in the last laugh- we reluctantly departed our temporary refuge with a bright sunny day among us. Hence, the inevitable was finally here: The bus ride from Hell. Being cold, white, hungover, and locked inside a smelly bus for some 17 hours tends to make one sympathetic of a criminal on death row- but sarcastic? Never. I don't know about anyone else, but I'd rather eat a year's supply of Jalapena Cheez Whiz, vomit profusely and be left to drown in it then go through that again. Although, I must admit this was one of the better weeks of my college life. I was even reunited with a lost sibling of mine. It was he who encouraged me to throw caution out the window. (Oh, wait- that wasn't spring break.) But anyway, I think that was everyone's motto. That's what spring break is all about. It's somewhat disheartening to think I'll never have that life again- not at least until the next lounge party. Of course anyone who agrees with me on this matter whould be dyed a natural color and hung out to dry. In case someone didn't notice, I'm being sarcastic.

Wellness is more than physical... read on!

by Paulette Papadopoulous
Graduate Intern
Counseling Center

In the past two decades, the philosophy of wellness has been growing significantly. Wellness activities have been integrated into America's corporations and industries and just recently, is beginning to become a part of the institutions of higher education. Just what is wellnes and why is it important?

There have been several definitions of wellness. It is a philosophy invlolving one's personal choice, self-responsibility, and commitment to live life to its fullest. Targeting an underlying theme of the definitions of wellness, one might state that wellness is creating an optimally functioning self by integrating the body, mind, and spirit. One of the goals of wellness is to integrate the needs of a whole functioning human being---the intellectual, the emotional, the physical, the social, the occupational, and the spiritual. This six dimensional model which was developed at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point, has been the prototype for university wellness programs across the country.

Wellness is important because it promotes self-esteem, releases stress, integrates the components of health, and allows the individual to function as a whole human being. Wellness promotion in higher education encourages students to take the responsibility of leading a healthy life style. As Americans become aware of what it takes to develop a healthy life style, institutions of hegher education can have a great impact upon this new awareness. The new awareness focuses on areas that were not previously considered to be involved with health and well-being (mainly that of occupational choice).

Students leading a healthy life style may gain a better chance of successful job placement since corporate America realizes that good health is good business. Here at Juniata, students are being encouraged to take a proactive approach to career development. In the next issue, I'd like to discuss the occupational wellness dimension and what Juniata is doing to promote occupational wellness.

Read and win in library contest

Bored with tests and termpapers? Do you need a change from tedious routine? Then break out of the doldrums and add some excitement to your life by playing "Convivial Pursuits." Yes, sportsfans, Beeghly Library announces Round 2 of the contest everyone on campus is talking about. All you have to do is be the first student to correctly answer the 10 questions below, and you'll be the winner of the O.I.P. pizza of your choice. Sounds simple, doesn't it? Well, keep in mind that you'll be matching wits with the likes of Rondo "Einstein" Hersh and Jerry "Bright Boy" Albright, last month's winner. Answers are due in the library office by April 30, and don't forget that a complete citation (title, page, volume, call number, etc.) for each answer must be included as well.

1. What is the name of the film about the Rolling Stones U.S. tour in the late 1960's? Who made it?
2. How much did it cost to run the F.B.I. in 1988?
3. What is the official state beverage of Pennsylvania? (No kidding, folks!)
4. What is the active ingredient in Tylenol? When was Tylenol first patented in the U.S.?

All right - just what the hell is going on here!? Have bands lost all sense of creativity? Are there any groups out there with the balls to write their own songs anymore? Picture this scene: You're sitting there in front of the "Peach Elephant" (Oller Hall) trying to enjoy the unseasonably seasonable weather before Easter Break comes to an end. The Scott "Sure, I pump helium into my bloodstream intravenously to enable me to talk this way" Shannon countdown is being blasted from somewhere in the Arch.

Song #5 comes on: "And here's Poison ", Mr. Helium Head exudes, "with their latest song - a definite Rock hit - 'Your Momma Don't Dance'!" Wrong, Jack. First, the only way you can compare Poison with Rock is when discussing geological formations and the band's collective cranial contents. More importantly, however, is to not that it was Loggins and Messina who wrote and originally performed the song. Poison simply went out, bought the sheet music and reaped the benefits of someone else's talents. O.K., Poison did at least add something to the song: A 3-chord guitar solo and 30 pounds of Mary Kay Cosmetics.

"And this weeks new #4...", Shannon continues, "is Kylie Minogue's 'Locomotion'...". Pardon me whilst I wretch my guts out. so what if she used to be a pin-up girl? Do you think for a minute that Little Eva meant for her song to be turned into techno-pop trash? (Besides, everybody knows that Kylie's voice is actually Rick Astley being played at 45.)

#3 would be something like :"Motley Crue doing a cover of Def Leppard's version of 'I Wanna Rock And Roll All Night' by Kiss". #2 would be the crossover hit of Run-DMC's mix of James Brown's classic "Sex Machine" with cult-favorite "Bitchin' Camaro" by the Dead Milkmen. But you get the idea by now.

It seems as though no one want to take a chance and actually write and perform their own material. Sure, we've always had cover bands, but they stuck to bar rooms and proms - not national/international airplay. The trend used to be that a band played covers first, honed their skills, paid their dues and then, when and if they got good, did their own stuff and made their money. Now, it seems that it's the other way around. Bands get the big break by playing someone else's music. No wonder more groups resort to the "cover" option: It seems to be what the music industry wants and what the people (you and I) are willing to accept. And I guess if we aren't careful, we may end up being force-fed disco versions of everything from "The Entertainer" to "I am the Walrus", a meal not too many of us could stomach.

By the way, the #1 song would've been REM's extended remix version of Arlo Guthrie's "Alice's Restaurant". Talk about sensory overload! That song would kill people.

I suppose the whole point of this mess is to help spread some awareness about the general poor status of some of today's popular music - and at the very least show everyone the proper way to spell Kylie Minogue's name.

As usual:

The Greek Speaks sort of

--Opening day is just around the corner so I figured that it is time to make some pennant picks:

A.L. West-Oakland A's hands down.

A.L. East-It will come down to game 162 but the Yankees will beat the Red Sox.

N.L. West-The Cinncinati Reds will win it for Rose.

N.L.East-The Bucs will beat the Mets and Gary Carter (whom I hate with a passion) will finally retire.

World Series-Pirates over Yankees in seven.

If I were Nick Leyva I would ask for a one year vacation for my club.

Even though he did play in Philadelphia Steve Carlton ranks with baseball's greatest lefthanders. One has to wonder why he can't retire and wait for his induction into the Hall of Fame. Any comeback that he makes will just soil many fans memories of him.

Brad Small is living proof that hard work pays off.

As for the NCAA Basketball championship: Michigan over Illinois, Duke over Seton Hall, Duke over Michigan in the Final. These games are high scoring ones and Duke is undefeated in games in which the score over 80. I also have to go with Duke since they beat my Hoyas, one to you Murph.

It has come to my attention that there is a arguement about who will be remembered as the greatest player in NBA history-Bird or Jordan. The answer: Hands down, the banners are in The Garden, and Larry Bird wears the championship rings, case closed!

Women's tennis starts out on right foot!

The Juniata Women's tennis team opened their season last Thursday with an impressive 8-1 win over Penn State Altoona. Winning for the team was #2 singles player Michelle Frye. She beat her opponent in straight sets, 6-0, 6-3. Senior Lynda Cass rattled Altoona's #3 player with a win of 6-0, 6-3. Lara Mann, also a senior and playing #4, consistently beat her opponent, 6-1, 6-1. Junior Julie Thaler cranked out yet another win 6-0, 6-2. Senoir Alison Frutchey crushed Altoona's #6 player 6-0, 6-0. Exchange student Juliette Delattre playing #1 for the team lost her match after a valiant effort 6-1, 3-6, 3-6.

With five points under their belt, the Juniata team added three more points to their score by sweeping the doubles action. Playing #1 doubles were juniors Julie Thaler and Amy Buckbee. Senior team, Lynda Cass and Georgia Stanaitis thrashed Altoona's #2 doubles 6-1, 6-2. Sue London, a junior, and Courtney Macek, a freshman, teamed up at #3 to beat their opponents 6-1, 6-1.

The women will play away today at Dickinson but will be entertaining at home on Saturday with a match against Lycoming. Come watch, enjoy, and show your support.

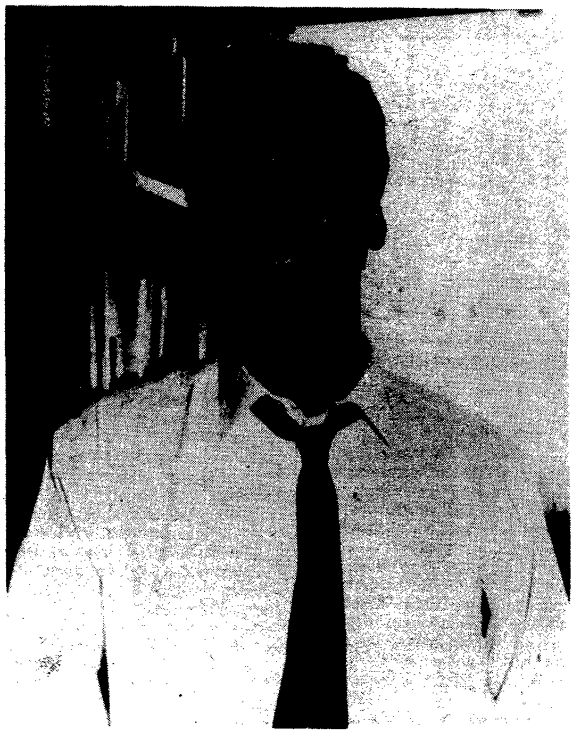
Vol. XXXV No. 22 Juniata College • Huntingdon, Pa 16652 April 6, 1989



Bruce Weigl, nominated for a Pulitzer Prize in poetry, will speak at Juniata College Thursday, April 13. Weigl, an English instructor at Penn State, has won numerous awards for his poetry.

Noted poet will speak at JC

By Janine Hyde

Poet Bruce Weigl, Pulitzer Prize nominee, author and editor, will present a reading on Thursday, April 13, at 8:15 in the faculty lounge at Ellis Hall. A reception will follow.

The reading, sponsored by the Juniata College Arts and Lectureship Council and hosted by Professor Marty Lammon, will feature work from Weigl's books, including "Song of Napalm", which is currently up for the Pulitzer. Weigl will also be visiting the U.S. Foreign Policy class and the Contemporary Poetry class.

Besides poetry, Weigl has also edited two collections of essays on contemporary American poets. His poetry, essays, articles, and reviews have appeared in such magazines and journals as The American Poetry Review, Mother Jones, The Nation, The Ohio Review, Tri Quarterly, and others. In addition, his poetry has been widely anthologized, most recently in The Morrow Anthology of Younger American Poets.

For his work, he has been awarded a Pushcart Prize, a research grant from Old Dominion University, a Pennsylvania Arts Council Grant, The "Breadloaf Fellowship in Poetry," a YADDO Foundation Fellowship, and an award for "Contributions to American Culture" from the Vietnam Veterans of America in 1987.

From 1967 to 1968, Weigl served with the First Air Cavalry in Vietnam, and it is from his experiences in Vietnam that Song of Napalm evolves.

Song of Napalm, The Monkey Wars, and A Romance are currently available in the bookstore. Copies may also be obtained at the reading on April 13.

This is foreign language week

In Juniata College's ongoing effort to provide a broad based, international scope to the educational process the college is sponsoring Foreign Language Week. Activities for the week, scheduled from April 3-10, are intended to provide people with a "world view<R," with the ultimate goal being global interdependence.

On April 6, Dr. Hans-Jochen Brauns, a visiting German Woodrow Wilson Fellow, will present a lecture entitled "Social Policy in Europe." The lecture will be at 8:15 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of the Ellis College Center.

The award-winning Argentinian film "Man Facing Southeast," subtitled in English, is on the schedule for April 7 at 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall. The film, which has been called "an adult E.T.," deals with the lonely life of a Buenos Aires doctor who finds an alien in his hospital's psychiatric ward. The doctor is unsure if the alien is real or imaginary and has problems despiphering reality.

There will also be a German Resistance reception on April 7 from 7-9 p.m. in the Shoemaker Gallery. The reception will mark the April 8 closing of the German Resistance Exhibit.

On April 8, Los Muchachos, an actors group from the national touring company of "A Peasant of El Salvador," will perform their original play about Central America entitled "Flight of the Quetzal." The play is an effort to promote a better understanding among the people of the Americas. It will be performed at 8:15 p.m. in the Ballroom of the Ellis College Center.

Foreign Language Week will end with the German film "The White Rose" on April 10 at 7:30 in Alumni Hall. The film, subtitled in English, presents aspects of the German Resistance during 1942. It focuses on an anti-Nazi group of students and activists, called "White Rose," who were sentenced to death.

These events are free and everyone is encouraged to attend. Foreign Language Week is sponsored by the Juniata College Foreign Language department.

More attention should be given to recycling

Accumulation of waste is a growing problem in America and in the world. In Chicago, where I come from, it is estimated that all available land for landfills will be filled up within 10 years. The situation is less acute in rural areas such as Huntingdon, but still bad enough that the Pennsylvania legislature passed a law requiring that the communities of over 5000 people be recycling at least three items within 5 years.

Most of Juniata's dorms are successfully recycling aluminum cans. For those who are interested, there is now also a glass recycling facility in Huntingdon at the intersection of 6th and Allegheny. It is open on Saturdays 9:00-2:00 and 3:30-5:00 Monday through Friday.

In addition, you may have noticed boxes for used paper in the computer center, near the mailboxes, or in your dorms. Paper which is being collected is white computer, typing, or ditto paper with black and blue ink only. Also, all newspapers can be recycled regardless of the ink on them. Please do not put colored paper or notebook papers in the boxes because they can't be recycled. The Conservation Club, Human Concerns Committee, and Scouting Club are working to gather paper which will be trucked to a recycling facility at the end of the year. Please help us and the environment by throwing your waste paper in the boxes, and by encouraging your RHAs to support recycling in your dorm!

David Perrigo (left) and George Sanchez are Los Muchachos. They will present their original play "Flight of the Quetzal" on Saturday, April 8.

Editorial

I received a letter from a friend of mine who is studying abroad this year. She took me back slightly when she said that she now looks at Juniata in a different light; that she sees the "looking out for number one", the backstabbing, and the conservativism of our small community on college hill. I had experienced these things previously in my short stay here, but I chose to ignore them. An incident happened the other night, though, that has pushed me to the limit; I have decided to speak out.

My main concern is about the conservativism on campus. I find that when it comes to change or trying to introduce more modern ideas, the majority of the campus drags their feet. They seem to want to remain with the old ideas and the old ways; suggestion of a change or something different is considered an outrageous proposal. To the conservatives, I would like to pose one question; how many people are you keeping from being themselves when you condemn change or something which is different than what you are used to?

I see many people on campus trying to make a statement about themselves, but I also hear the comments which are made about these people. Are we that intolerant that we can not just accept people for who they are or who they are striving to be?

Not all of us are from the same walk of life, but we all must unify and work together to be a true success. We have much to learn from each other and each person on this campus has something to offer. Don't be afraid to stand up and be accounted for, but don't look down upon someone who may not fit exactly into the mold you have formed. It may be difficult at times, but you need to look past the differences in a person to what they can contribute to you and your surroundings. Who knows, maybe you'll make a few new friends!

By Lance Marshall

You know, I was reading some magazines and newspapers this week, and I could not help but think, "Where in the world do some people come up with these ideas?" Now granted, coming to such a fine learning institution as Juniata for $13,000 a year is supposed to make me a little smarter than the rest of the world, but even 3rd graders know better than to do some of the things that are going on today.

You're probably wondering what I am talking about. Let me show you an example. Newsweek in the April 3 edition quoted La Toya Jackson as saying "Madonna is not a lady. She never was, and never will be." Certainly Madonna is not the world's most outstandingly moral, upright person, but I guess that you most pose naked in Playboy to deserve the title of a lady.

How about this one, quoted in the same Newsweek article, "outside of the killings, we have one of the lowest crime rates in the country." That was by Washington D.C.'s mayor Marion Barry. I guess then, if you're not worried about getting killed, Washington D.C. is an all right place to live.

How about Pete Rose? Now there is a person every young American can be proud of. I am sure I would want to trade my World Series ring in for a few bucks too if I was a millionaire and thought I could "earn" more money by gambling.

You know Disney wants ot sue the Academy awards because they used Snow White in a bad way. Way to go Walt. If any of you saw the Academy Awards, you know that Snow White was portrayed in a way that was less than upstanding. My question goes to the Academy Awards to why you would want to use Snow White in such a way, and then not even ask Disney's permission to use her like you did?

As for tabloids, the kings of great idea, someone this week got the idea that the world will be invaded by extraterrestrials in the year 1992, Arsenio Hall is a homosexual and likes them in threes, and Elvis is still alive, you can always count on that one. Are these people joking or what? More scarily, are there people who really believe in this stuff or what? Well, I guess if you can believe that Jimmy Swaggart is a man of God I guess you'll believe anything.

On a little more serious note, I was unaware until last week about all the racial prejudices going on in the college around the mountain. Now why would any group want to publish hate mail? I mean, if you don't like someone because they are a jerk or something like that, that is one thing, but not to like someone because of their skin color is really absurd. I know some of the few blacks on this campus, and I find them very easy to get along with. This is really something from the 50's, I hate to use an old cliche, but let's judge a man by what he does and not his skin color. I thought these things went without saying.

This same Neo-Nazi group which I am talking about wants people to also believe that the Holocaust was also a hoax. Are we to believe that 6 million people wanted to kill themselves because they were having a bad day, c'mon now, where do you get these ideas?

All right, maybe I am a little stuck on myself being a white, upper middle class and college educated, but I most certainly would not by Mars from anyone. My last question is to people who really believe that Elvis is alive, I have some ocean-front property in Nevada to sell you.

By John Deppen

I would like to express my sincerest gratitude to those of you who helped with my campaign and most especially to those of you who took the time to vote for Kelly Senetcen and myself. Though the headline said "few voters," it was actually the highest turnout in three years.

I hope to make use of this enthusiasm in order to transform Juniata's Student Government. There is much to be done, and Kelly and I cannot do it alone. We are going to need dedicated, responsible senators if we are to accomplish anything. If you have a sense of commitment and service, please - consider running for the Student Senate. Elections will be held soon after room-draw. There is one senator elected from each of the following: Cloister, Lesher, South, Tussey, Terace, Sherwood, Northwest, Northeast, Flory-Kline, Long-Miller, college owned off-campus housing and non-college owned off-campus housing.

If Student Government is to be an effective, respectable, representative body, it must be in touch with the thoughts and sentiments of the students. If you took the time to vote (and even if you didn't), why not take this time to jot down what you believe to be the most important issues affecting student life at Juniata? Send them to Box 995, the Student Government address. Once we know what you're thinking, we can begin to plan ways to address your concerns.

Kelly and I are committed to making Student Government a success. There's not going to be any "malaise" in this administration. I'm looking forward to meeting the challenges ahead and to working with students, administrators, faculty and staff members in making Juniata's Student Government what it ought to be - an endeavor to be taken seriously and an organization of which to be proud.

The Greek Speaks

by George Zanic

I thought I better get back to writing before John Bulger made any more stupid predictions, so here I go again.

No one asked me, but:

This is probably the best sports week of the year. You can see the NCAA basketball championship, the opening of Major League Baseball, Golf's Masters, the start of the NHL playoffs and of course Susquehanna at Juniata in MAC baseball. Notice that I did not include Wrestle Mania V.

While this may be a great week

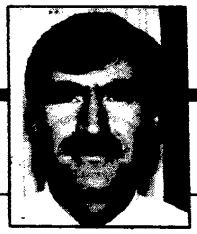
Counselor's Corner



By Dr. Jay Buchanan

In the last article we discussed the locus of control construct suggesting that internals, as opposed to externals, were more successful and in control of themselves and the environment around them. Let's look at some ways to move to a more internal locus of control so as to begin to see ourselves responsible for events and not victims of events.

One particular method is simply believing that you really are in control and that resolution of most of our problems is within your means (there are very few things that we can't fix). Part of believing in yourself includes changing your internal dialogue from negative self-talk to positive self-talk. Known in psychological jargon as cognitive restructuring, it involves actively refuting our negative self-statements. As psychologist S.C. Kobasa says, "Use your head, not your emotions, when problems pop up in front of you like space invaders".

Another suggestion toward moving to an internal locus of control is sorting out things over which we have control. We must realize that we do not have total control, but that we have more control than we really think. The key, it seems to me, is to put our time and energy into situations where we perceive we have some control.

Yet another consideration for becoming more internal has to do with assumption of responsibility for our behavior and the consequences. "I didn't have enough time" seems to be a favorite of externally oriented individuals. Many people need to stop blaming others for their failures.

Finally, we should understand that changing our locus of control from an external to an internal orientation is bound to take some time and effort. Effecting positive change, among other things, requires taking things one step at a time.

Take care of yourself, tell the people who are important to you just how you feel and think good thoughts.

New scholarship to aid Blair county students

Juniata College recently received over $22,200 from the Edith Davis Eve Foundation for the establishment of a scholarship endowment, according to Dr. Clayton N. Pheasant, vice-president for college advancement.

The E.D. Eve Scholarship provides scholarship assistance to be awarded to Juniata students who are residents of Blair County and have financial need. Twelve Juniata students were selected to receive Eve Scholarships for the current school year.

The Edith Davis Eve Foundation was created under the will of the late Edith Davis Eve of Altoona. Mellon Bank (Central) of State College is the trustee of the foundation.

An artist and kindergarten teacher, Mrs. Eve was interested in philanthropic endeavors throughout her life and was a generous benefactor to many different organizations. Mrs. Eve taught and lived near Augusta, Georgia, in the early 1900's before moving back to her Altoona home in 1939 after the death of her husband in 1933. She remained in Altoona until her heath in 1976 at the age of 103.

The College awards nearly $2.3 million each year in annual and endowed scholarships and grants to meet the financial need of deserving recipients. Over 200 different scholarships were presented to Juniata students this year.

THE GREEK

for sports, it didn't start out very well. I turned on the TV Sunday afternoon to find Women's basketball, Auto racing, boxing and LPGA golf. Well, I needed a nap anyway.

It made me sick to see ESPN's sportscenter show highlights of Wrestle Mania. Nick Spadea considers pro werstling a sport, therefore, you know it has no credibility.

Last week in Greek Speaks, John Bulger made a statement about the Phillies lack of skill, at least Bulger has some knowledge.

The only reason the Phillies will finish in sixth place is because there is no seventh place.

The Mets should be a lock to win the NL East with the talent they have. What they have in talent, however, they lack in brains. Darryl Strawberry has a million dollar body and a five cent head, Keith Hernandez can't get along with his teammates and Dwight Gooden has the same problem with brains as Strawberry. Hopefully, they will allow the Pirates to sneak up on them.

I hate Susquehanna.

Look for a big year from the Toronto Blue Jays, they may have more talent than the Mets.

The NBA without Larry Bird is about as exciting as Pro Wrestling.

March was a bad month for me: Pete Rose my all-time favorite baseball player got busted for gambling, Wade Boggs my favorite player today got busted for sleeping around, and my brother scored the winning run for Geneva as they beat us 8-7 in the tenth inning.

This month will be a lot better than last if we can beat Susquehanna twice on Saturday.

If the Phillies finish higher than the Pirates in the standings, I'll buy Amo Cianci and Nick Spadea a steak dinner.

Reflections on Hungary, exchange program info.

Interesting events are taking place today in the Soviet Union and the European communist sphere. Glasnost, perestroika, Baltic Soviet Socialist Republics calling for autonomy and even independence, United States' psychiatrists inspecting Soviet mental institutions come quickly to mind. Elsewhere reform permeates the area with negotiations for legal independent trade unions and multicandidate elections; even proposals for multi-parties appear a concomitant to needed economic reforms, particularly in Poland and Hungary.

It is the latter's position in Europe and as a leader in change that intrigues. Hungary was once an outpost for the Roman Empire and the spread of Christianity. Devastated by the Huns, repopulated by the westward moving Magyar tribes, Hungary became a major state, one four times its current size. One of the wealthiest states in Europe in the 15th century it was overrun by the Turks and dismembered. Positioned between the forces in eastern and western Europe, in the 20th century Hungary chose the losing side in the two World Wars and was drastically reduced in size and population. By 1949 a Hungarian Peoples Republic had been shaped behind a so-called Iron Curtain.

Some forty years later Hungary is in the forefront of change and willing to be a bridge between the two major camps in Europe. This part of the rusted out Iron Curtain is transited daily by Austrians and Hungarians without visas. Budapest to Vienna for a day's shopping and return is not too uncommon. This year one's Euro-pass will be extended to include Hungary. Within the country itself public transportation and vacations are bargains.

As a by-product of the failed 1956 Revolution the Soviets permitted the Hungarian government a degree of economic experimentation not permitted elsewhere. By 1968 the New Econimic Mechanism, a forerunner of perestroika, emerged and goulash communism was born. This socialist economy now has a small but growing free enterprise component with a bond market and a stock market both projected. A sizeable portion of academia and even Communist Party members recognize a need for economic reforms but unlike 1968 for political reforms as well. This is part of the topic Dr. Gyula Zeller of Janus Parnonius University at Pecs (100 miles SSW of Budapest) will discuss on April 11, 1989, 8:15 in the Faculty Lounge.

Juniata College was represented among a contingent of 16 American professors who spent most of a six week study grant centered upon the above named university last summer. We found food, certain fruits, ice cream and soft drinks plentiful and relatively cheap (ie, 8 cent/dip ice cream). Pepsi had made inroads some years ago, the first McDonalds opened in April 1988, people apparently line up each morning to get into the Adidas store in the capital, which was the only queing up we witnessed during our entire stay. Blue jeans were popular as were sweat shirts with the name of U.S. colleges and professional sports teams despite the fact only about 17% of the people speak English. This may change for the first time this academic year, Russian language study is no longer mandatory in the school system but is an elective like English. Incidentally Hungarian is a real challenging language to speak.

If you are a student who would enjoy studying in a country incorporating antiquity yet currently is in the throes of some major changes consider the Indiana University of Pennsylvania's six week, six credit summer school in Hungary. Juniata College has no official exchange program with Hungary but Christine Fenyo from Budapest pioneered the way two years ago by studying a year on our campus. For additional information contact Dr. Post or Dr. Zeller on April 11th.

Orientation leaders needed

Curent Juniata students are invited to apply for Summer Orientation Leader positions. Orientation Leaders are an important component of the College's orientation program for incoming freshmen. Qualifications include: good communication skills, demonstrated involvement in co-curricular actvities, good academic standing, and a general knowledge of the College. Orientation Leaders are required to be on campus June 15-29, 1989. Compensation for the position is room and meals while on campus and a salary of $300. Applications will be available beginning April 3, 1989 in the Residential Life Office (213 Founders) and completed applications are due by 12:00 noon on April 10, 1989.

Self-responsibility intention of new course

By Paulette Papadopoulous
Graduate Intern
Counciling Center

Occupational wellness is evidenced by the personal satisfaction and enrichment one experiences through work. Students need guidance in order to realize this satisfaction and enrichment. College career centers have begun to take a more proactive approach to career development. Teaching students to develop self-responsibility in choosing is the intention of a new 1 credit career planning course here at Juniata.

The course is designed to stimulate the thought processes about career choices. It does not give answers as to what one should do but through cognitive stimulation, awareness of self, and exploration of possibilities one will accumulate a greater depth of information to make a decision. Using career theory as a guide, students learn about themselves and what developmental stage they are experiencing at the moment. Assignments, such as interviews at actual job sites with professional people, experience with the Sigi Plus guidance computer, and individual counseling generate a wealth of information, develop an awareness of the world of work, and encourage self-responsibility.

Career is a major part of a person's identity. When people introduce themselves they frequently begin by stating their name and their occupation. Their occupation says something about them. When people feel well in their occupation, they feel good about themselves. Occupation wellness is an important dimension of the wellness philosophy. Learning to know one's self and preparing for job satisfaction are the goals of an occupational wellness program at Juniata. Who students are tomorrow depends who they are becoming today!

TRIVIA WITH TRISH

As everyone knows, I've been promoting my article by asking the student body and anyone else who reads the "Juniatian" to send in questions they would like answered in the paper. Well, I've had a couple of replies, some genuine, some not so genuine. It is my duty however, to try and answer each one no matter how trivial. So to catch up on my mail, this weeks article is filled with the answers to 2 questions that have been brought to my attention.

My first question came from, (I didn't even need a name to guess) East Apartments. Somebody over there wants to know what a "Funky Cold Medina" is made of. I'm sorry, but Beegly doesn't carry the Ceaser Palace Encyclopedia of Mixed Drinks, but from personal experience, I'd say it is a mixture of Vodka, O.J., Wildberry Shnapps, and seven up. I've never fed it to my dog but I did give it to a bird nesting outside of Baker's window. Try it, you'll like it.

Well that's it for the not-so-genuine questions. This weeks legitimate question and trivia deals with the 7 Wonders of the World.

The Seven Wonders of the World are ancient works of art and architecture which were considered awe-inspiring in splendor and size by the Greek and Roman world of the Alexandrian epoch. Classical writers disagreed as to which works made up the list, but the following were always included.

The first one is The Pyramids of Egypt. This is the only surviving Wonder. These structures are located on the Western Bank of the Nile River. They were built from 3000 to 1800 B.C. as the royal tombs for the pharoahs. Three - Khufu, Khafra, and Menkaura - were often grouped as the first Wonder of the World. The largest, The Great Pyramid of Khufu, or Cheops, is a solid mass of limestone blocks covering 13 acres. It is estimated to contain 2.3 million blocks of stone, the stones themselves averaging 2 1/2 tons and some weighing 30 tons. Its construction reputedly took 100,000 laborers 20 years. I wonder if they got double pay for overtime?

Next on our journey through time, we stop for a breather in the Hanging Gardens of Babylon. These gardens were laid out on a brick terrace about 400 feet square and 75 feet above the ground. To irrigate the trees, shrubs, and flowers, screws were turned to lift water from the Euphrates River. In other words, plumbing was invented! The gardens were probably built by King Nebuchandnezzar II(I'm not responsible if its spelled wrong, I submitted it with the correct spelling). It was completed around 600 B.C. I would hate to be the one who mowed this lawn! How about you!

The Statue of Zeus (Jupiter if you're Roman) at Olympia is the third Wonder. This statue of the king of the gods showed him seated on a throne. His flesh was made of ivory, his robe and ornaments of gold. Historically recorded to be 40 feet high, the statue was made by Phidias and was placed in the great temple of Zeus in the sacred grove of Olympia around 457 B.C.

Our next Wonder is also a statue. It is the Colossus of Rhodes. It is a bronze statue of the sun god Helios. It was worked on for 12 years in the early 200's B.C. by the sculptor Chares. It was probably 120 feet high. A symbol of the city of Rhodes at its peak, it stood proudly in the harbor overlooking the city. I guess this is where France got the idea for our Statue of Liberty. History does repeat itself.

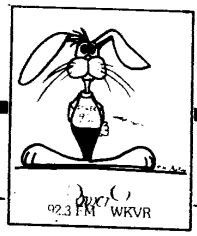
Okay, how many was that? I'm getting tired. I have better things to do on a Friday night, like study chemistry (Yes, Professor Reingold, I do study.) Okay, here we go, I needed that lapse. The fifth Wonder is the Temple of Artemis (Diana) at Ephesus. This largest and most complex temple of ancient times was built around 550 B.C. and was made of marble except for its tile covered wooden roof. It was begun in honor of a non-Hellenic goddess who later became identified with the Greek goddess of the same name. Ephesus was one of the greatest of the Ionian cities. (Wow, I see the word "ion" in there. That is an atom or atoms that have lost or gained one or more electrons so that it is no longer neutral. Oh no, I better end this quickly, or a chemistry lesson might result)

The sixth Wonder is the Mausoleum at Halicarnassus. The source of our word "mausoleum", this marble tank was built in what is now Southeastern Turkey by Artemisia for her husband Mausolus, an official of the Persian Empire who died in 353 B.C. About 135 feet high, it was adorned with the works of four sculptors.

Last, but not least, the Seventh Wonder of the World, a drum roll please, is the Pharos (Lighthouse) of Alexandria. This sculpture was designed around 270 B.C., during the reign of King Ptolemy II, by the Greek architect Sostratas. Estimates of its height range from 200 to 600 feet.

There you are, I have answered all the questions. If I were you, I'd keep this article handy, because you never know when you'll be appearing on a game show like "Jeopardy". Just remember, I'll be watching, and I want 30% of your winnings. I'd also like to apologize to our copy managers Chuck and Kristyn for writing such a long article. They're the ones who type my articles because they're the only ones who can read my penmanship. Shorter one next week Chuck and Kristyn, I promise!

Hot Wax



by Ferris Buehler

Well, here it is: the much-anticipated, long-awaited and somewhat hurriedly-composed Hot Wax which actually deals with an album review instead of aimless bickering. (Last weeks article probably sounded like a musical version of "Trivia with Trish," so allow me to apologize to the three or four Hot Wax readers out there.) Off we go!

After the fall of the incredible English Beat (circa 1984), two very qualified offshoots developed: General Public and the Fine Young Cannibals (FYC). General Public bought the farm a few years back which leaves us with a very much alive FYC project in full swing. FYC's second album, "The Raw and the Cooked," is under the critic's spotlight this week. Their self-titled first effort, while generally receiving major quantities of college airplay in 1986, remained unfortunately in obscurity for the masses of music consumers. Not so with "The Raw and the Cooked."

The album jams from the onset and simply does not stop. It's the "feel good" album of the moment as far as I'm concerned. You can dance to it-all of it- like no tomorrow. You can cruise (i.e. in a car) to it. You could probably even go jeepin' with it cranked. It is simply music for all occassions. The music on the album ranges from almost-Reggae to almost-New orderish techno-pop. I say "almost" because FYC retain their soulful style even when they borrow from other musical genres. The key elements of this style are the vocals and the relatively jangly guitar pieces which are consistently placed at all of the right places throughout the album. Oh, then there's the R/B piano. And the trumpet and saxophone. And...O.K., so there's a lot more to the FYC's style then is first heard. (There's more than meets the ear, as it were.)

Given that the album as a whole L<"drives me crazy," it would be a waste of space to go through each song individually. But if you like the current single, you're definitely going to flip for "I'm Not Satisfied," "Don't Look Back," "It's O.K. (It's Alright)," and "Ever Fallen in Love" as well as the other five songs.

A final note: Considering last weeks complain-athon about bands doing covers, I must admit that FYC cover the ultimate pop-punk band of the late 70's, the Undertones, on this album. The song is "Ever Fallen in Love" and turns out to be one of FYC's best. See what a week can do!

Rondo & Jerry won, you could be next!

Bored with tests and termpapers? Do you need a change from the tedious routine? Then break out of the doldrums and add some excitement to your life by playing "Convivial Pursuits." Yes, sportsfans, Beeghly Library announces Round 2 of the contest everyone on campus is talking about. All you have to do is be the first student to correctly answer the 10 questions below, and you'll be the winner of the O.I.P. pizza of your choice. Sounds simple, doesn't it? Well, keep in mind that you'll be matching wits with the likes of Rondo "Einstein" Hersh and Jerry "Bright Boy" Albright, last month's winner. Answers are due in the library office by April 30, and don't forget that a complete citation (title, page, volume, call number, etc.) for each answer must be included as well.

1. What is the name of the film about the Rolling Stones U.S. tour in the late 1960's? Who made it?
2. How much did it cost to run the F.B.I. in 1988?
3. What is the official state beverage of Pennsylvania? (No kidding, folks!)
4. What is the active ingredient in Tylenol? When was Tylenol first patented in the U.S.?
5. Aaron Rabinowitz was a great benefactor of Juniata College. What was the name of the company he was chairman of?
6. What was Juniata College called when it started in 1876?
7. Which president of the U.S. was nicknamed "Uncle Jumbo?"
8. In which country in the Americas is the 5th of May a major holiday?
9. What is a laminak?
10. Where and when was Easter first likely to have been observed as a religious rite?

Vol. XXXIX No. 23 Juniata College • Huntingdon, Pa 16652 April 13, 1989

The Juniata College Artist Series is bringing the new music ensemble AMIGO to the Oller Hall stage this Sunday. The production will feature a blend of pop, rock and roll, and salsa music.

AMIGO performs in artist series

One of Mexico City's newest and hottest young musical groups, AMIGO, will appear on April 16 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall as a special addition to the Juniata College Artist Series.

AMIGO is composed of twelve dynamic singers and dancers and ten talented instrumental musicians. Their program is an exhilerating blend of pop music, salsa, rock and roll, Broadway, and current Latin American hits. Dazzling choreography, colorful costumes and super showmanship make AMIGO's presentation appealing to audiences of every age and musical taste.

Started in 1987, AMIGO is the first group produced by a new nonprofit association in Mexico. MEXARTES was created to provide opportunities for Mexican youth in the performing arts. The organization's founder, Minnesota native Jody Kauchick, said the group has several objectives.

"First and foremost, we want to provide great entertainment for our audiences," he said. "But we also want to present a positive image of Mexico and its youth through our performances. It's a way of building bridges between cultures and between people."

AMIGO's current U.S.A. tour will take the group from Florida to California, and from Michigan to Texas. It will perform at state fairs, theme parks, on college campuses, in community concerts, and at major conventions and trade meet-

Students to forfeit a Baker meal

By Suzanne Lydic

Sometimes we at Juniata tend to forget how forunate we are. We have all the basic needs and more! Yet just outside our little community, we find starving, malnourished persons--victims of the hunger wars.

Every spring Juniata takes the time to realize the monstrous damage world hunger has done to the universal community. We see the emaciated children and sorrow struck adults on the evening news. We read of the problems abroad in the Sudan and see clips of the homeless in America. And we organize and support a Meal for CROP.

CROP is a hunger relief organization known throughout the world. We help CROP fight world hunger by raising funds from the sale of our student meals. April 25, a Tuesday, is the night we give up our supper so that someone else might buy it and support CROP!

R.A.'s are taking id/meal numbers until April 18th. Simply turning in your number will help support the fight against World Hunger. I and the rest of the Campus Ministry Board invite you to help us stamp out world hunger--after all it's the least we can do.

"Blithe Spirit" wrapped up two weekends of performance with a matinee last Saturday. Above, the cast and crew poses with director Ryan Chadwick after the Friday night production.

Editorial

Okay, someone pinch me to make sure that I am awake. Are you sure that we have only four short weeks until school is out? I know that we go through this every year, but every year it seems like we've only begun when its time to end.

Its about this time every year that people also get sentimental. Summer is coming and you won't see some of your friends for three months. It may be longer until you see those who are transferring or graduating. Will your friendship survive the miles and the days? This is a question only you can answer, but you do have control of that answer.

The postal service and the telephone system probably count down the days until all of the college kids go home. These are the best ways to keep in touch with those special people you really don't want to lose contact with for three months.

Most of us college students like to travel. This is probably the most personal means of keeping in touch, but also the most time consuming. (Although for someone such as myself, by the time I write a letter or call, I probably could have travelled the distance four times!)

These are just a few suggestions for keeping in touch. I am sure there are many more. Whatever method you use, I would encourage everyone to stay on contact with those who are special to you. It helps the summer months go by quickly and lets you know that there are others outside of Tiny Town USA!

Yes, this editor is getting rather sentimental. I have made many friends in my short time at JC and will miss them greatly during the summer. A thought to end on though: Remember the good times and let go of the bad; the good times will get you through most of those boring or trying days. Try to keep in touch because these are the friends who will help you out next semester. I hope everyone has a safe and enjoyable summer.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I read with interest an article in the April 4th edition of Penn State's "The Daily Collegian." It seems that the university's administration is dragging its heels in the implementation of a sexual orientation clause. If passed, this clause would be added to the University Statement on Discrimination and would protect those individuals receiving unfair treatment because of their sexual orientation.

Other schools, Pitt and Northeastern for example, have such non-discriminatory policies, but why not Penn State or Juniata? The former has its influential Lesbian and Gay Student Alliance. Juniata doesn't have this type of student organization, but we certainly would be setting a good example by clarifying the school's position on an issue that has already been dealt with on campuses across the nation.

Juniata is "committed to providing a liberal arts education to qualified students regardless of sex, race, religion, creed, color, or handicap." I think this should be extended to include sexual orientation. After all, it shouldn't matter whether you are Black or White, Catholic or Protestant, gay or straight if eligible for admission to a particular school and, once you are on campus, prejudice and ignorance shouldn't have to be tolerated.

By Dan Crosby

This is the most important article I have ever written. In fact, it is probably the only important article I have ever written. The topic I wish to discuss concerns us all very deeply.

I know that I am always complaining about people not "getting involved," but I suppose, in all honesty, I was never too serious about it. I mean, I never thought that I could change anything or effect anyone; maybe I never believed it was all that improtant. But I pray with all my heart that, just this one time, my words may have a real effect.

Someone showed me something the other day which frightened me more than anything I had ever read before. It was a letter from a parents group right here in Huntingdon to the president of the local public school board. Copies of this letter are being circulated, signed, and sent to the school board as a means of political pressure. These are a few excerpts from the letter: "I hereby request that my child be involved in NO school activities or materials listed below...psychological and psychiatric examination, test, or survery...psychological and psychiatric treatment...values clarification...discussion of religious or moral standards...death education, including abortion...curricula pertaining to alcohol and drugs...instruction in nuclear war...anti-nationalistic, one-world government or globalism curricula...discussion and testing on interpersonal relationships; discussions of attitudes toward parents and parenting...education in human sexuality, including premarital sex, extra-marital sex, contraception, abortion, homosexuality...divorce, population control, and roles of males and females; sex behavior and attitudes of student and family."

As I sat reading this letter, I began to experience a very odd feeling; my hands started to tremble; I got a sick feeling in the pit of my stomach; and I felt tears well up in my eyes. I had never read anything like this. All of a sudden I understood why we have things like war, hatred, bigotry, and how a man like Adolf Hitler could come to power. But what I don't understand is why parents could possibly want their children to grow up to be stupid, narrow-minded, and completely naive about virtually every crucial aspect of society.

A very well-respected history professor at this college once told me that if 5% of any given population is truly dedicated to effecting change, they can do it. Extremist groups like the one that is circulating this letter are springing up all over our nation. I don't know if they are 5% yet, but they are very dedicated. They want to eliminate any and all teaching materials and concepts that they oppose. They want our children to learn only their values, to think only their thoughts. They want to control all lives by controlling all minds.

Some issues might not be so urgent, so pressing as this one. But this is no joke. I will not see my children and grandchildren controlled by neo-fascists. Will you? I urge you to speak out against this insanity; to write letters to educators and government leaders condemning such absurdity; to vote against anyone who does not loudly decry this wraped, perverted "morality." This time we must "get involved", or we will live in Aldous Huxley's "Brave New World"; we will breathe the poisoned air of George Orwell's "1984"

THIS IS OUR FUTURE. Will you get involved this time? Decide quickly. You may not have very long and it may be the most important decision you will ever make.

KVASIR News

By Janine Hyde

Only a week (we hope). Yes, we've veen saying this for an entire semester, but we mean it this time. During the week of April 17, (if the printer doesn't lose the copy, or if Armageddon doesn't strike), "Kvasir," JC's arts and literary magazine will finally reach the campus. Since

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

When do you do your best work? At the last minute when the pressure is really on is probably the way most of us would respond to this question.

With an overwhelming number of exams, papers, projects and presentations to take care of, all within a relatively short period of time, Counselor's Corner would like to look at what may well be the best times of day for you so that you can work better and think better.

Most college students live by the adage "I work best at night". Research clearlyk indicates that students are far more productive during daylight hours than at night. In fact, evidence suggests that we can be one and a half times as productive during the day!

Studying only at night is a learned behavior and can therefore be unlearned. As has been suggested several times in this column, try spreading your work throughout the day. It is referred to as the principle of distributed practice and greatly aids in the learning process.

Learning specialists point out two critical times to study: just before recitation-discussion class and just after lecture-type classes. Reviewing notes right after the lecture, while they are fresh in your mind, can aid in transferring material from short-term to long-term memory.

When you study can make a difference. Did you realize that most of us are much more alert during the morning hours. Our alertness seems to peak at about noon. To make the argument for finding time to study in the morning rather than at night an even stronger one, consider the fact that our short-term memory is 15% more efficient during this time than at night. You might do well to at least experiment with studying in the morning, if your current class schedule will allow it.

LRegarding long-term memory, that is, for exames that might be a few days or weeks later (there really are people who study progressively) the afternoon is the best time to study. Memorization of materials appears to be best achieved during the afternoon.

If we study best during daylight hours, that is, mornings and afternoons, what do we do best at night? Research suggests that our coordination is at its peak in the late afternoon and early evening. It may well be that we can get the most from a workout at this time. Because our body temperature is peaking, we may perceive a workout to be less of a strain and easier in the late afternoon or early evening.

Some research says the performance of swimmers, runners, shotputters and rowing crews is better in the evening than in the morning.

Think about when you perform best. Try some of the suggestions discussed in this article and see if it makes a difference.

Until next time, be good to yourself and think good thoughts.

Wayfarer's Journal

Bridging the miles

Hello Fellow Indians (or has the name been changed?!),

I was just looking through a bunch of information I had received last month from J.C., and I realized that as part of the Exchange Program, I'm required to write one of these things. I had a few spare minutes so I thought I'd get to it.

I don't really know what I'm supposed to write about. I think I'm supposed to tell you how wonderful this experience is and try to convince underclassmen to come. I will admit that I'm having a great time, but there are some drawbacks which they don't tell you about when you're making your decision to come.

I guess the biggest drawback for most of us here is the lack of food. Compared to the slop they feed us here, the grub at J.C. is the equivalent of what you'd get in a four star restaurant. Actually, it's not really all that bad, but the guys are constantly complaining they're hungry (especially Chris, Tim, and Mike!-sorry guys).

Another real problem is the lack of work for most people (present company not included). I mean, imagine being able to go out every night of the week! That's if you have the funds to do so which is something I'm severely lacking in right now (any donations would be greatly appreciated!). Seriously though, because of the format of most people's schedules, they are able to get their work done during the day so their nights are free.

The social life is another big disadvantage. There so many nightclubs, pubs, and other drinking places to choose from, I can never decide where I want to go! And all the people you meet! I can never remember all their names and I'll have so many letters to write when I'm back at J.C. that I won't have time for a social life there. What a hassle!

I guess the biggest problem for me is the opportunity to travel. We got 3 weeks off at Christmas and 3 weeks off at Easter so there was plenty of time ,but there were so many places to go! Should you stay in England and sightsee or go to the continent and visit other J.C. students or should you order your Eurorail pass from Buff and spend a month on a train going from one country/city to another until you're so exhausted you can barely stand? It's all so confusing!

Well, it's almost time for tea (dinner) and I still have loads to do before then. I hope this letter has at least enlightened some of you to the dangers of spending your junior year abroad. All in all, I must say that it's probably been one of the greatest experiences of my life and I'd recommend it to anyone considering the option. I do miss all my friends at J.C. (Alison, Kath, Laur, Phoebe, Karen, Julie, etc.), but I have met so many interesting and wonderful people that I don't regret my decision for a minute.!

Take care everyone and don't drink too much (as if you could under the age of 21)! I hope to see all the underclassmen next year and would like to say Congratulations to all the graduating seniors!

Bye!

River Rats scratch and claw to second place

The Juniata River Rugby Club captured second place in the Coors Rugby Festival this past weekend. Millersville University, one of the top rated clubs in Eastern Pennsylvania, won the tournament final 14-4 over the River Rats. The final was a tightly contested, well played match which finalized a fantastic day of rugby in Mill Creek, PA.

The Juniata River Club opened tournament play with a 27-10 defeat of Lock Haven University. Excellent scrum play kept the ball in the hands of the boys from Juniata and exciting passing by all the backs enabled the Rats to take a 18-6 halftime lead. Trys were scored by Dave Farling, Mike Grill, and Charlie Courntey. The second half was more of the same and the Rats advanced to the tournament final.

After Millersville University beat Dickinson College 12-6 to also enter the tournament final, Juniata River's "B" side took the field to take on Lock Havens "B" side. The young Rats played inspired ball with Jon Maul, Glenn Miller, and Joe Regger scoring trys. Ryan "O'Neil" hart, Mario Mastrianna, and Brent Berger provided the "B" side with solid scrum play and Doug Henry made a fine debut at scrum half as Juniata River "B" won 12-4.

The consolation match pitted Lock Haven and Dickinson with the Dickinson Club winning a third place finish with a 12-10 victory. The final game for first place between Juniata River and Millersville University was deadlocked at 0-0 until midway through the first half when Millersville scored off of a line out and made the conversion kick to take a 6-0 lead. The score remained the same until midway through the second half when John Swanson took a pass from Mike Grill and scampered 60 yards to cut Millersvilles lead to 6-4. Unfortunately for the Rats, Millersville's strength and skill kept Juniata River backed up in front of its goal line for the rest of the game. The Rats repelled Millersvilles attacks time and time again until Millersville scored with 5 minutes remaining to put the game away.

The Juniata River Rugby Club now holds a 3-1 record with one game remaining at Carnegie Mellon this coming weekend. The club opened the season with a 32-3 victory over the Savanah School of Art and Design with Jeff Scheider, Frank Carey, and Tim Garvin all getting their first "A" side trys. On the weekend of April 1, the club defeated Altoona Mens Rugby Club 12-10 as captain John Colbery scored the winning try in front of an excellent crowd of over 100 students.

AL°NG·MUDDY·RUN

By Rush Blady

Well, after a much needed R&R period, I'm back for a last, limited run at your neighborhood newspaper. At this writing, we've only got something like four weekends left. Hard to imagine that one hundred and twenty weekends ago (okay, plus a few breaks and summers), I was a freshman contemplating the vast, nearly imperceivable distance I would have to travel in mind and body to become a senior. Looking back now, the whole trip seems scarcely any longer than a year. And now if you will excuse my nostalgia for the past, I will get on, gradually, to the purpose of this article, which isn't about anything much. After masking four years of memory into one, anybody is likely to be in awe -- even my smart ass-self. Oh, that puts me in mind of what I wanted to tell you about.

One of the most touted selling points of "college" back during my senior year of high school was the chance to "re-define yourself" in your own choosing, without any of the complicated gook of "perceptions", "labels", "cliques", "images" you were saddled with since ninth grad, when you still picked your nose and wore braces. Dangling that chance in front of any adolescent is a powerful lure, and I fell for it hook, line and sinker. So I ditched my girlfriend (at least, that's what the tale has evolved into in my feverish, monomaniacal head), hid my Class of '85 yearbook in the back of my closet so my mom wouldn't slip it into my luggage and cramp my style, and tracked off to Central Pennsylvania (presumably because no-one knew me there) to "re-define my image."

I'd like to say that the new "me" I tried to create lasted about a week. That would tie up the problem of adolescent stigma in a tidy psychological bundle by saying 'you are who you are" rather nicely. The trouble is, although I did give up worring about my appearance in a nine o'clock class after a week (usually by sleeping in) I still, after one hundred and fifteen weeks and an almost finished SVS class, ain't too sure of who I am. I don't know if I'm the exception (some think so, some don't), if I should have taken HOBO to straighten me out, or if I just have to chuck it all to the wind and say screw it, I'm graduating anyway. I guess if I'm really worried I can always go to graduate school.

Well, that's really all I wanted to say -- nothing too earth-shattering. Oh, yeah, a number of people have gone out of their way to tell me how much they liked the play. I'm glad you all enjoyed it -- it means a lot to everybody who put their time into it. Thank you. If you want to thank us more, you can support Juniata Theatre by your continued attendance, and by remembering to put up your seat when you leave.

As usual:

The Greek Speaks

By George Zanic

This was truly a great week of sports around the country. Michigan won the NCAA title in basketball, Nick Faldo won the Masters, and the Penguins swept the Rangers in the Patrick Division semifinals. It is, however, difficult for me to write about any of these events when all I can think about is Juniata sweeping Susquehanna on Saturday.

Maybe winning a doubleheader isn't as important as winning the NCAA Division I basketball championship or winning the coveted green jacket, but don't try telling that to the 23 guys who were wearing the gold uniforms on Saturday.

When we run in the gym over the winter we think about Susquehanna. When we were on the bus at two in the morning on our Southern trip we talked about Susquehanna, and ever since they knocked us out of contention last year I dreamed about those ugly orange uniforms.

I really hate Susquehanna. I don't hate them just because of baseball, however. I hate them because Juniata was better in football, and they beat us when an overweight kicker booted a 49 yard field goal, and Juniata was better in basketball but they beat us on a fluke 3-point shot.

It was a truly great feeling to see all of my fellow Susquehanna haters show up at the game on Saturday. They made life miserable for the Crusaders off the field while we embarassed them on the field. I'm sure Nick Faldo felt on top of the world when he sank the putt to win the Masters, but he couldn't have felt much better than I did when I stood on first after my bunt single and listened to the crowd chant "Greek Speaks."

I think Amo Ciani said it best as he crossed th plate with the winning run in the second game when he spoke in reference to the crowd, "I just couldn't let them down." Maybe we didn't ease all of the pain the football and basketball teams suffered, but it was sure nice to end my four years with a big win over a team I've learned to hate more than the Phillies.

And finally i'ld like to say to my friends from Susquehanna, I hope you had a truly miserable ride back to Selinsgrove, and I'm glad I will never have to look at those uniforms again that look like something on the bathroom floor of 302 East on Sunday morning.

Baseball sweeps SU

By John Bulger

The Indian nine came into last week with a 1-1 league record and in a log jam for first place. At the end of the week they were sitting atop the MAC.

On Thursday the Indians entertained a tough Messiah team that was riding the wave of an upset of Elizabethtown. In the first game the Tribe jumped up early with a Mike Reed double, a George Zanic bunt single, and Kevin Neff sacrifice fly. The Indians added two in the second on hits by Dan Strecker and Vic Huber. The Tribe's final score of the 4-2 victory cam when Jim Tomassetti doubled home Paul Hayduk. Scott Close started for Juniata but Neff picked up the win in three innings of relief.

In the nightcap the Monarchs scored early, with a run in the first, but after that it was all Juniata. The Indians scored three in the fourth highlihgted by a Huber double nad picked up six in the fifth. Mike Reed went the distance for the win giving up tow runs on four hits. The 11-2 victory gave the Tribe a 3-1 mark in the MAC, 6-7 overall. In the twinbill, Strecker posted four hits with Zanic, Tomassetti, Hayduk, and Huber collecting three apiece.

On Saturday a much awaited twinbill with Susquehanna was due. With a vengefull student body out in full force, the tribe bested the Crusaders 4-1 in the opener and completed the clean-sweep with a 7-3 win in the nightcap.

The first game turned out to be a pitchers duel until the fifth inning. With one out John bulger walked and the next batter Vic Huber hit a two-run home run blast over the left field fence. The Indians added one more run in the fifth. The only Susquehanna tally came but Kevin Neff came in to get the stop the Crusaders and earn the save. Munroe pitched five and one-third innings to get the win. The key to victory was his ability to throw strikes and great defense. The Indians closed out the scoring with a Strecker dinger in the sixth.

In the second game Susquehanna jumped up with two in the second inning off starter Scott Close. Close then settled down to pitch well and earn the win. The Indians scored onn run in the second on an error, the Crusaders answered in the third to make the score 3-1 SU. Then with the partisan crowd returning for the bottom of the third, the flood gates were opened. The big blow coming on an Amo Cianci single wih runners at the corners. Five runs were scored in that inning to make the score 6-3. In the sixth inning with SU threatening with a runner on first, Nick Spadea got the Crusaders "big" hitter to ground into a double play.

With the victory the Indians took a one game lead in the MAC. The sweep also marked the first defeat of Susquehanna on the baseball diamond in four years.

The Juniata MVP of Saturday's double header goes to the fans. They are a big plus and made the sweep possible. A very big thank you from all on the baseball team to our supporters. In the immortal words of Amo Cianci, "We just couldn't let them down."

George Zanic leads the team in hitting at .364. Tomasetti follows at .333. Juniata's #9 hitter Vic Huber is second in RBI's with 11. Mike Reed has three wins. Juniata's starters Saturday only walked three batters. Juniata is 5-1 in the MAC followed by E-town (4-2), Dickinson (2-0), Albright (2-3), Wilkes (1-2), Susquehanna (1-3), and Messiah, (2-6).

Bert Geshler gets ready to take a swing at the plate. The lady Indians were defeated last Saturday by Wilkes College. They will be travelling to Franklin and Marshall Saturday, April 15 to try to even their record.

Vol. XXXIX No. 24 — Juniata College • Huntingdon, Pa 16652 — April 20, 1989

Marla Hanson will speak at Juniata College - finally!

The Juniata College Joint Lectureship Committee of Center Board and Student Government will present Marla Hanson on April 26 at 8:15 in Oller Auditorium. The program was originally scheduled for December, but was postponed due to a scheduling conflict.

An up-and-coming New York City model, Hanson's career was brutally interrupted in 1986 when her face was slashed by two men hired by her landlord. The razor slashing followed a dispute over an $850 security deposit. The instantly notorious incident and subsequent trial drew national media attention and prompted the victim to launch a crusade as an advocate for victims' rights.

Actress/model Marla Hanson, the victim of a brutal facial slashing, will speak at Juniata College on April 26th at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall. Hanson will discuss her story and victims' rights.

Following the incident, Hanson's plastic surgeon, Dr. Ronald Levandusky, reported in the New York Times "that the gashes on her face--one across her right cheek from mouth to ear, another on her forehead and others above and below her left eye--were among the worst he had seen in years of practice."

"They were a bit worse than cuts suffered by someone going through a windshield," he said in the Times article. "All of them are at least one-half inch and most are one inch deep. If they heal well, they could be improved...but basically scars like this are permanent." The account went on to quote Dr. Levandusky as saying, "After I finished suturing her up...I said to myself,'How could men push a woman like this down and carve her face?'"

To many Marla Hanson became a hero following the often emotional month-long trial in May of 1987 in which her landlord was found guilty of first-degree assault. In a New York Times account of her testimony, Hanson explained the brutal incident which occurred outside a West Side Manhatton bar. "'Their hands went straight for my face--they pushed me down,' she said, demonstrating before the jury how she was shoved into a crouch against a wall and her face held in position by one man while another stood over her with the razor.

"'I felt a stinging,' she said, speaking rapidly, the words appearing to spill out. 'I thought maybe they were spraying something in my eyes or my face. The taller man started moving his hands back and forth,' she said. 'For a minute, a minute-and-a-half,' it continued, she said. 'It seemed like forever.'

"Only when she was able to bring her hands to her face," the Times account went on, "did she see the blood and realize what had happened."

"'I started to scream, or I felt like I was screaming,' she said. 'I ran toward the light and back into the bar.' In the bar, Miss Hanson said she was given towels to hold to her bleeding face. 'They told me to sit down, take a few deep breaths, and not to look in the mirror,' she said. Her wounds, treated later at Metropolitan Hospital, required nearly

Behind the Campus Curtain

By Jen Potts

My recent criticism about this newspaper caused me to quit complaining and do something about it to quiet the tyrannical cries of one of the editors, who defends her work quite loudly. I decided there was only one obvious thing to do, and that was to write and add my talent to this publication. I am under the impression that more people on this campus should adopt this attitude and do something about the numerous ideas and opinions that are discussed for endless hours. So enough of this pontification and here's my article.

How many of you have heard the one hundred and one things to do with new tennis courts? Or how a new "housing complex" was being planned for campus? I thought it would be a novel idea to actually find out what future developments are being planned.

Indeed, we are going to be receiving new tennis courts on campus. They will be an alternative area for the courts beside Ellis. The current courts have had drainage problems for some time and have been resurfaced. However, it would be more economically sound to have new courts constructed. The site for these courts has not yet been determined.

There are many areas being considered, including North lawn. One contributing factor is their location to the tennis courts at T-n-T. A site closer to these would be helpful for the tennis teams and their matches. The final placement decision will be greatly thought out by the administration, the board of Trustees, and the Students' Concerns Committee.

The long-range, strategic plan includes many possibilities for the campus. All of which are very indefinite at this time. One of the possibilities is to expand the student body to 12-1500 in the next 5+ years. With this would have to come more student housing, but nothing will happen at least until that time. Capital expenditures and the school's budget would have to allot for building costs. However, some cosmetic improvements are in the short term plans for the present residence halls.

There has also been thought given to the construction of a Performing Arts Center. This is very long term, though. Recently, we have seen the technical refurbishing of Oller Hall. There are more improvements to come, maybe even air conditioning. The administration is concerned with making Oller a more usable place. This should be all of our concern, to make Juniata College a more usable place for us, the students.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

We address this letter not to the editor per se, but to the Juniata Campus Community. Firstly, "we" are Mary Beth Ridenhour and Russell Miller, class of 1990, studying abroad for the year in Marburg, West Germany, and Leeds England respectively. After receiving our last batch of "Juniatians", we felt compelled to comment on various articles concerning certain aspects of Juniata life. Being abroad this year has changed (and we hope for the better) our general outlook on life. This also applies to our opinion of Juniata.

We would first like to address Deb Dougherty's editorial on "student unresponsiveness." We interpreted "unresponsiveness" as "apathy." Apathy exhibited by the campus was that only 24 people voted on the issue of the Juniatian logo. O.K., not an earthshattering event, but this does prove a point. To us, it proves the existence of the "I don't care" attitude exhibited by a disheartening percentage of the student body. Our question is: if everyone waits for someone else to make a decision, will there be anyone left to make a decision? Furthermore, the right to complain ends with ones choice not to participate.

Another of Deb's editorials dealt with the lack of punctuality that seems to be rampant on campus, even among the faculty. This further illustrates the "I don't care" attitude. In other words, little things do matter.

The next point we would like to make echoes the thoughts of Dan Crosby. Dan wrote two articles which caught our attention; one on conservatism and one on nationalism. After Dan's words, all we can say is "Bravo!" His naming of American patriotism run amok as chauvanism is keen and very accurate. The ideal that the American way is the "only" way is not necessarily correct. There are customs that differ from America's, and they are not wrong. They are only different and still valid. We, too, ask "We are humanity, but why are we not united as one?"

In his article on conservatism, Dan makes the statement, "No one gives a damn about anything but money, or anybody but themselves." In the United States, conservatism is equated with the American dream; outside the US, US conservatism is equated with greed. For Juniata's campus as well as the nation, the Golden Rule seems to be, "do unto others what is best for yourself." To us, this is a poor ideology to subscribe to. What has happened to doing unto others as you would have others do unto you?

Sincerely,
Mary Beth Ridenhour
Russell P. Miller

Students Speak out:

Do you think Juniata would benefit from having a student union on campus?

By Lance Marshall

Chris Forney Soph. Tussey. I think it would be a good thing. It would provide a cultural center for the students, and a good place to congregate for studying or anything like that. I know friends at big schools who have them. I think we should too.

Kellie Mooney Fr. South. I think it would definitely benefit the campus because the student union would bring the Juniata community closer together. It would provide a sense of unity between faculty, administration and students.

Terry Weaverling Fresh. Sherwood. I think anything that would bring the community closer together at Juniata would be a help to benefit the students themselves.

Becky Abram Sr. Sherwood. Yes I think it would but, we do already have something along those lines, and I think there are more important things that Juniata could use such as handicap facilities.

Rich Gaitens Sr. East. Although a lot of improvements in Ellis have been made, changes still could be made such as a student oriented dance club in the ballroom that would provide a central location for weekend parties and weeknight activities.

Wayfarer's Journal

A short seven months ago, I stepped off of the plane into a foreign land populated by Germans. For the first months, my best friend was my dictionary. It saw constant use. It's a scary thought to realize that I still need my dictionary, but for different reasons. Just ask anyone who's talked to me on the phone and they'll tell you my English is pretty poor. Yes, it is possible to "forget" your native tongue.

Since that first day, I've waded thru endless red tape with numerous official rubber stamps, figured out the German Rail System (which I've used extensively), increased my alcohol tolerance level and discovered real bread. And, no, I haven't forgotten about classes. After all, that is my official reason for being here. But, the unofficial side of life isn't too bad either. I spent Christmas and New Years with a family in Hamburg and joined in the festivities there. Among other things, we shot off fireworks at midnight on Silvester (New Year's Eve). (As did everyone else in Germany) At the moment, I'm in the middle of semester break and travelling all over the place.

So, before my train comes to my stop, I have this to say to anyone even considering studying abroad: Go for it! It will be a year you won't quickly forget. Now Buff, do I really have to come home??

River Rugby Rats end successful year, look to next

The Juniata River Rugby Club travelled to Pittsburgh this past weekend to play Carnegie Mellon University and came away with a 24-12 victory. The victory gave the Rats a 5-1 record, the club's finest season ever. The victory allowed seniors Steve DuMars, Ed Hoffman, Tim Garvin, Mike Martin, Enck Lewis, John Swanson, and Chris Bistline to end their Rat rugby careers on a winning note.

Unfortunately for the River Rats, CMU is currently without a field on campus due to renovation, and the game was played at a city park with a field the size of a shoe box. Playing rugby on a field half the size of regular dimensions forced the boys from Juniata to abandon their wide open running style of play because of the lack of space. Juniata River got an early try from Enck Lewis, but then fell behind 9-4 by halftime as Carnegie Mellon hit three penalty kicks.

The second half began with Ed Hoffman scoring a try after the young Rat scrum led by Joe Reager, Ryan Hart, and Mario Mastriannia pushed the CMU pack back behind their own goal line. Unfortunately, CMU collected another three points on a 4th penalty kick and held a 12-8 lead with only ten minutes remaining.

With ten minutes to go, the Rats raised both their intensity and level of play and scored 16 points in a 4 minute span to take a commanding 24-12 lead. Two trys by Dave Farling, one of which he carried four opposing players into the try zone with him, and a try by Chris Bistline put the game away for Juniata River.

The club finishes its fourth season with a 5-1 record and looks forward to another successful campaign next fall. Seventeen players return in the fall, including the clubs two best players, John Colbert and Dave Farling, who will both probably get a chance to play on the Allegheny Rugby Union Select side in the fall. The club greatly appreciates the support of the student body who came out in record numbers to support the Rats.

An organizational meeting will be held for all returning players and those interested in joining the club next fall on the nite of April 26th at 7:00 p.m. in the Ranch in Cloister.

Women's softball prepares for conference play!

The Juniata Women's softball team traveled to Lancaster to play Franklin and Marshall on Tuesday, April 11, 1989. The Tribe dropped a tough opening game, 2-0 and then lost 9-4 to the more experienced Diplomats.

Freshman Leslie Wass was forced to pitch both games due to the recent leg injury to sophomore Kate Bradley. Wass pitched a strong first game, allowing only three hits and two runs. She had three strike outs and issued six walks. Juniata had four hits, however, they could not score any runs. In the second game, Juniata fell behind 4-0 and 8-2 by the end of the second inning. The Tribe could not catch the hard hitting Diplomats, finally losing, 9-4.

The Indians take a 4-10 record into this week's games with York Tuesday, April 18 and Lebanon Valley on Thursday, April 20 in preparation for 6 MAC games the week of April 23rd.

150 stitches," the account said.

What prompted Hanson to take her story on the road, however, was not the notorious attack which left visible scars on the face of the then 25-year-old actress. What prompted her advocacy for victim's rights was the courtroom assault which followed the attack.

The ordeal of several trials in which it frequently seemed that she was being blamed for the crime committed against her instilled in her a profound interest in judicial reform and she is currently involved in drafting legislation to address the needs of crime victims.

"A victim's rights aren't defined, therefore, they aren't protected," Hanson said in a recent interview at Sinclair Community College in Dayton. "The accused are immediately read their Miranda Rights and offered free counsel while the victim, being just a witness for the prosecution is offered neither."

She added that becsuse the prosecution has the burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, the defense tries to put the vicitm on trial. "If you're going to have that, then it should be equal treatment for both people...There is no balance right now--everything goes to the defendant."

The program is open to the public. There will be a $4.00 general admission charge for the program. Members of the Juniata community will be admitted for $2.00.

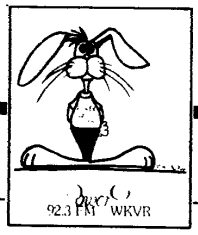
Tribe nine continues winning ways - extends streak to 7

The Tribe baseball team took a break from MAC-section play last week, but played three games that may be key factors in securing a national playoff bid. The opponents were the leaders of the rival section of the conference-Gettysburg and Western Maryland. The Indians continued their winning ways by taking all three games.

On Monday the Bullets of Gettysburg College visited Langdon Field. The Bullets, who have been in the national playoffs for the past two years, entered the game with another highly touted squad. The Indians squeezed out a 5-4 victory with some clutch hitting in the eighth inning. Outfielder Dave Duez tripled off the left-center field wall and with the infield up Kevin Neff singled home the run. Neff also gained the mound win in two innings of relief for starter Mike Reed. Amo Cianci had a three RBI doubles in the sixth to spark the Tribe.

On Wednesday the Tribe hosted the Terrors of Western Maryland College for a twinbill. The Tribe won the first game in the bottom of the seventh inning after a "freak" play. After trailing 6-5 going into the inning the Tribe loaded the bases. Dave Duez grounded out but got the tying run across. With two outs the next batter walked. Thinking that the bases were still loaded Paul Hayduk trotted in from third. As the Terrors catcher attempted to throw him out the ball glanced off Hayduk into right field. The run gave Juniata a 7-6 win. Kevin Neff was the winning pitcher and Hayduk and Cianci led the Indian bats with two apiece.

In the nightcap, the Tribe sent sophomore Joe Calamita to the hill. Joe pitched 5 innings to earn the win. The Indians led the game 7-0, but Western Maryland threatened at 7-5. Kevin Neff came in to shut the door and earn the save. Mike Reed had 3 hits and Amo Cianci also added 3. The win put the Indians record at 11-7, 5-1 in the MAC and still in first place. The Tribe was rained out on Saturday against Dickinson; it will be made up later in April.



Hot Wax

By Janine Hyde

Being surrounded by teeny-boppers in day-glo and braces, I turned to my companion and mumbled, "I think we're in for it, an attack of the pop music puberty gang!" But, the New Bohemians concert, (Edie Brickell requested her name be dropped from the forefront; even the tour shirts sport only "New Bohemians" now), at the Wilkes-Barre Kirby Center on Sat, April 28, proved surprisingly uncommercial, inspite of "What I Am" and the top forty fans.

Since New Bohemians are promoting their debut, "Shooting Rubberbands at the Stars," the repertoire of material was limited, even with four new cuts from their upcoming lp on Geffen Records. But, as they say, it ain't the quantity, baby, it's the quality, and the six member Texas band has plenty of quality to go around.

Although Brickell shunned headline attention, she did steal the stage from the male Bohemians, (or "Bo-Heads"). Other band members, guitarists Kenny Withrow and Wes Martin, (who can park his hightops under my loft anyday!), bassist Brad Houser, and Percussionists Matt Chamberlain and John Bush, were considerably more than the predicted back-up band. Withrow and Martin's smooth-as-silk guitar licks provided a nice bed for Brickell's soft, sexy, Texas purr. Chamberlain and Bush shook the house with a heavy wave of percussion on the high-powered "Keep Coming Back", and bassist Houser's roots in Jazz slid in comfortably between Chamberlain's cymbals and Bush's maracas.

Side-stepping in slow motion and hipping her way through lyrics ala Rickie Lee Jones, the 22-year-old Brickell and her band of merry tie-dyed misfits proved themselves to be more than a flash-in-the-pan that characterizes the majority of today's top pop scene. They've got substance. They'll be around for a while... at least 'til their youthful audience pays for their kid's braces.

Parasite found in town filtering system forces boil-water order

By Alex M. Jones

A parasitic cyst found in water samples taken from the Huntingdon Borough water works three weeks ago caused the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Rosources (DER) to issue a boil-water order for all customers of the municipal water supply last Thursday afternoon.

The order said that "all water used for drinking, for the preparation of non-boiled beverages, for oral hygiene, or for the preparation of uncooked food, MUST BE BOILED at least one (1) minute or more at a vigorous, rolling boil until further notice." The order, which was rescinded Monday, came without warning in a phone call from a DER representative, according to Borough Manager Willis R. Shore.

The representative reported that results of laboratory analysis of the water samples taken during routine testing indicated that one giardia lamblia cyst had been found in the untreated water, said Shore. None of the giardia organisms were detected in the treated water, but the one cyst was enough for DER to issue the boil-water edict.

At an emergency meeting of the Huntingdon Borough Council Friday morning, engineer Curtis Yocum told council members that DER claims the filters at the Huntingdon water plant are not adequate to take out the cysts, if any should be in the raw, untreated water. The current filters, which are known as rapid sand filters and use gravel and graduated sizes of sand, are 31 years old and do not meet the latest DER standards.

The only option immediately available to the Borough was to raise chlorine levels in the water, from the less than one part per million gallons now used, to four or five parts per million gallons.

The Borough's first plan - to change the sand in the filters - would have taken at least a month to complete, said Yocum. Unfortunately, Yocum said that a DER representative told him that just changing the filters would not satisfy DER requirements.

"We need a permit to change the filter media and, I'm told, in order to get that permit, everything else in the filtering system has to meet cur-

On Friday, April 28th, Juniata College will have the pleasure of hosting the talented comic, Jonathan Soloman. He will be featured at the Spring Fest Comedy and Dance, to be held in the multi-purpose room of the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center. Jonathan Soloman is the only comic to be quoted in the editorial page of the New York Times, and is a regular at New York's Comedy Cellar and the Improv. He was also recently featured on Star Search. The cost for the comedy and dance will be $3.00. A Juniata College I.D. is required and students over 21 must have proof of age.

FALL ORIENTATION ASSISTANTS NEEDED

All returning Juniata students are invited to sign up to be a Fall Orientation Assistant. During opening weekend, Orientation Assistants greet new students, help new students and their families to move in, direct traffic and provide information.

Fall Orientation Assistants are volunteer positions, however, all students who participate will receive a t-shirt and will permitted to move into the residence halls early.

Positions will be limited to the first 100 students who sign up. Students can sign up in the Residential Life Office (213 Founders) beginning Friday, April 28, 1989 and continuing until the 100 slots are filled.

Beethoven's ninth slated next in Artist Series

More than 230 musicians will combine their talents to provide Juniata College Artist Series enthusiasts with a night of entertainment on April 30 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

The Altoona Symphony Orchestra, with special artists, The Allegheny Chorale and The Juniata College Choral Union will present Beethoven's Ninth Symphony as the grand finale of the 1988-89 Juniata College Artist Series.

The Altoona Symphony Orchestra is under the direction of Frederick Morden. Morden has delivered consistently exciting performances of the works of the great masters. Among the awards for artistic excellence Morden has attracted to Altoona are the "IRIS" Award for Excellence in Local Television Programming, for his writing and production of "CATS, FLASHDANCE, and TV101," directed and aired by WTAJ-TV and the First Place Award for "Original Composition" from the Annapolis Arts Festival.

Morden has written music for a number of symphony orchestras. As an arranger, he has written music for a diverse group of people, from preparing orchestrations for the "Tonight Show," to writing the new opening theme "Action News, Altoona" locally.

Morden has elevated the public's recognition and respect for the excellence in the programs the symphony presents under his direction. Such a reputation has attracted the best instrumentalists in Central Pennsylvania to perform with the Altoona Symphony.

Dr. Joseph Figg, director of vocal and choral activites at Juniata College, will direct the Juniata College Choral Union and The Allegheny Chorale, with special artists for the performace. Figg, along with Karen Eckenroth, voice and piano instructor at Juniata College, Sherman Moyer, stage director for the Ohio Light Opera Company, and Janice Wilson, owner of a voice studio in Hollidaysburg, are featured artists for the performance. All four singers have an impressive list of credentials and accomplishments.

This delightful performance, entitled "Ode to Joy," is the final performance in the 1989-90 Artist Series. Tickets may be purchased at the information desk in the Ellis College Center prior to the event, or the night of the performance for $8 (adults) and $3 (children). The Juniata College Artist Series is intended to provide cultural and aesthetic opportunities to both the campus and its larger regional constituency. In addition to the season subscribers, the Series is supported in part by the Edith B. Wertz Endowment for Cultural Events, the Henry Endowment for the Performing Arts, Bill Fegan, The Pennsylvania Council on the Arts, and the Middle Atlantic Arts Foundation.

Editorial

Congratulations, Seniors!

This is it, the last editorial I'll ever have to write- I hope! Seeing as I'm a senior and we have this thing called Senior Perogative, and I have nothing else to write about, I'll just have to talk about "My Experiences at Juniata." This one is for the seniors.

Remember lounge parties with KEGS!, Storming the Arch with more than 10 freshmen guys, Raft Regatta Alternative, The Screaming Ducks (how many times since we were freshmen?), John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band, Friday afternoons at Max's, Trimesters, Cloister Vengence Week, all guys in Sherwood, V103, no afternoon classes, The Cliffs, real Hotel Parties, Homecoming parades with real floats, Rondo and the Killer Bee's, the rare occasion when everyone at the Colonial was at least 21, Mission Parties!, East Tower Parties, Joe Scialabba Muddy Runs, Pig Roasts at the Lake, the Spill Way, Ranch Daze, All Class Nights when everyone was offending, and all the rest of the good times and those we can't remember or don't want to remember!

Congratulations Seniors, we actually made it through four years at Juniata! Let's make these last weeks count!

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Several weeks ago a library use opinion survey was distributed to the entire student body, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank the 329 students who took the time and trouble to complete our questionnaire.

Having tabulated the surveys and read all the comments, I am reminded of a line by Robert Burns:

O wad some Pow'r the giftie gie us
To see ourselves as ithers see us!

As so many of you made clear in your comments, Beeghly Library is in need of improvement. To those lucky students who still have some time left in the nest, so to speak, next year you will begin to see the fruits of the administration's commitment to expanding the library's collections and facilities. The book and periodicals budget will receive a healthy increase next year; and, while it is too soon to say that trips to Pattee are a thing of the past, it is our sincere aim to minimize the number of times you will have to look elsewhere for the materials you need to complete your research.

The surveys themselves will be reviewed by the Learning Resources Committee, and all practicable suggestions will be taken up as topics for discussion at their regular meetings. The results of the survey will also be given to President Neff, along with the un-expurgated comments. Believe me, it will make a difference!

If there is anyone still wishing to fill out the survey, we would be happy to hear from you. Extra copies of the survey are available in the Librarian's office. Thanks again for your help.

Dear Editor;

As a graduating senior, I know there will be many times when I will look back upon my Juniata years and remember all the interesting information I have gained by attending classes and by listening to my professors' lectures. But there is one particluar professor I would like to bring to attention, expecially because there are times when one learns more through his inspirational ideas about the world than through the historical content itself. To whom am I referring? Dr. Klaus Kipphan.

This article is not meant to be a biography of him, but moreso, a dedication of his ideas for those of you who have not had the opportunity to take a course of his. I personally, am very grateful for these sentiments because when he expresses his thoughts and ideas--one must stop and contemplate or reflect for a minute. After deep contemplation, of these ideas, the words "how true!" or "he's right!!" come to mind.

So, if there are any new requirements of freshman, and we know there are many, one requirement should be to have Dr. Kipphan for at least one semester. For those of you who have not had Dr. Klaus Kipphan read on, and by the way, you are missing Juniata at its best!!

Quotable Kipphan Quotes:(read these with a German accent in mind)

"I know you all know the answer! You are all too modest"--Dr. Kipphan after asking a question and the whole class sits and stares back at him, cluelessly.

"Foreign language should be learned not merely for pragmatic use, but for the purpose of reading the literary greats such as Nietzche, Camus, Goethe, Marx, Sartre in their mother tongue."

"If you have not been to Paris, you have not lived!!"

"If you have not read this book, I"ll tell you, buy a copy and put it under your pillow and read one page a night. Your enemy is reading this book, and if you what to understand him, you should read it."--about FN. Machiavelli's "The Prince"

"We are all historians."

"I like my tests to be fun. I like you to be creative and daring. Do not repeat my words on your exam. That is too boring."

"You are paying $13,000 for your education--I will cheat you if I do not give you a lengthy assignment!"

"I still have 2 minutes!"--Klaus, at 5 minutes to the hour when he knows there is a particular subject he must cover!

"We shall have a review session at an ungodly hour of 7:00a.m."

These are just some of his famous lines. To hear more you must expriience a Kipphan course for yourself!!

Poetic prizes

Over $11,000 in prizes will be awared to the best 152 poets in a contest sponsored by the American Poetry Association to discover new talent.

The grand prize is $1,000 and the first prize $500. Other prizes include cash, awards, and publication. Entry is free.

Everyone is welcome to enter. "Sixteen students won in our last contest," said Robert Nelson, publisher for the Association. "Every student who writes poetry is urged to enter this contest. We have a June 30 deadline on purpose so students can send their best work now--or during summer break."

Poets may send up to six poems, each no more than 20 lines, name and address on each page, to American Poetry Association, Dept. CT-37, 250 A Petrero Street, P.O. Box 1803, Santa Cruz, CA 95061. Entries should be mailed by June 30.

Each poem is also considered for publication in the "American Poetry Anthology," a leading collection of contemporary verse.

During six years of sponsorship, the American Poetry Association has run 30 contests and awarded $120,000 in prizes to 2,900 winning poets.

New Academic Scholarship established

A recent contribution from Rex W. and Dorothy Lehman Hershberger of Martinsburg will establish a scholarship at Juniata College, according to Dr. Claytoy N. Pheasant, vice-president for college advancement.

<MsThe Rex W. and Dorothy Lehman Hershberger Scholarship will be awarded annually on the basis of academic achievement to a Church of the Brethren student from the Memorial Church of the Brethren, Martinsburg, with second preference to a student who is a member of Middle District Church of the Brethren. The recipient will be selected by the Juniata College financial aid office in consultation with the Middle Pennsylvania District Executive.

Both Rex and Dorothy Hershberger are 1950 graduates of Juniata College and each has served as an alumni trustee for the College, as well as receiving the Juniata Alumni Service Award.

Rex is an insurance agent and president of Hershberger and Myers, Inc. He has served as president of Juniata"s National Alumni Association.

Dorothy is a past chairperson for the Juniata Annual Support Fund. She is the director of alumni and church relations at Juniata.

Goodbye Durnbaugh Hello Roberts

By Henry R. Salomon

Dr. Robert C. Roberts, professor of philosophy and psychological studies at Wheaton College in Wheaton, Illinois has joined the Juniata College Faculty for the 1989-90 academic year as the fourteenth J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity.

Dr. Roberts succeeds Dr. Donald F. Durnbaugh, professor of church history at Bethany Theological Seminary in Oak Brook, Illinois.

The J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professorship of Evangelical Christianity was established at Juniata College through a bequest from the late J. Omar Good, a 1896 Juniata graduate and a Philadelphia printing executive.

<MsMr. Good directly left Juniata College one million dollars. After providing for other bequests, he ordered that the remainder of his estate be used for "the perpetuation of the Historical Triune Faith of Protestant Christianity."

Dr. Roberts, received his bachelor of arts degree (1965) and his master of arts degree (1970) from Wichita State University. In 1970 he earned his bachelor of divinity degree from Yale University. By 1974 he had completed work on his dissertation entitled "Rudolf Bultmann's Theology: Critical Interpretation," and earned his Ph.D. from Yale.

The author of five books, Dr. Roberts' works include: "Rudolf Bultmann's Theology; A Critical Interpretation"; "The Strengths of a Christian"; "The Virtues: Contemporary Essays and Moral Character"; and "Philosophical Fragments: A Conceptual and Structural Commentary". He has had numerous articles appear in more than 12 journals including: the "Journal of Religion", "The Christian Century", and "Christianity Today".

Dr. Roberts and his wife, Elizabeth, will reside in Huntingdon with their children.

WKVR Power 92 notes

It's a new production year and a new staff for Power 92 FM, and as part of our duty during the next year, the incoming staff feels that we have a responsibility to keep the student body informed about the campus organization that serves the JC community at least 15 hours a day, every day.

So...here's what's new, different, and exciting at Power 92.

According to Al Schroff, Chief Engineer of WKVR, the station is considering purchasing a new and much needed transmitter. The new transmitter would send out a signal of 150-200 watts, and could potentially reach as far as Altoona, whereas the station's current model sends out only a 13 watt signal, and cannot be heard outside Huntingdon.

However, the primary reasons for the Power 92 staff considering such a move are the ease of repair and the lack of an adequate back-up unit. WKVR's current transmitter is about 20 years old; so old that its manufacturer has gone out of business, which means that if the existing unit ever breaks down, it would be next to impossible to have it repaired quickly and inexpensively.

Also mentioned was the fact that should Power 92's current system shut down, the station would have no choice but to go off the air immediately because it has no backup. Buying a new model would greatly decrease the likelihood of a malfunction.

The only thing hampering the station's acquisition of a new transmitter is money. The bargain basement cost of a new transmitter ranges from $9000-$15000, more money than WKVR has in its budget. Therefore, the station is asking the Board of Trustees for a loan until enough money can be raised to cover the cost of the transmitter. The station needs campus-wide support in this endeavor. Remember, it will benefit the entire campus.

In other station news, a sign-up sheet has been posted in the station lobby for all those interested in becoming a licensed DJ. Training shows are held every Sunday from 1 to 3 pm at the station, and are immediatley followed by chalk talks and production room training. If you have any questions, see Chief Announcer Bill Mundy at the station, or address your questions to WKVR, box 1005.

Lastly, for those of you who ordered Power 92-Springfest boxers, the tentative pick-up dates are April 17 thru Springfest weekend. An extra 30 pairs of shorts will be available on a first come-first basis. The cost is $5. If interested, contact Michelle Bannon, Promotions Manager, at either box 1005 or box 1406.

As always, Power 92 reminds you to phone in your request at 643-5031. Keep listening!!!

Outreach Center to sponsor workshop

Due to the overwhelming response to the first and second "Starting Your Own Business" workshops conducted by the Business Outreach Center of Juniata College, a third work shop is being planned. The workshop, designed for people contemplating a new business start-up and for those who have just begun their own business, will be held at Juniata College on Tuesday, May 2 from 6:30 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of Ellis College Center. The workshop is once again being coordinated by the Juniata College Business Outreach Center.

The topic "Sources of Funding" will be addressed by Frank Fischer, vice president of Commonwealth Bank, and Michael Keating, executive director of Huntingdon County Business and Industry. Huntingdon attorney Charles Bierbach will speak on "Forms of Business Organization, Sole Propierorship, Partnership, and Incorporation."

Harry Stroup, a certified public accountant from Huntingdon, will stress the importance of good bookkeeping, while Dr. James Lakso, head of the Department of Economics and Business Administration at Juniata, will geve insight into the many services provided by the Business Outreach Center.

Rounding out the program will be John Tedeschi, regional representative for SCORE (the Service Corps of Retired Executives), who will cover counseling and consulting services available for new businesses.

The workshop is being sponsored by Juniata College, the U.S. Small Business Administration,SCORE, Hutingdon County Business and Industry, and the Huntingdon Area Merchants.

Registration for the workshop is limited to 40 people and a nonrefundable fee of $5.00 is required of each person. For more information you may contact Juniata College at 643-4310, ext. 631.

Juniata College Students create an international incident of fellowship

The simple phrase "the show must go on" was perhaps never more apparent than Sunday afternoon on the Juniata College campus.

Amigo, a young Mexican singing group, was scheduled to perform in Oller Hall at 8:15 pm on Sunday night. Around 1:00 pm on Sunday, Jody Kauchick, the coordinator for the group contacted Bill Huston, director of programming and conferences at the College. The coordinator explained that the group had performed in New York on Saturday evening and traveled to Scranton for the night. When they awoke on Sunday morning to begin their journey to Huntingdon, they realized that their truck, all of their musical instruments and sound equipment had been stolen. Kauchick was calling Huston from the police station in Scranton. According to Kauchick, the police had recovered the truck and the sound equipment, but Mexican hats were thrown into the river and more than $30,000 worth of musical instruments were missing. Despite this incident, the group still wanted to perform at Juniata less than seven hours later, if Huston could get their twelve musicians some instruments to use.

When the group arrived at 7:00 pm, they were greeted with a full drum set, a trumpet, trombone, saxophone, bongo drums, congo drums, synthesizers, a piano, electric guitar and bass and amplifiers. The Juniata student rock group, "FIVE PLAY" and Band Director Doug Backenhus, hoping that the show could go on, generously provided musical instruments for the group, according to Huston.

"I contacted Henry Salomon, leader of the band "FIVE PLAY" and explained to him that we needed full instrumentation for the Amigo band and would he talk to the other members of his band. He explained that his band was playing in the afternoon at Cloister and that Amigo could use anything they wanted to that evening. At 7:00 pm we had the equipment set up for Amigo and when the group arrived we were ready to go to work on the stage." said Huston.

The Juniata students and the 28 members of the Amigo group prepared the stage for the 8:15 pm performance. "Spirits were high as the Juniata College and Mexican contingencies worked together in a hurried pace, knowing that the show must go on." Huston added.

"Considering the crisis that the Amigo group had encountered they remained friendly, accommodating and grateful towards our students and their show reflected their attitude," said Huston.

Promises of fame and fortune lure law students

(CPS)--An unprecendented number of college seniors are trying to get into law school, various campuses report.

While no national numbers are available so soon after the April 1 deadline many schools impose for applications, individual law school admissions officers almost without exception say they've received far more applications for the 1989-90 school year than for other years within memory.

"We've had a 40 percent increase over last year," said John Friesman, admissions director for the University of Vermont's law school, "and last year we had a 22 percent increase over the previous year."

At Drake University Law School Dean David Walker reported the number of applications has increased 60 percent over the number he got last spring.

Nationwide, 18.5 percent more students took the Law School Admissions Test this year than in 1987-88, the Law School Admissions Service (LSAS) said.

The boom, moreover, comes after a 12-year decline in the number of students wanting to go on to law school, noted LSAS spokesman Bill Kinnish.

He attributes it to a number of factors, not the least of which is the popularity of the "L.A. Law" television show.

"The first factor contributing to the boom is image," Kinnish said. "There was a lot of publicity, and bad press and articles about the glut of lawyers during the decline. Now we have 'L.A. Law' and other activities that brought the law to the forefront."

Kinnish isn't the only law school admissions director to thank "L.A. Law" for students's increased interest in the field.

"That's an impression that various admissions officers have stated, but it's unsubstantiated," observed Ted Hulbert of the University of California at Los Angeles' law school, which is wading through a record 5,607 applications for 325 openings in next fall's first-year law class.

Mary Upton, admissions director at the Washington College of Law at American University in Washington, D.C., also thinks tv might have inspired some seniors to consider a law career, although she cites a different show.

"Washington is a very hot place to study law since the Iran-Contra hearings," Upton contended.

Upton and others quickly add students seem to be responding to influences more substantial than mere images, too.

Kinnish, for one, said many students mention how lucrative law can be as their motive for applying to law school.

Students, Kinnish said, "spend a lot of money over their three years of law school, and they have to expect that there will be economic opportunities at the end of those three years."

Some top law firms in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles start some new lawyers at as much as $75,000 a year.

Kinnish and Upton both speculated some students who in the past may have gone to med school are opting for law school instead. "You can bootstrap a law profession a lot easier than a medical profession," Kinnish said.

Students may be applying to law schools in greater numbers than in past years not because they plan to practice law as a career, but because it "can act as an entre into other professions," Kinnish added.

The boom, however, can strain law schools' ability to teach more students.

Vermont, which like many schools accepts more students than it can handle because it assumes some of them ultimately will enroll elsewhere, severely overtaxed its resources when it found itself with 30 more students than it could handle in its 1988-89 first-year law class, said Friesman.

In response, Vermont capped its first-year enrollment at 150 for 1989-90, but the number of applications rose anyway.

"The harder it is to get in," noted Drake's Walker, "the more people want to come here."

Walker said students seem to rely on image for which school, as well as which profession, to choose. Many students, he explained, equate a school's quality with its entrance requirements. Though schools that are hard to get into aren't always good academically, Walker said raising admissions standards nearly always raises demand for the school.

"We've quite consciously taken advantage of the surge by being more selective," he reported.

May Day Celebration set for 1989

by Trish Kazmerski

May Day has long been a tradition practiced by the Juniata College Community. It is a day where the men of Juniata recognize and honor their female counterparts.

This year's May Day will be held Monday, May 1st, at 7:00 a.m. in Baker Refractory. A breakfast, which will be served by the men, is being planned.

During the festivities, an Honor Woman will be selected. Qualifications for this position are a female from campus, either faculty or student who has done something beneficial for both the Huntingdon and Juniata College communities. A Senior Woman of the Year, as well as a Senior Man of the Year, will also be recognized. Along with these selections, two women from the other three classes will also be honored.

The nominees are as follows: Seniors: Joanne Thomas, Crickett Julius, Beth Loych, Joelle Beecher, and Dorelle Lombardi. Senior Males: Mike Barnett, Chris Glover, Les Squiar, Joe DeBlase, Shawn Peck, Ed Hoffman, Dan Stambaugh, and Dave Faust. Juniors: Melanie Hopkins, Tina Martiens, Jennifer Scarer, and Angie Shue. Sophomores: Jeanette Zalder, Joanne Rebert, Anne Marie Dinwoodie, and Donna Spencer. Freshman: Chris Weikert, Heather Neff, Kelly Crawford, and Audra Mamuw.

The May Day nominees...the envelope please.

By Gregory Janetta

OK, here I am, killing time in the train station in Trondheim. (For the benefit of non-ed. majors who haven't had geography that's in Norway, about mid-way up on the west coast. If you don't know where Norway is-take geography). I'm all for making killing time in train stations an olympic sport-I'm ready. European train connections come in 2 varieties: 3 minutes or 3 hours. Train stations are a part of the wonderful world of student travel (otherwise known as "Doing Europe with almost no money").

I think this article is supposed to tell you what it's like being overseas. What's it supposed to be like? My days here generally consist of getting up, showering, breakfast, class, lunch, work, and other stuff(shopping, basketball, etc.). That sounds an awful lot like an average day at Juniata.

How much harder is this "average day" in a foreign language? With regard to classes, language has little to do with comprehension. How many lectures have you sat through without understanding a thing the prof. talked about? That was in English(hard to believe somedays isn't it?).

Then there's always dealing with red-tape in another language. Remember the "smile-and-nod" technique which got you through foreign language classes? That technique, combined with appropriate use of the "look lost and stupid" technique will carry you through just about anything (maybe even police encounters, should you have them-I woundn't know). As for everday conversation, with German I take the two nouns at the beginning of the sentence, relate them to the three verbs at the end and ignore the three or four lines of gibberish in between.(Sorry Klaus).

There are, of course, certain cultural differences to overcome. For instance, there is nothing resembling a Sheetz here, and in all of Germany I know of only one water fountain. If lack of those two things doesn't send you into culture shock, nothing will. These losses are compensated for by the existence of at least one bakery every 50 yards or so. Must be some strange German zoning law. It does have a serious draining effect on the wallet. One can only pass so many bakeries before the eyes, nose, and stomach overpower the brain.

Perhaps the best part, when you are tired of where you are, and have had enough of that culture for awhile, you take your free train pass and throw yourself into another culture or two. Just when you thought you had it all together and totally mastered a second language you discover there are at least 8 or 10 others you have no clue to. You also discover the wonderful world of student (real cheap) travel. Spending the night on trains(notice, I didn't say sleeping), not eating right, having no conception of the day or date, changing monetary systems and languages four times in four days, etc. Four to six weeks of this will make you glad to get back to the place you were so happy to get away from.

Cynicism aside (sales pitch time), being overseas is quite a rewarding experience. (If there was ever a vague, non-comital statement, that's it). It is a challenge, and it has it's rough points. Everything does. It has lots of rewarding points, too. You learn a good bit about yourself as well as another culture. You learn how to pack your entire life into 2 suitcases and a carry-on bag! (In retrospect, that was a trivial problem as compared to bringing it all home again).

As an exchange student you are allowed the ignorance of freshman, and the privileges of a senior, plus some on both sides. Sure there is quite a bit of effort and work required on your part, but not much more than required for a year at Juniata. The benefits of a year abroad far outweigh the benefits of ayear at Juniata, however. Of course, a year abroad means leaving glorious Huntingdon for a year; and what could ever motivate you to do that? After all, people like it there.

Behind the campus curtain

By Jen Potts

If you haven't been to the Student Art Show at Shoemaker Gallery, I recommend it highly. There are many talented artists here on campus. The student show is really the only way in which to be recognized at Juniata College for achievements in the visual arts. You have until May 7 to walk across Moore Street and see for yourself, what our fellow students have to offer the world of art.

Now for my real purpose--to unravel the mysteries of this place (and I use that word loosely).My endeavor this week is to uncover the recent theft on campus. Approximately three weeks ago, Jen Traber, a sophomore living in Terrace, noticed her wallet, checkbook, and ID missing. Jen began receiving phone calls from local stores, such as IGA, regarding what totaled 400-500 dollars worth of bad checks. This caused Jen to stop payment on checks and to notify the police of what she thought was going on. The police contacted the stores and obtained a description which fit that of two Juniata students.

According to a local newspaper account of the incident, Kristen Barnett and Sharon Nearhoof were taken before District Justice James Kyper Tuesday, April 11, on charges of theft and forgery. The outcome of their alledged involvement in the incident is still pending.

This past Saturday, some residents of Lesher and their guests were victims of the dreaded broken doorknob. Jeanette Zalder and Karen Breidenstine were leaving room 202, and they pulled the door shut firmly. They suspected a prank from their guests, Greg Howe and Arndt Papenfuss, so were not surprised when they could not open the door to reenter the room. However, when the guys could not get out, everyone was a little shocked. It took the failure of an RA and her pass key, security and their master key, and a toolless locksmith to bring in the cherry-picker to free them. So after an hour and a half wait, the men were freed from Lesher via the second story window only to have missed the South Semi-formal.

Well, mistakes are made, and I should know. The freshmen can rest easy knowing their quest for the lost keg ended three weeks ago when "the half" was discovered in my room. Tune in next week to see what will be revealed behind the next campus curtain.

6 days to finals

No one can escape!!

TRIVIA WITH TRISH

By Trish Kazmerski

Due to a semester's amount of work that is due in 2 weeks, this article is going to be relatively short and simple. In the eternal words of the Greek, "no body asked me but..." this weeks article deals with the Brady family. Yes, that bell-bottomed and paisley clothed family that we have watched grow into the first family of TV commercials and TV family reunions is featured this week in the critically acclaimed "Trivia with Trish." So listen up.. "Here's the story of a man named Brady..."

Remember Marcia, that blonde bombshell who had a thing for dentists, well she is married at the age of 32 and is expecting her first child. Her TV sister Jan, played by Eve Plumb teams up with her TV dad Robert Reed to frequently guest star on TV series and mini-series. I wonder what a 30 year old Jan would look like, possibly her Aunt Jenny? Ms. Wonder Mom herself-Carol (played by Florence Henderson) can be seen frying chicken for Wesson Oil on TV, or you can tune her in on a weekly cooking show on the Nashville Network, which I have sometimes been caught watching by self-righteous rock-n-rollers.

Now getting to those incredible men of TV land, Greg(Barry Williams) is 33 and recently starred on Broadway in "Romance, Romance." My favorite Brady brother was, and is, Peter, played by Chris Knight. Chris is 31 and is in the computer business. He can play with my floppy disk or interface with me anytime. The runt of the family, Bobby played by Michael Lookinland, whose name incidentally always facinated me, is a 28 year old redhead working in Salt Lake City as a sports journalist. Some more trivia for you. To make Bobby look like the rest of the gang, the producers used to dye his hair. They had to stop this practice when the Brady guys all got perms. Bobby didn't want overprocessed hair. Look what happened to Greg the night of his graduation.

Well that takes care of 6 of the 8 member family. That wise cracking maid who knew where to find her meat (hey, get your mind out of the gutter, I'm talking about her boyfriend Sam the butcher), portrayed by Ann B. Davis spends her time in volunteer work for charities in Denver.

Now what's my article without some controversy? For the past couple of years, I, along with numerous Americans,, have been under the impression that sweet, innocent little Cindy had turned into a drug using, slut of the cinema porn star who overdosed when she was 22. However, like most rumors, this is also untrue. My favorite little lisped blonde is alive and well at the age of 27 running a shoe design business with her husband. She probably makes track shoes because of her TV experience from running away from Buddy Hitton.

So folks there you have it, an update on the Brady family brought to you by your favorite red head and the people from the Philadelphia Inquier. Next week I'll try to update you on the Partridge Family, but please don't hold your breath!

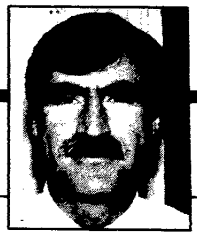
Counselor's Corner



By Dr. Jay Buchanan

"I'm not going to take this s--t anymore" is a famous line from the award-winning movie of a few years ago, "Network". Having read Dan Crosby's recent article, there seems to me to be a real connection between my locus of control discussions of late and his observations. "I'm not going to take it anymore" should be followed up with "...and I can do something about it."

The 300,000 who rallied in Washington, D.C. a few weeks ago decided they weren't going to take what the overly-vocal, highly visible minority was saying concerning the emotional issue of abortion. The message came through loudly and clearly that the few will not rule the many. (If you remember, only 67,000 anti-abortionists gathered at a similar rally earlier.)

On a more personal and local level, nearly 900 individuals in the Huntingdon community (Juniata College students and yours truly included) decided to stand up and be counted regarding their Christrian beliefs and the beliefs of the Ku Klux Klan. That many people banding together can really make a difference in terms of what will be tolerated and what will not be tolerated.

An issue that is certainly on the minds of many of us is the recent Alaskan oil spill. What can the average person do about it, especially when world-wide, powerful EXXON is the culprit and responsible for what happened? I don't know about you, but my EXXON credit card is going back to the oil company, in an unusable form, with my final payment.

The point of all this, it seems to me, is that most of us can do something, albeit seemingly small, to make ourselves heard. We must believe that, as Dan Crosby noted in his article, we can make a difference and that we are not totally powerless, to be used and manipulated by powerful others.

Get involved, choose your issues carefully, and go for it! Until next time, take care of yourself and think good thoughts.

AL•NG•MUDDY•RUN

By Rush Blady

For nearly everywhere you want to go at Juniata, there is a path to get you there. No, this is not an advertisement for furthering career opportunity, but simply a hard, plain statement of fact. The designer of our revered institution somehow became path crazy, and laid down enough concrete slabs in connected sets to pave over Lake Raystown. It is my belief that this mystery architect had two purposes in mind behind this project.

He planned to assure Juniata traditions of friendliness and good cheer by designing these paths so that everyone, at least once everyday, must pass everyone else. However, he didn't reckon on the fact that everyone after having to say "hi" more than a thousand times a day, might get alittle miffed at the arrangement. Along about March, the crisp clear "hi""s that formerly sung out in greeting from every throat have assumed a muted consistency, if only for variety's sake, and produce variations to the like of "hey", "huh", "hmn", "whatsup?" and finally only a tired nod of the head.

Also, said architect left out a few paths in his master plan. How, for instance, did he expect Tussey-Terrace people to get to dinner? They can either contend with the mud and loose footballs on North Lawn, or make an end run around Cloister, and avoid eating during vengance week. His plan also left out paths from Tussey-Terrace to Brumbaugh Science Center, (I, having been a two-year resident of Tussey-Terrace, have some complaints about the way that dorm got shorted. I have slipped down that damn bank behind Swigart in the rain more times than I care to remember.), from the front of Good to the Humanities Building, from the front of Good to the Library, and from the Library across Detwiler (what happened to that geyser?) to the Gym. All unforgiveable oversights-something should be done! But this less-than-perfect design in a path rich campus leads me to believe that the architect had another reason in mind...

He did it to be funny. It is my secret belief that the Campus network of paths, seen from above, spells out a single, very rude word. Maybe God has taken offense, and thats why it always rains in Huntingdon.

Well, as this article has taken a turn for the insane, I'll call it quits. Just rememer, next time you are strolling on a path at JC, you may be playing a part in some greater, universal significance. Who said Juniata is isolated?

Tribe nine garner top spot in MAC Northwest

By John Bulger

The Tribe baseball team entered the week sporting a seven game winning streak and a one game lead atop the MAC Northwest. At the end of the week the Indians were still atop the division after a sweep of York and Lebanon Valley and a split with Wilkes.

York came to College Hill on Tuesday with a respectable club. The Indians took the first game of the twinbill 5-2 with Scott Close gaining the win. Trailing 2-0 in the fifth the Indians went ahead on a Paul Hayduk double, Jim Tomassetti triple, an RBI single by Dan Strecker, a single by Amo Cianci, a sacrifice bunt by John Bulger, and a Vic Huber single. Kevin Neff got the save while Hayduk led the Tribe with a 2 for 3 effort at the plate.

The Indians won the second game 6-0 with Mike Reed getting the shutout victory. Steve Baer had two hits and Tomassetti scored two runs for the victors. Reed struck out four while walking only one.

On Thursday the Tribe travelled to Lebanon Valley for another twinbill. The Indians came up with wins 8-4 and 14-1 while banging out 30 hits. Scott Munro got the win in the first game with Henry Marche getting the save. Joe Calamita collected the game two win. Nineteen players saw action in the twinbill. Paul Hayduk had five hits and five RBI's in the doubleheader. Huber collected four hits. The wins put the winning streak at eleven games and the Tribe's record at 15-7.

On Saturday the team travelled to Wilkes-Barre for two league games with Wilkes. The Colonels won the first game 3-2 on a strong pitching performance by Jim Francis. Scott Close took the loss though pitching a superb game. He struck out eight while walking only one. Hayduk, Cianci, and Strecker had two hits apiece and Hayduk and Cianci had the RBI's

The Indians won the second game 11-6 after trailing 3-0 and 6-2 due to two Colonel homeruns. The Indians tied the score with four runs in the fourth inning. The runs came on Cianci, Huber, and Zanic doubles, a Strecker triple, and a Kevin Neff single. The tribe took the lead for good in the sixth when Bulger singled and Dave Crissman doubled to put runners on second and third. George Zanic tripled to send both runners home. Amo Cianci also hit an inside-the-park homerun in the sixth. Mike Reed settled down after a rocky start to gain the win for Juniata. Kevin Neff was 4-for-4 in game two.

The Indians are now 16-8 overall, 6-2 in the MAC Northwest, one game ahead of Elizabethtown (5-3). The Tribe played Dickinson on Tuesday and are scheduled for a shot at the division crown on Saturday at E-town.

Women's softball team sports winning streak

by Dick Scialabba

The Juniata Women's softball team is currently on a three game winning streak heading into the final week of the season.

Last week, the Lady Indians split a double-header with York College, losing 5-2, and winning the second game 4-3, despite getting 15 hits in the two games.

On Thurday, April 20th, the women's team had a good day winning two games from Lebanon Valley, 9-4 and 7-6. Sophomore, Kate Bradley, pitched and won both games with pitcher help from Freshman Leslie Wass in the second game. Also, the team bats came alive with 24 hits in both games.

Three freshmen, Cathy Packer, Amy Scialabba, and Carolyn Sheedy had a combined 12 hits, along with sophomores, Jen Dippeny and Dee Pennypaker, collected four and three collectively. JC also, continues to play great defense.

This week, the Lady Indians play six MAC games. Messiah, Monday, April 24th Home, and finish on the road at Susquehanna Wednesday April 26th and Elizabethtown Saturday, April 29th.

Steeler Kicker to speak against drugs

Mr. Gary Anderson, place kicker for the Pittsburgh Steelers football team, will be at the Huntingdon High School Auditorium on May 4th, from 6 to 8 pm for a community program. William Mullins, pastor of the Valley View Alliance Church, Piney Ridge, Huntingdon, announced today that the public is cordially invited to meet with Mr. Anderson for autographs from 6 to 7 pm and a program immediatley following. Gary Anderson, a Christian athlete, is rated as the #3 place kicker in the National Football League and is currently the holder of four individual team records. He is ranked number 2 in the American Football Conference with a total of 118 points for the season. After the evening's autograph session, Mr. Anderson will be speaking of his personal testimony in the auditorium complex. Also included in the evening's program will be a door prize of an autographed football and other items. There is no charge for this event. However, there will be an opportunity for a free will offering. If anyone should have any questions, of it any group would like reservations, they may contact Don Garner at (814) 627-3051.

rent DER standards," said Yocum. Since the Huntingdon facility is an "antique" plant, the permit would be denied, according to Yocum.

"The bottom line is that we're looking at a new plant and DER is saying 48 months for that, because of design work, design approval, permits, construction, etc.," said Yocum.

"I can't imagine in today's world that that's a four-year project," said Juniata College president Dr. Robert Neff, who on Sunday stressed that people should not be worried by "the most extravagant of all claims."

"We are not sure if this is a three-day problem, a three-week problem or a one-year problem, but in the interim we will have a satisfactory water supply for our students," said Neff. If the college is forced to install water dispensers in the rest rooms and on residential floors, Neff said "We may have the best water in the school's history."

The Juniata College Dining Service provided only tea, coffee and milk for dinner on Thursday night, but John Geritty, director of food services, was quickly in touch with beverage "suppliers, to ensure that students would be provided their normal complement by lunch" Friday. Students were able to obtain beverages from new soda dispensers and water coolers at that meal.

"The office of the college president and nurse Jane Brown were notified by borough representatives right before dinner, and both promptly called me," said Geritty. Students were warned to boil their water by announcements made throughout the evening meal and signs posted around the campus later Thursday night. The boil-water edict was lifted Monday afternoon, but Geritty said that dining facilities would not return to normal for "at least a day, to make sure that everything is properly washed out."

Ingestion of the organism giardia lamblia can cause illness ranging from mild to extremely debilitating, according to information provided by Environmental Associates, Ltd. of Bradford, Pa. Symptoms of the disease include diarrhea, abdominal cramps, gas malaise and weight loss. Vomiting, chills, headache and fever can also occur in more serious cases.

In general, these symptoms develop within two weeks after exposure to the organism and last for a period of 10-15 days after treatment, which consists of prescription drugs.

Kris Witchey named capt. for 1989 volleyball season

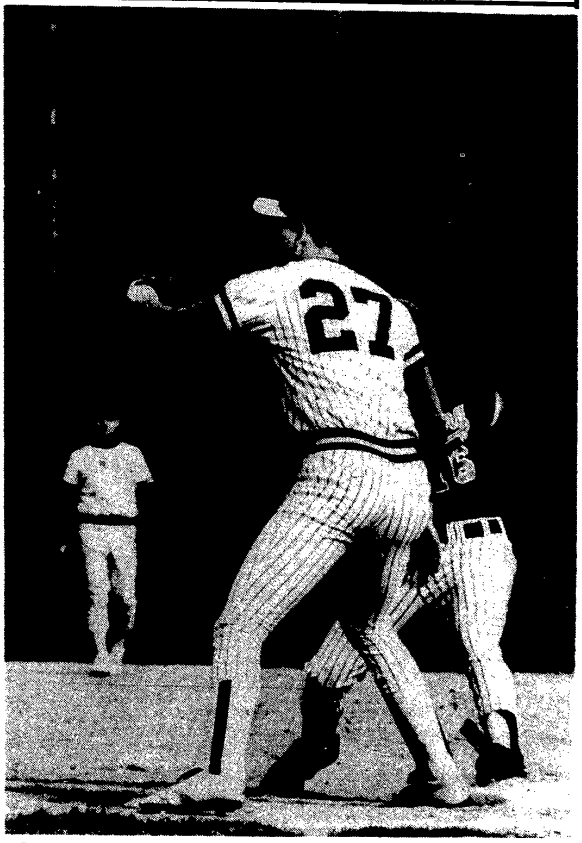
Kris Witchey of Baltimore, MD, formerly of Grand Junction, Colorado, has been named captain of the Juniata College women's volleyball team for the 1989 season, according to Juniata coach Larry Bock.

A 1986 graduate of Grand Junction High School and volleyball player for coach Max Kralchek, Witchey was an All-East and All-Middle Atlantic Conference setter for Juniata in 1988. Witchey is a three-year letterwinner for the Indians.

"With Kris, Juniata will have a strong and respected leader for its captain," says Bock. "Her election should be a key ingredient for this group to reach its best potential."

Juniata completed its 12th volleyball season under Bock last fall with a 43-7 record and took third place for the second time in the NCAA Division National Tournament. It was Juniata's third consecutive trip to the national final four and the sixth in the past eight year. Bock, who was Tiger/ASICS Division III "Coach of the Year" in '88, has coached his teams to a 424-84 record on College Hill.

Witchey, a chemistry student at Juniata, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Witchey of Baltimore.



Paul Hayduk awaits a pick-off throw from one of Juniata's pitchers. The Indians are now in the middle of a playoff race in the MAC Northwest Division.

Good luck to all teams as the MAC's begin.

Bring home the gold!!

New Vice President named at Juniata

Dr. Karen Wiley Sandler, associate provost at Gettysburg College, has been named vice president and dean of academic affairs at Juniata College. The announcement was made today by Dr. Robert W. Neff, president of the college.

Dr. Sandler, who will begin her duties at Juniata July 1, was selected from among 125 individuals applying for the position. Following an intensive interview and screening process involving college faculty, administrators, and students, Dr. Sandler emerged as the leading candidate.

In a telephone interview Sunday from her home in Littlestown, Pa., Dr. Sandler expressed her optimism for Juniata and the role she will play in the college's future. "During the interviews," she said, "I came to know Juniata as a community which nourishes open investigation, intellectual growth, and a commitment to humane values. As the newest member of the faculty and administration, I look forward to contributing to such a community"

In discussing the most pressing priorities for the college, Dr. Sandler noted that future strength should be built upon the strengths traditionally associated with the institution. "It is tempting to think only of the challenges facing an institution and Juniata is not atypical in its needs," Dr. Sandler said.

"I applaud the student centered outcomes approach being proposed at Juniata," she said. "A curriculum based on outcomes strikes me as rational, humane, and extremely effective.

"The strategic planning currently under way at the college is crucial if Juniata is to remain proactive in our changing environment. To me planning is a contemporary word for reflection, and reflection, as we all know, is an old and cherished liberal arts concept," Dr. Sandler said.

Dr. Sandler noted the attractiveness of the Juniata curriculm in providing students breadth of learning across disciplines as well as depth within their intended field of study. "Curricula often fall apart by concentrating on one or the other," Dr. Sandler noted. "The combination of breadth and depth is a very attractive part of the Juniata experience."

A member of the Gettysburg College administration and faculty since 1985, Dr. Sandler comes to Juniata with a diverse background in academic affairs, student services, and teaching. She received her bachelor of arts degree in French in 1964 from the Principia College, followed by completion of her masters degreee in French from The Pennsylvania State University. Dr. Sandler completed rewuirements for Ph.D. in romance languages in 1972 from The University of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Sandler held faculty appointments at The university of Vermont from 1969 through 1985. She currently holds a non-tenured appointment in the French department at Gettysburg College, teaching Freshman Colloquy in Liberal Learning and serving as a freshmen advisor.

Dr. Sandler's first involvement in college administrative work came in 1982 when she served as coordinator of workshops on academic advising and coordinator of the instructional incentive grants program of the College of Arts and Sciences and the Instructional Development Center at The University of Vermont.

In 1983, Dr. Sandler assumed the position special assistant to the dean of the College of Arts at the university. As the special assistant she advised students having academic difficulty, conducted academic advising workshops and monitored study abroad and honors programs.

From 1984 to 1985 Dr. Sandler served the university as acting assistant dean and director of student affairs for the College of Arts and Sciences. As such, she planned and carried out programs for parents and students, advised department chairs on scheduling and curricular issues, advised the curriculum committee on enrollment patterns, and planned the college's commencement program.

Dr. Sandler began her tenure at Gettysburg in 1985 as the assistant provost. Among her many duties and reponsibilities she chaired the Academic Standing Committee, initiated a retention study and implemented the recommendations resulting from the study, advised the provost on major restructuring of academic advcising and support services,a nd chaired the Orientation Task Force which was charged wwith revamping the freshman year experience.

In 1988 Dr. Sandler assumed the reponsibilities of associate provost with partaicular emphasis on curri-

Operation Diversity to begin

Juniata College has taken a major step toward recruiting a more diverse faculty and student body with the establishment of its Task Force on Diversity in the Educational Environment.

The charge of the task force is to study the issue of diversity as it pertains to Juniata College, and to make recommendations to the president of the College regarding current or new programs. In particular, the task force will focus on minority issues including the recruitment and retention of students and faculty members, and the quality of interaction among the members of the campus community.

The Task Force is made up of 12 members of Juniata's student body, faculty, and the campus community.

According to Charles E. Kensinger, director of admissions and chairman of the task force, "the ultimate goals of our group can be traced to the college's mission statement which says, in part, 'as a community, Juniata is especially concerned with the environment necessary to foster individual growth. It therefore values mutual support, the free exchange of diverse ideas, and the active pursuit of both cooperative and individual acchievement.' If Juniata is to be true to our mission," Kensinger said, "we must have an education environment that has diversity among the students, faculty, and staff."

According to Kensinger, the college is also concerned with preparing students to live and succeed in a global community. These students must be "aware of and sensitive to the differences that have historically divided people and have led to unjust and discriminatory practices. To that end," he said, "we believe that a greater diversity of people on our campus, a diversity which more accurately reflects the diversity which exists in our society, would better prepare all students once they leave the college."

The group will be examining the feasability of several specific options. Among those options may be the expansion of the minority student recruitment effort, the expansion to the college's exchange program to bring to campus more students

EDITORIAL, ETC.

Editorial

First of all, I would like to congratulate all of the seniors and wish them all good luck in future endeavors. All of you have earned your diploma, but now is when you will truly start paying for it. Your contribution to society, big or small, is your payment for your education. The amount of this payment is up to you, though.

To all of the underclassman staying here, take note of your senior friends graduating. Soon it will be your turn for the ultimate payback. How much are you willing to give? The answer to this question can be obtained during your short stay at Juniata; you have to take the initiave, though, to find it.

Juniata has many opportunities for its students to broaden their perspectives about everyday life. Lectures, films, recitals, and plays are just a few of the "extras" Juniata offers, but how many of us actually take the time to attend these. I for one can always find a reason not to go.

Another extra Juniata offers is the vast amount of student organizations on campus. These organizations are designed to give students time to gather with old friends, meet new people and work together toward a common goal. The actual enrollment in these clubs is very small, though.

Special events such as Special Olympics and the Bloodmobile come to Juniata every year and are a great opportunity for students to get involved for a short time. These events allow us to help others, but also give us a good feeling about ourselves.

The "extras" of Juniata mentioned in the previous paragraphs are all offered on campus every year. We as students must take the initiative to get involved and jump at the opportunity the college has given us to better ourselves; you may even find a person inside that you never knew was there.

Getting involved on campus will help you to make the ultimate payback to your community after graduation. The experience and knowledge obtained through your participation on campus will aid you in future years.

Next year, when you come back to school, come back with a "get involved" attitude. When you step on campus for the first time in August, start working on your payment plan...get involved.

Have a good summer. I will see you next year!

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

By Rush Blady

In ten days I will receive a piece of paper and a handshake that represent four years of investment - a monetary investment, yes, but also an investment in time, and knowledge, and experience. A certificate that represents a hundred all-night cramming sessions, or a hundred misspent dollars at Sheetz when you know buying at Weis would be cheaper, or a hundred weekends pining for love left behind on some beer-sticky lounge party floor, or a hundred faces of casual acquaintances you take for granted and will only miss when you realize you'll never see them in that particular situation again. And although the common joke is that a good diploma is only about as useful as one of your softer brands of toilet paper, the truth is that a diploma, any diploma, is really only as good as the person holding it. There is nothing tangible about the time we have spent here. Well, maybe five percent of what we learn at college is fact, accepted the world over. The rest, the part you can't measure, is what we're really about - each individual among us is an individual because of that immeasurable load of experience dumped every day, every night, and on every occasion on a mind struggling to define a personality that is at least moderately acceptable to this college society.

I never really thought about how much that diploma will symbolize when I receive it - until now. It will mark the end of my own little era, among others'. Whatever happens from now on, it will be with Juniata as my alma mater, and alma maters have a way of forgetting you, I am led to understand, unless they need money or you do something famous. So I'm done here. Finished. Kaput. See ya. Maybe you'll see a Senior some Homecoming, maybe even keep in touch with a good friend for awhile, but by and large, the Class of '89 will pass out of the influence of this institution, except in as far as that diploma defines each of us. There will be important things happening here in the next few years - things that all of you non-Seniors will have influence in and be influenced by. That's my prediction. Think about what you want your diploma to mean, to you... and influence things in your favor. Your diploma will always mean something, but you can have a bigger say in what yours means than I did.

See you later, Juniata. It was a fun four years, after all. I hope that these articles served some useful purpose, but I'm only in college, after all. Maybe that's the only thing I can still say - hey, it's only college, even if it is Juniata.

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

Better to be burned out than to have never had your fire lit! This thought was part of the overall message delivered by Dr. Robert Young, professor of higher education and student personnel administration at Kent State University. Young was one of three keynote speakers at a recent state conference that Counselor's Corner had the privilege of attending.

Granted, we all realize full well the devastating toll burnout can take on individuals specifically and society in general. However, we also know how tremendously exciting and rewarding our lives can be when we are actively involved with and making a meaningful contribution to those around us.

With seemingly endless demands placed on our time and energies, how do we guard against burnout and still continue to be involved in the important issues in our society and in the greater world.

Pamela Patrick, an expert in burnout, expecially in the health care profession, offers a number of helpful strategies. All have appeared from time to time in this column, but they surely bear repeating.

Begin a physical self-help program Included in the program are exercise, diet and nutrition, and relaxation. Attempt to eliminate behaviors such as smoking, use of mood altering drugs and excessive use of alcohol.

Start a psychological self-help program. Included are the areas of assertiveness, (learning to stand up for yourself), time-management, stress management and negotiation.

Work on enhancing relationships. We all know how critically important support groups are in terms of dealing with the rigors and demands of our environment. Strive to develop lasting, loving relationships with those around you.

Returning once again to Dr. Young's presentation, it seems to me that what he was saying is that we must be willing to risk the prospect or possibility of burnout to demonstrate our concern for each other. In a BMW, materialistic time, we need to strive to make caring a primary value. Young went on to add that there is a great deal of insult in our world today and we need to work to restore human dignity to everyone.

Don't allow burnout to be the excuse. We are in control and we don't have to suffer from it if we choose not to.

Counselor's Corner wishes the graduating seniors great success in the job market and graduate school. To returning students, have a relaxing , rejuvenating and restful respite from JC.

To all, think good thoughts and be sure to tell the important people in your life just how you feel.

Minority Fellowship awarded to student

Mary A. Fortson's life has been filled with a long string of mountains to climb and challenges to overcome. She has had to persevere through being orphaned at fifteen; quitting high school; and becoming a single parent. Through it all, the Mt. Union resident has maintained a belief that she would achieve great things for herself and for others.

As a junior English and secondary education major at Juniata College, Mary Fortson is about to take a giant step closer to making a difference. She has been selected to be among 40 college students in the nation, one of only two from Pennsylvania, to receive a prestigious Minority Leaders Fellowship offered by The Washington Center located Washington, D.C.

The Minority Leaders Fellowship Program gives talented and motivated young Americans of minority descent the opportunity to spend ten weeks in Washington in an intensive educational experience. The fellowship will combine active learning with exposure to national leaders.

The program will encourage each of the 40 students to be involved in leadership, to confirm their commitment to making a difference in society, and to understand and accept the greater responsibilities of being a leader--- on any scale.

Ms. Fortson's abilities to lead are evident from the long list of activities she has been a part of at Juniata and in her community. She is the student director of the Writing Center, is a member of the Writer's Club and the Reader's Club, and is a peer advisor for freshmen students. She is also a member of the Juniata College Honor Society.

Ms. Fortston is a founding member of the Mt. Union Substance Abuse Task Force, serves as superintendent and teacher at the Mt. Hope Baptist Church Sunday School, and served on the board of directors of the Tri-County Community Counseling Agency.

Selection of the 40 Minority Fellows began with an invitation to the nation's 3,000 colleges and universities to nominate a candidate for the prestigious award. Following an exhaustive process of application and review, the field was narrowed to the top 100 candidates who were then evaluated and screened by members of a Blue-Ribbon panel composed of academic and professional leaders. The panel then selected the 40 students to receive the all-expenses-paid fellowships.

In her application material, Ms. Fortson outlined some of her concerns for the future of our society. "Violence, poverty, and racial hatred are commonly cited as major problems that need to be addressed today. They are important issues," she said. "Our continued existence hinges on whether we allow them to continue to grow and destroy us."

"I see them, however, not as isolated issues," she said, "but as the visible effects of the disintegrating value of human rights. Consider -- violence is the violation of the rights of others; poverty is the result of societies lack of concern for people's basic survival needs; and racial hatred is bred through the ignorance and disregard of another's human rights."

"As a future educator," Ms. Fortson added, "I can influence young people through instruction of what has been done, and more importantly what needs to be done, through effective and persuasive expression of those ideas essential for confronting and addressing human rights issues. Countless revolutionary changes have been started by convincing people, through effective rhetorical devices, that they could produce results."

"I'm not so unrealistic," she concluded, "to think my life's contribution will eradicate these problems. However, I am idealistic enough to believe I can make a difference."

Behind the Campus Curtain

A Juniata College student wrecked and abandoned a college car in Oneida Twp. in the early morning of April 1, 1989, according to State Police.

Freshmen Chris M. Confer, of RD 4 Huntingdon, was driving south on State Route 4007 in a 1987 Berretta, that the school leased from Sun Enterprises, when he lost control of the vehicle, said police.

The vehicle was discovered between 4 am and 5:30 am, said police. "By tracing the path of the skid marks, we could tell that the car swerved to the left, back across to the right and up an embankment, where it rolled over-partially on the berm, partially on the road. The automobile suffered severe damage," said a police spokesman.

According to police, Confer walked back to the college that night. Confer later spoke with a police investigator. There was no

Indian Football Team selects captains for '89

Steve Campbell of Mountville and Dan Crosby of Verona have been selected captains of the 1989 Juniata College football team, according to Juniata head coach Brad Small.

A 6'3, 215-pound senior linebacker from Hempfield High School, Campbell was fifth on the team with 42 tackles last season including 19 solos. He led Juniata with 12 tackles for losses, and was tied for the team-high with four quarterback sacks and two fumble recoveries. He is a three-year letterwinner for the Tribe.

Crossey is a 1986 grduate of Penn Hills High School and a three-year letterwinner for Juniata. A 5'8, 180-pound running back, he was third on the team in rushing last season with 223 yards and one touchdown. He ranks eighth in career rushing yards at Juniata with 1,428.

"Although there were many players worthy of this distinction, I am extremely pleased with the captains who have been elected by their peers," said first-year coach small. "Both Steve and Dan have been, and will continue to be, outstanding leaders."

"By example, they set admirable standards in regard to work ethic, physical and mental toughness, and motivation. Their biggest chore will be to learn how to be effective liaisons between the players and our staff."

"I am very pleased to be captain for our team," said Campbell. "We are all excited about the upcoming season."

"It is an honor for me to be selected by my teammates to serve as a captain next fall," said Crossey. "We are looking forward to preseason camp in August and our season opener at Washington and Jefferson."

Juniata will have some gaps to fill in 1989 as 14 starters are gone from last year's 6-3-1 squad. However, Small has 26 letterwinners returning to step into the lineup.

Spring Sports- Indian Nine MAC Northwest Champs!

The Juniata College baseball team is headed for the Middle Atlantic Conference playoffs after a 5-4 win in 10 innings on Monday afternoon at Elizabethtown. The victory gave the Tribe a 9-2 record in the MAC Northwest, good enough to clinch the section title. The second game of the doubleheader was rained out.

Juniata now sports a 19-9 record and was ranked 30th in the nation for Division III last week. The Tribe ran its record to 18-2 against Division III teams. the baseball team finished the season with a doubleheader against NAIA-power Point Park on Wednesday at Langdon Field.

The softball team took an 8-14 record into their doubleheader at Elizabethtown Monday. The young team does not have a single senior on the roster.

The golf team concluded the season with a 7-3 record and a 14th place finish in the Middle Atlantic Conference tournament at Shawnee on the Delaware. The team moved from 19th place to 14th with a 514 score on Sunday, the biggest move in the tournament.

Senior Tim Garvin was low man for Juniata in the tournament. He was followed by sophomore John O"Neill, junior Bob Kelley, freshman Chris Antonelli and junior Jeff Bertram.

The Juniata College men's and women's track and field teams, and the men's and women's tennis squads will take part in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships this weekend.

Juniata women's tennis coach Ray Pfrogner, whose team had a record-setting 7-1 mark this season, will take a strong contingent to the individual tournament at Haverford College on Friday and Saturday. Freshman Michelle Frye (7-1) and Julette Delattre (5-3) will play singles while the doubles teams of juniors Amy Buckbee and Julie Thaler (5-1) will play in the tourney for the second straight year.

In men's tennis, seniors Rich Gottschall (2-9) and Arendt Papenfuss (1-8) will play singles for Juniata while senior Chris Glover and junior Mike Welker (5-3) are entered in the doubles competition of the MAC event at Gettysburg College beginning on Friday. Juniata finished at 2-9 overall for first-year coach Brad Small.

Coach Alan Hartman will take a dozen Juniata track and field athletes to the MAC meet at Western Maryland College on Friday and Saturday. The women's squad, 5-7 in the dual meet season, will be represented by senior Ann Telfeian, juniors Heidi Loych and Renee Malkin and freshmen Angie Gessner, Heather Jones and Kim Wurth.

The men's team finished with a 4-5 record in the regular season and will also take six competitors to the MAC meet, including seniors Brent Bittner and Randy Martin, junior Eric Arone, sophomores Rob Rohrer and Frank Shue, and freshman Frank Macrina.

The Juniata track and field squads hope to improve on a 14th place finish by the men and 17th place performance by the women at last year's MAC event.

As usual:

The Greek Speaks

By George Zanic

This being my last article for the Juniatian, I'd like to write about something that brought me to Juniata and what kept me at Juniata-sports. Sure, Juniata is a great academic institution but I would have never come here had it not been for the influence of sports in my life. When I visited Juniata five years ago, I didn't care about how many people got accepted to law school from Juniata, I only cared about how many baseball games they won every year.

I came to Juniate for the same reason as most of the atheletes here, to play four more years of the sport which we love. Those four years are almost over for me and it really is hard to think about not playing the game which I have been playing ever since I was five years old.

This Wednesday against Point Park I'll walk from the firstbase dugout to the batter's box for the last time, Coach Berrier will tell me to keep my hands back and drive my front shoulder into the ball just like he's done about 400 times over the past four years and I'll hear the encouragement from my teammates and the fans who line the firstbase line.

Many people who don't understand sports probably will laugh at this, but unless you've been part of a team you just can't understand the satisfaction and excitement you get when you along with a group of others are striving to achieve the goal of a championship.

I'm sure Cubby Davis, Mike Cottle, Frank Gay and the seniors on the football team had the same feeling as they defeated Upsala to end the football season this year, and Joe DeBlase, Les Squiar, Mike Antunucci and Duane Dise could relate the same feelings as they ended their basketball careers at Scranton. There is truly something special about playing on a team.

I think there is something even more special about playing Division III athletics. there is probably no one on Juniata's team who will play professional ball this is the last stop; therefore it is even more improtant to win and to win as a team. I know that whether the season ends next week or in four or five weeks after a trip to nationals it is eventually going to end. It won't be easy to take off the blue and gold for the last time, but I know that by having worn that blue and gold I'll take away something more than a diploma from Juniata. I'll take home a lot of friendships and the satisfaction of knowing I gave everything I had not only for myself but most importantly for my teammates. I think all of the atheletes here at Juniata can understand the way I feel.

In closing I'd like to thank a few people who have helped me make it through my four years of sports at Juniata: Tracy DeBlase, Joe Scialabba, President Neff, Dan Helm, Tony Nabozny, all the atheletes, all my temamates and most of all-thanks Coach.

evidence of alcohol or narcotics playing a part in the accident, said police.

Student sources say that the car was originally intended for Joel Meyer, a Juniata freshmen, who needed the car for a club-sponsored activity on Saturday. Instead of delivering the keys to Meyer, a worker in the physical plant gave the keys to Confer, said several students, including Meyer.

"Confer apparently decided to take a joy ride," said one student, "and apparently he paid the price."

The college is taking disiplinary action independent of the local authorities.

With the 8-1 victory over Messiah last Thursday the Juniata College women's tennis team concluded their best ever regular season. With 10 wins in the season it was both the most wins and the best percentage (90.9%) in the history of varsity women's tennis at the college. The wins over Elizabethtown, Dickinson, and Susquehanna were all firsts in Juniata women's varsity tennis competition. Seniors Lynda Cass, team captain, and Lara Mann completed four years of varsity competition while Georgia Stanaitis won her third letter and Alison Frutchey her second varsity monogram. Next year's team will continue to feature new captain Julia Thaler and her doubles partner Amy Buckbee (9-2 in doubles this year after a 9-1 season last year) and Susan London.

New additions to the team this year were junior exchange student Juliette Delattre from the University of Lille and freshman Michelle Frye. Michelle had the best individual singles record at 10-1, which, combined with the contributions of Juliette as the number one player with a 7-4 record allowed the team to have their outstanding season. Juliette and Michelle will represent the college in singles competition at MAC's while Amy and Julie will be the doubles team.
